

THE BOOK
OF LITERATURE

8.8

ANDERSON COLLEGE
LIBRARY
ANDERSON, INDIANA

22713

PN 6013 .G3 1923b v.5-6
Garnett, Richard 22713
Book of literature

PN 6013 .G3 1923b v.5-6
Garnett, Richard 22713
Book of literature

ANDERSON UNIVERSITY

3 2197 01030641 9

WALTON MEMORIAL UNIVERSITY
Library

808:8

G16

V546

ST. MATTHEW. (Eighth Century.)

The Manuscript was formerly in the French Library of St. Genevieve, and was purchased by Harley, Lord Oxford, in 1724, now forming part of the Harleian Collection in the British Museum.

THE BOOK OF LITERATURE

A Comprehensive Anthology

OF THE FIRST LITERATURE, ANCIENT, MEDIEVAL AND MODERN WITH BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL NOTES

EDITED BY

St. Matthew
(Eighth Century)

The MS. was formerly in the French Library at St. Genevieve, and was purchased by Harley, Lord Oxford, in 1724, now forming part of the Harleian Collection in the British Museum. In the Bibliothèque Nationale of Paris there is now a MS. of very similar character which is assigned to the ninth century, and it is possible that the British Museum MS. may be of the same period, though there are many indications of its being the work of the preceding century.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

PHILANDER P. CLAXTON, LITT.D., LL.D.

United States Commissioner of Education, 1911-1921

Two Volumes in One

Volumes 5 and 6

New York: THE GROlier SOCIETY
Toronto: THE GROlier SOCIETY, Limited

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

THE BOOK OF LITERATURE

A Comprehensive Anthology

OF THE BEST LITERATURE, ANCIENT, MEDIEVAL AND MODERN

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL AND EXPLANATORY NOTES

EDITED BY

RICHARD GARNETT, 1835-1906

Keeper of Printed Books at the British Museum, London, 1851 to 1899

LEON VALLÉE

Late Librarian at the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris

ALOIS BRANDL

Professor of Literature in the University of Berlin

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

PHILANDER P. CLAXTON, LITT.D., LL.D.

United States Commissioner of Education, 1911-1921

Two Volumes in One
Volumes 5 and 6

New York: THE GROLIER SOCIETY
Toronto: THE GROLIER SOCIETY, Limited

Entered at Stationers' Hall
London, 1899, 1922

Droits de reproduction et de traduction réservé
Paris, 1899, 1922

Alle rechte, insbesondere das der Übersetzung, vorbehalten
Berlin, 1899, 1922

Proprieta Letieraria, Riservatè tutti i divitti
Rome, 1899, 1922

Copyright, 1899
by
Richard Garnett

Copyright, 1922, 1923
by
The Grolier Society

ANDERSON COLLEGE
LIBRARY
ANDERSON, INDIANA

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

VOLUME V.

	PAGE
French Literature : Introduction by LEON VALLÉE	1
Salammbô and her Lover Gustave Flaubert	39
Hannibal as Strategist and Soldier Livy	47
Mostellaria Plautus	65
End of the Macedonian Kingdom Bishop Thirlwall	82
Last Two Oracles of Greece F. W. H. Myers	90
Periods of Greek History George Finlay	92
Gleanings from the Greek Anthology Dr. R. Garnett	94
Wit and Satire of the Greek Anthology Lord Neaves	98
Fragments of the Early Roman Poets Selected and Translated	112
To save a Sister Georg Ebers	119
Braggart and Parasite Terence	135
The Self-Tormentor Terence	150
The Conspiracy of Catiline Sallust	154
Speech on Catiline's Conspiracy Cicero	172
The Dying Gladiator Lord Byron	184
Cæsar's First Invasion of Britain Cæsar	185
Boadicea William Cowper	191
Correspondence of Cicero :
Metellus to Cicero	193
Cicero to Metellus	193
Cicero to his Wife	197
Cæsar to Cicero	199
Cicero to Cæsar	199
Cicero to Atticus	201
Antony to Cicero	201
Cæsar to Cicero	202
Sulpicius to Cicero	203
Cicero to Sulpicius	207
Cicero to Atticus	209
Julius Cæsar Shakespeare	210
Antony and Cleopatra Plutarch	223
Cleopatra W. W. Story	243
The Savagery of Classic Times Anthony Trollope	247
Roman and Celt in our Days C. F. Johnson	250
Early Celtic Literature :
Death of the Children of Usnach	251
Deirdré's Farewell to Alba	253
Deirdré's Farewell Song	255
Pillow Conversation of King Ailill and Queen Maev	257
How Setanta received the Name of Cuchullin	260

	PAGE
Cuchullin's Wooing of Eimer	264
Fight of Cuchullin and Ferdiah	265
Death of Cuchullin	267
King Dathy's Death	James Clarence Mangan 273
The Maguire	James Clarence Mangan 275
"Man wants but Little—"	Lucretius (tr. Mallock) 277
The Bugbear of Death	Lucretius (tr. Dryden) 281
The Spinning of the Fates	Catullus (tr. Burton) 288
Epithalamium	Catullus (tr. Frere) 290
Miscellaneous Poems of Catullus :
Taken at his Word	297
To Lesbia's Sparrow	298
To Himself, on Lesbia's Inconstancy	299
A Woman's Promises	300
To Lesbia, on her Falsehood	300
Parting Message to Lesbia	301
Invitation to Cæcilius	302
The Original of "Dr. Fell"	302
To the Peninsula of Sirmio, on his Return Home	302
To Cornificius	303
To his Dead Brother	303
Poems of Tibullus :
A Husbandman's Life the Ideal One	304
An Unwilling Welcome to Love	306
To Messala	308
Sulpicia's Appeal	311
To his Mistress	312
Love Deaf to Doubt	312
Elegies of Propertius :
To Mæcenæ (Gray)	313
The Effigy of Love	315
Prediction of Poetic Immortality	316
Praise of a Life of Ease	318
The Plea of Cornelia	320
Roman Life under Augustus	W. A. Becker 323
Latin Poetic Rhythms	F. W. H. Myers 336
Odes	Horace 339
Horace on Charitable Judgments	Horace 352
Poems of Ovid :
Sappho to Phaon (Pope)	353
Laodamia to Protesilaus	355
The Ring	356
Elegy on Tibullus	357
Acis and Galatea (Dryden)	359
Æneas' Journey to Hades	Virgil (tr. Bowen) 364
Æneas and the Cyclops	Virgil (tr. Conington) 386
The Messianic Eclogue	Virgil (tr. Bowen) 390
Sacred Eclogue	Pope 392
Physical Geography at the Christian Era	Strabo 395

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

VOLUME 5.

ST. MATTHEW	Frontispiece
	PAGE
LEON VALLÉE	38
THE SAVAGERY OF CLASSIC TIMES	246

BREF APERÇU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FRANÇAISE

PAR LÉON VALLÉE

Le français est le produit de trois éléments essentiels qui mirent plusieurs siècles pour fusionner : le romanisme, le christianisme et le germanisme. Les premières manifestations littéraires de la nouvelle langue furent des chansons, les chansons de gestes, dont la plus célèbre, La Chanson de Roland, peut être considérée comme le véritable point de départ de la littérature française. Ces poèmes, destinés à célébrer des exploits guerriers, seront bientôt suivis de l'apparition de la poésie narrative, puis nous assisterons à l'affranchissement de la prose, qui viendra manifester sa vitalité dans les romans bretons et les récits de Villehardouin.

Le XII^e siècle, c'est la période des troubadours, des trouvères, des cours d'amour où la femme est reine, où elle apporte son charme et son sourire. Nous avons alors une série de romans sur l'antiquité, des romans grecs et byzantins, des romans d'aventures (romans bretons), les Lais de Marie de France, les premières compilations poétiques sur Tristan, Perceval, Gauvain, Lancelot du Lac, etc., les fabliaux, puis Le Roman de la Rose, poème tout profane, qui vient rejeter dans l'ombre la poésie chevaleresque.

Au XIII^e siècle Geoffroy de Villehardouin, le premier chroniqueur français, nous narre avec naïveté et grandeur l'expédition à laquelle il participa pour la Conquête de Constantinople. Un peu plus tard le sire de Joinville, fidèle compagnon de Saint-Louis, nous donne dans ses Mémoires un récit ému et coloré des événements qui se passèrent de son temps.

Messire Jehan Froissart, l'historien de la guerre de cent ans, paraît ensuite. Il nous expose dans sa Chronique la vie féodale et militaire du XIV^e siècle. Il est le miroir où se reflète tout le moyen-âge. Lisez-le, vous le trouverez toujours exact, toujours varié, toujours vivant dans ses admirables descriptions. Quelques écrivains brillent alors d'un vif éclat. C'est Christine de Pisan, une femme poète, dont les vers sont pleins de grâce et de délicatesse, et qui défendit la cause des femmes attaquées par Jean de Meung. C'est Alain Chartier, lequel, vivement ému des malheurs de la France après le désastre d'Azincourt, contribue par son éloquence à relever le courage de ses concitoyens, et dont Le Quadriloge invectif peut être considéré comme la pure manifestation du patriotisme et de l'honneur national. C'est Eustache Deschamps. C'est enfin Olivier Basselin, qui, foulon de son métier, improvise, le verre en main, ces chansons lesquelles, si connues sous le nom de Vaux de Vire, seront l'origine du vaudeville.

Nous ne saurions quitter cette époque sans rappeler qu'après les Miracles, auxquels ils succédèrent, les Mystères eurent une grande vogue pendant le moyen-âge, et marquent le commencement du théâtre tragique moderne. La première représentation en langue vulgaire date du XI^e siècle : c'est Le Mystère des Vierges folles et des Vierges sages. Les mystères, qui devinrent de plus en plus riches et nombreux pendant les siècles suivants, étaient le privilège exclusif des Confréries de la Passion. Plus tard, les Cleres de la Basoche créèrent un genre nouveau, les Moralités, qui contenait en germe la comédie. Et la sotie, petit poème lyrique des trouvères et des jongleurs, se transforme, à la fin du moyen-âge, en théâtre dramatique avec les Enfants-sans-souci, réunion de jeunes artistes parisiens, dont le chef prenait le titre de Prince des sots. Quant aux farces, autre transformation des anciens mystères, dont les plus célèbres sont L'Archer de Bagnelot et L'Avocat Patelin, elles continueront à occuper le théâtre jusqu'au siècle de Louis XIV.

Le XV^e siècle s'honore de trois grandes figures : Charles d'Orléans, François Villon et Commynes. Le premier, Charles d'Orléans, fait prisonnier à la bataille d'Azincourt et emmené en Angleterre, charme les loisirs de sa captivité par la culture des belles-lettres, et nous laisse des poésies qui se distinguent par leur grâce, la beauté de la forme, et une heureuse proportion dans le développement de la pensée. Plein de relief, le langage coloré de Villon exprime des sentiments vrais. Il rompt avec la froide allégorie du moyen-âge et Le Grand Testament montre que la poésie française se transforme : de générale, elle devient personnelle. Avec Commynes, nous voyons le drame dans l'histoire, nous assistons à la lutte entre Louis XI, qui défend la cause de l'unité française, et Charles de Bourgogne, dernier champion de l'esprit féodal qui va disparaître. Ici, plus de récits de tournois, ni de batailles, mais la critique des faits, l'observation et la vue claire des grands intérêts politiques. Commynes inaugure la nouvelle histoire.

Deux grands faits se produisent au XVI^e siècle : la renaissance des lettres et la réforme religieuse. Mais en France la renaissance ne se produit pas aussi rapidement qu'en Italie, car elle se ressent des agitations qui troublaient encore le pays. "Alors," dit Demogeot, "ceux qui pensent connaissent peu l'art d'écrire ; ceux qui cultivent l'art d'écrire ne songent guères à penser." Certes on trouve à cette époque des écrivains d'un rare talent ; mais ils ont chacun sa langue propre, et il n'y a pas chez eux de formes universelles et communes à tous. Le premier, c'est Clément Marot, favori du roi François I^{er} et de Marguerite, sa sœur, qui atteint la perfection dans l'épître familière et surtout dans l'épigramme. A seize ans, indigné par les atrocités que Montmorency commet à Bordeaux, La Boétie écrit son Discours sur la Servitude volontaire. Bodin, dans son livre La République, se montre philosophe et homme d'état. Jacques Amyot, le traducteur de Plutarque et de Longus, transforme ces auteurs et, les naturalisant presque, enrichit notre langue des idées antiques. Montaigne, dans ses Essais, d'un style si riche, si imagé, donne un traité de morale générale. Rabelais écrit sa Vie de Gargantua et de Pantagruel, que La Bruyère juge "un monstrueux assemblage d'une morale fine et ingénieuse et d'une sale corruption ; où il est mauvais, il passe bien loin au delà du pire : c'est le charme de la canaille ; où il est bon, il va jusqu'à l'exquis et à l'excellent : il peut être le mets des plus délicats." Calvin dédie à François I^{er} son Institution de la Religion chrétienne, œuvre la plus importante qu'eut encore produite la Réforme religieuse, et dans laquelle la prose française commence à prendre son véritable caractère. Ronsard et la pléiade tentent leur réforme littéraire, en même temps que surgissent une quantité de pamphlets et de satires, dont la principale, la Satire ménippée, est à la fois un pamphlet, une comédie et un coup d'état. Quant aux mémoires, longue en est la série. Après ceux du Chevalier sans peur et sans reproche écrits par son Loyal Serviteur, voici les Commentaires du farouche catholique Blaise de Montluc, que Henry IV appelait la Bible du soldat ; voici les Mémoires de La Noue, de Coligny, de Brantôme, de Marguerite de Valois, première femme de Henry IV ; L'Etat de la France sous François II de Regnier de la Planche, l'Histoire universelle et les Mémoires de d'Aubigné, le Journal de Pierre de l'Estoile, l'Histoire de Jacques Auguste de Thou, etc.

En somme la langue française a déjà atteint un degré de précision, une richesse d'expressions tels que l'étranger lui rend hommage et que nous voyons Charles-Quint la déclarer langue d'état ; plus tard, à partir de la Conférence de Nimègue, tous les peuples de l'Europe se serviront du français pour la rédaction des traités internationaux.

Malherbe, avec lequel commence le XVII^e siècle, joue un rôle considérable comme réformateur du français. Il a le culte de la langue, et la sévérité de ses préceptes lui vaut d'être appelé le "tyran des mots et des syllabes." Son grand mérite est d'avoir posé et imposé les principes de la versification et de la langue poétique. Mathurin Regnier, dans ses satires, excelle à peindre les mœurs et les personnages de son époque, et le portrait qu'il trace de Macette, la vieille hypocrite, est d'un maître écrivain. Racan célèbre la vie champêtre. Voiture brille dans la poésie fugitive et, parmi les beaux esprits des ruelles, nous voyons en première ligne, à côté de lui, Balzac et Benserade. L'Hôtel de Rambouillet devient la première institution littéraire régulièrement organisée en France, et le cardinal de Richelieu fait signer les lettres-patentes qui créent l'Académie française. Pierre Corneille révolutionne le théâtre. Avec Le Cid il fixe la langue de la tragédie ; avec Le Menteur, celle de la comédie. Son Horace est plein de vigueur, d'originalité, et Cinna est considéré comme un chef-d'œuvre. Le

Discours sur la Méthode et les Méditations de Descartes sont des merveilles de style. Ménage, et Vaugelas dans ses Remarques sur la Langue française, contribuent à perfectionner notre langue. De son côté, La Rochefoucauld, dans ses Maximes ou Réflexions morales, aide à former le goût de la nation, à lui donner un esprit de justesse et de précision. La Bruyère ne dit que des vérités ordinaires dans ses Caractères, mais il trace ses portraits avec tant de vigueur, tant de concision, d'originalité de style, qu'on ne les oublie plus quand on les a lus. Pascal publie ses Provinciales, qui sont des modèles d'éloquence, et ses Pensées sont d'une puissance philosophique incomparable. Riche d'esprit, Cyrano de Bergerac a des traits comiques, de l'imagination; et Scarron, le critique malicieux, invente le genre burlesque. L'œuvre de Boileau est faite de bon sens, de goût, de régularité; dans les Satires nous voyons le critique; dans L'Art poétique, qui lui a valu le nom de "Législateur du Parnasse," nous trouvons un code de la littérature; et dans Le Lutrin l'auteur arrive à la perfection de l'art des vers. Observateur profond, moraliste, écrivain hors pair, Molière reste inimitable. Il est le peintre le plus exact de la vie de l'homme, dont il nous expose le caractère et les passions dans des comédies écrites d'un style vif, nerveux, puissant et coloré. Le Misanthrope, Tartufe, Les Femmes savantes, L'Avare, Les Précieuses ridicules sont quelques-unes des perles qui brillent dans son théâtre si riche et si varié. Paul de Gondi, cardinal de Retz, est l'historien de la Fronde; et St-Simon écrit des Mémoires, qui ne seront imprimés qu'en 1820. Jean de la Fontaine, "fleur de l'esprit gaulois, avec un parfum d'antiquité" a dit Gérusez, est le plus simple, le moins prétentieux de nos poètes. Ses Contes et Nouvelles peuvent friser la licence, ils ne choquent pas l'esprit, tant le "bonhomme" met de finesse, de délicatesse dans le récit. Quant à ses Fables, la vie en action, elles sont œuvre originale et impérissable. Madame de la Fayette, avec La Princesse de Clèves, transforme la roman, tandis que son amie, Madame de Sévigné, trace ses Lettres, magnifique monument du genre épistolaire, où se reflète le tableau des mœurs et de la société du XVII^e siècle. Au théâtre Jean Racine règne en maître incontesté, et ses tragédies Andromaque, Britannicus, Bérénice, Mithridate, Esther, Phèdre, Athalie, sa comédie Les Plaideurs, atteignent une hauteur, une puissance que l'homme aurait de la peine à surpasser. L'Eglise gallicane a aussi des gloires littéraires : Bossuet laisse des chefs-d'œuvre de style et d'éloquence, comme son Discours sur l'Histoire universelle et ses Oraisons funèbres. Bourdaloue s'élève au premier rang par ses Sermons. Le père Malebranche, métaphysicien et moraliste, publie son livre La Recherche de la Vérité. Fléchier prononce son Oraison funèbre de Turenne. Fénelon attache son nom au Traité de l'Education des Filles, aux Dialogues des Morts, au Télémaque; et Massillon enfin ne craint pas de rival à son Petit Carême.

Un grand génie domine le XVIII^e siècle; on pourrait presque dire qu'il le représente: Voltaire, à qui tout est familier, histoire, littérature, théâtre, philosophie, et qui brille en tout. Son Histoire de Charles XII est un modèle: ses poésies légères sont de beaucoup supérieures à celles de ses contemporains, et au théâtre ses tragédies, Œdipe, Brutus, Zaïre, Alzire, Mérope, Mahomet, Sémiramis et Tancrède, sont des créations puissantes, animées, émouvantes où l'éloquence déborde. Marmontel et La Harpe, disciples de Voltaire, ne sont qu'un reflet de leur protecteur. Jean Baptiste Rousseau se recommande pour l'harmonie et le rythme de ses vers. Gresset donne Le Méchant; Piron, Le Métromanie. Le Sage, qui peint les faiblesses humaines dans Le Diable boiteux, présente le type du roman de caractère dans Gil Blas. Louis Racine écrit des Mémoires où il retrace la vie de son père. Rollin publie une Histoire ancienne. Bernardin de St-Pierre produit un chef-d'œuvre littéraire dans le roman si simple, si poétique, Paul et Virginie. Montesquieu signe des pages inoubliables de haute philosophie: les Lettres persanes; L'Esprit des Lois et les Considérations sur les Causes de la Grandeur et de la Décadence des Romains. Par ses idées philosophiques, Jean-Jacques Rousseau fait pressentir l'approche de la Révolution française: l'Emile, qui est la déclaration des droits de l'enfant, est un appel aux vertus de la famille; Le Contrat social part de ce principe que "l'homme est né libre"; la passion éclate dans les pages étincelantes de La Nouvelle Héloïse, et les Confessions donnent l'image vraie du génie de Jean-

Jacques. Caron de Beaumarchais fait jouer au théâtre Le Barbier de Séville; puis, à la suite d'un procès fameux, il imprime des Mémoires judiciaires, œuvre d'éloquence, d'esprit, de verve et de bon sens. Buffon consacre sa plume et sa brillante imagination à l'analyse de la nature. Les descriptions de l'Histoire naturelle sont des peintures vivantes en même temps que le style noble, pur, est toujours digne de celui qui disait, lors de sa réception à l'Académie: "Le style est l'homme même." Diderot, l'un des plus puissants esprits de cette époque, conçoit, exécute et mène à bonne fin l'immense travail qu'est l'Encyclopédie, à laquelle collaborent les philosophes Condillac, Helvétius, d'Holbach, et pour laquelle d'Alembert écrit son beau Discours préliminaire, qui sert de préface à l'œuvre et en trace le plan. L'abbé Prévost, historien de la passion, nous lègue sa Manon Lescaut. Le siècle va finir. Il semble que les troubles révolutionnaires doivent éloigner les esprits de toute littérature. Erreur. Au moment même où la guerre est déclarée à l'Autriche, Rouget de Lisle se manifeste; il improvise son magnifique Chant de Guerre de l'Armée du Rhin, qui, plus connu sous le titre de La Marseillaise, va faire le tour de l'Europe et devenir l'hymne national des Français.

Dès son aurore le XIX^e siècle possède deux grands écrivains. D'abord la baronne de Staël-Holstein, fille de Necker et type de l'esprit français, montre toute sa sensibilité dans le roman Delphine et glorifie la femme moderne et l'Italie dans Corinne. L'autre, Chateaubriand, développe toutes les grâces du style dans Le Génie du Christianisme, ou excite l'admiration de ses contemporains dans Atala, Réné, Les Martyrs et Le Dernier des Abencerrages. Sous l'Empire, Jacques Delille, l'élégant traducteur des Georgiques, est le maître de l'école de la poésie descriptive. Puis voici Brillat-Savarin, qui prouve, par La Physiologie du Goût, que la littérature rend attrayant même un traité de gastronomie. Henri Beyle, lui, sous le pseudonyme de Stendhal, livre carrière à toute son originalité dans Rouge et Noir. Les publicistes et les hommes d'état ont alors des représentants remarquables comme Alexis de Tocqueville, dont on admire la science et les qualités dans Le Système pénitentiaire aux Etats-Unis et dans La Démocratie en Amérique.

Paul Louis Courier se fait une spécialité du pamphlet et son Pamphlet des Pamphlets est regardé comme le modèle du genre. Barthélémy, à la fois poète et homme politique, flétrit chaque semaine, dans la fameuse Némésis, journal en vers, le gouvernement de Louis-Philippe. Béranger, celui qui "ne veut rien être," choisit la chanson qu'il métamorphose en un genre nouveau et dans laquelle il chante la patrie, le peuple, la liberté, ou couvre de ridicule l'ancien régime. Honoré de Balzac, surnommé "le colosse de la littérature" par ses admirateurs enthousiastes, révèle ses qualités de grand romancier avec La Peau de Chagrin. Matérialiste, imbu des idées despotiques, conteur plein de verve et d'imagination, il se fait l'historien des mœurs de la société dont il esquisse de brillants portraits dans Eugénie Grandet, Une Femme de 30 ans, Physiologie du Mariage, La Recherche de l'Absolu, Le Médecin de Campagne, etc. Une autre grande figure, c'est Lamartine, l'un des plus illustres poètes de la France, qui nous émeut d'abord avec ses romans Graziella et Raphaël, récits de ses liaisons de jeunesse. Puis viennent ces poésies d'une mélancolie pénétrante, les Méditations, auxquelles succèdent les Harmonies poétiques et religieuses, où l'auteur s'élève dans les plus hautes régions de l'idéal. Son Voyage en Orient abonde en descriptions d'une grande richesse, et l'Histoire des Girondins, qui eut un retentissement immense, peut être considérée comme un véritable poème historique. Aurore Dupin, baronne Du Devant, cache son nom sous le pseudonyme de George Sand, et déploie la splendeur et la précision de son style dans La Mare au Diable, François Champi, La Petite Fadette, romans champêtres qu'on a appelés les "Géorgiques de la France." Dans un voyage qu'elle fait en Italie, G. Sand se brouille avec Alfred de Musset, poète sentimental, qui a les enthousiasmes et les défauts de la jeunesse. Vigueur, passion, grâce, lyrisme, Musset a tous ces dons et les sème à profusion dans ses œuvres : Contes d'Espagne ; La Coupe et les Lèvres ; A quoi rêvent les jeunes Filles ; Rolla ; Les Nuits, etc. Son émotion toujours communicative s'empare des âmes, pénètre les cœurs. Eugène Sue "risque le roman français en plein Océan," comme dit Sainte-Beuve ; mais bientôt il abandonne le roman maritime pour essayer de peindre la société sous son aspect réel.

Interprète des aspirations qui agitent sa génération, il se lance à la recherche de la vérité politique, philosophique et sociale dans Les Mystères de Paris et Le Juif errant, romans qui lui valent la popularité et influent beaucoup sur les idées et la littérature du temps. Un autre romancier, c'est Frédéric Soulié, l'auteur des Mémoires du Diable et de la Closerie des Genets. Celui-ci, maître passé dans l'étude des caractères et dans la combinaison des effets, est un créateur et n'abandonne ses lecteurs qu'après les avoir saturés d'émotions. Au contraire le naturel, une spirituelle bonhomie et une philosophie aimable distinguent les romans d'E. Souvestre. Quant à P. Mérimée il est conteur hors ligne dans sa Chronique du Temps de Charles IX, qui met en scène les mœurs et les passions de l'époque, et il donne, dans Colomba, un saisissant tableau des vendettas corses. Historien, romancier et poète, Sainte-Beuve se place au premier rang des critiques littéraires contemporains par ses Causeries, ses Lundis et Nouveaux Lundis, dans lesquels il prodigue sa fine analyse, son esprit et son bon goût. Laboulaye ne se contente pas d'être publiciste et jurisconsulte érudit dans l'Histoire du droit de Propriété foncière en Occident, dans les Recherches sur la Condition civile et politique des Femmes depuis les Romains jusqu'à nos jours, ou encore dans l'Histoire des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, il sait aussi manier une plume satirique dans ses romans Paris en Amérique et Le Prince Caniche. Flaubert, dans Salammbô, ressuscite l'ancienne Carthage, et par l'observation minutieuse de la vie commune il s'efforce, dans Madame Bovary, d'ouvrir de nouveaux horizons au roman. Taine brille comme philosophe et écrivain dans l'Histoire de la Littérature anglaise, tandis que Renan, dans la Vie de Jésus, les Origines du Christianisme, etc., charme par sa prose qui revêt une forme poétique tout-à-fait spéciale. L'économie politique n'est pas délaissée : elle s'honore des travaux de Lanfrey, lequel apologiste convaincu de la raison et de la liberté dans L'Eglise et la Philosophie du 18 siècle, combat le catholicisme dans l'Histoire politique des Papes, le socialisme dans les Lettres d'Everard, et le césarisme dans l'Histoire de Napoléon I^{er}, son œuvre capitale. Les Fleurs du Mal de Baudelaire sont des vers d'amour, tout à la fois mystiques et

xxii BREF APERÇU DE LA LITTÉRATURE FRANÇAISE

libertins. Théodore de Banville, qui cisèle des vers remplis de finesse, d'images et de couleurs dans ses Odes, les Nouvelles Odes funambulesques et les Trente-six Ballades joyeuses, formule les lois de la poésie nouvelle dans son Petit Traité de la Poésie française. Quant à Théophile Gautier, critique et littérateur, qui joint à un vocabulaire fort riche le culte exclusif du style et de la forme, son œuvre est immense. Les Mariages de Paris, De Pontoise à Stamboul, Le Roman d'un brave Homme sont de beaux spécimens du style clair et spirituel qui ont mérité à Edmond About le surnom de "petit fils de Voltaire," et le classent parmi les écrivains ayant le mieux manié la langue française. Alexandre Dumas père joint à une imagination fort vive une incroyable facilité de rédaction. Ces dons naturels vous les trouverez en abondance dans ses romans et son théâtre. Qui n'a pas lu Le Collier de la Reine, Les Trois Mousquetaires, Le comte de Monte-Cristo? Dumas fils suit les traces de son père. Lui aussi aborde le théâtre, cultive le roman. L'affaire Clémenceau, La Dame aux Camélias, Le Demi-monde, Le Fils naturel, le montrent écrivain, penseur et moraliste. La grâce est la caractéristique des romans et des drames d'Octave Feuillet. Le comte de Gobineau, qui a laissé un grand poème inachevé, Amadis, est aussi un savant. Il s'attache, par son livre Les Religions et les Philosophies dans l'Asie Centrale, à faire connaître l'histoire des dogmes et des religions de la Perse; il témoigne de sa profonde érudition par son Histoire des Perses d'après les Auteurs orientaux, grecs et latins, et son Essai sur l'Inégalité des Races humaines devient le point de départ de la nouvelle école ethnologique. Victor Hugo, lui, réforme la poésie, retrempe son mâle langage aux sources vives du XV^e et du XVI^e siècle, et est le grand maître de l'école romantique qu'il substitue à la classique. Questions politiques, religieuses, sociales ou artistiques, roman, drame, poésie, tout est son domaine; partout il est le maître. Proscrit du 2 décembre 1851, il se réfugie à Jersey, puis à Guernesey. Là, en face de l'Océan, ses pensées semblent s'inspirer des tempêtes, de la grandeur et de l'infini de la mer, et il écrit deux pamphlets, Napoléon le Petit et les Châtiments, qui sont à la fois livre d'histoire et œuvre de haute poésie. Plus tard il enfante La

Légende des Siècles, suite d'épopées et de fantaisies merveilleuses dans lesquelles il ressuscite le tableau de vingt siècles de civilisation disparue. Notre Dame de Paris, c'est la reconstitution de Paris au moyen-âge, tandis que le roman Les Misérables est une émouvante fiction faite d'histoire et d'érudition. Hugo recherche les antithèses les plus outrées, en appelle au paroxysme de la passion et de la terreur. Rien n'est trop élevé pour son imagination, dont la caractéristique est le grandiose et le sublime, ce qui a fait dire à Renan : "Comme un cyclope à peine dégagé de la matière, il a des secrets d'un monde perdu. Son œuvre immense est le mirage d'un univers qu'aucun œil ne sait plus voir." La poète sait cependant abandonner la région où le fantasque se mêle au surhumain, et L'Art d'être Grand-père montre qu'il est capable de parler mieux que pas un à l'âme même d'un enfant. La fantaisie Les Prunes, qu'Alphonse Daudet insère dans ses poésies Amoureuses, attire l'attention sur l'auteur, que Le Nabad, Numa Roumestan, etc., ne tardent pas à placer parmi les meilleurs des romanciers contemporains. Les Vers de Guy de Maupassant sont d'un conteur humoristique qui soigne la forme, et le poète-musicien Verlaine essaie des rythmes inconnus dans Sagesse et Romans sans Paroles, pendant que la plume alerte de Claretie fait à la fois du journalisme, du roman et du théâtre. Erckmann-Chatrian, deux auteurs qu'une collaboration ininterrompue a confondus en une seule personnalité, conquièrent la popularité avec leurs romans nationaux. Un autre romancier, Jules Verne, doué d'une vive imagination et de beaucoup d'esprit, rompt avec les vieilles merveilles de la féerie et entreprend de créer dans le roman un nouveau merveilleux qui utilise les plus récentes données de la science et de la géographie. Cinq Semaines en Ballon, le premier roman de ce genre, est bientôt suivi du Désert de Glace, de Vingt mille Lieues sous les Mers, du Voyage autour du Monde en 80 jours, ouvrages qui obtiennent beaucoup de succès. Ecrivain d'un grand talent, Louis Viaud signe du pseudonyme de Pierre Loti des livres : Madame Chrysanthème, Mon frère Yves et Pêcheur d'Islande, dont la lecture laisse l'esprit sous le charme. Theuriet est romancier et poète. Exquis dans Raymonde, touchant dans Le Filleul d'un Marquis, psychologue dans Sauvageonne, il est amant de la nature dans le Journal de Tristan et fin analyste dans Michel Verneuil. Thibault, dit Anatole France, publie de beaux vers, les Poèmes dorés et se range parmi les conteurs délicats avec Le Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard. De même, Catulle Mendès a de beaux vers : Le Soleil de Minuit, les Soirs moroses et des nouvelles étincelantes. Mais en tête des écrivains réalistes il faut placer Emile Zola, qui, dans ses romans Thérèse Raquin, les Rougon Macquart, La Terre, etc., peint tout sans reculer devant le moindre détail, si brutal soit-il. Ces études si puissantes sont écrites d'un style vigoureux, coloré, et leur influence sur le roman contemporain est considérable. Paul Bourget a de l'originalité et fait de la psychologie dans Cruelle Enigme, L'Irréparable, Un Crime d'Amour, tandis que Sully-Prudhomme donne à ses pensées une forme savante dans Justice, Vaines Tendresses et Le Bonheur. L'idiome poétique du midi renaît avec le poète provençal Mistral, dont l'épopée rustique Mireille et le poème Calendan ont tant de retentissement, cependant que Fr. Coppée, observateur de la nature et de la réalité, réussit des scènes familières et charmantes dans Les Intimités, Les Humbles, La Grève des Forgerons. Si nous rappelons que la critique littéraire a maintenant deux brillants représentants : J. Lemaitre avec Contemporains, puis Brunetière, qui montre toute sa science dans Racine Diderot, Le Roman Naturaliste, Histoire et Littérature, nous ne devons pas oublier non plus que l'Histoire proprement dite compte à son actif des œuvres capitales telles que l'Histoire racontée à mes petits Enfants par Guizot, Le Consulat et l'Empire par Thiers, l'Histoire de la Révolution française par Louis Blanc, l'Histoire de France par Michelet, et une quantité de monographies, mémoires, lettres ou souvenirs.

En somme le XIX^e siècle a produit une grande variété d'œuvres importantes. Mais si l'on ne saurait caractériser d'un mot leur ensemble, on peut cependant faire quelques remarques générales. La première, c'est que le roman et le naturalisme tiennent une large place dans la littérature de cette époque ; la seconde, c'est que plus on avance vers la fin du siècle, plus l'individualisme tend à se substituer aux anciens groupements par écoles. On constate en outre chez tous les écrivains, avec la recherche du terme exact et du document, un souci constant de la forme, laquelle n'a jamais été plus soignée. Enfin l'érudition figure toujours à côté de la fantaisie, et la critique exerce de plus en plus son savant contrôle.

L. Vallé
Bibliothécaire à la Bibliothèque Nat^{le}.

PARIS, March 1899.

FRENCH LITERATURE

A SUMMARY

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH OF LÉON VALLÉE

THE French language is the product of three essential elements: the influences of ancient Rome, the influence of Christianity, and the modification of the Germanic stock. The fusion of these three factors was the work of several centuries, and the chansons de gestes were the first literary products of the new language. The most famous of these, the Chanson de Roland, may be called the starting-point of all French literature. These ballads of war were soon followed by true narrative poetry, and then, in turn, prose began to show its vitality in the Breton romances and the tales of Villehardouin.

The twelfth century was the period of the troubadours, and the "trouvères." It was also the period of the Courts of Love, over which women exercised their gracious despotism of beauty and of song. To this century we owe a series of romances based upon ancient legend, some belonging to the Greek or the Byzantine School; the Breton romances of adventure, the Lais of Marie de France; the first collections of poetry, devoted to the deeds of such heroes as Tristan, Perceval, Gauvain, Lancelot du Lac. The fabliaux were of this period too, and then came the Roman de la Rose, with its profane influence, to put an end to the reign of chivalrous poetry.

In the thirteenth century, Geoffroy de Villehardouin, the first of the French chroniclers, took part in the expedition which he describes, with simple grandeur, in the Conquête de Constantinople.

Soon after, the Sire de Joinville, faithful companion of St. Louis, wrote his Mémoires, a brilliant and impassioned narrative of the events of his time.

Messire Jehan Froissart, the historian of the Hundred Years' War, next appears. His Chronique enables us to grasp the feudal and military life of the fourteenth century; and it may be said of him that he left us a complete and faithful picture of mediæval civilisation; always exact, admirably descriptive, full of variety. Several other writers combined to make this century a noble epoch in our literature. Christine de Pisan, a poetess of infinite charm and delicacy, defended her sex against the aspersions of Jehan de Meung. Alain Chartier, profoundly moved by the sufferings of France after the disaster of Agincourt, stirred by his eloquence the fallen courage of his compatriots, and his Quadriloge invectif is still the noblest of all manifestations of love for the Fatherland and of intense national pride. Eustache Deschamps was another of the galaxy, and so was Oliver Basselin, by trade a fuller, who improvised, wine-cup in hand, the songs known as the Vaux de Vire, to which the Vaudeville owes its origin.

We cannot turn from the consideration of this period until we have recalled the fact that the mysteries were in high favour all through the Middle Ages. They took the place of the Miracle-plays, and to them modern tragedy owes its origin. The first play presented in the language of the people Le Mystère des Vierges folles et des Vierges sages, in the eleventh century. The "Brotherhood of the Passion" had the exclusive privilege of producing these Mysteries, which became more frequent and more brilliant during the succeeding centuries. The "Clercs de la Basoche" created, somewhat later, the Moralities, in which we find the germ of modern comedy. The "sotie" or brief lyric poem of the "trouvères" and the "jongleurs" gave place, at the end of the Middle Ages, to dramatic plays produced by an association of young Parisian artists called the "Enfants-sans-souci," whose chief bore the title of the "Prince des Sots." The farces of the same period, a new form of the old Mysteries, retained their vogue until the end of Louis XIV.'s reign.

The fifteenth century was made glorious by three great names: Charles d'Orléans, François Villon, and Commynes. Charles d'Orléans, who was made a prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, and who found consolation during his captivity in literary pursuits, left us poems distinguished by their grace, their beauty of form, and the exquisite harmony of their structure. Villon's French, richly coloured and varied, was the medium of expression for a singularly direct habit of thought. He broke away from the lifeless allegories of the mediæval tradition, and the Grand Testament marks the change in the spirit of French poetry from an impersonal to a personal art. Commynes gave us the dramatic view of history; he showed us the struggle between Louis XI., the defender of the unity of France, and Charles de Bourgogne, the last champion of the feudal system which was about to be obliterated. The new art of history may indeed be said to have begun with Commynes; the scrutiny of facts, the study and perceptions of broad political interests, as opposed to the mere recital of battles and feats of arms.

In the sixteenth century two great movements took form: the literary renaissance and the religious reformation. But in France, where the conditions of life were still disturbed and unsettled by agitation, the renaissance developed less rapidly than in Italy. "It was," as Demogéot says, "a period at which the men whose thoughts were worth preserving did not know how to write, and the men who cultivated the literary art did not think it needful that they should have any thoughts to express." There were writers of great talent, but there was no accepted and universal form of expression, each writer used a language of his own. Clement Marot, the favourite of François I., and of Marguerite, the king's sister, wrote familiar letters and epigrams of unsurpassed beauty. La Boétie, when only sixteen years old, was fired by the atrocities committed by Montmorency on Bordeaux, and wrote the Discours sur la Servitude volontaire. Bodin in his République shows himself a philosopher and a statesman. Jacques Amyot, the translator of Plutarch and of Longus, transformed these authors, naturalised them almost; enriching the French language from the stores of antiquity.

Montaigne clothed a moral theory in the rich and pictorial diction of his Essais. Rabelais wrote the Vie de Gargantua et de Pantagruel, which La Bruyère described as "a monstrous combination; lofty and ingenious thought sullied by foulness of expression. At his worst, no one can be worse; he is the ideal of the gutter. At his best he attains an exquisite excellence, and he can be the food of the most delicate." Calvin dedicated to François I. his Institution de la Religion chrétienne, the most important literary product of the Reformation; the work in which French prose first takes definite form. Ronsard and "the pleiads" make their attempt at a literary renovation. At the same time the air was thick with pamphlets and satires, of which the most important was the Satire ménippée; a political pamphlet, a comedy, and a piece of great policy all in one. Of memoirs there was a long train; after those of the Chevalier sans peur et sans reproche, written by his Loyal serviteur, came the Commentaires of that violent Catholic, Blaise de Montluc, the book which Henry IV called "The Soldier's Bible"; the memoirs of La Noue, of Coligny, of Brantôme, of Marguerite de Valois, the first wife of Henry IV., the Etat de la France sous François II, by Regnier de la Planche, the Histoire universelle and the Mémoires of d'Aubigny, the Journal of Pierre de l'Estoile, the Histoire of Jacques Auguste de Thou, and many more.

The French language had at this time already attained such definiteness of form and such richness of expression that foreigners recognised its beauty. Charles-Quint declared that it was the State language of Europe, and later, at the conference of Nimègue, all the powers drew up their international treaties in French.

Malherbe, with whom the seventeenth century commences, played an important part in the reformation of the language. Diction was, to him, almost a religion, and the severity of his precepts earned for him the title of the Tyrant of Words and Syllables. His great merit is that he both regulated and enforced upon his contemporaries the principles of French poetry. Mathurin Regnier, in his satires, excelled in the description of the men and the customs of his day. The picture he draws of

Macette, the aged hypocrite, is a masterpiece. Racan celebrated the charms of rural life. Voiture shines in his fugitive verses, and among the wits of the ruelles, Balzac and Benserade appear in the first rank by Voiture's side. The Hôtel de Rambouillet was the first literary institution regularly organised in France, and Cardinal Richelieu procured the issue of the letters patent which created the French Academy. Pierre Corneille revolutionised the French drama. With the Cid he established French tragic style, with the Menteur, the French of comedy. His Horace is full of vigour and originality, and Cinna is an accepted masterpiece. Descartes's Discours sur la Méthode and his Méditations are marvels of style. Ménage, and Vaugelas in his Remarques sur la Langue française, helped to perfect the language. La Rochefoucauld, for his part, did much to form the national taste, and give to it the necessary accuracy and perception and soundness of judgment, by the influence of his Maximes and Réflexions Morales. La Bruyère enunciated no new truths in his Caractères, but he draws his portraits with such vigour, concision, and originality of style, that it is impossible to forget anything of his that one has read. Pascal published his Provinciales, models of eloquence, and his Pensées, of incomparable philosophic power. Cyrano de Bergerac showed a brilliant wit, a wealth of comedy; and Scarron, the most malicious of critics, originated the burlesque. Boileau's writings are marked by good sense, taste, and evenness; and in his Satires we perceive his critical power; while his Art Poétique, which earned for him the title of the "Lawgiver of Parnassus," contains a whole code of literature. In his Lutrin he attains perfection in the poetic art. Molière is inimitable: a profound observer, a great moralist, an incomparable writer. He is the most exact of all painters of human life; he depicts the human character and human passions in comedies of the most vivid, forcible, nervous and richly coloured style. The Misanthrope, Tartufe, Les Femmes savantes, L'Avare, Les Précieuses ridicules are among the gems of his brilliant and varied product. Paul de Gondî, Cardinal de Retz, was the historian of the Fronde, and St. Simon wrote his Mémoires, which were not printed until 1820. Jean de la Fontaine

"the flower of French wit, endowed with the perfume of antiquity," as Géroze called him, is the simplest and the least pretentious of our poets. Free as are his Contes et nouvelles, they never offend the taste, for the author's finesse and delicacy never deserted him. His Fables are life itself, they are original and imperishable. Madame de la Fayette in the Princesse de Clèves, gave a new form to fiction, while her friend, Madame de Sévigné, was writing her Lettres, that magnificent model of the epistolary art in which the customs and the personages of the seventeenth century are mirrored. Jean Racine held undisputed sway over the stage, and his tragedies: Andromaque, Britannicus, Bérénice, Mithridate, Esther, Phèdre, Athalie, as well as his comedy, the Plaideurs, reached a standard which it will not be easy for human genius to surpass. The Gallic church is not without its literary glories. Bossuet left his masterpieces of style and of eloquence, such as his Discours sur l'Histoire universelle and his Oraisons funèbres. Bourdaloue raises himself to the first rank by his Sermons. Father Malebranche, at once a metaphysician and a moralist, published his Recherche de la Vérité. Fléchier delivered his Oraison funèbre de Turenne. Fénelon coupled his name with the Traité de l'éducation des filles, the Dialogues des Morts, Télémaque, and finally, Massillon had no rival to fear when he wrote his Petit Carême.

The eighteenth century was dominated, one might almost say that it is represented, by one towering genius. To Voltaire every form of literary activity seemed easy—history, criticism, drama, philosophy; and he shone in every one of them. His Histoire de Charles XII is a model, his light verses are vastly superior to those of his contemporaries, and his plays, Œdipe, Brutus, Zaire, Alzire, Mérope, Mahomet, Sémiramis and Tancrède are powerful, animated, affecting, and overflowing with eloquence. Marmontel and La Harpe, disciples of Voltaire, are little reflections of their master's power. Jean Baptiste Rousseau is noteworthy for the melody and the rhythm of his verse. Gresset wrote the Méchant; Piron, the Métromanie. Le Sage, who portrays human weaknesses in the Diable boiteux, gives us the type of the character study in Gil Blas. Louis Racine wrote the Mémoires in which he retraces his father's life. Rollin published his Histoire ancienne. Bernardin de St-Pierre produced a masterpiece in his simple and poetic romance, Paul et Virginie. Montesquieu signed his immortal pages of elevated philosophy, the Lettres persanes, L'Esprit des Loix, and the Considérations sur les Causes de la Grandeur et de la Décadence des Romains. Jean-Jacques Rousseau, by his theory of philosophy, indicates to us the approach of the French Revolution. His Emile is a declaration of the rights of childhood, and an incitement to the domestic virtues; while the Contrat social takes its departure from the principle that "all men are born equal." The most vivid passion glows in the pages of the Nouvelle Héloïse and the Confessions yield a true impression of the writer's genius. Caron de Beaumarchais gave the Barbier de Séville to the French stage, and after the famous trial he printed his Mémoires judiciaires, a work characterised by eloquence, wit, spirit, and sound sense. Buffon devoted his imaginative pen to the analysis of nature. The description of which his Histoire naturelle is composed, are not only vivid pictures, but noble and pure in style as well, worthy of the writer who said, when he was received into the Academy, that "the style is the very essence of the man." Diderot, one of the most powerful intellects of his age, conceived, and successfully executed, the immense task of the Encyclopédie, with the collaboration of the philosophers Condillac, Helvétius, and d'Holbach. D'Alembert wrote for the same work his beautiful Discours préliminaire which serves as its preface and its outline. The Abbé Prévost, a true historian of passion, left us Manon Lescaut. And now the century was nearly at an end. It seemed as if the storm of the Revolution must silence all literary effort. Yet this was not the case. At the moment when war was declared against Austria, Rouget de Lisle asserted himself, improvised his magnificent Chant de Guerre de l'Armée du Rhin, which, better known under the title of the Marseillaise, was to make the tour of Europe and at last become the national hymn of France.

The nineteenth century possessed, at its very dawn, two great writers. The Baroness Staël-Holstein, the daughter of Necker, and yet the type of French wit, displayed all her sensibility in Delphine, and glorified both Italy and the modern world of femininity in Corinne. Chateaubriand manifested every possible grace of style in the Génie du Christianisme, and excited the admiration of his contemporaries in Atala, Réné, the Martyrs and the Dernier des Abencerages. Under the Empire, Jacques Delille, the elegant translator of the Georgics, was the master of the descriptive school of poetry. Then came Brillat-Savarin to show, in his Physiologie du Goût, that literary art may render attractive even a treatise on gastronomy. Henri Beyle, under the pseudonym of Stendhal, gave play to all his originality in Rouge et Noir. Publicists and statesmen were nobly represented in the person of Alexis de Tocqueville, whose learning and talent one cannot but admire in the Système pénitentiaire aux Etats-Unis, and in the Démocratie en Amérique. Paul Louis Courier made the pamphlet his speciality, and his Pamphlet des Pamphlets is regarded as the model of this form of literature. Barthélémy, at once a poet and a politician, in his famous rimed newspaper, Némésis, held up the government of Louis Philippe. Béranger, whose ambition it was "to be nobody," selected for his vehicle the chanson to which he gave a new form. He sang of the Fatherland, of the people, of liberty, and he covered the old regime with ridicule. Honoré de Balzac, "the Colossus of Literature," as his enthusiasts called him, showed his qualities as a great writer of fiction in the Peau de Chagrin. A materialist, imbued with ideas which absolutely mastered him, a story-teller full of spirit and imagination, he constitutes himself the historian of the customs of the society he so brilliantly depicts in Eugénie Grandet, Une femme de 30 ans, Physiologie du Mariage, the Recherche de l'Absolu, the Médecin de Campagne and other works. Another towering figure is that of Lamartine, one of the most illustrious of French poets, who first moved us with Graziella and Raphaël, narratives of his youthful intrigues. Then came poems of penetrating sadness, the Méditations, and to them in turn succeeded the Harmonies poétiques et religieuses, in which the author reaches the loftiest regions of the ideal. His Voyage en Orient abounds in rich descriptions, and the Histoire des Girondins, which had a rescundung success, was a true historic poem. Aurore Dupin, Baroness Du Devant, hid her name under the pseudonym of "George Sand," while she displayed all the splendour and precision of style in the Maré au Diable, François Champi, and the Petite Fadette, rural romances which have been called the Georgics of French literature. In the course of an Italian voyage she quarrelled with Alfred de Musset, a sentimental poet who displayed the enthusiasms and the defects of youth. Vigour, passion, grace, melody—Musset had all these gifts; and gave profusely of his wealth in such works as Contes d'Espagne, the Coupe et les Lèvres; A quoi rêvent les jeunes Filles; Rolla; and the Nuits. His emotion seizes all hearts, penetrates all souls. Eugène Sue "gave French fiction to the hazard of the open sea," as Sainte-Beuve said, but he soon abandoned the nautical novel, and tried to portray society in its true colours. The interpreter of the aspirations which moved his generation, he threw himself into the search for political, philosophical, and social truths, in his Mystères de Paris, and his Juif errant, romances which won for him a wide popularity and a great influence over the opinions and the literature of his time. Another novelist was Frederic Soulié, the author of the Mémoires du Diable, and of the Closerie des Genets. A past master in the study of character, and in the art of gaining broad effects, he was a truly creative writer, and never releases his reader until the emotions have been played upon to the point of saturation. The romances of E. Souvestre were, on the other hand, distinguished by close adherence to nature, kindly wit, and genial philosophy. Prosper Mérimée showed himself an incomparable story-teller in his Chronique du Temps de Charles IX, where he brings upon the scene the customs and the passions of his day, and in his Colomba that striking picture of a Corsican vendetta. Sainte-Beuve takes his place in the first rank of contemporary critics by his Causeries, his Lundis, and his Nouveaux Lundis, in which he lavishes his subtle analysis, his wit, and his good taste. Laboulaye was not content to show himself an erudite publicist and juriconsult in his Histoire du droit de Propriété foncière en Occident, in the Recherches sur la Condition civile et politique des Femmes depuis les Romains jusqu'à nos jours, or in the Histoire des États-Unis d'Amérique, he showed also that he could wield the satirist's pen in such romances as Paris en Amérique, and the Prince Caniche. Flaubert in Salammbô restored to life the civilisation of ancient Carthage, and his minute observation of life in Madame Bovary opened new horizons to French fiction. Taine shines as a philosopher and as a writer in the Histoire de la Littérature anglaise, while Renan, in the Vie de Jésus, the Origines du Christianisme, and similar studies, gives us a prose endowed with a poetic wealth altogether his own. Political economy was not neglected; since it was honoured by the works of Lanfrey, the earnest defender of reason and of freedom, in the Eglise et la Philosophie du 18^e siècle, the sturdy opponent of Catholicism in the Histoire politique des Papes, of Socialism in the Lettres d'Everard, and of Cæsarism in the Histoire de Napoléon I, his greatest work. The Fleurs du Mal of Baudelaire are poems of love, at once mystical and licentious. Théodore de Banville gave us exquisitely chiselled verses, full of elaboration, imagery, and colour, in his Odes, his Nouvelles Odes funambulesques, and his Trentesix Ballades joyeuses; and formulated a new code of poetic laws in his Petit Traité de la poésie française. As for Théophile Gautier, at once a critic and a creator, who adds to his rich vocabulary the special study of style and form, his work is of immense importance. The Mariages de Paris, De Pontoise à Stamboul, the Roman d'un brave Homme, are all beautiful specimens of the clear and witty style which earned for Edmond About the nickname of "Voltaire's grandson." Alexandre Dumas, the elder, possessed at once a vivid imagination and an incredible facility of production; gifts abundantly displayed in both his novels and his plays. Who has not read the Collier de la Reine, the Trois Mousquetaires, and the Comte de Monte-Cristo? Dumas, the younger, follows in his father's footsteps. He, too, wrote both plays and novels. L'affaire Clémenceau, the Dame aux Camélias, the Demi-monde, the Fils naturel, reveal him as a writer, a thinker, and a moralist. Grace is the marked characteristic of both the plays and the novels of Octave Feuillet. The Comte de Gobineau, who left one great poem unfinished, Amadis, is a scholar as well as a poet. He undertook, in his Religions et les Philosophies dans l'Asie centrale, to make known the history and the doctrines of Persian cults; he displays his profound erudition in his Histoire des Perses d'après les Auteurs orientaux, grecs et latins, and his Essai sur l'Inégalité des Races humaines was the starting-point of a new school of chronology. Victor Hugo reformed French poetry, found new virility by saturating his vocabulary with the wealth of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. He is the great master of the Romantic School, which he substituted for the Classic School. Whether he dealt with political, religious, social, or artistic matters, whether he wrote fiction, drama, or verse, he is at home in every department of literary activity, everywhere a master. Exiled by the events of the 2nd December 1851, he took refuge first in Jersey and later in Guernsey. There, face to face with the waves, he seems to have found inspiration in the storms, in the grandeur of the sea. In that environment he wrote two pamphlets, Napoléon le Petit and the Châtiments, which are at once histories and poems of the highest rank. Later, he wrote the Légende des Siècles, a series of epopees and marvellous fancies in which he brings back to life the extinct civilisations of twenty centuries. Notre-Dame de Paris, gives us again the Paris of the Middle Ages, while the Misérables is a moving tale based upon an erudite historical conception. Hugo sought for the most striking antitheses, evoking the paroxysms of love and of fear. Nothing is too lofty for his imagination, characterised as it is by the most sublime grandeur. Renan well said that Hugo, "like a Cyclops still half buried in the earth, possesses the secrets of a lost world. His tremendous writings reflect, as in a mirage, a universe which no other eye but his can still see." Yet he could leave these regions of the supernatural and the fantastic, and the Art d'être Grand-père shows that he can commune, as no one else could, with the pure soul of a child. The fanciful verses, entitled the Prunes, which Alphonse Daudet included in his volume of Amourcuses, first drew attention to the author whom the Nabad, Numa Roumestan, and other successful works soon placed among the list of contemporary novelists. The Vers of Guy de Maupassant are the work of a writer of humorous tales, and the poet-musician Verlaine finds new rhythms in Sagesse and the Romans sans paroles, while the fertile pen of Claretie produces novels, plays, and columns of journalism. Erckmann-Chatrian are two authors whose unbroken association has merged into a single personality, and who achieved great popularity by their Romans nationaux. Another novelist, Jules Verne, gifted with a vivid imagination and a ready wit, breaks away from the old traditions of the fairy-tale, and finds a new world of marvels, based upon the latest scientific and geographical researches. Cinq Semaines en Ballon, the first story of this sort, was soon followed by the Désert de Glace, Vingt mille Lieues sous les Mers, the Voyage autour du Monde en 80 jours, all of which won unbounded popularity. Louis Viaud, a writer of great talent, signs the pseudonym of Pierre Loti to Madame Chrysanthème, Mon frère Yves, and the Pêcheur d'Islande, all charming books. Theuriet is at once a novelist and a poet. Exquisite in Raymonde, touching in the Filleul d'un Marquis, psychological in Sauvageonne, he shows his love for nature in the Journal de Tristan, and his keen analysis in Michel Verneuil. Thibault, who writes under the name of "Anatole France," has published some fine verses, the Poèmes dorés, and he takes his place among the delicate writers of short stories in his Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard. Catulle Mendès has written some beautiful verse; his Soleil de Minuit, the Soirs moroses; and some brilliant fiction, too. At the head of the Realistic School stands Emile Zola, who, in Thérèse Raquin, Rougon Macquart, La Terre, and other novels depicts everything he sees, without recoiling from the least important detail, however brutal it may be. These powerful studies are written in a rich and vigorous style, and they exercise a considerable influence upon contemporary fiction. Paul Bourget shows originality and psychological insight in Cruelle Enigme, l'Irreparable, and Un Crime d'Amour, while Sully-Prudhomme gives his thoughts masterly expression in Justice, Vaines Tendresses, and Le Bonheur. The poetic idiom of Southern France was restored to life by the Provençal poet, Mistral, whose grand rustic epopée Mircille, and whose Calendan, too, enjoyed an immediate success; while François Coppée, an observer of nature and of the life about him, gives us a picture of delightful and familiar scenes in the Intimités, Les Humbles, and La Grève des Forgerons. Criticism has its shining lights in the person of J. Lemaître with his Contemporains, and Brunetière, who displays his learning in Racine, Diderot, Le Roman Naturaliste, Histoire et Littérature. Nor must we forget that history has recently been enriched by such important works as Guizot's L'Histoire racontée à mes petits Enfants; Le Consulat et l'Empire by Thiers; Louis Blanc's L'Histoire de la Révolution française; and Michelet's L'Histoire de France, as well as a mass of monographs, memoirs, and volumes of letters and of recollections.

On the whole, the nineteenth century has produced a great variety of important works. It is not possible to sum up in one word their general character, but some general observations suggest themselves. The first is that romance and the naturalistic school occupy an important place in the literature of our time; and the second is, that as we approach the close of the century, individuality of product tends more and more to replace the system by which the writers of an earlier day grouped themselves in schools. It becomes evident, too, that the seeking for the exact word, and for the "document" is accompanied on all sides by a scrupulous study of form, which has never been more sedulously cultivated. Erudition appears hand in hand with fancy, and criticism exercises more and more its sapient influence.

L. Vallé
Bibliothécaire à la Bibliothèque Natl.

PARIS, March 1899.

Leon Vallée

1874-1944
1874-1944

WARNER MEMORIAL
UNIVERSITY
Library

SALAMMBÔ AND HER LOVER.

By GUSTAVE FLAUBERT.

[GUSTAVE FLAUBERT, leading French novelist, noted for minute "realism" and highly elaborated style, was born at Rouen, December 12, 1821; died May 8, 1880. His first two novels, "Madame Bovary" and "The Temptation of St. Anthony," were published serially in 1857; he was prosecuted for immorality on account of the former, but acquitted. "Salammbô" (scene laid about B.C. 240) appeared in 1862, after a visit to the site of ancient Carthage; "Sentimental Education, a Young Man's Romance," in 1869; "Three Tales" in 1877. He wrote also unsuccessful plays. Posthumously were published "Bouvard and Pécuchet," "Letters to George Sand," and others.]

MÂTHO was bound on the elephant's back, his four limbs crosswise, and all the unwounded escorted him, hurrying with a great commotion back to Carthage.

The water-clock of Khamoûn marked the fifth hour of the night when they reached Malqua. Here Mâtho reopened his eyes. There were such vast numbers of lights on the houses that the city seemed to be all in flames.

A mighty clamor came confusedly to him, and lying on his back he gazed at the stars. Then a door closed upon him, and darkness enveloped him. . . .

There were rejoicings at Carthage—rejoicings deep, universal, extravagant, frantic; the holes of the ruins had been stopped up, the statues of the Gods had been repainted, the streets were strewn with myrtle branches, incense smoked at the corners of the crossways, and the throng on the terraces looked, in their variagated garments, like heaps of flowers blooming in the air.

The people accosted one another, and embraced one another with tears;—the Tyrian towns were taken, the Nomads dispersed, and all the Barbarians annihilated. The Acropolis was hidden beneath colored velaria; the beaks of the triremes, drawn up in line outside the mole, shone like a dike of diamonds; everywhere there was a sense of the restoration of order, the beginning of a new existence, and the diffusion of vast happiness: it was the day of Salammbô's marriage with the king of the Numidians.

On the terrace of the temple of Khamon there were three long tables laden with gigantic plates, at which the Priests, Ancients, and Rich were going to sit, and there was a fourth and higher one for Hamilcar, Narr' Havas, and Salammbô; for as she had saved her country by the restoration of the zaïmph, the people turned her wedding into a national rejoicing, and were waiting in the square below till she should appear.

But their impatience was excited by another and more acrid longing: Matho's death had been promised for the ceremony.

It had been proposed at first to flay him alive, to pour lead into his entrails, to kill him with hunger; he should be tied to a tree, and an ape behind him should strike him on the head with a stone; he had offended Tanith, and the cynocephaluses of Tanith should avenge her. Others were of opinion that he should be led about on a dromedary after linen wicks, dipped in oil, had been inserted in his body in several places — and they took pleasure in the thought of the large animal wandering through the streets with this man writhing beneath the fires like a candelabrum blown about by the wind.

But what citizens should be charged with his torture, and why disappoint the rest? They would have liked a kind of death in which the whole town might take part, in which every hand, every weapon, everything Carthaginian, to the very paving stones in the streets and the waves in the gulf, could rend him, and crush him, and annihilate him. Accordingly the Ancients decided that he should go from his prison to the square of Khamon without any escort, and with his arms fastened to his back: it was forbidden to strike him to the heart, in order that he might live the longer; to put out his eyes, so that he might see his torture through; to hurl anything against his person, or to lay more than three fingers upon him at a time.

Although he was not to appear until the end of the day, the people sometimes fancied that he could be seen, and the crowd would rush toward the Acropolis, and empty the streets, to return with lengthened murmurings. Some people had remained standing in the same place since the day before, and they would call on one another from a distance and show their nails, which they had allowed to grow, the better to bury them in his flesh. Others walked restlessly up and down; some were as pale as though they were awaiting their own execution.

Suddenly lofty feather fans rose above the heads, behind the Mappalian district. It was Salammbô leaving her palace; a sigh of relief found vent.

But the procession was long in coming; it marched with deliberation.

First there filed past the priests of the Pataec Gods, then those of Eschmoun, of Melkarth, and all the other colleges in succession, with the same insignia, and in the same order as had been observed at the time of the sacrifice. The pontiffs of Moloch passed with heads bent, and the multitude stood aside from them in a kind of remorse. But the priests of Rabbetna advanced with a proud step, and with lyres in their hands; the priestesses followed them in transparent robes of yellow or black, uttering cries like birds and writhing like vipers, or else whirling round to the sound of flutes to imitate the dance of the stars, while their light garments wafted puffs of delicate scents through the streets.

The Kedeschim, with painted eyelids, who symbolized the hermaphroditism of the Divinity, received applause among these women, and, being perfumed and dressed like them, they resembled them in spite of their flat breasts and narrower hips. Moreover, on this day the female principle dominated and confused all things; a mystic lasciviousness moved in the heavy air; the torches were already lighted in the depths of the sacred woods; there was to be a great prostitution there during the night; three vessels had brought courtesans from Sicily, and others had come from the desert.

As the colleges arrived they ranged themselves in the courts of the temples, on the outer galleries, and along double staircases which rose against the walls, and drew together at the top. Files of white robes appeared between the colonnades, and the architecture was peopled with human statues, motionless as statues of stone.

Then came the masters of the exchequer, the governors of the provinces, and all the Rich. A great tumult prevailed below. Adjacent streets were discharging the crowd, hierodules were driving it back with blows of sticks; and then Salammbô appeared in a litter surmounted by a purple canopy, and surrounded by the Ancients crowned with their golden tiaras.

Thereupon an immense shout arose; the cymbals and crotala sounded more loudly, the tambourines thundered, and the great purple canopy sank between the two pylons.

It appeared again on the first landing. Salammbô was walking slowly beneath it; then she crossed the terrace to take her seat behind on a kind of throne cut out of the carapace of a tortoise. An ivory stool with three steps was pushed beneath her feet; two negro children knelt on the edge of the first step, and sometimes she would rest both arms, which were laden with rings of excessive weight, upon their heads.

From ankle to hip she was covered with a network of narrow meshes which were in imitation of fish scales, and shone like mother-of-pearl; her waist was clasped by a blue zone, which allowed her breasts to be seen through two crescent-shaped slashings; the nipples were hidden by carbuncle pendants. She had a headdress made of peacock's feathers studded with gems; an ample cloak, as white as snow, fell behind her — and with her elbows at her sides, her knees pressed together, and circles of diamonds on the upper part of her arms, she remained perfectly upright in a hieratic attitude.

Her father and her husband were on two lower seats, Narr' Havas dressed in a light simar and wearing his crown of rock salt, from which there strayed two tresses of hair as twisted as the horns of Ammon; and Hamilear in a violet tunic figured with gold vine branches, and with a battle sword at his side.

The python of the temple of Eschmoun lay on the ground amid pools of pink oil in the space inclosed by the tables, and, biting its tail, described a large, black circle. In the middle of the circle there was a copper pillar bearing a crystal egg; and, as the sun shone upon it, rays were emitted on every side.

Behind Salammbô, stretched the priests of Tanith in linen robes; on her right the Ancients, in their tiaras, formed a great gold line, and on the other side the Rich, with their emerald scepters, a great green line — while quite in the background, where the priests of Moloch were ranged, the cloaks looked like a wall of purple. The other colleges occupied the lower terraces. The multitude obstructed the streets. It reached to the house tops, and extended in long files to the summit of the Acropolis. Having thus the people at her feet, the firmament above her head, and around her the immensity of the sea, the gulf, the mountains, and the distant provinces, Salammbô in her splendor was blended with Tanith, and seemed the very Genius of Carthage, and its embodied soul.

The feast was to last all night, and lamps with several branches were planted like trees on the painted woolen cloths which covered the low tables. Large electrum flagons, blue glass amphoras, tortoise-shell spoons, and small round loaves were crowded between the double row of pearl-bordered plates; bunches of grapes with their leaves had been rolled round ivory vine stocks after the fashion of the thyrsus; blocks of snow were melting on ebony trays, and lemons, pomegranates, gourds, and watermelons formed hillocks beneath the lofty silver plate; boars with open jaws were wallowing in the dust of spices; hares, covered with their fur, appeared to be bounding amid the flowers; there were shells filled with forcemeat; the pastry had symbolic shapes; when the covers of the dishes were removed doves flew out.

The slaves, meanwhile, with tunics tucked up, were going about on tiptoe; from time to time a hymn sounded on the lyres, or a choir of voices rose. The clamor of the people, continuous as the noise of the sea, floated vaguely around the feast, and seemed to lull it in a broader harmony; some recalled the banquet of the Mercenaries; they gave themselves up to dreams of happiness; the sun was beginning to go down, and the crescent of the moon was already rising in another part of the sky.

But Salammbô turned her head as though some one had called her; the people, who were watching her, followed the direction of her eyes.

The door of the dungeon, hewn in the rock at the foot of the temple, on the summit of the Acropolis, had just opened; and a man was standing on the threshold of this black hole.

He came forth bent double, with the scared look of fallow deer when suddenly enlarged.

The light dazzled him, he stood motionless awhile. All had recognized him and they held their breath.

In their eyes the body of this victim was something peculiarly theirs, and was adorned with almost religious splendor. They bent forward to see him, especially the women. They burned to gaze upon him who had caused the deaths of their children and husbands; and from the bottom of their souls there sprang up in spite of themselves an infamous curiosity, a desire to know him completely, a wish mingled with remorse which turned to increased execration.

At last he advanced; then the stupefaction of surprise disappeared. Numbers of arms were raised, and he was lost to sight.

The staircase of the Acropolis had sixty steps. He descended them as though he were rolled down in a torrent from the top of a mountain; three times he was seen to leap, and then he alighted below on his feet.

His shoulders were bleeding, his breast was panting with great shocks; and he made such efforts to burst his bonds that his arms, which were crossed on his naked loins, swelled like pieces of a serpent.

Several streets began in front of him, leading from the spot at which he found himself. In each of them a triple row of bronze chains fastened to the navels of the Pataec Gods extended in parallel lines from one end to the other; the crowd was massed against the houses, and servants, belonging to the Ancients, walked in the middle brandishing thongs.

One of them drove him forward with a great blow; Matho began to move.

They thrust their arms over the chains, shouting out that the road had been left too wide for him; and he passed along, felt, pricked, and slashed by all those fingers; when he reached the end of one street another appeared; several times he flung himself to one side to bite them; they speedily dispersed, the chains held him back, and the crowd burst out laughing.

A child rent his ear; a young girl, hiding the point of a spindle in her sleeve, split his cheek; they tore handfuls of hair from him and strips of flesh; others smeared his face with sponges steeped in filth and fastened upon sticks. A stream of blood started from the right side of his neck; frenzy immediately set in. This last Barbarian was to them a representative of all the Barbarians, and all the army; they were taking vengeance on him for their disasters, their terrors, and their shame. The rage of the mob developed with its gratification; the curving chains were overstrained, and were on the point of breaking; the people did not feel the blows of the slaves who struck at them to drive them back; some clung to the projections of the houses; all the openings in the walls were stopped up with heads; and they howled at him the mischief that they could not inflict upon him.

It was atrocious, filthy abuse, mingled with ironical encouragements and with imprecations; and, his present tortures not being enough for them, they foretold to him others that should be still more terrible in eternity.

This vast baying filled Carthage with stupid continuity. Frequently a single syllable — a hoarse, deep, and frantic intonation — would be repeated for several minutes by the entire people. The walls would vibrate with it from top to bottom, and both sides of the street would seem to Matho to be coming against him, and carrying him off the ground, like two immense arms stifling him in the air.

Nevertheless he remembered that he had experienced something like it before. The same crowd was on the terraces, there were the same looks and the same wrath; but then he had walked free, all had then dispersed, for a God covered him — and the recollection of this, gaining precision by degrees, brought a crushing sadness upon him. Shadows passed before his eyes; the town whirled round in his head, his blood streamed from a wound in his hip, he felt that he was dying; his hams bent, and he sank quite gently upon the pavement.

Some one went to the peristyle of the temple of Melkarth, took thence the bar of a tripod, heated red hot in the coals, and, slipping it beneath the first chain, pressed it against his wound. The flesh was seen to smoke; the hootings of the people drowned his voice; he was standing again.

Six paces further on, and he fell a third and again a fourth time; but some new torture always made him rise. They discharged little drops of boiling oil through tubes at him; they strewed pieces of broken glass beneath his feet; still he walked on. At the corner of the street of Satheb he leaned his back against the wall beneath the penthouse of a shop, and advanced no further.

The slaves of the Council struck him with their whips of hippopotamus leather, so furiously and long that the fringes of their tunics were drenched with sweat. Matho appeared insensible; suddenly he started off and began to run at random, making noise with his lips like one shivering with severe cold. He threaded the streets of Boudes, and the street of Sœpo, crossed the Green Market, and reached the square of Khamon.

He now belonged to the priests; the slaves had just dispersed the crowd, and there was more room. Matho gazed round him and his eyes encountered Sālammbô.

At the first step that he had taken she had risen; then, as he approached, she had involuntarily advanced by degrees to the edge of the terrace; and soon all external things were blotted out, and she saw only Matho. Silence fell in her soul—one of those abysses wherein the whole world disappears beneath the pressure of a single thought, a memory, a look. This man who was walking toward her attracted her.

Excepting his eyes he had no appearance of humanity left; he was a long, perfectly red shape; his broken bonds hung down his thighs, but they could not be distinguished from the tendons of his wrists, which were laid quite bare; his mouth remained wide open; from his eye sockets there darted flames which seemed to rise up to his hair—and the wretch still walked on!

He reached the foot of the terrace. Salammbô was leaning over the balustrade; those frightful eyeballs were scanning her, and there rose within her a consciousness of all that he had suffered for her. Although he was in his death agony, she could see him once more kneeling in his tent, encircling her waist with his arms, and stammering out gentle words; she thirsted to feel them and hear them again; she did not want him to die! At this moment Matho gave a great start; she was on the point of shrieking aloud. He fell backward and did not stir again.

Salammbô was borne back, nearly swooning, to her throne by the priests who flocked about her. They congratulated her; it was her work. All clapped their hands and stamped their feet, howling her name.

A man darted upon the corpse. Although he had no beard he had the cloak of a priest of Moloch on his shoulder, and in his belt that species of knife which they employed for cutting up the sacred meat, and which terminated at the end of the handle, in a golden spatula. He cleft Matho's breast with a single blow, then snatched out the heart and laid it upon the spoon; and Schahabarim, uplifting his arm, offered it to the sun.

The sun sank behind the waves; his rays fell like long arrows upon the red heart. As the beatings diminished the planet sank into the sea; and at the last palpitation it disappeared.

Then from the gulf to the lagoon, and from the isthmus to the pharos, in all the streets, on all the houses, and on all the temples, there was a single shout; sometimes it paused, to be again renewed; the building shook with it; Carthage was convulsed, as it were, in the spasm of Titanic joy and boundless hope.

Narr' Havas, drunk with pride, passed his left arm beneath Salammbô's waist in token of possession; and taking a gold patera in his right hand, he drank to the Genius of Carthage.

Salammbô rose like her husband, with a cup in her hand, to drink also. She fell down again with her head lying over the back of the throne, — pale, stiff, with parted lips, — and her loosened hair hung to the ground.

HANNIBAL AS STRATEGIST AND SOLDIER.

By LIVY.

[TITUS LIVIUS, Roman historian, was born near what is now Padua, B.C. 59. He lived at Rome under Augustus, making so splendid a literary reputation that one man went from Spain to Rome and back merely to look at him; but he retired to his native town, and died there B.C. 17. His enduring repute rests on his History of Rome from its foundation to the death of Drusus, in one hundred and forty-two books, of which only thirty-five are extant.]

THE CROSSING OF THE ALPS, B.C. 218-217.

AFTER composing the dissensions of the Allobroges, being on his way to the Alps, he proceeded to the Tricorii; his way being nowhere obstructed till he came to the river Druentia. This stream, rising amid the Alps, is by far the most difficult to pass of all the rivers in Gaul: for though it rolls down an immense body of water, yet it does not admit of ships; because, being restrained by no banks, and flowing in several and not always the same channels, and continually forming new shallows and new whirlpools (on which account the passage is also uncertain to a person on foot), and rolling down besides gravelly stones, it affords no firm or safe passage to those who enter it; and having been at that time swollen by showers, it created great disorder among the soldiers as they crossed, when, in addition to other difficulties, they were of themselves confused by their own hurry and uncertain shouts.

From the Druentia, by a road that lay principally through plains, Hannibal arrived at the Alps without molestation from the Gauls that inhabit those regions. Then, though the scene had been previously anticipated from report (by which uncertainties are wont to be exaggerated), yet the height of the mountains when viewed so near, and the snows almost mingling with the sky, the shapeless huts situated on the cliffs, the cattle and beasts of burden withered by the cold, the men unshorn and wildly dressed, all things, animate and inanimate, stiffened with frost, and other objects more terrible to be seen than described, renewed their alarm. To them, marching up the first acclivities, the mountaineers appeared occupying the heights overhead; who, if they had occupied the more concealed valleys, might, by rushing out suddenly to the attack, have occasioned great flight and havoc. Hannibal orders them to halt, and having sent forward Gauls to view the ground, when he found there was no passage that way, he pitches his camp in the widest valley he could find, among places all rugged and precipitous. Then, having learned from the same Gauls, when they had mixed in conversation with the mountaineers, from whom they differed little in language and manners, that the pass was only beset during the day, and that at night each withdrew to his own dwelling, he advanced at the dawn to the heights, as if designing openly and by day to force his way through the defile. The day then being passed in feigning a different attempt from that which was in preparation, when they had fortified the camp in the same place where they had halted, as soon as he perceived that the mountaineers had descended from the heights, and that the guards were withdrawn, having lighted for show a greater number of fires than was proportioned to the number that remained, and having left the baggage in the camp, with the cavalry and the principal part of the infantry, he himself with a party of light-armed, consisting of all the most courageous of his troops, rapidly cleared the defile, and took post on those very heights which the enemy had occupied.

At dawn of light the next day the camp broke up, and the rest of the army began to move forward. The mountaineers, on a signal being given, were now assembling from their forts to their usual station, when they suddenly behold part of the enemy overhanging them from above, in possession of their former position, and the others passing along the road. Both these objects, presented at the same time to the eye and the mind, made them stand motionless for a little while; but when they afterwards saw the confusion in the pass, and that the marching body was thrown into disorder by the tumult which itself created, principally from the horses being terrified, thinking that whatever terror they added would suffice for the destruction of the enemy, they scramble along the dangerous rocks, as being accustomed alike to pathless and circuitous ways. Then indeed the Carthaginians were opposed at once by the enemy and by the difficulties of the ground; and each striving to escape first from the danger, there was more fighting among themselves than with their opponents. The horses, in particular, created danger in the lines, which, being terrified by the discordant clamors which the groves and reëchoing valleys augmented, fell into confusion; and if by chance struck or wounded, they were so dismayed that they occasioned a great loss both of men and baggage of every description: and as the pass on both sides was broken and precipitous, this tumult threw many down to an immense depth, some even of the armed men; but the beasts of burden, with their loads, were rolled down like the fall of some vast fabric. Though these disasters were shocking to view, Hannibal, however, kept his place for a little, and kept his men together, lest he might augment the tumult and disorder; but afterwards, when he saw the line broken, and that there was danger that he should bring over his army preserved to no purpose if deprived of their baggage, he hastened down from the higher ground; and though he had routed the enemy by the first onset alone, he at the same time increased the disorder in his own army: but that tumult was composed in a moment, after the roads were cleared by the flight of the mountaineers; and presently the whole army was conducted through, not only without being disturbed, but almost in silence. He then took a fortified place, which was the capital of that district, and the little villages that lay around it, and fed his army for three days with the corn and cattle he had taken; and during these three days, as the soldiers were neither obstructed by the mountaineers, who had been daunted by the first engagement, nor yet much by the ground, he made considerable way.

He then came to another state, abounding, for a mountainous country, with inhabitants; where he was nearly overcome, not by open war, but by his own arts of treachery and ambuscade. Some old men, governors of forts, came as deputies to the Carthaginian, professing, "that having been warned by the useful example of the calamities of others, they wished rather to experience the friendship than the hostilities of the Carthaginians: they would, therefore, obediently execute his commands, and begged that he would accept of a supply of provisions, guides of his march, and hostages for the sincerity of their promises." Hannibal, when he had answered them in a friendly manner, thinking that they should neither be rashly trusted nor yet rejected, lest if repulsed they might openly become enemies, having received the hostages whom they proffered, and made use of the provisions which they of their own accord brought down to the road, follows their guides, by no means as among a people with whom he was at peace, but with his line of march in close order. The elephants and cavalry formed the van of the marching body; he himself, examining everything around, and intent on every circumstance, followed with the choicest of the infantry. When they came into a narrower pass, lying on one side beneath an overhanging eminence, the barbarians, rising at once on all sides from their ambush, assail them in front and rear, both at close quarters and from a distance, and roll down huge stones on the army. The most numerous body of men pressed on the rear; against whom the infantry facing about and directing their attack made it very obvious that, had not the rear of the army been well supported, a great loss must have been sustained in that pass. Even as it was, they came to the extremity of danger, and almost to destruction; for while Hannibal hesitates to lead down his division into the defile, because, though he himself was a protection to the cavalry, he had not in the same way left any aid to the infantry in the rear, the mountaineers, charging obliquely, and on having broken through the middle of the army, took possession of the road; and one night was spent by Hannibal without his cavalry and baggage.

Next day, the barbarians running in to the attack between (the two divisions) less vigorously, the forces were reunited, and the defile passed, not without loss, but yet with a greater destruction of beasts of burden than of men. From that time the mountaineers fell upon them in smaller parties, more like an attack of robbers than war, sometimes on the van, sometimes on the rear, according as the ground afforded them advantage, or stragglers advancing or loitering gave them an opportunity. Though the elephants were driven through steep and narrow roads with great loss of time, yet wherever they went they rendered the army safe from the enemy, because men unacquainted with such animals were afraid of approaching too nearly. On the ninth day they came to a summit of the Alps, chiefly through places trackless; and after many mistakes of their way, which were caused either by the treachery of the guides, or, when they were not trusted, by entering valleys at random on their own conjectures of the route. For two days they remained encamped on the summit; and rest was given to the soldiers, exhausted with toil and fighting; and several beasts of burden, which had fallen down among the rocks, by following the track of the army arrived at the camp. A fall of snow, it being now the season of the setting of the constellation of the Pleiades, caused great fear to the soldiers, already worn out with weariness of so many hardships. On the standards being moved forward at daybreak, when the army proceeded slowly over all places entirely blocked up with snow, and languor and despair strongly appeared in the countenances of all, Hannibal, having advanced before the standards, and ordered the soldiers to halt on a certain eminence, whence there was a prospect far and wide, points out to them Italy and the plains of the Po, extending themselves beneath the Alpine mountains, and said, "that they were now surmounting not only the ramparts of Italy, but also of the city of Rome; that the rest of the journey would be smooth and downhill; that after one, or, at most, a second battle, they would have the citadel and capital of Italy in their power and possession." The army then began to advance, the enemy now making no attempts beyond petty thefts, as opportunity offered. But the journey proved much more difficult than it had been in the ascent, as the declivity of the Alps, being generally shorter on the side of Italy, is consequently steeper; for nearly all the road was precipitous, narrow, and slippery, so that neither those who made the least stumble could prevent themselves from falling, nor, when fallen, remain in the same place, but rolled, both men and beasts of burden, one upon another.

They then came to a rock much more narrow, and formed of such perpendicular ledges that a light-armed soldier, carefully making the attempt, and clinging with his hands to the bushes and roots around, could with difficulty lower himself down. The ground, even before very steep by nature, had been broken by a recent falling away of the earth into a precipice of nearly a thousand feet in depth. Here, when the cavalry had halted, as if at the end of their journey, it is announced to Hannibal, wondering what obstructed the march, that the rock was impassable. Having then gone himself to view the place, it seemed clear to him that he must lead his army round it, by however great a circuit, through the pathless and untrodden regions around. But this route also proved impracticable; for while the new snow of a moderate depth remained on the old, which had not been removed, their foot-steps were planted with ease as they walked upon the new snow, which was soft and not too deep; but when it was dissolved by the trampling of so many men and beasts of burden, they then walked on the bare ice below, and through the dirty fluid formed by the melting snow. Here there was a wretched struggle, both on account of the slippery ice not affording any hold to the step, and giving way beneath the foot more readily by reason of the slope; and whether they assisted themselves in rising by their hands or their knees, their supports themselves giving way, they would tumble again; nor were there any stumps or roots near by pressing against which one might with hand or foot support himself; so that they only floundered on the smooth ice and amidst the melted snow. The beasts of burden sometimes also cut into this lower ice by merely treading upon it, at others they broke it completely through by the violence with which they struck in their hoofs in their struggling, so that most of them, as if taken in a trap, stuck in the hardened and deeply frozen ice.

At length, after the men and beasts of burden had been fatigued to no purpose, the camp was pitched on the summit, the ground being cleared for that purpose with great difficulty, so much snow was there to be dug out and carried away. The soldiers being then set to make a way down the cliff, by which alone a passage could be effected, and it being necessary that they should cut through the rocks, having felled and lopped a number of large trees which grew around, they make a huge pile of timber; and as soon as a strong wind fit for exciting the flames arose, they set fire to it, and, pouring vinegar on the heated stones, they render them soft and crumbling. They then open a road through the incandescient rock with iron tools, and reduce the grades by moderate windings, so that not only the draft animals but the elephants also can be brought down. Four days being spent around the cliff, the draft animals had nearly perished with hunger; for the peaks were almost bare, and what little forage there was, the snows buried up. The lower levels have valleys and sunny knolls, and brooks near woods, and still more suitable spots under human cultivation. There the draft animals are turned out to pasture, and rest is given to the men tired out with fatigue duty.

THE ESCAPE BY THE STRATAGEM OF THE OXEN.

It happened that on that day Minucius had formed a junction with Fabius, having been sent to secure with a guard the pass above Tarracina, which, contracted into a narrow gorge, overhangs the sea, in order that Hannibal might not be able to get into the Roman territory by the Appian Way's being unguarded. The dictator and master of the horse, uniting their forces, lead them down into the road through which Hannibal was about to march his troops. The enemy was two miles from that place.

The following day the Carthaginian filled the whole road between the two camps with his troops in marching order; and though the Romans had taken their stand immediately under their rampart, having a decidedly superior position, yet the Carthaginian came up with his light horse, and, with a view to provoke the enemy, carried on a kind of desultory attack, first charging and then retreating. The Roman line remained in its position. The battle was slow, and more conformable to the wish of the dictator than of Hannibal. On the part of the Romans there fell two hundred, on the part of the enemy eight hundred. It now began to appear that Hannibal was hemmed in, the road to Casilinum being blockaded; and that while Capua, and Samnium, and so many wealthy allies in the rear of the Romans might supply them with provisions, the Carthaginian, on the other hand, must winter amidst the rocks of Formice and the sands and hideous swamps of Liternum. Nor did it escape Hannibal that he was assailed by his own arts; wherefore, since he could not escape by way of Casilinum, and since it was necessary to make for the mountains and pass the summit of Callicula, lest in any place the Romans should attack his troops while inclosed in valleys; having hit upon a stratagem calculated to deceive the sight, and excite terror from its appearance, by means of which he might baffle the enemy, he resolved to come up by stealth to the mountains at the commencement of night. The preparation of his wily stratagem was of this description. Torches, collected from every part of the country, and bundles of rods and dry cuttings, are fastened before the horns of oxen, of which, wild and tame, he had driven away a great number among other plunder of the country : the number of oxen was made up to nearly two thousand. To Hasdrubal was assigned the task of driving to the mountains that herd, after having set fire to their horns as soon as ever it was dark ; particularly, if he could, over the passes beset by the enemy.

As soon as it was dark the camp was moved in silence ; the oxen were driven a little in advance of the standards. When they arrived at the foot of the mountains and the narrow passes, the signal is immediately given for setting fire to their horns and driving them violently up the mountains before them. The mere terror excited by the flame, which cast a glare from their heads, and the heat now approaching the quick and the roots of their horns, drove on the oxen as if goaded by madness. By which dispersion, on a sudden all the surrounding shrubs were in a blaze, as if the mountains and woods had been on fire ; and the unavailing tossing of their heads quickening the flame, exhibited an appearance as of men running to and fro on every side. Those who had been placed to guard the passage of the wood, when they saw fires on the tops of the mountains, and some over their own heads, concluding that they were surrounded, abandoned their post ; making for the tops of the mountains in the direction in which the fewest fires blazed, as being the safest course ; however, they fell in with some oxen which had strayed from their herds. At first, when they beheld them at a distance, they stood fixed in amazement at the miracle, as it appeared to them, of creatures breathing fire : afterwards, when it showed itself to be a human stratagem, then, forsooth, concluding that there was an ambuscade, as they are hurrying away in flight with increased alarm, they fall in also with the light-armed troops of the enemy. But the night, when the fear was equally shared, kept them from commencing the battle till morning. Meanwhile Hannibal, having marched his whole army through the pass, and having cut off some of the enemy in the very defile, pitches his camp in the country of Allife.

Fabius perceived this tumult, but concluding that it was a snare, and being disinclined for a battle, particularly by night, kept his troops within the works. At break of day a battle took place under the summit of the mountain, in which the Romans, who were considerably superior in numbers, would have easily overpowered the light-armed of the enemy, cut off as they were from their party, had not a cohort of Spaniards, sent back by Hannibal for that very purpose, reached the spot. That body being more accustomed to mountains, and being more adapted, both from the agility of their limbs and also from the character of their arms, to skirmishing amidst rocks and crags, easily foiled, by their manner of fighting, an enemy loaded with arms, accustomed to level ground and the steady kind of fighting. Separating from a contest thus by no means equal, they proceeded to their camps, — the Spaniards almost all untouched, the Romans having lost a few. Fabius also moved his camp, and passing the defile, took up a position above Allifæ, in a strong and elevated place. Then Hannibal, pretending to march to Rome through Samnium, came back as far as the Peligni, spreading devastation. Fabius led his troops along the heights midway between the army of the enemy and the city of Rome, neither avoiding him altogether, nor coming to an engagement. From the Peligni the Carthaginian turned his course, and going back again to Apulia, reached Geronium, a city deserted by its inhabitants from fear, as a part of its walls had fallen down together in ruins. The dictator formed a completely fortified camp in the territory of Larinum, and being recalled thence to Rome on account of some sacred rites, he not only urged the master of the horse, in virtue of his authority, but with advice and almost with prayers, that he would trust rather to prudence than fortune, and imitate him as a general rather than Sempronius and Flaminius; that he would not suppose that nothing had been achieved by having worn out nearly the whole summer in baffling the enemy; that physicians, too, sometimes gained more by rest than by motion and action. That it was no small thing to have ceased to be conquered by an enemy so often victorious, and to have taken breath after successive disasters. Having thus unavailingly admonished the master of the horse, he set out for Rome.

THE BATTLE OF LAKE TRASIMENUS, B.C. 217.

Hannibal lays waste the country between the city Cortona and the lake Trasimenus with all the devastation of war, the more to exasperate the enemy to revenge the injuries inflicted on his allies. They had now reached a place formed by nature for an ambuscade, where the Trasimenus comes nearest to the mountains of Cortona. A very narrow passage only intervenes, as though room enough just for that purpose had been left designedly; after that a somewhat wider plain opens itself, and then some hills rise up. On these he pitches his camp, in full view, where he himself, with his Spaniards and Africans, only might be posted. The Baliares and his other light troops he leads round the mountains; his cavalry he posts at the very entrance of the defile, some eminences conveniently concealing them; in order that when the Romans had entered, the cavalry advancing, every place might be inclosed by the lake and the mountains. Flaminius, passing the defiles before it was quite daylight, without reconnoitering, though he had arrived at the lake the preceding day at sunset, when the troops began to be spread into the wider plain, saw that part only of the enemy which was opposite to him; the ambuscade in his rear and overhead escaped his notice. And when the Carthaginian had his enemy inclosed by the lake and mountains, and surrounded by his troops, he gives the signal to all to make a simultaneous charge; and each running down the nearest way, the suddenness and unexpectedness of the event was increased to the Romans by a mist rising from the lake, which had settled thicker on the plain than on the mountains; and thus the troops of the enemy ran down from the various eminences, sufficiently well discerning each other, and therefore with the greater regularity. A shout being raised on all sides, the Roman found himself surrounded before he could well see the enemy; and the attack on the front and flank had commenced ere his line could be well formed, his arms prepared for action, or his swords unsheathed.

The consul, while all were panic-struck, himself sufficiently undaunted, though in so perilous a case, marshals, as well as the time and place permitted, the lines which were thrown into confusion by each man's turning himself towards the various shouts; and wherever he could approach or be heard, exhorts them, and bids them stand and fight: for that they could not escape thence by vows and prayers to the gods, but by exertion and valor; that a way was sometimes opened by the sword through the midst of marshaled armies, and that generally the less the fear the less the danger. However, from the noise and tumult, neither his advice nor command could be caught; and so far were the soldiers from knowing their own standards, and ranks, and position, that they had scarce sufficient courage to take up arms and make them ready for battle; and certain of them were surprised before they could prepare them, being burdened rather than protected by them; while in so great darkness there was more use of ears than of eyes. They turned their faces and eyes in every direction towards the groans of the wounded, the sounds of blows upon the body or arms, and the mingled clamors of the menacing and the affrighted. Some, as they were making their escape, were stopped, having encountered a body of men engaged in fight; and bands of fugitives returning to the battle, diverted others. After charges had been attempted unsuccessfully in every direction, and on their flanks the mountains and the lake, on the front and rear the lines of the enemy inclosed them, when it was evident that there was no hope of safety but in the right hand and the sword; then each man became to himself a leader and encourager to action; and an entirely new contest arose, not a regular line, with principes, hastati, and triarii; nor of such a sort as that the vanguard should fight before the standards, and the rest of the troops behind them; nor such that each soldier should be in his own legion, cohort, or company: chance collects them into bands; and each man's own will assigned to him his post, whether to fight in front or rear; and so great was the ardor of the conflict, so intent were their minds upon the battle, that not one of the combatants felt an earthquake which threw down large portions of many of the cities of Italy, turned rivers from their rapid courses, carried the sea up into rivers, and leveled mountains with a tremendous crash.

The battle was continued near three hours, and in every quarter with fierceness; around the consul, however, it was still hotter and more determined. Both the strongest of the troops, and himself too, promptly brought assistance wherever he perceived his men hard pressed and distressed. But, distinguished by his armor, the enemy attacked him with the utmost vigor, while his countrymen defended him; until an Insubrian horseman, named Ducarius, knowing him also by his face, says to his countrymen, "Lo, this is the consul who slew our legions and laid waste our fields and city. Now will I offer this victim to the shades of my countrymen, miserably slain;" and putting spurs to his horse, he rushes through a very dense body of the enemy; and first slaying his armor bearer, who had opposed himself to his attack as he approached, ran the consul through with his lance; the triarii, opposing their shields, kept him off when seeking to despoil him. Then first the flight of a great number began; and now neither the lake nor the mountains obstructed their hurried retreat; they run through all places, confined and precipitous, as though they were blind; and arms and men are tumbled one upon another. A great many, when there remained no more space to run, advancing into the water through the first shallows of the lake, plunge in, as far as they could stand above it with their heads and shoulders. Some there were whom inconsiderate fear induced to try to escape even by swimming; but as that attempt was inordinate and hopeless, they were either overwhelmed in the deep water, their courage failing, or, wearied to no purpose, made their way back, with extreme difficulty, to the shallows, and there were cut up on all hands by the cavalry of the enemy, which had entered the water. Near upon six thousand of the foremost body, having gallantly forced their way through the opposing enemy, entirely unacquainted with what was occurring in their rear, escaped from the defile; and having halted on a certain rising ground, and hearing only the shouting and clashing of arms, they could not know nor discern, by reason of the mist, what was the fortune of the battle. At length, the affair being decided, when the mist, dispelled by the increasing heat of the sun, had cleared the atmosphere, then, in the clear light, the mountains and plains showed their ruin, and the Roman army miserably destroyed; and thus, lest, being descried at a distance, the cavalry should be sent against them, hastily snatching up their standards, they hurried away with all possible expedition. On the following day, when in addition to their extreme sufferings in other respects, famine also was at hand, Maharbal, who had followed them during the night with the whole body of cavalry, pledging his honor that he would let them depart with single garments if they would deliver up their arms, they surrendered themselves; which promise was kept by Hannibal with Punic fidelity, and he threw them all into chains.

This is the celebrated battle at the Trasimennus, and recorded among the few disasters of the Roman people. Fifteen thousand Romans were slain in the battle. Ten thousand, who had been scattered in the flight through all Etruria, returned to the city by different roads. One thousand five hundred of the enemy perished in the battle; many on both sides died afterwards of their wounds.

THE BATTLE OF CANNÆ, B. C. 216.

The consuls persisted in the same opinions they ever entertained; but nearly all acquiesced with Varro, and none with Paulus except Servilius, the consul of the former year. In compliance with the opinion of the majority, they set out, under the impulse of destiny, to render Cannæ celebrated by a Roman disaster. Hannibal had pitched his camp near that village, with his back to the wind Vulturius, which, in those plains which are parched with drought, carries with it clouds of dust. This circumstance was not only very advantageous to the camp, but would be a great protection to them when they formed their line; as they, with the wind blowing only on their backs, would combat with an enemy blinded with the thickly blown dust.

When the consuls, employing sufficient diligence in exploring the road in pursuit of the Carthaginian, had arrived at Cannæ, where they had the enemy in the sight of them, having divided their forces, they fortify two camps, with nearly the same interval as before, at Geronium. The river Aufidus, which flowed by both the camps, afforded approach to the watering parties of each, as opportunity served, though not without contest. The Romans in the lesser camp, however, which was on the other side the Aufidus, were more freely furnished with water, because the farther bank had no guard of the enemy. Hannibal, entertaining a hope that the consuls would not decline a battle in this tract, which was naturally adapted to a cavalry engagement, in which portion of his forces he was invincible, formed his line, and provoked the enemy by a skirmishing attack with his Numidians. Upon this the Roman camp began again to be embroiled by a mutiny among the soldiers, and the disagreement of the consuls: since Paulus instanced to Varro the temerity of Sempronius and Flaminius; while Varro pointed to Fabius, as a specious example to timid and inactive generals. The latter called both gods and men to witness "that no part of the blame attached to him, that Hannibal had now made Italy his own, as it were, by right of possession; that he was held bound by his colleague; that the swords and arms were taken out of the hands of the indignant soldiers, who were eager to fight." The former declared "that, if any disaster should befall the legions thus exposed and betrayed into an ill-advised and imprudent battle, he should be exempt from any blame, though the sharer of all the consequences. That he must take care that their hands were equally energetic in the battle, whose tongues were so forward and impetuous."

While time is thus consumed in altercation rather than deliberating, Hannibal, who had kept his troops drawn up in order of battle till late in the day, when he had led the rest of them back into the camp, sends Numidians across the river to attack a watering party of the Romans from the lesser camp. Having routed this disorderly band by shouting and tumult, before they had well reached the opposite bank, they advanced even to an outpost which was before the rampart, and near the very gates of the camp. It seemed so great an indignity, that now even the camp of the Romans should be terrified by a tumultuary band of auxiliaries, that this cause alone kept back the Romans from crossing the river forthwith, and forming their line, that the chief command was on that day held by Paulus. Accordingly, Varro, on the following day, on which it was his turn to hold the command, without consulting his colleague, displayed the signal for battle, and, forming his troops, led them across the river. Paulus followed, because he could better disapprove of the proceeding than withhold his assistance. Having crossed the river, they add to their forces those which they had in the lesser camp; and thus forming their line, place the Roman cavalry in the right wing, which was next the river; and next them the infantry: at the extremity of the left wing the allied cavalry; within them the allied infantry, extending to the center, and contiguous to the Roman legions. The darters, and the rest of the light-armed auxiliaries, formed the van. The consuls commanded the wings, — Terentius the left, Æmilius the right. To Germinus Servilius was committed the charge of maintaining the battle in the center.

Hannibal, at break of day, having sent before him the Baliares and other light-armed troops, crossed the river, and placed his troops in line of battle, as he had conveyed them across the river. The Gallic and Spanish cavalry he placed in the left wing, opposite the Roman cavalry: the right wing was assigned to the Numidian cavalry, the center of the line being strongly formed by the infantry, so that both extremities of it were composed of Africans, between which Gauls and Spaniards were placed. One would suppose the Africans were for the most part Romans, they were so equipped with arms captured at the Trebia, and for the greater part at the Trasimenus. The shields of the Gauls and Spaniards were of the same shape, their swords unequal and dissimilar. The Gauls had very long ones, without points. The Spaniards, who were accustomed to stab, more than to cut, their enemy, had swords convenient, from their shortness, and with points. The aspect of these nations in other respects was terrific, both as to the appearance they exhibited and the size of their persons. The Gauls were naked above the navel : the Spaniards stood arrayed in linen vests resplendent with surprising whiteness, and bordered with purple. The whole amount of infantry standing in battle array was forty thousand ; of cavalry ten. The generals who commanded the wings were, on the left, Hasdrubal ; on the right, Maharbal : Hannibal himself, with his brother Mago, commanded the center. The sun very conveniently shone obliquely upon both parties—the Romans facing the south, and the Carthaginians the north ; either placed so designedly, or having stood thus by chance. The wind, which the inhabitants of the district call the Vulturnus, blowing violently in front of the Romans, prevented their seeing far by rolling clouds of dust into their faces.

The shout being raised, the auxiliaries charged, and the battle commenced, in the first place, with the light-armed troops : then the left wing, consisting of the Gallic and Spanish cavalry, engages with the Roman right wing, by no means in the manner of a cavalry battle ; for they were obliged to engage front to front ; for, as on one side the river, on the other the line of infantry hemmed them in, there was no space left at their flanks for evolution, but both parties were compelled to press directly forward. At length the horses standing still, and being crowded together, man grappling with man, dragged him from his horse. The contest now came to be carried on principally on foot. The battle, however, was more violent than lasting ; and the Roman cavalry being repulsed, turn their backs. About the conclusion of the contest between the cavalry, the battle between the infantry commenced. At first the Gauls and Spaniards preserved their ranks unbroken, not inferior in strength or courage ; but at length the Romans, after long and repeated efforts, drove in with their even front and closely compacted line, that part of the enemy's line in the form of a wedge, which projected beyond the rest, which was too thin, and therefore deficient in strength. These men, thus driven back and hastily retreating, they closely pursued; and as they urged their course without interruption through this terrified band, as it fled with precipitation, were borne first upon the center line of the enemy; and, lastly, no one opposing them, they reached the African reserved troops. These were posted at the two extremities of the line, where it was depressed; while the center, where the Gauls and Spaniards were placed, projected a little. When the wedge thus formed being driven in, at first rendered the line level, but afterwards, by the pressure, made a curvature in the center, the Africans, who had now formed wings on each side of them, surrounded the Romans on both sides, who incautiously rushed into the intermediate space; and presently extending their wings, inclosed the enemy on the rear also. After this the Romans, who had in vain finished one battle, leaving the Gauls and Spaniards, whose rear they had slaughtered, in addition commence a fresh encounter with the Africans, not only disadvantageous, because, being hemmed in, they had to fight against troops who surrounded them, but also because, fatigued, they fought with those who were fresh and vigorous.

Now also in the left wing of the Romans, in which the allied cavalry were opposed to the Numidians, the battle was joined, which was at first languid, commencing with a stratagem on the part of the Carthaginians. About five hundred Numidians, who, besides their usual arms, had swords concealed beneath their coats of mail, quitting their own party, and riding up to the enemy under the semblance of deserters, with their bucklers behind them, suddenly leap down from their horses, and, throwing down their bucklers and javelins at the feet of their enemies, are received into their center, and, being conducted to the rear, ordered to remain there; and there they continued until the battle became general. But afterwards, when the thoughts and attention of all were occupied with the contest, snatching up the shields which lay scattered on all hands among the heaps of slain, they fell upon the rear of the Roman line, and striking their backs and wounding their hams, occasioned vast havoc, and still greater panic and confusion. While in one part terror and flight prevailed, in another the battle was obstinately persisted in, though with little hope. Hasdrubal, who was then commanding in that quarter, withdrawing the Numidians from the center of the army, as the conflict with their opponents was slight, sends them in pursuit of the scattered fugitives, and joining the Africans, now almost weary with slaying rather than fighting the Spanish and Gallic infantry.

On the other side of the field, Paulus, though severely wounded from a sling in the very commencement of the battle, with a compact body of troops, frequently opposed himself to Hannibal, and in several quarters restored the battle, the Roman cavalry protecting him; who, at length, when the consul had not strength enough even to manage his horse, dismounted from their horses. And when some one brought intelligence that the consul had ordered the cavalry to dismount, it is said that Hannibal observed, "How much rather would I that he delivered them to me in chains." The fight maintained by the dismounted cavalry was such as might be expected, when the victory was undoubtedly on the side of the enemy, the vanquished preferring death in their places to flight; and the conquerors, who were enraged at them for delaying the victory, butchering those whom they could not put to flight. They at length, however, drove the few who remained away, worn out with exertion and wounds. After that they were all dispersed, and such as could sought to regain their horses for flight. Cneius Lentulus, a military tribune, seeing, as he rode by, the consul sitting upon a stone and covered with blood, said to him: "Lucius Æmilius! the only man whom the gods ought to regard as being guiltless of this day's disaster, take this horse, while you have any strength remaining, and I am with you to raise you up and protect you. Make not this battle more calamitous by the death of a consul. There is sufficient matter for tears and grief without this addition." In reply the consul said: "Do thou, indeed, go on and prosper, Cneius Servilius, in your career of virtue! But beware lest you waste in bootless commiseration the brief opportunity of escaping from the hands of the enemy. Go and tell the fathers publicly to fortify the city of Rome, and garrison it strongly before the victorious enemy arrive; and tell Quintus Fabius, individually, that Lucius Æmilius lived, and now dies, mindful of his injunctions. Allow me to expire amidst these heaps of my slaughtered troops, that I may not a second time be accused after my consulate, or stand forth as the accuser of my colleague, in order to defend my own innocence by criminating another." While finishing these words, first a crowd of their flying countrymen, after that the enemy, came upon them; they overwhelm the consul with their weapons, not knowing who he was; in the confusion his horse rescued Lentulus. After that they fly precipitately.

Seven thousand escaped to the lesser camp, ten to the greater, about two thousand to the village of Cannæ itself; those were immediately surrounded by Carthalo and the cavalry, no fortifications protecting the village. The other consul, whether by design or by chance, made good his escape to Venusia with about seventy horse, without mingling with any party of the flying troops. Forty thousand foot and two thousand seven hundred horse, with an equal number of citizens and allies, are said to have been slain. Among these both the quæstors of the consuls, Lucius Atilius and Lucius Furius Bibaculus; twenty-one military tribunes; several who had passed the offices of consul, pretor, and ædile; among these they reckon Cneius Servilius Germinus, and Marcus Minucius, who had been master of the horse on a former year and consul some years before; moreover, eighty, either senators, or who had borne those offices by which they might be elected into the senate, and who had voluntarily enrolled themselves in the legions. Three thousand infantry and three hundred cavalry are said to have been captured in that battle.

The spoils having been gathered for a great part of the day, Hannibal leads his troops to storm the lesser camp; and first of all interposing a trench, cuts it off from the river. But as the men were fatigued with toil, watching, and wounds, a surrender was made sooner than he expected. Having agreed to deliver up their arms and horses for a ransom of 300 denarii [$50] for every Roman, 200 for an ally, and 100 for a slave, and that on payment of that ransom they should be allowed to depart with single garments, they received the enemy into the camp, and were all delivered into custody; citizens and allies being kept separate. While the time is being spent there, all who had strength or spirit enough, to the number of four thousand foot and two hundred horse, quitted the greater camp and arrived at Canusium; some in a body, others widely dispersed through the country, which was no less secure a course: the camp itself was surrendered to the enemy by the wounded and timid troops, on the same terms as the other was.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE.

BY T. MACCIUS PLAUTUS.

(From "Mostellaria.")

[TITUS MACCIUS PLAUTUS, one of the great comic dramatists of the world, was born in Umbria, Italy, probably about B.C. 254; died about 184. He and Terence may be called pre-Roman writers; that is, their dramas are not of Roman life, nor do they form even a germ of Roman literature proper (though, midway of the two, Ennius and his followers were laying the foundations of it), but are adaptations—though with genius—of Greek originals. Plautus was very fertile and immensely popular; some twenty of his plays still survive, entire save a few gaps. Lessing called Plautus' "Captives" the best-constructed drama in existence. The most famous besides this are perhaps the "Miles Gloriosus" (Braggart Soldier), "Trinummus" (Three penny Piece), "Menæchmi" (Twins), "Aulularia" (Little Pot), "Mostellaria" (Ghost), and "Amphitruo" (Amphitryon). Every comic playwright since his time has borrowed freely from him. Ben Jonson and Shakespeare used the Miles Gloriosus for Captain Bobadil and Ancient Pistol; Molière took the hint of his "Miser" from "Aulularia"; Dryden cooked over "Amphitruo" as "The Two Sosias."]

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ (as far as included in selections): THEUROPIDES, an Athenian merchant; SIMO, his neighbor, a grouty old man; PHILOLACHES, son of Theuropides; TRANIO, his servant; GRUMIO, his father's servant; PHILEMATIUM, his mistress, a slave music girl he has bought; SCAPHA, her maid.

ACT I. — SCENE I.

Enter, from the house of THEUROPIDES, GRUMIO, pushing out TRANIO.

Grumio—Get out of the kitchen, will you; out of it, you whip-scoundrel, giving me back-talk among the platters; march out of the house, you ruin of your master! Upon my faith, if I live I'll be more than even with you in the country. Get out, I say, you kitchen-reek: what are you skulking here for?

Tranio—What the plague are you making a row here before the house for? Do you fancy yourself on the farm? Get out of the house; be off to the farm. Go and hang yourself. Get away from the door. [Striking him.] There now, was that what you wanted?

Grumio [running away]—I'm undone! What are you beating me for?

Tranio—Because you need it.

Grumio—I've got to stand it, I suppose. But only let the old gentleman come back; only let him come back safe, you eating him up while he is gone.

Tranio — Your lies are not even likely ones, you block-head, — eating any one up while he is gone !

Grumio — Ah, you town wit, you minion of the mob, do you throw the farm in my teeth ? Really, Tranio, I believe you feel sure you'll soon be handed over to the mill. Before long, i' faith, Tranio, you'll be adding to the iron-bound race in the country. While you choose, and have the chance, drink on, squander his property, corrupt my master's son, — a most worthy young man, — drink night and day, live like Greeks, buy mistresses, give them their freedom, feed parasites, feast yourselves sumptuously. Was this the old gentleman's injunction when he went abroad ? Is it after this fashion he will find his property well husbanded ? Do you suppose this is the duty of a good servant, to be ruining both the estate and the son of his master ? For I do consider him as ruined when he gives himself up to these goings on. One with whom not one of all the young men of Attica was before thought equally frugal or more steady, the same is now carrying off the palm in the opposite direction. Through your management and your tutoring that has been done.

Tranio — What the plague business have you with me or with what I do ? Haven't you got your cattle in the country to look after ? I choose to drink, to intrigue, to keep my wenches ; but I do it at the risk of my own back, not yours.

Grumio — What brass he talks with ! [Turning away in disgust.] Faugh !

Tranio — But may Jupiter and all the deities confound you, you stink of garlic, you filth unmentionable, you clod, you goat, you pigsty, you mongrel of dog and goat !

Grumio — What do you want done ? It isn't everybody that can smell of foreign perfumes, even if you smell of them ; or that can take their places at table above their master, or live on such exquisite dainties as you do. Keep those turtledoves, fish, and poultry to yourself ; let me enjoy my lot on garlic. You are fortunate ; I unlucky. It must be borne. Let my good fortune be awaiting me, your bad yourself.

Tranio — You seem, Grumio, as though you envied me, because I enjoy myself and you are wretched. It is quite my due. It's proper for me to make love, and for you to feed the cattle ; for me to fare handsomely, you in a miserable way.

Grumio — O riddle [sieve] for the executioner, as I guess it will turn out: they'll be so pinking you with goads, as you carry your gibbet along the streets one day, as soon as ever the old gentleman returns here.

Tranio — How do you know whether that mayn't happen to yourself sooner than to me?

Grumio — Because I have never deserved it: you have deserved it, and you now deserve it.

Tranio — Do cut short the trouble of your talking, unless you wish a heavy mischance to befall you.

Grumio — Are you going to give me the tares for me to take for the cattle? If you are not, give me the money. Go on, still persist in the way you've begun! Drink, live like Greeks, eat, stuff yourselves, slaughter your fatlings!

Tranio — Hold your tongue and be off into the country; I intend to go to the Piræus to get me some fish for the evening. To-morrow I'll make some one bring you the tares to the farm. What's the matter? What are you staring at me now for, gallows-bird?

Grumio — I' faith, I've an idea that will be your own title before long.

Tranio — So long as it is as it is, in the meantime I'll put up with that "before long."

Grumio — That's the way; and understand this one thing, that what is disagreeable comes much quicker than what you want.

Tranio — Don't make yourself a nuisance: now then, away with you into the country — take yourself off. Don't deceive yourself, you shan't be a hindrance in my way. [Exit.]

Grumio [to himself] — Is he really gone? Not to care one straw for what I've said! O immortal gods, I implore your aid, do cause this old gentleman of ours, who has now been three years absent, to return as soon as possible before everything is gone, both house and land. Unless he does, only enough remnants to last for a few months are left. Now I'll be off to the country; but look! I see my master's son, one who has been corrupted from having been a most excellent young man. [Exit.]

[SCENE II. — PHILOLACHES comes in, soliloquizes, and remains on one side.]

SCENE III.

Enter PHILEMATIUM and SCAPHA, with all the requisites for a toilet.

Philematium — On my word, for this long time I've not bathed in cold water with more delight than just now; nor do I think that I ever was, my dear Scapha, more thoroughly cleansed than now.

Scapha — May the upshot of everything be unto you like a plenteous year's harvest.

Philematium — What has this harvest got to do with my bathing?

Scapha — Not a bit more than your bathing has to do with the harvest.

Philolaches [apart] — O beauteous Venus, this is that storm of mine which stripped off all the modesty with which I was roofed; through which Desire and Cupid poured their shower into my breast; and never since have I been able to roof it in. Now are my walls soaking in my heart; this building is utterly undone.

Philematium — Do look, my Scapha, there's a dear, whether this dress quite become me. I wish to please Philolaches my protector, the apple of my eye.

Scapha — Nay, but you set yourself off to advantage with pleasing manners, inasmuch as you yourself are pleasing. The lover isn't in love with a woman's dress, but with that which stuffs out the dress.

Philolaches [apart] — So may the Gods bless me, Scapha is waggish; the hussy's quite knowing. How cleverly she understands all matters, the maxims of lovers, too!

Philematium — Well, now?

Scapha — What is it?

Philematium — Why, look at me and examine how this becomes me.

Scapha — Thanks to your good looks, it happens that whatever you put on becomes you.

Philolaches [apart] — Now then, for that expression, Scapha, I'll make you some present or other to-day, and I won't allow you to have praised for nothing her who is so pleasing to me.

Philematium — I don't want you to flatter me.

Scapha — Really, you are a very simple woman. Come now, would you rather be censured undeservedly, than be praised with truth? Upon my faith, for my own part, even though undeservedly, I'd much rather be praised than be found fault with with reason, or that other people should laugh at my appearance.

Philematium — I love the truth; I wish the truth to be told me; I detest a liar.

Scapha — So may you love me, and so may your Philolaches love you, how charming you are!

Philolaches [apart] — How say you, you hussy? In what words did you adjure? "So may I love her?" Why wasn't "So may she love me," added as well? I revoke the present. What I just now promised you is done for; you have lost the present.

Scapha — Troth, for my part I am surprised that you, a person so knowing, so clever, and so well educated, are not aware that you are acting foolishly.

Philematium — Then give me your advice, I beg, if I have done wrong in anything.

Scapha — I' faith, you certainly do wrong in setting your mind upon him alone, in fact, and humoring him in particular in this way and slighting other men. It's the part of a married woman, and not of courtesans, to be devoted to a single lover.

Philolaches [apart] — O Jupiter! Why, what pest is this that has befallen my house? May all the gods and goddesses destroy me in the worst of fashions, if I don't kill this old hag with thirst, and hunger, and cold.

Philematium — I don't want you, Scapha, to be giving me bad advice.

Scapha — You are clearly a simpleton in thinking that he'll for everlasting be your friend and well-wisher. I warn you, he'll forsake you by reason of age and satiety.

Philematium — I hope not.

Scapha — Things which you don't hope happen more frequently than things which you do hope. In fine, if you cannot be persuaded by words to believe this to be the truth, judge of my words from facts; consider this instance, who I now am, and who I once was. No less than you are now, was I once beloved, and I devoted myself to one who, faith, when with age this head changed its hue, forsook and deserted me. Depend on it, the same will happen to yourself.

Philolaches [apart] — I can scarcely withhold myself from flying at the eyes of this mischief maker.

Philematium — I am of opinion that I ought to keep myself alone devoted to him, since to myself alone has he given freedom for himself alone.

Philolaches [apart] — O ye immortal gods ! what a charming woman, and of a disposition how chaste ! By heaven, 'tis excellently done, and I'm rejoiced at it, that it is for her sake I've got nothing left.

Scapha — On my word you really are silly.

Philematium — For what reason ?

Scapha — Because you care for this, whether he loves you.

Philematium — Prithee, why should I not care for it ?

Scapha — You now are free. You've now got what you wanted ; if he didn't still love you, as much money as he gave for your liberty he'd lose.

Philolaches [apart] — Heavens, I'm a dead man if I don't torture her to death after the most shocking fashion. That evil-persuading enticer to vice is corrupting this damsel.

Philematium — Scapha, I can never return him sufficient thanks for what he deserves of me ; don't you be persuading me to esteem him less.

Scapha — But take care and reflect upon this one thing, if you devote yourself to him alone, while now you are at this youthful age, you'll be complaining to no purpose in your aged years.

Philolaches [apart] — I could wish myself this instant changed into a quinsy, that I might seize the throat of that old witch, and put an end to the wicked mischief maker.

Philematium — It befits me now to have the same grateful feelings since I obtained it, as formerly before I acquired it, when I used to lavish caresses upon him.

Philolaches [apart] — May the gods do towards me what they please, if for that speech I don't make you free over again, and if I don't torture Scapha to death.

Scapha — If you are quite assured that you will have a provision to the end, and that this lover will be your own for life, I think that you ought to devote yourself to him alone, and put on a wife's coiffure.

Philematium — Just as a person's character is, he's in the habit of finding means accordingly. If I keep a good character for myself, I shall be rich enough.

Philolaches [apart] — By my troth, since selling there must be, my father shall be sold much sooner than, while I'm alive, I'll ever permit you to be in want or go a-begging.

Scapha — What's to become of the rest of those who are in love with you?

Philematium — They'll love me the more when they see me displaying gratitude to one who has done me services.

Philolaches [apart] — I do wish that news were brought me now that my father's dead, that I might disinherit myself of my property, and that she might be my heir.

Scapha — This property of his will certainly soon be at an end; day and night there's eating and drinking, and no one displays thriftiness; 'tis downright cramming.

Philolaches [apart] — I' faith, I'm determined to make trial on yourself for the first to be thrifty; for you shall neither eat nor drink anything at my house for the next ten days.

Philematium — If you choose to say anything good about him, you shall be at liberty to say it; if you speak otherwise than well, on my word you shall have a beating instantly.

Philolaches [apart] — Upon my faith, if I had paid sacrifice to supreme Jove with that money which I gave for her liberty, never could I have so well employed it. Do see how, from her very heart's core, she loves me! Oh, I'm a fortunate man; I've liberated a patron to plead my cause for me.

Scapha — I see that, compared with Philolaches, you disregard all other men; now, that on his account I mayn't get a beating, I'll agree with you in preference, if you are quite satisfied that he will always prove a friend to you.

Philematium — Give me the mirror, and the casket with my trinkets, directly, Scapha, that I may be quite dressed when Philolaches, my delight, comes here.

Scapha — A woman who neglects herself and her youthful age has occasion for a mirror: what need of a mirror have you, who yourself are in especial a mirror for a mirror?

Philolaches [apart] — For that expression, Scapha, that you mayn't have said anything so pretty in vain, I'll to-day give something for your savings—to you, my Philematium.

Philematium [while SCAPHA is dressing her hair] — Will you see that each hair is nicely arranged in its own place?

Scapha — When you are so nice, do believe that your hair must be nice.

Philolaches [apart] — Out upon it! what worse thing can possibly be spoken of than this woman? Now the jade's a flatterer, just now she was all contradictory.

Philematium — Hand me the ceruse.

Scapha — Why, what need of ceruse have you?

Philematium — To paint my cheeks with it.

Scapha — On the same principle, you would want to be making ivory white with ink.

Philolaches [apart] — Cleverly said that, about the ink and the ivory! Bravo! I applaud you, Scapha.

Philematium — Well, then, do you give me the rouge.

Scapha — I shan't give it. You really are a clever one. Do you wish to patch up a most clever piece with new daubing? It's not right that any paint should touch that person, neither ceruse, nor quince ointment, nor any other wash. Take the mirror, then. [Hands her the glass.]

Philolaches [apart] — Ah, wretched me! — she gave the glass a kiss. I could much wish for a stone, with which to break the head of that glass.

Scapha — Take the towel and wipe your hands.

Philematium — Why so, prithee?

Scapha — As you've been holding the mirror, I'm afraid that your hands may smell of silver; lest Philolaches should suspect you've been receiving silver somewhere.

Philolaches [apart] — I don't think that I ever did see any one more cunning. How cleverly and artfully did it occur to the jade's imagination about the mirror!

Philematium — Do you think I ought to be perfumed with unguents as well?

Scapha — By no means do so.

Philematium — For what reason?

Scapha — Because, i' faith, a woman smells best when she smells of nothing at all. For those old women who are in the habit of anointing themselves with unguents, vamped up, toothless old hags, who hide the blemishes of the person with paint, when the sweat has blended itself with the unguents, forthwith they stink just like when a cook has poured together a variety of broths; what they smell of you don't know, except this only, that you understand that badly they do smell.

Philolaches [apart] — How very cleverly she does understand everything! There's nothing more knowing than this knowing woman! [To the AUDIENCE.] This is the truth, and in fact a very great portion of you know it, who have old women for wives at home who purchased you with their portions.

Philematium — Come now, examine my golden trinkets and my mantle; does this quite become me, Scapha?

Scapha — It befits not me to concern myself about that.

Philematium — Whom then, prithee?

Scapha — I'll tell you: Philolaches, so that he may not buy anything except that which he fancies will please you. For a lover buys the favors of a mistress for himself with gold and purple garments. What need is there for that which he doesn't want as his own, to be shown him still? Age is to be enveloped in purple; gold ornaments are unsuitable for a woman. A beautiful woman will be more beautiful naked than drest in purple. Besides, it's in vain she's well-drest if she's ill-conducted; ill conduct soils fine ornaments worse than dirt. But if she's beauteous, she's sufficiently adorned.

Philolaches [apart] — Too long have I withheld my hand. [Coming forward.] What are you about here?

Philematium — I'm decking myself out to please you.

Philolaches — You are dressed enough. [To SCAPHA.] Go you hence in doors, and take away this finery. [SCAPHA goes into the house.] But, my delight, my Philematium, I have a mind to regale together with you.

Philematium — And, i' faith, so I have with you; for what you have a mind to, the same have I a mind to, my delight.

Philolaches — Ha! at twenty minæ that expression were cheap.

Philematium — Give me ten, there's a dear; I wish to let you have that expression bought at a bargain.

Philolaches — You've already got ten minæ with you; or reckon up the account: thirty minæ I gave for your freedom —

Philematium — Why reproach me with that?

Philolaches — What, I reproach you with it? Why, I had rather that I myself were reproached with it; no money whatever for this long time have I ever laid out equally well.

Philematium — Surely, in loving you, I never could have better employed my pains.

Philolaches — The account, then, of receipts and expenditure fully tallies between ourselves; you love me, I love you.

Each thinks that it is so deservedly. Those who rejoice at this, may they ever rejoice at the continuance of their own happiness. Those who envy, let not any one henceforth be ever envious of their blessings.

[A friend and his mistress came in; and while the party are carousing, the arrival of Philolaches' father is announced. The friend is too drunk to leave, and the party are at their wits' end. Tranio tells them to remain quiet in the house, which is shut up, and he sallies out to meet the father.]

ACT II. — SCENE I.

Enter THEUROPIDES, followed by ATTENDANTS.

Theuropides [to himself] — Neptune, I do return extreme thanks to thee that thou hast just dismissed me from thee, though scarce alive. But if, from this time forward, thou shalt only know that I have stirred a foot upon the main, there is no reason why, that instant, thou shouldst not do with me that which thou hast now wished to do. Away with you, away with you from me henceforth forever after to-day; what I was to intrust to thee, all of it have I now intrusted.

Enter TRANIO, overhearing him.

Tranio [apart] — By my troth, Neptune, you've been much to blame, to have lost this opportunity so fair.

Theuropides — After three years, I've arrived home from Egypt. I shall come a welcome guest to my household, I suppose.

Tranio [apart] — Upon my faith, he might have come a much more welcome one, who had brought the tidings you were dead.

Theuropides [looking at the door] — But what means this? Is the door shut in the daytime? I'll knock. [Knocks at the door.] Hallo, there! is any one going to open this door for me?

Tranio [coming forward, and speaking aloud] — What person is it that has come so near to our house?

Theuropides — Surely, this is my servant Tranio.

Tranio — O Theuropides, my master, welcome; I'm glad that you've arrived in safety. Have you been well all along?

Theuropides — All along, as you see.

Tranio — That's very good.

Theuropides — What about yourselves? Are you all mad?

Tranio — Why so?

Theuropides — For this reason; because you are walking about outside; not a born person is keeping watch in the house, either to open or to give an answer. With kicking with my feet I've almost broken in the panels.

Tranio — How now? Have you been touching this house?

Theuropides — Why shouldn't I touch it? Why, with kicking it, I tell you, I've almost broken down the door.

Tranio — What, you touched it?

Theuropides — I touched it, I tell you, and knocked at it.

Tranio — Out upon you!

Theuropides — Why so?

Tranio — By heavens! 'twas ill done.

Theuropides — What is the matter?

Tranio — It cannot be expressed how shocking and dreadful a mischief you've been guilty of.

Theuropides — How so?

Tranio — Take to flight, I beseech you, and get away from the house. Fly in this direction, fly closer to me. [He runs towards TRANIO.] What, did you touch the door?

Theuropides — How could I knock, if I didn't touch it?

Tranio — By all that's holy, you've been the death —

Theuropides — Of what person?

Tranio — Of all your family.

Theuropides — May the gods and goddesses confound you with that omen.

Tranio — I'm afraid that you can't make satisfaction for yourself and them.

Theuropides — For what reason, or what new affair is this that you thus suddenly bring me news of?

Tranio — And [whispering] hark you, prithee, do bid those people to move away from here. [Pointing to the ATTENDANTS of THEUROPIDES.]

Theuropides [to the ATTENDANTS] — Move away from here.

Tranio — Don't you touch the house. Touch you the ground as well. [Exeunt the ATTENDANTS.]

Theuropides — I' faith, prithee, do speak out now.

Tranio — Because it is now seven months that not a person has set foot within this house, and since we once for all left it

Theuropides — Tell me, why so?

Tranio — Just look around, whether there's any person to overhear our discourse.

Theuropides [looking around] — All's quite safe.

Tranio — Look around once more.

Theuropides [looking around] — There's nobody ; now then, speak out.

Tranio [in a loud whisper] — The house has been guilty of a capital offense.

Theuropides — I don't understand you.

Tranio — A crime, I tell you, has been committed there, a long while ago, one of olden time and ancient date.

Theuropides — Of ancient date?

Tranio — 'Tis but recently, in fact, that we've discovered this deed.

Theuropides — What is this crime, or who committed it? Tell me.

Tranio — A host slew his guest, seized with his hand ; he, I fancy, who sold you the house.

Theuropides — Slew him?

Tranio — And robbed this guest of his gold, and buried this guest there in the house, on the spot.

Theuropides — For what reason do you suspect that this took place?

Tranio — I'll tell you ; listen. One day, when your son had dined away from home, after he returned home from dining, we all went to bed and fell asleep. By accident, I had forgotten to put out my lamp ; and he, all of a sudden, called out aloud —

Theuropides — What person? My son?

Tranio — Hist ! hold your peace ; just listen. He said that a dead man came to him in his sleep —

Theuropides — In his dreams, then, you mean?

Tranio — Just so. But only listen. He said that he had met with his death by these means —

Theuropides — What, in his sleep?

Tranio — It would have been surprising if he had told him awake, who had been murdered sixty years ago. On some occasions you are absurdly simple. But look, what he said : “ I am the guest of Diapontius, from beyond the seas ; here do I dwell ; this has been assigned me as my abode ; for Orcus would not receive me in Acheron, because prematurely I lost my life. Through confiding was I deceived ; my entertainer slew me here, and that villain secretly laid me in the ground without funereal rites, in this house, on the spot, for the sake of gold. Now do you depart from here; this house is accursed, this dwelling is defiled." The wonders that here take place, hardly in a year could I recount them. Hush, hush ! [He starts.]

Theuropides — Troth now, what has happened, prithee?

Tranio — The door made a noise. Was it he that was knocking?

Theuropides [turning pale] — I have not one drop of blood ! Dead men are come to fetch me to Acheron while alive !

Tranio [aside] — I'm undone ! those people there will mar my plot. [A noise is heard from within.] How much I dread, lest he should catch me in the fact.

Theuropides — What are you talking about to yourself ? [Goes near the door.]

Tranio — Do get away from the door. By heavens, fly, I do beseech you.

Theuropides — Fly where ? Fly yourself, as well.

Tranio — I am not afraid : I am at peace with the dead.

A Voice [from within] — Hallo ! Tranio.

Tranio [in a low voice near the door] — You won't be calling me, if you are wise. [Aloud as if speaking to the APPARITION.] 'Tis not I that's guilty ; I did not knock at the door.

Theuropides — Pray, what is it that's wrong ? What matter is agitating you, Tranio ? To whom are you saying these things ?

Tranio — Prithee, was it you that called me ? So may the gods bless me, I fancied it was this dead man expostulating because you had knocked at the door. But are you still standing there, and not doing what I advise you ?

Theuropides — What am I to do ?

Tranio — Take care not to look back. Fly ; cover up your head !

Theuropides — Why don't you fly ?

Tranio — I am at peace with the dead.

Theuropides — I recollect. Why then were you so dreadfully alarmed just now ?

Tranio — Have no care for me, I tell you ; I'll see to myself. You, as you have begun to do, fly as quick as ever you can ; Hercules, too, you will invoke.

Theuropides — Hercules, I do invoke thee ! [Runs off.]

Tranio [to himself] — And I, as well, old fellow, that this day he'll send some heavy mishap upon you. O ye immortal gods, I do implore your aid. Plague on it! what a mess I have got into to-day. [Exit.]

[He pretends to Theuropides that the house has been shut up for some months past, in consequence of its being haunted. In the midst of the conversation, he is accosted by a banker, who duns him for the interest of some money which Philolaches has borrowed of him for the purpose of procuring the freedom of Philematium, his mistress. Theuropides inquires what the money was borrowed for, on which Tranio says that Philolaches has purchased a house with it. On Theuropides making further inquiries, Tranio says that he has bought the house in which Simo is living. On this, Theuropides wishes to examine this new purchase, and sends Tranio to request Simo to allow him to do so, if not inconvenient. Tranio obtains the permission as follows.]

Simo — What is the matter? Do inform me.

Tranio — I will inform you. My master has arrived from abroad.

Simo — In that case the cord will be stretched for you; thence to the place where iron fetters clink; after that, straight to the cross.

Tranio — Now, by your knees, I do implore you, don't give information to my master.

Simo — Don't you fear; he shall know nothing from me.

Tranio — Blessings on you, my patron.

Simo — I don't care for clients of this description for myself.

Tranio — Now as to this about which our old gentleman has sent me.

Simo — First answer me this that I ask you. As yet, has your old gentleman discovered anything of these matters?

Tranio — Nothing whatever.

Simo — Has he censured his son at all?

Tranio — He is as calm as the calm weather is wont to be. Now he has requested me most earnestly to beg this of you, that leave may be given him to see over this house of yours.

Simo — It's not for sale.

Tranio — I know that indeed; but the old gentleman wishes to build a woman's apartment here in his own house, baths, too, and a piazza, and a porch.

Simo — What has he been dreaming of?

Tranio — I'll tell you. He wishes to give his son a wife as soon as he can; for that purpose he wants a new apartment for the women. But he says that some builder, I don't know who, has been praising up to him this house of yours, as being remarkably well built ; now he's desirous to take a model from it, if you don't make any objection —

Simo — He may look over it, if he likes. If there is anything that takes his fancy, let him build after my plan.

* * * * *

Simo — I'm glad that you've arrived safely from abroad, Theuropides.

Theuropides — May the gods bless you.

Simo — Your servant was telling me that you were desirous to look over this house.

Theuropides — Unless it's inconvenient to you.

Simo — Oh no ; quite convenient. Do step indoors and look over it.

Theuropides [pausing] — But yet — the ladies —

Simo — Take you care not to trouble yourself a straw about any lady. Walk in every direction, wherever you like, all over the house, just as though it were your own.

Theuropides [apart to TRANIO] — “Just as though ——?”

Tranio [whispering] — Oh, take care that you don't throw it in his teeth now in his concern, that you have bought it. Don't you see him, how sad a countenance the old gentleman has?

Theuropides [apart] — I see.

Tranio [apart] — Then don't seem to exult, and to be over-much delighted ; in fact, don't make mention that you've bought it.

Theuropides [apart] — I understand ; and I think you've given good advice, and that it shows a humane disposition. [Turning to SIMO.] What now?

Simo — Won't you go in ? Look over it at your leisure, just as you like.

Theuropides — I consider that you are acting civilly and kindly.

Simo — Troth, I wish to do so. Should you like some one to show you over?

Theuropides — Away with any one to show me over. I don't want him.

Simo — Why? What's the matter?

Theuropides — I'll go wrong, rather than any one should show me over.

Tranio [pointing] — Don't you see, this vestibule before the house, and the piazza, of what a compass it is?

Theuropides — Troth, really handsome !

Tranio — Well, look now, what pillars there are, with what strength they are built, and of what a thickness.

Theuropides — I don't think that I ever saw handsomer pillars.

Simo — I' faith, they were some time since bought by me at such a price!

Tranio [aside, whispering] — Don't you hear — "They were once"? He seems hardly able to refrain from tears.

Theuropides — At what price did you purchase them?

Simo — I gave three minæ for the two, besides the carriage. [He retires to some distance.]

Theuropides [after looking close at them, to TRANIO] — Why, upon my word, they are much more unsound than I thought them at first.

Tranio — Why so?

Theuropides — Because, i' faith, the woodworm has split them both from the bottom.

Tranio — I think they were cut at an improper season; that fault damages them; but even as it is, they are quite good enough, if they are covered with pitch. And it was no foreign pulse-eating artisan did this work. Don't you see the joints in the door? [Pointing.]

Theuropides — I see them.

Tranio — Look, how close together they are sleeping.

Theuropides — Sleeping?

Tranio — That is, how they wink, I intended to say. Are you satisfied?

Theuropides — The more I look at each particular, the more it pleases me.

Tranio [pointing] — Don't you see the painting, where one crow is baffling two vultures? The crow stands there; it's pecking at them both in turn. This way, look, prithee, towards me, that you may be able to see the crow. [THEUROPIDES turns towards him.] Now do you see it?

Theuropides [looking about] — For my part I really see no crow there.

Tranio — But do you look in that direction, towards yourselves, since you cannot discover the crow, if perchance you may be able to espy the vultures. [THEUROPIDES turns towards SIMO.] Now do you see them?

Theuropides — Upon my faith, I don't see them.

Tranio — But I can see two vultures.

Theuropides — To make an end of it with you, I don't see any bird at all painted here.

Tranio — Well, then, I give it up. I excuse you ; it is through age you cannot see.

Theuropides — These things which I can see, really they do all please me mightily.

Simo [coming forward] — Now, at length, it's worth your while to move further on.

Theuropides — Troth, you give good advice.

Simo [calling at the door] — Ho there, boy ! take this person round this house and the apartments. But I myself would have shown you round, if I hadn't had business at the Forum.

Theuropides — Away with any one to show me over. I don't want to be shown over. Whatever it is, I'd rather go wrong than any one should show me over.

Simo — The house I'm speaking of.

Theuropides — Then I'll go in without any one to show me over.

Simo — Go, by all means.

Theuropides — I'll go indoors, then.

Tranio [holding him back] — Stop, please ; let me see whether the dog —

Theuropides — Very well then, look. [TRANIO looks into the passage.]

Tranio — There is one.

Theuropides [looking in] — Where is it ?

Tranio [to the dog] — Be off and be hanged ! 'St, won't you be off to utter perdition with you ? What, do you still linger ? 'St, away with you from here !

Simo [coming nearer to the door] — There's no danger. You only move on. It's as gentle as a woman in childbed. You may boldly step indoors wherever you like. I'm going hence to the Forum.

Theuropides — You've acted obligingly. Good speed to you. [Exit SIMO.] — Tranio, come, make that dog move away from the door inside, although it isn't to be feared.

Tranio — Nay but [pointing], you look at it, how gently it lies. Unless you'd like yourself to appear troublesome and cowardly —

Theuropides — Very well, just as you like.

Tranio — Follow me this way then.

Theuropides — For my part, I shall not move in any direction from your feet. [They go into the house.]

[The trick is of course found out, and the young scapegrace pardoned.]

THE END OF THE MACEDONIAN KINGDOM.

BY BISHOP THIRLWALL.

[CONNOF THIRLWALL, bishop of St. David's from 1840, was born at London in 1797 and educated at Cambridge. He was admitted to the bar, but left it for the church in 1828. He gained high repute as a classical scholar of remarkably sound and massive judgment, and began in 1835 his great "History of Greece" (eight volumes), completed in 1847 — which, instead of becoming obsolete with time, is increasingly valued for its justice and penetration, and the portion on Alexander's reign and after, scholars agree, has never been equaled. Died in 1875.]

AT Rome, though no apprehension was felt as to the final issue of the Macedonian war, its state at the end of the third year was not regarded as promising; and L. Æmilius Paullus was raised for the second time to the consulate, with a general hope that his tried abilities would bring the contest to a speedy close, though the province was not assigned to him, as Plutarch relates, but, apparently at least, fell to him by lot. He himself, after his election, caused commissioners to be sent to inspect the condition of the army, and their report of it was not at all cheering. A levy of 14,000 foot and 1200 horse was decreed to reinforce it. He set out from Rome with Cn. Octavius, who commanded the fleet, on the first of April; arrived at Coreyra on the same day on which he sailed from Brundisium; five days after celebrated a sacrifice at Delphi, and in five more had reached the camp in Pieria. His soldiers, who had been accustomed to great license, soon learned, by the regulations which he introduced, that they had now a general as well as a consul at their head; and Perseus no longer felt himself safe behind the Enipeus, when he saw the Roman camp moved forward to the opposite bank. The terror with which he was inspired by the fame of Paullus was soon heightened by tidings that whatever hopes he had built on his alliance with Gentius had fallen to the ground. After a war of not more than twenty or thirty days, Gentius, being besieged in his capital, Scodra, surrendered to the prætor Anicius, and was carried with all his family to Rome, to adorn his triumph, having received ten talents as the price of his throne and his liberty.

Perseus, however, did not neglect the precautions which his situation required. He fortified his position on the Enipeus; detached a body of cavalry to protect the coast of Macedonia from the operations of the Roman fleet, which had entered the gulf of Thessalonica ; and sent 5000 men to guard the northern pass of Olympus at Petra, which opened a way near the highest summit of the mountain, the Pythium, by which an enemy might descend to the plains in his rear. This was, indeed, the danger which he had most reason to provide against ; for Paulus, having weighed all the modes of attack by which he might attempt to dislodge the enemy from his position, finally decided on this. He sent P. Scipio Nasica, accompanied by his eldest son, Fabius Maximus, with 8000 men, to force this pass, while he occupied the attention of Perseus with a series of assaults on his intrenchments. Nasica, after a long circuit, surprised the Macedonians at Petra, and drove them down before him ; and Perseus, at his approach, hastily abandoned his position, and retreated towards Pydna, where the consul, having been joined by Nasica, came up with him the same day, but deferred giving battle until the morrow. An eclipse of the moon, which took place in the night, filled the Macedonians with superstitious terror ; the Romans had a tribune in their army who was able to predict and explain it. Perseus, though with blank misgivings, yielded to the advice of his friends, who exhorted him to risk an engagement ; he could not but perceive that further retreat would be attended with the dispersion of his forces and the loss of his kingdom.

The next day (June 22, B.C. 168) a short combat decided the fate of the Macedonian monarchy. The power of the phalanx was again tried, under circumstances the most advantageous to it, and again failed, through the same causes which occasioned the loss of the battle of Cynoscephalæ. Victorious on the level ground, it fell into disorder when it had advanced upon the retreating enemy to the foot of the hills, where it could no longer preserve the evenness of its front, and the compactness of its mass ; and opened numerous passages through its ranks for the legionaries, who rushed in to an almost unresisted slaughter. The slain on the Macedonian side are said to have amounted to 20,000 ; upwards of 10,000 were made prisoners : the Romans lost scarcely 100 men. Perseus took little part in the battle, as the Romans gave out, through cowardice ; but it appears that he had received a kick from a horse the day before, which compelled him to use a litter. It is certain, however, that, as soon as the rout began, he left the field with the cavalry, which remained untouched, and fled towards Pella. He was soon deserted by his Macedonian followers, and even at Pella found that he was no longer obeyed by his subjects. In the first movement of his passion he killed two officers of his household with his own hand; and continued his flight with no attendants beside the royal pages but three foreigners, — Evander the Cretan, Neon the Bœotian, and the Ætolian Archidamus, — with 500 Cretans, whose attachment was only retained by permission to plunder the royal plate, which Perseus afterwards recovered from them by a disgraceful trick. At Amphipolis he sent three persons of low rank, the only messengers he could find, with a letter to Paullus; but only stayed long enough to embark the treasure deposited there, and sailed with it down the Strymon to Galepsus, and thence to Samothrace.

Little loyalty could seem due to such a king, even if his fortunes had been less desperate. The whole of Macedonia submitted immediately without resistance to the conqueror. The Roman fleet soon pursued the royal fugitive to Samothrace. But Octavius spared the sanctity of the asylum, and only demanded Evander, as a man whose hands were stained with the blood of Eumenes, and Perseus was said to have dispatched him, to prevent a disclosure of his own guilt. But he suffered himself to be overreached by another Cretan, who engaged to convey him to the coast of Thrace, where he hoped to find refuge at the court of Cotys; but sailed away without him, as soon as his treasure had been put on board. He then hid himself in a nook of the temple, until his remaining servants had been tempted by a promise of free pardon to surrender themselves, and his younger children had been betrayed into the hands of Octavius by the friend who had charge of them. He then gave himself up, with his eldest son Philip, to the pretor, and was immediately conducted to the consul's camp.

He was courteously received by the conqueror, but is said to have forfeited the respect which would have been paid to his rank, by the abjectness of his demeanor; though he was thought to have been guilty of extravagant presumption, when in the letter which he wrote immediately after his defeat, he retained the title of king. About the same time that these events were taking place in Macedonia, Anicius, after the subjugation of Illyria, marched into Epirus. At Phanota, where the plot had been laid for the seizure of the consul Hostilius, the whole population went out to meet him with the ensigns of suppliants. All the other towns of Epirus submitted likewise without resistance : only in four, in Molossis, was there so much as an appearance of hesitation, which was the effect of the presence of Cephalus, and some other leaders of the Macedonian party. But this obstacle was soon removed by their execution or voluntary death, and these towns also surrendered without any opposition. Anicius distributed his troops among the principal cities, and left the whole country perfectly tranquil when he returned to Illyria to meet the five commissioners, who were sent from Rome to regulate its affairs.

A commission of Ten was appointed as usual to settle those of Macedonia. In the summer of 167, before the arrival of the commissioners, Paullus, accompanied by his second son, the future conqueror of Carthage and Numantia [Scipio the younger], and by Athenæus, a brother of Eumenes, made a tour in Greece : not with any political object, but simply to gratify the curiosity of a stranger, who was familiar with Greek literature, and whose house at Rome was full of Greek rhetoricians, and artists, and masters of all kinds for the education of his sons. He went to view the monuments of art, scenes celebrated in history or fable, or hallowed by religion : to compare Phidias with Homer. It was not only Athens and Sparta, Sicyon and Argos, and Epidaurus, Corinth, and Olympia that attracted his attention : the comparatively obscure shrines of Lebadea and Oropus were not without their interest for the Roman augur, who was no less exact in the observance of the sacerdotal ritual than in the maintenance of military discipline, but sacrificed at Olympia before the work of Phidias with as much devotion as in the capitol. He did not indeed wholly lay aside the majesty of the proconsul ; at Delphi he ordered his own statues to be placed on the pedestals which had been erected for those of Perseus. But he made no inquiries into recent political transactions, and displayed his power chiefly in acts of beneficence ; for amidst so many memorials of ancient prosperity he everywhere found signs of present poverty and distress, and the vast magazines of corn and oil which had fallen into his hands in Macedonia enabled him to relieve the indigence of the Greeks by liberal largesses. His visit to Greece is a pleasing idyllian episode in a life divided between the senate and the camp ; and it is characteristic of the beginning of a new period, being as far as we know the first ever paid to the country for such a purpose.

It would have been happy for Greece if her destinies had now depended on the will of Paullus. But he was the minister of a system by which the rapacious oligarchy, which wielded the Roman legions, was enabled to treat the fairest portion of the civilized world as its prey, and, as it grew bolder with success, became more and more callous to shame and remorse in the prosecution of its iniquitous ends, which it scarcely deigned to cover with the threadbare mantle of its demure hypocrisy. Such men as Q. Marcius and C. Popillius were now the fittest agents for its work. A scene occurred to Paullus, as he passed through Thessaly on his return to Macedonia, which exhibited a slight prelude to the miseries which Greece was to endure under the absolute ascendancy of this system. He was met by a multitude of Ætolians in the garb of suppliants, who related that Lyeiseus and another of his party, having obtained a body of troops from a Roman officer, had surrounded the council room, had put 550 of their opponents to death, forced others into exile, and taken possession of the property both of the dead and the banished. Paullus could only bid the suppliants repair to Amphipolis, where he was to arrange the affairs of his province in concert with the ten commissioners, who had already arrived in Macedonia. They had brought with them the outlines of a decree, which when the details had been adjusted was solemnly published from the proconsular tribunal at Amphipolis, in the presence of a great concourse of people: first recited in Latin by Paullus, and then in a Greek translation by the proprætor Octavius.

By its provisions Macedonia was divided into four districts, to which Amphipolis, Thessalonica, Pella, and Pelagonia were assigned as capitals. They were to be governed each by its own councils and magistrates, and were to be not only independent of each other, but separated from each other by the strictest prohibition of mutual intercourse, both of intermarriage and of contracts for the acquisition of land or houses beyond the border within which either of the parties dwelt. Even the importation of salt was forbidden, as well as the working of gold and silver mines — to guard against the abuses which were admitted to be inseparable from the administration of these royalties on the Roman system — and the felling of ship timber. As the three regions which bordered on the territories of barbarian tribes were expressly permitted to keep garrisons for the protection of their frontiers, the use of arms for any other purpose seems to have been tacitly, if not expressly, interdicted.

A tribute of 100 talents, one half of the amount of the taxation under the royal government, was reserved for the Romans. Whether the burdens of the people were lightened to the same extent, or the difference was more than equal to the increased expense of the quadruple administration, has been perhaps justly questioned. The most important benefits conferred on the conquered nation were exemption from the rule of a Roman magistrate and the rapacity of Roman farmers of the revenue, — which, however, was only a precarious and temporary boon, — and a new code of laws, compiled under the care of Paullus himself, and therefore probably framed on equitable principles, and wisely adapted to the condition of the country, as it is said to have stood the test of experience. That nevertheless the decree was received with deep discontent by every Macedonian who retained any degree of national feeling, may be easily supposed; and we hardly know whether Livy is in earnest, when he affects to correct the error of those who complained of the dismemberment of their country, not aware, he thinks, how adequate each region was to the supply of its own wants. The jealousy of the senate, however, was not satisfied with these precautions. The government of each region was committed to an oligarchical council; and to secure an election of its members conformable to the interests of Rome, all the Macedonians who had held any office in the king's service were ordered, under pain of death, to go with their children, who had passed the age of fifteen, to Italy.

The authority of the commissioners was not confined to Macedonia. They were invested with an unlimited jurisdiction over all political causes in Greece, and even beyond the shores of Europe; for they sent one of their number to raze the town of Antissa in Lesbos to the ground, and to remove its whole population to Methymna, because it had received a Macedonian admiral in its port, and supplied his fleet with provisions. Every part of their instructions seems to have breathed the same spirit of vindictive cruelty, and insolent, shameless tyranny; or they were directed to follow the counsels of Callierates, Charops, and Lyciscus. From all parts of Greece the principal traitors and sycophants flocked to their tribunal ; for no state ventured to send any representatives but the men who had been most forward on the side of Rome. From Achaia, Callierates, Aristodamus, Agesias, and Philippus ; from Bœotia, Mnasippus ; from Acarnania, Chremes ; from Epirus, Charops and Nicias ; from Ætolia, Lyciscus and Tisippus, — the authors of the recent massacre, — are named among the men who came to share the triumph of the Romans, and to direct their persecution against the best and most patriotic of their fellow-countrymen.

Paullus saw and despised the baseness of these miscreants, and would not have sacrificed better men to their malice ; but his was only one voice against ten. His colleagues were better informed as to the intentions of the senate, and knew that Callierates and Charops possessed, as they deserved, its entire confidence. The manner in which they decided on the case of the Ætolians, who had been the victims of the recent violence, removed all doubt as to the course which they meant to pursue, and encouraged their partisans to lay aside all shame and reserve. No inquiry was made except as to the political principles of the actors and the sufferers. The bloodshed, the banishment, and the confiscation were all sanctioned and ratified ; only Bæbius was pronounced to have been in fault, when he lent his soldiers for such a purpose. Still even Ætolia was not deemed to be yet sufficiently purged from disaffection. There, as well as in Acarnania, Epirus, Bœotia, and Achaia, as the commissioners were assured by their Greek advisers, there were still many covert enemies of Rome, and until this party was everywhere crushed, and the ascendancy of the decided advocates of the Roman supremacy firmly established, there could be no security for the public loyalty and tranquillity. Lists of the suspected citizens were drawn up by their adversaries, and letters were dispatched in the name of the præconsul to Ætolia, Acarnania, Epirus, and Bœotia, commanding them all to proceed to Rome to take their trial. With the Achæans it was thought prudent to adopt a different course ; for it was doubted whether they might submit so quietly to such an order ; especially as no papers had been discovered in the Macedonian archives to implicate any of their proscribed citizens in a charge of correspondence with Perseus. Two of the commissioners, C. Claudius and Cn. Domitius, were sent to Peloponnesus to accomplish their object without danger of tumult or opposition.

In the meanwhile, for a specimen of the justice which awaited the accused, Neon, the Bœotian, and Andronicus, the Ætolian, were beheaded : Neon, as the author of the alliance with Perseus; Andronicus, because he had followed his father to the war against the Romans.

When these affairs had been transacted, after having celebrated magnificent games at Amphipolis, in which the spoils of the Macedonian monarchy, which were about to be transported to Rome, formed the most splendid part of the spectacle, Paulus set out for Epirus. On his arrival at Passaro he sent for ten of the principal citizens from each of seventy towns, mostly of the Molossians, which had been involved in the revolt of Cephalus, or in a suspicion of disloyalty to Rome, and ordered that the gold and silver of every town should be collected and brought forth into the public place. A detachment of soldiers was then sent into each, in such order that all were occupied precisely at the same time ; and at the same hour, at a preconcerted signal, were all given up to pillage. The inhabitants, whose fears had been previously lulled by an intimation that the garrisons were to be withdrawn, were carried away as slaves. A hundred and fifty thousand human beings were thus at one blow torn from their homes, and reduced into the lowest depth of wretchedness. The produce of the spoil was divided among the troops. The guilt of this atrocious wickedness rests with the senate, by whose express command it was perpetrated. Paullus, though a severe exacter of discipline, who threw the deserters under the feet of his elephants, was of an affectionate and gentle nature, softened by study, inclined to contemplation, deeply sensible of the instability of mortal greatness, and shrinking with religious awe from wanton oppression of a vanquished enemy, as he showed when, after his triumph, he interceded for Perseus, and procured his release from the dungeon to which he had been mercilessly consigned. That such a man should have been made the instrument of such a deed, may be numbered among the most melancholy examples of military servitude.

THE LAST TWO ORACLES OF GREECE.

TRANSLATED BY F. W. H. MYERS.

I.

AN ORACLE CONCERNING THE ETERNAL GOD.

O GOD ineffable eternal Sire,
 Throned on the whirling spheres, the astral fire,
 Hid in whose heart thy whole creation lies, —
 The whole world's wonder mirrored in thine eyes, —
 List thou thy children's voice, who draw anear,
 Thou hast begotten us, thou too must hear!
 Each life thy life her Fount, her Ocean knows,
 Fed while it fosters, filling as it flows;
 Wrapt in thy light the star-set cycles roll,
 And worlds within thee stir into a soul;
 But stars and souls shall keep their watch and way,
 Nor change the going of thy lonely day.

Some sons of thine, our Father, King of kings,
 Rest in the sheen and shelter of thy wings, —
 Some to strange hearts the unspoken message bear,
 Sped on thy strength through the haunts and homes of air, —
 Some where thine honor dwelleth hope and wait,
 Sigh for thy courts and gather at thy gate;
 These from afar to thee their praises bring,
 Of thee, albeit they have not seen thee, sing;
 Of thee the Father wise, the Mother mild,
 Thee in all children the eternal Child,
 Thee the first Number and harmonious Whole,
 Form in all forms, and of all souls the Soul.

II.

TO AMELIUS, WHO INQUIRED, "WHERE IS NOW PLOTINUS' SOUL?"

PURE spirit — once a man — pure spirits now
 Greet thee rejoicing, and of these art thou;
 Not vainly was thy whole soul alway bent
 With one same battle and one the same intent
 Through eddying cloud and earth's bewildering roar
 To win her bright way to that stainless shore.
 Ay, 'mid the salt spume of this troublous sea,
 This death in life, this sick perplexity,

Oft on thy struggle through the obscure unrest
A revelation opened from the Blest —
Showed close at hand the goal thy hope would win,
Heaven's kingdom round thee and thy God within.
So sure a help the eternal Guardians gave,
From Life's confusion so were strong to save,
Upheld thy wandering steps that sought the day
And set them steadfast on the heavenly way.
Nor quite even here on thy broad brows was shed
The sleep which shrouds the living, who are dead;
Once by God's grace was from thine eyes unfurled
This veil that screens the immense and whirling world,
Once, while the spheres around thee in music ran,
Was very Beauty manifest to man; —
Ah, once to have seen her, once to have known her there,
For speech too sweet, for earth too heavenly fair!
But now the tomb where long thy soul had lain
Bursts, and thy tabernacle is rent in twain;
Now from about thee, in thy new home above,
Has perished all but life, and all but love, —
And on all lives and on all loves outpoured
Free grace and full, a Spirit from the Lord,
High in that heaven whose windless vaults enfold
Just men made perfect, and an age all gold.
Thine own Pythagoras is with thee there,
And sacred Plato in that sacred air,
And whoso followed, and all high hearts that knew
In death's despite what deathless Love can do.
To God's right hand they have scaled the starry way —
Pure spirits these, thy spirit pure as they.
Ah saint! how many and many an anguish past,
To how fair haven art thou come at last!
On thy meek head what Powers their blessing pour,
Filled full with life, and rich for evermore!

PERIODS OF GREEK HISTORY AFTER THE CONQUEST OF GREECE.

By GEORGE FINLAY.

(From "Greece under the Romans.")

[GEORGE FINLAY : An English historian ; born in Faversham, Kent, December 21, 1799 ; died in Athens, Greece, January 26, 1875. He was one of the early volunteers in the liberation of Greece, a companion of Byron at Missolonghi in 1823, and took up permanent residence there. He was for many years the Greek correspondent of the London Times. His fame, however, rests upon one great work, now collected as "Greece under Foreign Domination" (7 vols., 1877), but the first volume published as "Greece under the Romans" (1844), and the last two volumes being a "History of the Greek Revolution."] .

THE condition of Greece during its long period of servitude was not one of uniform degeneracy. Under the Romans, and subsequently under the Othomans, the Greeks formed only an insignificant portion of a vast empire. Their unwarlike character rendered them of little political importance, and many of the great changes and revolutions which occurred in the dominions of the emperors and of the sultans, exerted no direct influence on Greece. Consequently, neither the general history of the Roman nor of the Othoman empire forms a portion of Greek history. Under the Byzantine emperors the case was different : the Greeks became then identified with the imperial administration. The dissimilarity in the political position of the nation during these periods requires a different treatment from the historian to explain the characteristics of the times.

The changes which affected the political and social condition of the Greeks divide their history, as a subject people, into six distinct periods.

1. The first of these periods comprises the history of Greece under the Roman government. The physical and moral degradation of the people deprived them of all political influence, until Greek society was at length regenerated by the Christian religion. After Christianity became the religion of the Roman emperors, the predominant power of the Greek clergy, in the ecclesiastical establishment of the Eastern Empire, restored to the Greeks some degree of influence in the government, and gave them a degree of social authority over human civilization in the East which rivaled that which they had formerly obtained by the Macedonian conquests. In the portion of this work devoted to the condition of Greece under the Romans, the author has confined his attention exclusively to the condition of the people, and to those branches of the Roman administration which affected their condition. The predominant influence of Roman feelings and prejudices in the Eastern Empire terminates with the accession of Leo the Isaurian, who gave the administration at Constantinople a new character.

2. The second period embraces the history of the Eastern Roman Empire in its new form, under its conventional title of the Byzantine Empire. The records of this despotism, modified, renovated, and reinvigorated by the Iconoclast emperors, constitute one of the most remarkable and instructive lessons in the history of monarchical institutions. They teach us that a well-organized central government can with ease hold many subject nations in a state of political nullity. During this period the history of the Greeks is closely interwoven with the annals of the imperial government, so that the history of the Byzantine Empire forms a portion of the history of the Greek nation. Byzantine history extends from the accession of Leo the Isaurian, in the year 716, to the conquest of Constantinople by the Crusaders in 1204.

3. After the destruction of the Eastern Roman Empire, Greek history diverges into many channels. The exiled Roman-Greeks of Constantinople fled to Asia, and established their capital at Nicæa; they prolonged the Imperial administration in some provinces on the old model and with the old names. After the lapse of less than sixty years, they recovered possession of Constantinople; but though the government they exercised retained the proud title of the Roman Empire, it was only a degenerate representative even of the Byzantine state. This third period is characterized as the Greek Empire of Constantinople. Its feeble existence was terminated by the Othoman Turks at the taking of Constantinople in 1453.

4. When the Crusaders conquered the greater part of the Byzantine Empire, they divided their conquests with the Venetians, and founded the Latin Empire of Romania, with its feudal principalities in Greece. The domination of the Latins is important, as marking the decline of Greek influence in the East, and as causing a rapid diminution in the wealth and numbers of the Greek nation. This period extends from the conquest of Constantinople in 1204, until the conquest of Naxos by the Othoman Turks in 1566.

5. The conquest of Constantinople in 1204 caused the foundation of a new Greek state in the eastern provinces of the Byzantine Empire, called the Empire of Trebizond. Its existence is a curious episode in Greek history, though the government was characterized by peculiarities which indicated the influence of Asiatic rather than of European manners. It bore a strong resemblance to the Iberian and Armenian monarchies. During two centuries and a half it maintained a considerable degree of influence, based, however, rather on its commercial position and resources than on its political strength or its Greek civilization. Its existence exerted little influence on the fate or fortunes of Greece, and its conquest, in the year 1461, excited little sympathy.

6. The sixth and last period of the history of Greece under foreign domination extends from 1453 to 1821, and embraces the records both of the Othoman rule and of the temporary occupation of the Peloponnesus by the Venetian Republic, from 1685 to 1715. Nations have, perhaps, perpetuated their existence in an equally degraded position; but history offers no other example of a nation which had sunk to such a state of debasement making a successful effort to recover its independence.

GLEANINGS FROM THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY.

BY RICHARD GARNETT.

[RICHARD GARNETT, C.B., LL.D., English poet and man of letters, was born at Lichfield, England, in 1835; son and namesake of the Assistant Keeper of Printed Books in the British Museum. He was himself in its service from 1851 to 1899, latterly as Keeper of Printed Books. He has published, besides volumes of collected original poems, "Poems from the German," "A Chaplet from the Greek Anthology," "Sonnets from Dante, Petrarch, and Camoens"; also "Io in Egypt," "Iphigenia in Delphi," "The Twilight of the Gods," etc.; Lives of Milton, Carlyle, Emerson, William Blake, and Edward Gibbon Wakefield; "History of Italian Literature," etc. Died in 1906.]

I. — BION.

YOUNG was I, when I saw fair Venus stand,
 Before me, leading in her lovely hand
 Eros, whose drooping eye the herbage sought,
 And thus, "Dear herdsman, let my child be taught
 Music by thee," therewith she went away.

Then did I in all innocence essay
 To teach, as though he could have learned of me,
 The sources of sweet-flowing melody : —
 Pan's pipe and Pallas' flute, how Hermes bade
 The tortoise sing, and how Apollo made
 The cittern. But, not heeding mine a whit,
 He sang himself a song, and taught me it.
 How Venus reigns, and all in heaven above
 And land and sea is subject unto love.
 And I forgot all I to Love did tell,
 But all he taught me I remember well.

II. — MNASALCAS.

Vine that, not tarrying till the storm bereaves,
 Strewest on autumnal air thy glorious leaves,
 Reserve them for her couch whom I await;
 Bacchus was ever Venus' willing mate.

III. — MARCUS ARGENTARIUS.

Warble no more thy mellow melody,
 Sweet Blackbird, from that knotty oaken tree,
 But where the clambering vine her tendril weaves,
 Come winging to the hospitable eaves,
 And chant uncaged, for that, thy race's foe,
 Fosters the birdlime-bearing mistletoe;
 But this, the purple grape, so duly thine,
 For Minstrelsy should ne'er be scant of wine.

IV. — ANONYMOUS.

I send thee myrrh, not that thou mayest be
 By it perfumed, but it perfumed by thee.

Imitation by Ben. Jonson.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
 Not so much honoring thee
 As giving it a hope that there
 It could not withered be;
 But thou thereon didst only breathe
 And sent'st it back to me;
 Since when it grows, and smells, I swear,
 Not of itself, but thee.

V. — MARCUS ARGENTARIUS.

Call it not love when the delighted eye
Is lured by charm into captivity;
But when wild fires for weak attractions waste
To pine for beauty is not love but taste.

VI. — MELEAGER.

O Love that flew so lightly to my heart,
Why are thy wings so feeble to depart?

Translation by H. H. Milman.

Still Love's sweet voice is trembling in mine ears,
Still silent flow mine eyes with Love's sweet tears;
Nor night nor day I rest; by magic spells
Stamped on my soul the well-known image dwells.
O Love! how swift thy flight to reach the heart!
Thy wings are only powerless to depart.

VII. — CALLIMACHUS.

The hunter, Epicydes, will not spare
To follow on the trace of fawn and hare
Through snow and frost, so long as still they fly;
But if one say, "'Tis hit," he passes by.
Even so my love, winged for no willing prize,
Follows what flees, and flees what fallen lies.

VIII. — ANTIPATER OF SIDON.

THE SEA VENUS.

Not vast this shrine, where by wet sand I sit Ruling the sea that surges up to it;
But dear, for much I love submissive sea,
And much the mariner preserved by me:
Entreat her then, whose smile thy speed can prove
On the wild waves of Ocean and of Love.

IX. — AGATHIAS.

My wreath, my hair, my girdle gratefully
To Venus, Pallas, Dian offered be.
By whose concurring favor I enjoy
My wedded bliss, my chastity, my beauty.

X. — LEONIDAS OF TARENTUM.

Venus, at Rhodo's prayer this stick, and these Sandals, the spoil of sage Posochares;
 This dirty leather flask, this wallet torn,
 Suffer thy sanctuary to adorn:
 Trophies not rich but glorious, for they prove Philosophy's subjection unto Love.

XI. — MNASALCAS.

The crooked bow and arrow-spending case
 Promachus hangs up in this holy place,
 Phœbus, to thee. The shafts remain apart
 For each is buried in a foeman's heart.

XII. — LEONIDAS OF ALEXANDRIA.

Menodotis's portrait here is kept:
 Most odd it is
 How very like to all the world, except Menodotis.

XIII. — LUCIAN.

"PLAIN LIVING AND HIGH THINKING."

Stern Cynicus doth war austere-ly wage
 With endive, lentils, chicory, and sage;
 Which shouldst thou thoughtless proffer,
 "Wretch," saith he,
 "Wouldst thou corrupt my life's simplicity?"
 Yet is not his simplicity so great
 But that he can digest a pomegranate;
 And peaches, he esteems, right well agree
 With Spartan fare and sound philosophy.

XIV. — NICARCHUS.

A starry seer's oracular abodes
 One sought, to know if he should sail for Rhodes,
 When thus the sage, "I rede thee, let thy ships
 Be new, and choose the summer for thy trips;
 Safe then thou'lt leave, and safe regain this spot.
 If those confounded pirates catch thee not."

XV. — ANTIPHILUS.

Eubule, craving Heaven's will to know,
 Would poise a pebble. Wished she to hear no,
 The stone was ponderous past all belief;
 If yes, 'twas lighter than a withered leaf;
 And did the divination prove at fault,
 "Phœbus," she'd say, "thou art not worth thy salt."

XVI. — LUCILLIUS.

A MISER COMMENDED.

Great soul! who nobly thus allots his pelf;
 All to his heir and nothing to himself.

XVII. — MARCUS ARGENTARIUS.

Thou art in danger, Cincius, on my word,
 To die ere thou hast lived, which were absurd.
 Open thy ears to song, thy throat to wine,
 Thy arms unto that pretty wife of thine.
 Philosophy, I have nowise forgot,
 Is deathless, but philosophers are not.

XVIII. — PHILODEMUS.

I loved, who not? I drank, who doth not know
 Wine's joys? I raved, the gods would have it so.
 But love and wine adieu, for now my tress
 Whitens with Gaiety's hoar monotress.
 'Twas well to sport, and well it is to see
 When gravity befits, and grave to be.

WIT AND SATIRE OF THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY.

TRANSLATED BY LORD NEAVES, SENATOR OF THE COLLEGE OF JUSTICE, SCOTLAND.

It would not have been conformable either to human nature in general, or to Greek nature in particular, if the country and the literature that produced Aristophanes should not in its less serious compositions have given some place for wit and sarcasm. We find, accordingly, that these elements are not wanting. A great many epigrams both of a jocular and of a satirical kind are well deserving of notice, of which specimens shall now be given.

Nowhere, perhaps, are the proper objects of ridicule better set forth than in the Introduction to one of Foote's farces. He refuses to bring on the stage mere bodily defects or natural misfortunes; and when asked to say at what things we may laugh with propriety, answers thus: "At an old beau, a superannuated beauty, a military coward, a stuttering orator, or a gouty dancer. In short, whoever affects to be what he is not, or strives to be what he cannot, is an object worthy the poet's pen and your mirth."

We do not say that the Greek epigrammatist always abstained from making merry at mere bodily defects; but we shall avoid as much as possible those that have no other recommendation. The proper object of ridicule is surely Folly, and the proper object of satire, Vice. Within the present section, however, will be included not merely the ridicule of sarcasm and the attacks of satire, but any also of those merry or witty views of nature and things that tend to produce sympathetic laughter.

Of bodily peculiarities there are some at which it is difficult not to smile; and if it is done good-humoredly, and rather as a warning to abstain from vanity or conceit, there is no harm in it. Many of such epigrams were probably written upon merely imaginary persons:—

A NEW USE OF A HUMAN FACE.

(Attributed to the Emperor Trajan: the translation old.)

With nose so long and mouth so wide,
And those twelve grinders side by side,
Dick, with a very little trial,
Would make an excellent sundial.

Some of the critics are greatly delighted to find that in this epigram the Emperor's knowledge of Greek was not such as to prevent him committing a false quantity.

A COUNTERPART TO NARCISSUS.

(By Lucilius : translated by Cowper.)

Beware, my friend! of crystal brook
 Or fountain, lest that hideous hook,
 Thy nose, thou chance to see;
 Narcissus' fate would then be thine,
 And self-detested thou wouldst pine,
 As self-enamored he.

LONG AND SHORT.

(Anonymous : translated by Merivale.)

Dick cannot blow his nose whene'er he pleases,
 His nose so long is, and his arm so short;
 Nor ever cries, God bless me! when he sneezes —
 He cannot hear so distant a report.

A variety of trades and professions have been traditional objects of ridicule. Schoolmasters and professors come in for their share.

ON A SCHOOLMASTER WHO HAD A GAY WIFE.

(By Lucilius.)

You in your school forever flog and flay us,
 Teaching what Paris did to Menelaus;
 But all the while, within your private dwelling,
 There's many a Paris courting of your Helen.

ON A PROFESSOR WHO HAD A SMALL CLASS.

Hail, Aristides, Rhetoric's great professor!
 Of wondrous words we own thee the possessor.
 Hail ye, his pupils seven, that mutely hear him —
 His room's four walls, and the three benches near him!

This that follows is on Cadmus, without whom there might have been no grammar, and little rhetoric. It is said to be by Zeno — not the philosopher, we presume. We give first a translation by Wellesley : —

Take it not ill that Cadmus, Phœnician though he be,
 Can say that Greece was taught by him to write her A, B, C.

This is good ; but even “English readers” may know that A, B, C, is not the right name of the Greek alphabet. Let us respectfully propose a slight change : —

Cadmus am I : then grudge me not the boast, that, though I am a Phœnician born, I taught you Greeks your Alpha, Beta, Gamma.

The medical profession as usual comes in for some of those touches which we are ready enough to give or to enjoy when we are not actually in their hands.

A CONVENIENT PARTNERSHIP.

(Anonymus.)

Damon, who plied the Undertaker's trade,
With Doctor Crateas an agreement made.
What linens Damon from the dead could seize,
He to the doctor sent for bandages ;
While the good Doctor, here no promise breaker,
Sent all his patients to the Undertaker.

GRAMMAR AND MEDICINE.

(By Agathias.)

A thriving doctor sent his son to school
To gain some knowledge, should he prove no fool ;
But took him soon away with little warning,
On finding out the lesson he was learning —
How great Pelides' wrath, in Homer's rhyme,
Sent many souls to Hades ere their time.
“No need for this my boy should hither come ;
That lesson he can better learn at home —
For I myself, now, I make bold to say,
Send many souls to Hades ere their day,
Nor e'er find want of Grammar stop my way.”

Musical attempts, when unsuccessful, are a fruitful and fair subject of ridicule. The following is by Nicarchus : —

Men die when the night raven sings or cries :
But when Dick sings, e'en the night raven dies.

COMPENSATION.

(By Leonidas.)

The harper Simylus, the whole night through,
 Harped till his music all the neighbors slew :
 All but deaf Origen, for whose dull ears
 Nature atoned by giving length of years.

THE MUSICAL DOCTOR.

(By Ammianus : the translation altered from Wellesley.)

Nicias, a doctor and musician,
 Lies under very foul suspicion.
 He sings, and without any shame
 He murders all the finest music :
 Does he prescribe ? our fate's the same,
 If he shall e'er find me or you sick.

Unsuccessful painters, too, are sneered at. This is by Lucilius : —

Eutychus many portraits made, and many sons begot ;
 But, strange to say ! none ever saw a likeness in the lot.

Compliments to the fair sex are often paid by the epigrammatists in a manner at once witty and graceful.

We have seen how Sappho was described as a tenth Muse ; but this epigram by an unknown author goes further. The translation is old and anonymous, though borrowed apparently from one by Swift, on which it has improved. It has been slightly altered : —

The world must now two Venuses adore ;
 Ten are the Muses, and the Graces four.
 Such Dora's wit, so fair her form and face,
 She's a new Muse, a Venus, and a Grace.

We find an adaptation of this to an accomplished Cornish lady, in an old magazine : —

Now the Graces are four and the Venuses two,
 And ten is the number of Muses ;
 For a Muse and a Grace and a Venus are you,
 My dear little Molly Trefusis.

Finally, we have another edition of this idea with a bit of satire at the end, which has been maliciously added by the translator:—

Of Graces four, of Muses ten,
Of Venuses now two are seen;
Doris shines forth to dazzled men,
A Grace, a Muse, and Beauty's Queen; —
But let me whisper one thing more;
The Furies now are likewise four.

The faults and foibles of women, springing often so naturally from their innate wish to please, have not escaped such of the epigrammatists as were inclined to satire, and some of them are bitter enough. The first we give must have been occasioned by some irritating disappointment, or have sprung from an unworthy opinion of the sex. It is by our friend Palladas: —

All wives are plagues; yet two blest times have they, —
Their bridal first, and then their burial day.

The others we give are less sweeping, and more directed against individual failings, particularly the desire to appear more beautiful or more youthful than the facts warranted. This is by Lucilius: —

Chloe, those locks of raven hair, —
Some people say you dye them black;
But that's a libel, I can swear,
For I know where you buy them black.

Our next deals with a very systematic dyer and getter-up of artificial juvenility, who seems to have been her own Madame Rachel. The Greek is Lucian's, and the translation by Merivale. There is also one by Cowper, which will be found among his works: —

Yes, you may dye your hair, but not your age,
Nor smooth, alas! the wrinkles of your face:
Yes, you may varnish o'er the telltale page,
And wear a mask for every vanished grace.
But there's an end. No Hecuba, by aid
Of rouge and ceruse, is a Helen made."

The inactive habits of most of the Greek women are thought to have created a temptation to the use of these artificial modes of heightening the complexion, which would have been better effected by the natural pigments laid on by fresh air and exercise.

This is by Nicarchus, upon an old woman wishing to be married at rather an advanced period of life : —

Niconoè has doubtless reached her prime :
Yes, for she did so in Deucalion's time.
We don't know as to that, but think her doom
Less fitted for a husband than a tomb.

This also is upon an old, or at least a plain woman, by Lucilius : —

Gellia, your mirror's false ; you could not bear,
If it were true, to see your image there.

ON A WOMAN SCORNFUL IN YOUTH PLAYING THE COQUETTE WHEN OLD.

(By Rufinus.)

You now salute me graciously, when gone
Your beauty's power, that once like marble shone ;
You now look sweet, though forced to hide away
Those locks that o'er your proud neck used to stray.
Vain are your arts : your faded charms I scorn ;
The rose now past, I care not for the thorn.

UPON A LADY'S COY, RELUCTANT, "UNAMOROUS" DELAY.

(By Rufinus.)

How long, hard Prodicè, am I to kneel,
And pray and whine, to move that breast of steel ?
You e'en are getting gray, as much as I am ;
We soon shall be — just Hecuba and Priam.

Deafness is an infirmity which is a proper object, not of ridicule, but of pity ; but then the deaf person should not pretend to hear when he or she cannot, as was the case with the old lady now to be noticed : —

ON A DEAF HOUSEKEEPER.

(Paraphrased.)

Of all life's plagues I recommend to no man
To hire as a domestic a deaf woman.

I've got one who my orders does not hear,
 Mishears them rather, and keeps blundering near.
 Thirsty and hot, I asked her for a drink ;
 She bustled out, and brought me back some ink.
 Eating a good rump steak, I called for mustard ;
 Away she went, and whipped me up a custard.
 I wanted with my chicken to have ham ;
 Blundering once more, she brought a pot of jam.
 I wished in season for a cut of salmon,
 And what she bought me was a huge fat gammon.
 I can't my voice raise higher and still higher,
 As if I were a herald or town-crier.
 'Twould better be if she were deaf outright,
 But anyhow she quits my house this night.

Those ladies — generally, of course, such as were advanced in life — who unblushingly betook themselves to the bottle, are an inevitable subject of satire. It has already been mentioned that even men were considered intemperate who drank wine without a large admixture of water; but apparently the female toppers, having once broken bounds, took their wine unmixed.

EPITAPH ON MARONIS.

This rudely sculptured Cup will show
 Where gray Maronis lies below.
 She talked, and drank strong unmixed stuff,
 Both of them more than quantum suff.
 She does not for her children grieve,
 Nor their poor father grudge to leave;
 It only vexes her to think
 This drinking cup's not filled with drink.

The last couplet might be more literally translated thus : —

But in the grave she scarcely can lie still,
 To think, what Bacchus owns, she can't with Bacchus fill.

Love is sometimes treated of in a vein of pleasantry, very different from the deep and impassioned tone in which it is exhibited in more serious compositions. Take some examples : —

IS A BLACK WOMAN ONE OF THE FAIR SEX?

(By Meleager.)

By Didyma's beauty I'm carried away;
 I melt, when I see it, like wax before fire:
 She is black, it is true: so are coals; but even they,
 When they're warmed, a bright glow like the rose cup acquire

This is by Archias, Cicero's friend and client, written perhaps to illustrate some piece of art:—

What! fly from Love? vain hope: there's no retreat,
 When he has wings and I have only feet.

This is by Crates, translated by Sayers, Southey's friend:—

CURES FOR LOVE.

Hunger, perhaps, may cure your love
 Or time your passion greatly alter:
 If both should unsuccessful prove,
 I strongly recommend a halter.

VENUS AND THE MUSES.

(By some said to be Plato's.)

To the Muses said Venus: "Maids, mind what you do; Honor me, or I'll set my boy Cupid on you."
 Then to Venus the Muses: "To Mars chatter thus:
 Your urchin ne'er ventures to fly upon us."

The light and cheerful way in which poor men speak of their poverty is often pleasant. Here are some examples:—

WANT A GOOD WATCHDOG.

(By Julian; the translation by Wellesley.)

Seek a more profitable job,
 Good housebreakers, elsewhere:
 These premises you cannot rob,
 Want guards them with such care.

THE POOR SCHOLAR'S ADMONITION TO THE MICE.

(By Aristo.)

O mice! if here you come for food, you'd better go elsewhere,
 For in this cabin, small and rude, you'll find but slender fare.

Go where you'll meet with good fat cheese, and sweet dried figs in plenty,

Where even the scraps will yield with ease a banquet rich and dainty :

If to devour my books you come, you'll rue it, without question,
And find them all, as I find some, of very hard digestion.

The folly of fools is a fair subject of ridicule. This is by Lucian : —

A blockhead bit by fleas put out the light,
And chuckling cried, Now you can't see to bite.

Here is something which the Greeks considered folly, by Lucian : —

While others tippled, Sam from drinking shrunk,
Which made the rest think Sam alone was drunk.

Without recommending excess, there are a good many invitations to jollity. Here is one : —

Sober Eubulus, friends, lies here below :
So then, let's drink : to Hades all must go.

What follows is a favorite sentiment — perhaps too much so — with the old poets : —

Wine to the poet is a wingèd steed ;
Those who drink water come but little speed.

One great poet has existed in our day who was a signal exception to this alleged rule.

The following is by the Emperor Julian, and refers to that substitute for wine which the Germans discovered by fermenting, or, as Tacitus calls it, corrupting, grain. It does not seem to have pleased the imperial wine drinker. The translation is necessarily paraphrastic : —

Who ? whence this, Bacchus ? for by Bacchus' self,
The son of Jove, I know not this strange elf.
The other smells like nectar : but thou here
Like the he-goat. Those wretched Celts, I fear,
For want of grapes made thee of ears of corn.
Demetrius art thou, of Demeter born,
Not Bacchus, Dionysus, nor yet wine —
Those names but fit the products of the vine ;
BEER thou mayst be from Barley ; or, that failing,
We'll call thee ALE, for thou wilt keep us ailing.

A bath to the Greeks, as we might expect — at least, in their later development — was a great enjoyment, if not a necessity of life. The epigrammatists supply us with many pleasant and playful inscriptions for baths or bathing places, illustrating their virtues and attractions. The purity and freshness of the water are natural themes of eulogium, and the patronage of divine beings is readily supposed. Here is a selection, all of them apparently anonymous : —

This bath may boast the Graces' own to be, —
And for that reason it holds only three.

Here bathed the Graces, and at leaving gave Their choicest splendors to requite the wave.

Or thus, which we may suppose written of the draped Graces : —

Here bathed the Graces, and, by way of payment,
Left half their charms when they resumed their raiment.

Here Venus bathed, ere she to Paris' eyes
Displayed the immortal form that gained the prize.

Or thus : —

Straight from this bath went Venus, wet and dripping;
To Paris showed herself — and won the pippin.

Either these waves gave Venus birth, or she,
Her form here bathing, made them what we see.

ON A SMALL-SIZED BATH.

Blame not things little: Grace may on them wait.
Cupid is little; but his godhead's great.

We are warned, however, that excess in the use of the warm bath, as in other indulgences, may be injurious : —

Wine and the bath, and lawless love for ladies,
Just send us quicker down the hill to Hades.

Some vices are particularly obnoxious to the satirical epigrammatist, especially avarice and envy : —

STINGINESS IN HOSPITALITY.

(By Pallas: translation altered from Wellesley.)

Most people dine but once, but when we've dined
 With our friend Salaminus,
 We dine again at home, for faith! we find
 He did not truly dine us.

BOARD OR LODGING.

(By Lucilius: translation altered from Cowper.)

Asclépiades, the Miser, in his house
 Espied one day, with some surprise, a mouse:
 "Tell me, dear mouse," he cried, "to what cause is it
 I owe this pleasant but unlooked-for visit?"
 The mouse said, smiling: "Fear not for your hoard:
 I come, my friend, to lodge, and not to board."

There are several vigorous denunciations of the vice of envy.
 This is anonymous:—

Envy is vile, but plays a useful part,
 Torturing in envious men both eyes and heart.

This is in that exaggerated style which the epigrams sometimes exhibit. It is by Lucilius—the translation from Wellesley:—

Poor Diophon of envy died,
 His brother thief to see
 Nailed near him, to be crucified,
 Upon a higher tree.

But the best epigram on this subject is to be found in one which seems to describe a picture of Momus the fault-finder, the impersonation of Envy, perhaps also, some will say, of Criticism,—the Power who could produce nothing excellent himself, and who never saw unmixed excellence in the works of others. The picture is supposed to have been by Apelles. The epigram is anonymous; the translation partly from Hay:—

Who here has formed, with faultless hand and skill,
 Fault-finding Momus, source of endless ill?
 On the bare earth his aged limbs are thrown,

As if in life, to lie and sigh and groan.
 His frame is wasted, and his scanty hairs
 One trembling hand from his thin temple tears:
 With his old staff the other strikes the ground,
 Which all insensate to the blows is found.
 In double row his gnashing teeth declare
 How much his neighbor's weal o'erwhelms him with despair.

Swift made a well-known epitaph upon Vanbrugh as an architect : —

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee.

This is nearly the counterpart of the following Greek epigram : —

Hail, Mother Earth ! lie light on him
 Whose tombstone here we see :
 Æsigenes, his form was slim,
 And light his weight on thee.

A similar request is made in another epigram by Ammianus, but with a very different feeling. The translation is by Merivale : —

Light lie the earth, Nearchus, on thy clay, —
 That so the dogs may easier find their prey.

This anonymous epigram is upon a matricide, who does not deserve burial : —

Bury him not ! no burial is for him :
 Let hungry dogs devour him limb by limb.
 Our general Mother, Earth, on her kind breast
 Will ne'er allow a matricide to rest.

The satirical epigrammatists indulge often in national invective, and indeed the Greeks were too fond of abusing some of their neighbors. Here are specimens : —

A viper bit a Cappadocian's hide ;
 But 'twas the viper, not the man, that died.

The natives of many other countries besides Cappadocia were called bad : among the rest the Lerians ; thus : —

Lerians are bad : not some bad, and some not,
 But all ; there's not a Lerian in the lot,
 Save Procles, that you could a good man call ; —
 And Procles — is a Lerian after all.

Our readers will here recognize the original of a well-known epigram by Porson, which exists both in a Greek and English shape, and where the satirist, after denouncing the Germans as all ignorant of Greek meters, concludes :—

All, save only Hermann ;—
And Hermann's a German.

It was unfortunate for poor Hermann that his name and his nationality rhymed so well together.

An epigram may here be given in conclusion on this head, as tending, perhaps, to illustrate the transition by which the satirical Greek epigram came to resemble the favorite style of Martial, which has been so much adopted in modern times.

The epigram we refer to is by Lucilius :—

ON A DECLAMATORY PLEADER.

A little pig, an ox, a goat (my only one), I lost,
And Menecles, to plead my cause, I fee'd at some small cost.
I only wanted back my beasts, which seemed my simple due ;
Then, Menecles, what had I with Othryades to do ?
I never thought in this affair to charge with any theft
The men who, at Thermopylæ, their lives and bodies left.
My suit is with Eutychides ; and if I get decree,
Leonidas and Xerxes both are welcome to go free.
Plead my true case: lest I cry out (I can't my feelings smother),
"The little pig one story tells, and Menecles another."

This chapter may be concluded with a mild satire upon the conditions of the times, with reference to the two ancient worthies, Heraclitus and Democritus, the weeping and the laughing philosopher. The translation is mainly from Prior :—

Sad Heraclitus with thy tears return ;
Life more than ever gives us cause to mourn.
Democritus, dear droll, revisit earth :
Life more than ever gives us cause for mirth.
Between you both I stand in thoughtful pother,
How I should weep with one, how laugh with t'other.

FRAGMENTS OF EARLY ROMAN POETS.

(In part translated for this work.)

CHANT OF THE ARVAL BROTHERS.

GIVE to us thy help, O Lars!
 Suffer not the plague to fall upon thy people, Mars!
 Be thy fury sated, Mars! — [To the dancers.
 Leap on the sill:
 Let the beating be still.
 Call on the demigods to shield us from ill. —
 Once again, Mars, we implore! —
 Triumph, triumph, triumph, triumph, we will sing it o'er and o'er!

NÆVIUS.

[Flourished about B.C. 235-204. One of the earliest of Roman dramatists, ranked by them as third among their comedians; but more important as poet, being the forerunner of Roman satiric poetry, and creator of the Roman epic.]

On a Coquette.

As if in a ring at play, tossing a ball,
 To one after another, the same with them all,
 She turns: here a nod, there a wink she bestows;
 To one she makes love, to another clings close;
 Here she busies her hand, there a foot she will press;
 The next has her ring to inspect and caress;
 There's a kiss blown to one, and she sings with a second,
 While with signs on her fingers another is beckoned.

Epitaph on Himself.

If e'er o'er beings mortal might sorrow those divine,
 Then o'er the poet Nævius would weep the heavenly Nine;
 For since the bard was treasured old Orcus' store among,
 At Rome they have forgotten to speak the Latin tongue.

PLAUTUS.

[See "Mostellaria" for biography.]

Epitaph on Himself.

SINCE Plautus died, Thalia beats her breast;
 The stage is empty: Laughter, Sport, and Jest,
 And all the tuneless measures, weep distressed.

ENNIUS.

[Usually considered the greatest of Roman poets before the time of Lucretius, and the real founder of the indigenous Roman school of verse. Born B.C. 239, in the half Greek, half Oscan town of Rudia, probably educated at Tarentum, and serving as soldier and centurion till middle age, he came to Rome with Cato the Censor in 204, having a remarkable variety of influences, cultivation, and experience; taught Greek; went campaigning again; was intimate with the best families in Rome, a friend of Scipio Major among others, and died B.C. 169. He wrote tragedies, satires, a long historical poem called the "Annals," and other works.]

Pyrrhus to the Roman Envoy.

[After the early victories of Pyrrhus over the Romans (B.C. 280-279), he sent an embassy to negotiate a peace. They refused, but sent Fabricius to make terms for ransoming the prisoners in Pyrrhus's hands. Ennius puts these words into his mouth in reply, which in substance must be historical.]

I SEEK no gold, nor must you offer me
A payment. Let us wage this war together
As soldiers, not as hucksters in the market;
With steel, not gold — our lives to be the stake.
Whether our mistress Fortune purposes
That you or I should rule, or what she wills,
That let us leave to valor. Further, hear
What I now say: the brave man whom the chance
Of battle spares to life, his freedom too
I have resolved to spare. Take this my offer
Even as I make it, by the great gods' grace.

Roman Quackery.

I value not a mite your Marsian augurs,
Your village seers, your market fortune tellers,
Egyptian sorcerers, dream interpreters:
No prophets they by knowledge or by skill;
But superstitious quacks, shameless impostors,
Lazy or crazy slaves of indigence,
Who tell fine stories for their proper lucre;
Teach others the highway, and cannot find
A byway for themselves; promise us riches,
And beg of us a drachma; — let them give
Their riches first, then take their drachma out.

Moral to a Fable.

Learn from my tale this ready saw and true:
Ne'er trust your friends for what yourself can do.

The Lament of Andromache.

(Translated by W. E. Aytoun.)

Whither shall I flee for refuge? Whither shall I look for aid?
 Flight or exile, which is safer? Tower and town are both betrayed
 Whom shall I implore for succor? Our old altars are no more, Broken, crushed they lie, and splintered, and the flames above them roar.

And our walls all blackened stand — O my father! fatherland!
 O thou haughty house of Priam — temple with the gates surrounded,
 I have seen thee — all thy splendor, all thy Eastern pomp unbounded —
 All thy roofs and painted ceilings — all the treasures they contain,
 I have seen them, seen them blazing — I have seen old Priam slain,
 Foully murdered, and the altar of the Highest bears the stain.

A Possible Portrait of Himself.

Thus speaking, he calls one with whom he is wont, and most gladly, to share
 His table and converse alike, and the load of his business and care,
 When wearied with making great part of the counsel and day-long debate
 In broad Forum and reverend Senate, on highest concerns of the State;
 To whom matters of moment and trifles and jest he can speak and be bold, —
 Can pour forth all at once, if he wish, good and bad, what there is to be told,
 And put in safe keeping; with whom both in public and private he knows
 High pleasure and joy; whom no evil nature the fancies dispose
 To base acts out of malice or levity; learned, and loyal in act,
 Agreeable, eloquent, cheerful, content with himself, full of tact, Suiting speech to the season, right courteous, with words not too many for need;
 Versed in buried antiquities, gaining from years and from study the need
 Of knowing the old ways and new, many laws both of men and divine; —
 Who knows when the counsels of prudence to speech and to silence incline.

The Problem of Divine Government.

That the race of gods exists in heaven, I have ever said and say:
 But I do not think they care how the race of men live out their day;
 For then the good would have good, the bad bad, which now is far away.

Inscription for Tomb of Scipio Major.

Here lies on whom compatriot or foe
Meed for his actions never could bestow.

Another for the Same.

From dawn-land, or Mæotis' swamp beyond,
There lives no man whose deeds can match my own.
Could any climb with right the gods' domain,
Heaven's mighty gate stands wide to me alone.

To Himself.

Hail, poet Ennius, who to mortal men
Pledgest thy flaming verses marrow-born.

His Old Age.

So a strong steed, who oft the race has run
Around the vast Olympian course, and won,
Now rests in peaceful age, his service done.

Epitaph on Himself.

Compatriots, come and look upon old Ennius' sculptured form :
He penned your fathers' mighty deeds to keep their memory warm.
Let no one honor mine with tears, nor weep the funeral day :
Why ? I still live, and through men's mouths flit to and fro for aye.

PACUVIUS.

[Nephew of Ennius, and like him a native of Brundisium, South Italy ; born B.C. 220, and died about B.C. 130. He was a painter of great celebrity, and held in the front rank of tragic poets.]

Departure of the Greeks from Troy.

Now the crested billows whiten as the sun is hasting down ;
Twofold darkness falls around us, night and storm-clouds blind the sight ;
'Mid the clouds the levin blazes ; trembles heaven beneath the crash ;
Hail with torrent rain commingling, bursts in headlong whirlwind down ;
All the winds rush forth about us ; sweeps the wild tornado round ;
Boils the sea with glowing fury.

Epitaph on Himself.

Youth, even though thou art hurrying, this stone asks a boon of thee :

That thou wilt gaze upon it, then read what its gravings tell.
Here are the bones of Pacuvius Marcus, the poet, laid.

I could wish this, all unknowing what thou mayst be. Farewell.

ATTIUS OR ACCIUS.

[Born B.C. 170 ; lived to a great age, as Cicero when a young man (B.C. 85-80) frequently conversed with him. His tragedies are praised by the ancients for vigor of language and elevation of thought. He also wrote annals in verse, like Ennius ; and prose works.]

Dialogue between Tarquin and the Diviners.

Tarquin —

When at night's urgency I gave my frame
To rest, and soothed my languid limbs with sleep,
A shepherd seemed in slumber to accost me. . . .
Two kindred rams were chosen from the flock,
A fleecy treasure of a beauty rare ;
Whereof I slew the fairer on an altar.
Then did his fellow with his horns essay
To butt, and overthrew me on the ground ;
Where as I lay sore wounded in the dirt,
I gazed on heaven, and there beheld a sad
And wondrous sign : the fiery ray-girt sun
Passed back in strange disorder to his right.

Diviners —

Good my liege, it is no marvel if the forms of waking thought,
Care, and sight, and deed, and converse, all revisit us in sleep :
But we may not pass regardless sight so unforedeemed as this.
Wherefore see lest one thou thinkest stupid as the flocks that graze
Bear a heart with choicest wisdom purified and fortified,
And expel thee from thy kingdom. For the portent of the sun
Shows there is a change impending o'er the people of thy sway.
May the gods avert the omen ! it is near ! the mighty star
From his left to right returning, shows thee clearly as his light
That the Roman people's greatness shall become supreme at last.

A Shepherd describes his First Sight of a Ship.

The monster bulk sweeps on
Loud from the deep, with mighty roar and panting.
It hurls the waves before ; it stirs up whirlpools ;
On, on it bounds ; it dashes back the spray.
Awhile, it seems a bursting tempest cloud ;

Awhile, a rock uprooted by the winds,
 And whirled aloft by hurricane; or masses
 Beaten by concourse of the crashing waves;
 The sea seems battering o'er the wrecks of land;
 Or Triton, from their roots the caves beneath
 Upturning with his trident, flings to heaven
 A rocky mass from out the billowy deep.

LUCILIUS.

[Born B.C. 148, at Suessa, on the Santa Croce mountains; died 103, at Naples. He served under Scipio in Spain; and is said to have been a grand-uncle, if not grandfather, of Pompey the Great. Roman writers proclaim him a satirist of immense vigor and great poetic force, the founder of Roman satiric poetry in its artistic form, and by some regarded as the greatest of all in his own class.]

The Ideal of Life.

VIRTUE, Albinus, is the power to give
 Their due to objects amid which we live;
 What each possesses, faithfully to scan;
 To know the right, the good, the true for man;
 Again to know the wrong, the base, the ill;
 What we should seek, and how we should fulfill;
 Honor and wealth at their true worth to prize;
 Ill men and deeds repudiate, hate, despise;
 Good men and deeds uphold, promote, defend,
 Exalt them, seek their welfare, live their friend;
 To place our country's interests first alone;
 Our parents' next; the third and last, our own.

Debating in Place of Action.

But now from morning till night, work-day and holiday too,
 The whole day just the same, people and Senate alike
 Bustle about in the Forum, and never keep quiet a moment,
 Each singly devoting himself to the self-same study and art, —
 To bandy words with the utmost wariness, fighting with craft,
 Vying in outward politeness, and plotting — with counterfeit airs
 Of being virtuous men — as if each were the foe of the rest.

Græcomania in Rome.

Albucius, rather by the name of Greek
 Than Roman or of Sabine, countryman
 Of the Centurions, Pontius and Tritannius,
 Distinguished men, our foremost, standard-bearers,
 You would be called. As pretor of Athens, then,
 Greek as you wish, when you approach, I hail you;

"Chære," I say, "O Titus." And my lictors,
 My escort, all my staff, repeat with me,
 "Chære, O Titus." Then from hence, Albucius,
 You are my private and my public foe.

The Superstitious Man.

The hobgoblins and bogies set up from Faunus and Numa Pompilius,
 He trembles before them, there's nothing he does not credit them with;

As babies imagine all figures of bronze are alive and are men,
 So such persons believe that those figments are true, and that souls
 Indwell in these statues of bronze, — painters' blocks, nothing true, all a fable.

VARRO.

[The most learned and one of the most voluminous writers of Rome; he credits himself with writing 400 books. Born B.C. 116, and deeply studied in Roman antiquities and Greek philosophy, he entered public life, held high naval command against the pirates and Mithradates, was Pompey's legate in Spain, and held to his side at Pharsalia. Pardonèd by Cæsar and employed in arranging the great public library, he lived in retirement, but was proscribed by the second triumvirate; his life was spared, however, and he died B.C. 28 under Augustus. His "Menippean Satires" formed a model for Petronius, Seneca, Julian, and others.]

From "Marcipor."

All suddenly, about the noon of night,
 When far the sky, bedropt with fervid fires,
 Displayed the starry firmamental dance,
 The racking clouds, with cold and watery veil,
 Closed up the golden hollows of the heaven,
 Spouting on mortals Stygian cataracts.
 The winds, the frantic offspring of the North,
 Burst from the frozen pole, and swept along
 Tiles, boughs, and hurricanes of whelming dust.
 But we, poor trembling shipwrecked men, like storks
 Whose wings the double-pinioned thunderbolt
 Hath scorched, fell prone in terror on the ground.

From "Prometheus Free."

I am become like outer bark, or tops
 Of oaks that in the forest die with drought;
 My blood is drained; my color wan with anguish;
 No mortal hears me; only Desolation,
 That dwells abroad on Scythia's houseless plains.
 My spirit ne'er parleys with sleep-gendered forms;
 No shade of slumber rests upon my eyelids.

TO SAVE A SISTER.

By GEORG EBERS.

(From "The Sisters," a novel of the time of Ptolemy Euergetes, B.C. 164.)

[GEORG MORITZ EBERS: German Egyptologist and novelist; born at Berlin, March 1, 1837. He was educated at Göttingen and Berlin, and lectured for a while at Jena. In 1870 he became professor of Egyptian archaeology at Leipsic, resigning in 1889 on account of ill health. Besides several important works on Egyptology, he has published a series of historical novels treating of ancient Egyptian life, which have enjoyed extraordinary popularity not only in Germany, but in other countries. The best known are: "An Egyptian Princess," "Uarda," "Homo Sum," "The Sisters," "Serapis," "The Bride of the Nile," and "Cleopatra." Also popular are: "In the Fire of the Forge," "The Burgo-master's Wife," and "Gred." Died in 1898.]

THE Greek temple of Serapis, to which the water-carriers belonged, was joined to the Egyptian of Osiris-Apis by a fine paved street for the use of processions; and along this Klea now rapidly proceeded. There was a shorter road to Memphis; but she chose this because the hills of sand on each side of the street bordered by Sphinxes, which had every day to be cleared of the desert drift, hid her from the sight of her companions in the temple; moreover, the best and safest way to the city was by a road starting from a crescent, adorned with busts of philosophers, which lay near the main entrance to the new Apis tombs.

She looked neither at the lion bodies with men's heads which guarded the road, nor at the figures of beasts on the walls inclosing it; nor did she heed the dusky temple slaves of Osiris-Apis, who with large brooms were sweeping the sand from the paved road: for she thought of nothing but Irene and the difficult task that lay before her, and walked swiftly onward with her eyes on the ground.

But she had taken only a few steps when she heard her name called quite near, and looking up in alarm she found herself standing opposite Krates, the little smith, who came close up to her, took hold of her veil, threw it back a little before she could prevent him, and asked: —

"Where are you going, child?"

"Do not keep me back," besought Klea. "You know that Irene, whom you were always so fond of, has been carried off; perhaps I may be able to save her, but if you betray me and they follow me —"

"I will not hinder you," interrupted the old man. "Indeed, if it were not for these swollen feet I would go with you, for I can think of nothing else but the poor dear little thing; but as it is, I shall be glad enough when I am sitting still again in my shop; it is just as if a workman of my own trade lived in each of my big toes, and was dancing round in them with hammer and file and chisel and nails. Very likely you may be lucky enough to find your sister, for a cunning woman succeeds in many things which are too hard for a wise man. Go on, and if they hunt for you, old Krates will not betray you."

He nodded kindly at Klea, and had half turned his back on her when he again looked round and called to her: —

"Wait a minute, my girl: you can do me a little service. I have just fitted a new lock to the door of the Apis tomb over there. It works finely, but the one key I have made for it is not enough: we need four, and you must order them for me from the locksmith Heri, to be sent me day after to-morrow; he lives opposite the gate of Sokari—to the left, next the bridge over the canal—you can't miss it. I hate repeating and copying as much as I like inventing and making new things, an Heri can work from a pattern as well as I can. If it were not for my legs I would give him the commission myself, for one who speaks by the lips of a go-between is often misunderstood or not understood at all."

"I will gladly save you the walk," replied Klea; while the smith sat down on the pedestal of one of the Sphinxes, and opening the leather wallet which hung by his side, shook out the contents. Some files, chisels, and nails fell out into his lap; then the key, and finally a sharp, pointed knife with which Krates had cut out the hollow in the door to insert the lock. Krates touched up the pattern key for the smith in Memphis with a few strokes of the file, and then, muttering thoughtfully and shaking his head doubtfully from side to side, he exclaimed: —

"You must come once more yet to the door with me, for I insist on accurate work from other people, and so I must be stern with my own."

"But I want so much to reach Memphis before dark," besought Klea.

"The whole thing won't take a minute, and if you will give me your arm I shall go twice as fast. There, here are the files, and here is the knife."

"Give it to me," Klea asked. "This blade is sharp and bright, and as soon as I saw it, I felt as if it bid me take it with me. Very likely I may have to come through the desert alone at night."

"Yes," said the smith, "and even the weakest feels stronger when he has a weapon. Hide the knife somewhere about you, my child, only take care not to hurt yourself with it. Now let me take your arm, and on we will go — but not quite so fast."

Klea led the smith to the door he indicated, and saw with admiration how unfailing the bolt sprang forward when one half of the door closed upon the other, and how easily the key pushed it back again; then, after conducting Krates back to the Sphinx near which she had met him, she went on her way at her quickest pace, for the sun was already very low, and it seemed scarcely possible to reach Memphis before it should set.

As she approached a tavern where soldiers and low people were accustomed to resort, she was met by a drunken slave. She went on and passed him without any fear, for the knife in her girdle, and on which she kept her hand, kept up her courage, and she felt as if she had thus acquired a third hand, which was more powerful and less timid than her own. A company of soldiers had encamped in front of the tavern, and the wine of Khakem, which was grown close by, on the eastern declivity of the Libyan range, had an excellent savor. The men were in capital spirits, for at noon to-day — after they had been quartered here for months as guards of the tombs of Apis and of the temples of the Necropolis — a commanding officer of the Diadoches had arrived at Memphis, who had ordered them to break up at once, and to withdraw into the capital before nightfall. They were not to be relieved by other mercenaries till the next morning.

All this Klea learned from a messenger from the Egyptian temple in the Necropolis, who recognized her, and who was going to Memphis, commissioned by the priests of Osiris-Apis and Sokari to convey a petition to the king, praying that fresh troops might be promptly sent to replace those now withdrawn.

For some time she went on side by side with this messenger, but soon she found that she could not keep up with his hurried pace, and had to fall behind. In front of another tavern sat the officers of the troops, whose noisy mirth she had heard as she passed the former one; they were sitting over their wine and looking on at the dancing of two Egyptian girls, who screeched like cackling hens over their mad leaps, and who so effectually riveted the attention of the spectators, who were beating time for them by clapping their hands, that Klea, accelerating her step, was able to slip unobserved past the wild crew. All these scenes, nay, everything she met with on the high-road, scared the girl, who was accustomed to the silence and the solemn life of the temple of Serapis, and she therefore struck into a side path that probably also led to the city, which she could already see lying before her with its pylons, its citadel, and its houses veiled in evening mist. In a quarter of an hour at most she would have crossed the desert, and reach the fertile meadow land, whose emerald hue grew darker and darker every moment. The sun was already sinking to rest behind the Libyan range, and soon after, for twilight is short in Egypt, she was wrapped in the darkness of night. The west wind, which had begun to blow even at noon, now rose higher, and seemed to pursue her with its hot breath and the clouds of sand it carried with it from the desert.

She must certainly be approaching water, for she heard the deep boom of the bittern in the reeds, and fancied she breathed a moister air. A few steps more, and her foot sank in mud; and she now saw that she was standing on the edge of a wide ditch in which tall papyrus plants were growing. The side path she had struck into ended at this plantation, and there was nothing to be done but to turn about and continue her walk against the wind and with the sand blowing in her face.

The light from the drinking-booth showed her the direction she must follow, for though the moon was up, it is true, black clouds swept across it, covering it and the smaller lights of heaven for many minutes at a time. Still she felt no fatigue, but the shouts of the men and the loud cries of the women that rang out from the tavern filled her with alarm and disgust. She made a wide circuit round the hostelry, wading through the sand hillocks and tearing her dress on the thorns and thistles that had boldly struck deep root in the desert, and had grown up there like the squalid brats in the hovel of a beggar. But still, as she hurried on by the high-road, the hideous laughter and the crowing mirth of the dancing-girls still rang in her mind's ear.

Her blood coursed more swiftly through her veins, her head was on fire, she saw Irene close before her, tangibly distinct—

with flowing hair and fluttering garments, whirling in a wild dance like a Mænad at a Dionysiac festival, flying from one embrace to another, and shouting and shrieking in unbridled folly like the wretched girls she had seen on her way. She was seized with terror for her sister—an unbounded dread such as she had never felt before, and as the wind was now once more behind her, she let herself be driven on by it, lifting her feet in a swift run and flying, as if pursued by the Erinnyes, without once looking round her, and wholly forgetful of the smith's commission, on toward the city along the road planted with trees, which, as she knew, led to the gate of the citadel.

In front of the gate of the king's palace sat a crowd of petitioners, who were accustomed to stay here from early dawn till late at night, until they were called into the palace to receive the answer to the petition they had drawn up. When Klea reached the end of her journey, she was so exhausted and bewildered that she felt the imperative necessity of seeking rest and quiet reflection, so she seated herself among these people, next to a woman from Upper Egypt. But hardly had she taken her place by her with a silent greeting, when her talkative neighbor began to relate with particular minuteness why she had come to Memphis, and how certain unjust judges had conspired with her bad husband to trick her—for men were always ready to join against a woman—and to deprive her of everything which had been secured to her and her children by her marriage contract. For two months now, she said, she had been waiting early and late before the sublime gate, and was consuming her last ready cash in the city where living was so dear; but it was all one to her, and at a pinch she would sell even her gold ornaments, for sooner or later her cause must come before the king, and then the wicked villain and his accomplices would be taught what was just.

Klea heard but little of this harangue; a feeling had come over her like that of a person who is having water poured again and again on the top of his head. Presently her neighbor observed that the newcomer was not listening at all to her complainings; she slapped her shoulder with her hand, and said:—

“You seem to think of nothing but your own concerns; and I dare say they are not of such a nature as that you should relate them to any one else; so far as mine are concerned, the more they are discussed the better."

The tone in which these remarks were made was so dry, and at the same time so sharp, that it hurt Klea, and she rose hastily to go closer to the gate. Her neighbor threw a cross word after her; but she did not heed it, and drawing her veil closer over her face, she went through the gate of the palace into a vast courtyard, brightly lighted up by cressets and torches, and crowded with foot-soldiers and mounted guards.

The sentry at the gate perhaps had not observed her, or perhaps had let her pass unchallenged from her dignified and erect gait, and the numerous armed men through whom she now made her way seemed to be so much occupied with their own affairs, that no one bestowed any notice on her. In a narrow alley, which led to a second court and was lighted by lanterns, one of the body-guard known as Philobasilistes, a haughty young fellow in yellow riding-boots and a shirt of mail over his red tunic, came riding toward her on his tall horse, and noticing her, he tried to squeeze her between his charger and the wall, and put out his hand to raise her veil; but Klea slipped aside, and put up her hands to protect herself from the horse's head, which was almost touching her.

The cavalier, enjoying her alarm, called out:—

"Only stand still—he is not vicious."

"Which, you or your horse?" asked Klea, with such a solemn tone in her deep voice that for an instant the young guardsman lost his self-possession, and this gave her time to go farther from the horse. But the girl's sharp retort had annoyed the conceited young fellow, and not having time to follow her himself, he called out in a tone of encouragement to a party of mercenaries from Cyprus, whom the frightened girl was trying to pass:—

"Look under this girl's veil, comrades, and if she is as pretty as she is well-grown, I wish you joy of your prize."

He laughed as he pressed his knees against the flanks of his bay and trotted slowly away, while the Cypriotes gave Klea ample time to reach the second court, which was more brightly lighted even than the first, that they might there surround her with insolent importunity.

The helpless and persecuted girl felt the blood run cold in her veins, and for a few minutes she could see nothing but a bewildering confusion of flashing eyes and weapons, of beards and hands, could hear nothing but words and sounds, of which she understood and felt only that they were revolting and horrible, and threatened her with death and ruin. She had crossed her arms over her bosom, but now she raised her hands to hide her face, for she felt a strong hand snatch away the veil that covered her head. This insolent proceeding turned her numb horror to indignant rage, and, fixing her sparkling eyes on her bearded opponents, she exclaimed : —

“Shame upon you, who in the king’s own house fall like wolves on a defenseless woman, and in a peaceful spot snatch the veil from a young girl’s head. Your mothers would blush for you, and your sisters cry shame on you — as I do now !”

Astonished at Klea’s distinguished beauty, startled at the angry glare in her eyes, and the deep chest-tones of her voice, which trembled with excitement, the Cypriotes drew back, while the same audacious rascal that had pulled away her veil came closer to her, and cried : —

“Who would make such a noise about a rubbishy veil ! If you will be my sweetheart, I will buy you a new one, and many things besides.”

At the same time he tried to throw his arm round her ; but at his touch Klea felt the blood leave her cheeks and mount to her bloodshot eyes, and at that instant her hand, guided by some uncontrollable inward impulse, grasped the handle of the knife which Krates had lent her ; she raised it high in the air, though with an unsteady arm, exclaiming : —

“Let me go or, by Serapis whom I serve, I will strike you to the heart !”

The soldier to whom this threat was addressed was not the man to be intimidated by a blade of cold iron in a woman’s hand : with a quick movement he seized her wrist in order to disarm her ; but although Klea was forced to drop the knife, she struggled with him to free herself from his clutch, and this contest between a man and a woman, who seemed to be of superior rank to that indicated by her very simple dress, seemed to most of the Cypriotes so undignified, so much out of place within the walls of a palace, that they pulled their comrade back from Klea, while others on the contrary came to the assistance of the bully, who defended himself stoutly. And in the midst of the fray, which was conducted with no small noise, stood Klea with flying breath. Her antagonist, though flung to the ground, still held her wrist with his left hand, while he defended himself against his comrades with the right, and she tried with all her force and cunning to withdraw it; for at the very height of her excitement and danger she felt as if a sudden gust of wind had swept her spirit clear of all confusion, and she was again able to contemplate her position calmly and resolutely.

If only her hand were free, she might perhaps be able to take advantage of the struggle between her foes, and to force her way out between their ranks.

Twice, thrice, four times, she tried to wrench her hand with a sudden jerk through the fingers that grasped it; but each time in vain. Suddenly, from the man at her feet there broke a loud, long-drawn cry of pain which reëchoed from the high walls of the court, and at the same time she felt the fingers of her antagonist gradually and slowly slip from her arm like the straps of a sandal carefully lifted by the surgeon from a broken ankle.

"It is all over with him!" exclaimed the eldest of the Cypriotes. "A man never calls out like that but once in his life! True enough—the dagger is sticking here just under the ninth rib! This is mad work! That is your doing again, Lykos, you savage wolf!"

"He bit deep into my finger in the struggle —"

"And you are for ever tearing each other to pieces for the sake of the women," interrupted the elder, not listening to the other's excuses. "Well, I was no better than you in my time, and nothing can alter it! You had better be off now, for if the Epistrategist learns we have fallen to stabbing each other again —"

The Cypriote had not ceased speaking, and his countrymen were in the very act of raising the body of their comrade, when a division of the civic watch rushed into the court in close order and through the passage near which the fight for the girl had arisen, thus stopping the way against those who were about to escape, since all who wished to get out of the court into the open street must pass through the doorway into which Klea had been forced by the horseman. Every other exit from this second court of the citadel led into the strictly guarded gardens and buildings of the palace itself.

The noisy strife round Klea, and the cry of the wounded man, had attracted the watch; the Cypriotes and the maiden soon found themselves surrounded, and they were conducted through a narrow side passage into the courtyard of the prison.

After a short inquiry, the men who had been taken were allowed to return under an escort to their own phalanx, and Klea gladly followed the commander of the watch to a less brilliantly illuminated part of the prison yard, for in him she had recognized at once Serapion's brother, Glaucus, and he in her the daughter of the man who had done and suffered so much for his father's sake; besides, they had often exchanged greetings and a few words in the temple of Serapis.

"All that is in my power," said Glaucus, — a man somewhat taller but not so broadly built as his brother, — when he had read the recluse's note and when Klea had answered a number of questions, "all that is in my power I will gladly do for you and your sister, for I do not forget all that I owe to your father; still I cannot but regret that you have incurred such risk, for it is always hazardous for a pretty young girl to venture into this palace at a late hour, and particularly just now, for the courts are swarming not only with Philometor's fighting men, but with those of his brother, who have come here for their sovereign's birthday festival. The people have been liberally entertained, and the seldier who has been sacrificing to Dionysus seizes the gifts of Eros and Aphrodite wherever he may find them. I will at once take charge of my brother's letter to the Roman, Publius Cornelius Scipio, but when you have received his answer you will do well to let yourself be escorted to my wife or my sister, who both live in the city, and to remain till to-morrow morning with one or the other. Here you cannot remain a minute unmolested while I am away — Where now — Aye! The only safe shelter I can offer you is the prison down there; the room where they lock up the subaltern officers when they have committed any offense is quite unoccupied, and I will conduct you thither. It is always kept clean, and there is a bench in it too."

Klea followed her friend, who, as his hasty demeanor plainly showed, had been interrupted in important business. In a few steps they reached the prison; she begged Glaucus to bring her the Roman's answer as quickly as possible, declared herself quite ready to remain in the dark, — since she perceived that the light of a lamp might betray her, and she was not afraid of the dark, — and suffered herself to be locked in.

As she heard the iron bolt creak in its brass socket a shiver ran through her, and although the room in which she found herself was neither worse nor smaller than that in which she and her sister lived in the temple, still it oppressed her, and she even felt as if an indescribable something hindered her breathing, as she said to herself that she was locked in and no longer free to come and go. A dim light penetrated into her prison through the single barred window that opened on to the court, and she could see a little bench of palm-branches, on which she sat down to seek the repose she so sorely needed. All sense of discomfort gradually vanished before the new feeling of rest and refreshment, and pleasant hopes and anticipations were just beginning to mingle themselves with the remembrance of the horrors she had just experienced, when suddenly there was a stir and a bustle just in front of the prison—and she could hear, outside, the clatter of harness and words of command. She rose from her seat and saw that about twenty horsemen, whose golden helmets and armor reflected the light of the lanterns, cleared the wide court by driving the men before them, as the flames drive the game from a fired hedge, and by forcing them into a second court from which again they proceeded to expel them. At least Klea could hear them shouting “In the king’s name” there as they had before done close to her. Presently the horsemen returned and placed themselves, ten and ten, as guards at each of the passages leading into the court. It was not without interest that Klea looked on at this scene, which was perfectly new to her; and when one of the fine horses, dazzled by the light of the lanterns, turned restive and shied, leaping and rearing and threatening his rider with a fall,—when the horseman checked and soothed it, and brought it to a standstill,—the Macedonian warrior was transfigured in her eyes to Publius, who no doubt could manage a horse no less well than this man.

No sooner was the court completely cleared of men by the mounted guard than a new incident claimed Klea’s attention. First she heard footsteps in the room adjoining her prison, then bright streaks of light fell through the cracks of the slight partition which divided her place of retreat from the other room, then the two window-openings close to hers were closed with heavy shutters, then seats or benches were dragged about and various objects were laid upon a table, and finally the door of the adjoining room was thrown open and slammed to again so violently that the door which closed hers and the bench near which she was standing trembled and jarred.

At the same moment a deep, sonorous voice called out with a loud and hearty shout of laughter:—

"A mirror—give me a mirror, Eulæus. By heaven! I do not look much like prison fare—more like a man in whose strong brain there is no lack of deep schemes, who can throttle his antagonist with a grip of his fist, and who is prompt to avail himself of all the spoil that comes in his way, so that he may compress the pleasures of a whole day into every hour, and enjoy them to the utmost! As surely as my name is Euergetes my uncle Antiochus was right in liking to mix among the populace. The splendid puppets who surround us kings, and cover every portion of their own bodies in wrappings and swaddling bands, also stifle the expression of every genuine sentiment; and it is enough to turn our brain to reflect that, if we would not be deceived, every word that we hear—and, oh dear! how many words we must needs hear—must be pondered in our minds. Now, the mob, on the contrary—who think themselves beautifully dressed in a threadbare cloth hanging round their brown loins—are far better off. If one of them says to another of his own class—a naked wretch who wears about him everything he happens to possess—that he is a dog, he answers with a blow of his fist in the other's face, and what can be plainer than that! If on the other hand he tells him he is a splendid fellow, he believes it without reservation, and has a perfect right to believe it.

"Did you see how that stunted little fellow with a snub nose and bandy legs, who is as broad as he is long, showed all his teeth in a delighted grin when I praised his steady hand? He laughs like a hyena, and every respectable father of a family looks on the fellow as a god-forsaken monster; but the immortals must think him worth something to have given him such magnificent grinders in his ugly mouth, and to have preserved him mercifully for fifty years—for that is about the rascal's age. If that fellow's dagger breaks, he can kill his victim with those teeth, as a fox does a duck, or smash his bones with his fist."

"But, my lord," replied Eulæus, dryly and with a certain matter-of-fact gravity, to King Euergetes—for he it was who had come with him into the room adjoining Klea's retreat, "the dry little Egyptian with the thin straight hair is even more trustworthy and tougher and nimbler than his companion, and, so far, more estimable. One flings himself on his prey with a rush like a block of stone hurled from a roof, but the other, without being seen, strikes his poisoned fang into his flesh like an adder hidden in the sand. The third, on whom I had set great hopes, was beheaded the day before yesterday without my knowledge, but the pair whom you have condescended to inspect with your own eyes are sufficient. They must use neither dagger nor lance, but they will easily achieve their end with slings and hooks and poisoned needles, which leave wounds that resemble the sting of an adder. We may safely depend on these fellows."

Once more Euergetes laughed loudly, and exclaimed:—

"What an elaborate criticism! Exactly as if these bloodhounds were tragic actors, of which one could best produce his effects by fire and pathos, and the other by the subtlety of conception. I call that an unprejudiced judgment. And why should not a man be great even as a murderer? From what hangman's noose did you drag out the neck of one, and from what headsman's block did you rescue the other, when you found them?"

"It is a lucky hour in which we first see something new to us, and, by Heracles! I never before in the whole course of my life saw such villains as these. I do not regret having gone to see them and talked to them as if I were their equal. Now, take this torn coat off me, and help me to undress. Before I go to the feast I will take a hasty plunge in my bath, for I twitch in every limb, I feel as if I had got dirty in their company.

"There lie my clothes and my sandals; strap them on for me, and tell me as you do it how you lured the Roman into the toils."

Klea could hear every word of this frightful conversation, and clasped her hand over her brow with a shudder, for she found it difficult to believe in the reality of the hideous images that it brought before her mind. Was she awake or was she a prey to some horrid dream?

She hardly knew, and, indeed, she scarcely understood half of all she heard till the Roman's name was mentioned. She felt as if the point of a thin, keen knife was being driven obliquely through her brain from right to left, as it now flashed through her mind that it was against him, against Publius, that the wild beasts, disguised in human form, were directed by Eukaus, and face to face with this—the most hideous, the most incredible of horrors—she suddenly recovered the full use of her senses. She softly slipped close to that rift in the partition through which the broadest beam of light fell into the room, put her ear close to it, and drank in, with fearful attention, word for word the report made by the eunuch to his iniquitous superior, who frequently interrupted him with remarks, words of approval, or a short laugh — drank them in, as a man perishing in the desert drinks the loathsome waters of a salt pool.

And what she heard was indeed well fitted to deprive her of her senses, but the more definite the facts to which the words referred that she could overhear, the more keenly she listened, and the more resolutely she collected her thoughts. Eulæus had used her own name to induce the Roman to keep an assignation at midnight in the desert close to the Apis tombs. He repeated the words that he had written to this effect on a tile, and which requested Publius to come quite alone to the spot indicated, since she dare not speak with him in the temple. Finally, he was invited to write his answer on the other side of the square of clay. As Klea heard these words, put into her own mouth by a villain, she could have sobbed aloud heartily with anguish, shame, and rage; but the point now was to keep her ears wide open, for Euergetes asked his odious tool, “And what was the Roman’s answer?”

Eulæus must have handed the tile to the king, for he laughed loudly again, and cried out: —

“So he will walk into the trap — will arrive by half an hour after midnight at the latest, and greets Klea from her sister Irene. He carries on love-making and abduction wholesale, and buys water-bearers by the pair, like doves in the market or sandals in a shoemaker’s stall. Only see how the simpleton writes Greek; in these few words there are two mistakes, two regular schoolboy’s blunders.

“The fellow must have had a very pleasant day of it, since he must have been reckoning on a not unsuccessful evening — but the gods have an ugly habit of clenching the hand with which they have long caressed their favorites, and striking him with their fist.

“Amalthea’s horn has been poured out on him to-day; first he snapped up, under my very nose, my little Hebe, the Irene of Irene, whom I hope to-morrow to inherit from him; then he got the gift of my best Cyrenæan horses, and at the same time the flattering assurance of my valuable friendship; then he had audience of my fair sister — and it goes more to the heart of a republican than you would believe when crowned heads are graciously disposed toward him; finally the sister of his pretty sweetheart invites him to an assignation, and she, if you and Zoë speak the truth, is a beauty in the grand style. Now these are really too many good things for one inhabitant of this most stingily provided world; and in one single day, too, which, once begun, is so soon ended; and justice requires that we should lend a helping hand to destiny, and cut off the head of this poppy that aspires to rise above its brethren; the thousands who have less good fortune than he would otherwise have great cause to complain of neglect."

"I am happy to see you in such good humor," said Eulæus.

"My humor is as may be," interrupted the king. "I believe I am only whistling a merry tune to keep up my spirits in the dark. If I were on more familiar terms with what other men call fear, I should have ample reason to be afraid; for in the quail-flight we have gone in for I have wagered a crown — aye, and more than that even. To-morrow only will decide whether the game is lost or won, but I know already to-day that I would rather see my enterprise against Philometor fail, with all my hopes of the double crown, than our plot against the life of the Roman; for I was a man before I was a king, and a man I should remain, if my throne, which now indeed stands on only two legs, were to crash under my weight.

"My sovereign dignity is but a robe, though the costliest, to be sure, of all garments. If forgiveness were any part of my nature, I might easily forgive the man who should soil or injure that — but he who comes too near to Energetes the man, who dares to touch this body and the spirit it contains, or to cross it in its desires and purposes — him I will crush unhesitatingly to the earth, I will see him torn in pieces. Sentence is passed on the Roman, and if your ruffians do their duty, and if the gods accept the holocaust that I had slain before them at sunset for the success of my project, in a couple of hours Publius Cornelius Scipio will have bled to death.

"He is in a position to laugh at me — as a man — but I, therefore, — as a man — have the right, and — as a king — have the power, to make sure that that laugh shall be his last. If I could murder Rome as I can him how glad should I be! for Rome alone hinders me from being the greatest of all the great kings of our time; and yet I shall rejoice to-morrow when they tell me 'Publius Cornelius Scipio has been torn by wild beasts, and his body is so mutilated that his own mother could not recognize it' more than if a messenger were to bring me the news that Carthage had broken the power of Rome."

Euergetes had spoken the last words in a voice that sounded like the roll of thunder as it growls in a rapidly approaching storm, louder, deeper, and more furious each instant. When at last he was silent, Eulæus said:—

“The immortals, my lord, will not deny you this happiness. The brave fellows whom you condescended to see and to talk to strike as certainly as the bolt of our father Zeus, and as we have learned from the Roman’s horse-keeper where he has hidden Irene, she will no more elude your grasp than the crowns of Upper and Lower Egypt. Now, allow me to put on your mantle, and then to call the bodyguard, that they may escort you as you return to your residence.”

“One thing more,” cried the king, detaining Eulæus. “There are always troops by the Tombs of Apis, placed there to guard the sacred places; may not they prove a hindrance to your friends?”

“I have withdrawn all the soldiers and armed guards to Memphis, down to the last man,” replied Eulæus, “and quartered them within the White Wall. Early to-morrow, before you proceed to business, they will be replaced by a stronger division, so that they may not prove a reënforcement to your brother’s troops here, if things come to fighting.”

“I shall know how to reward your foresight,” said Euergetes as Eulæus quitted the room.

Again Klea heard a door open, and the sound of many hoofs on the pavement of the courtyard, and when she went, all trembling, up to the window, she saw Euergetes himself, and the powerfully knit horse that was led in for him. The tyrant twisted his hand in the mane of the restless and pawing steed, and Klea thought that the monstrous mass could never mount on to the horse’s back without the aid of many men; but she was mistaken, for with a mighty spring the giant flung himself high in the air and on to the horse, and then, guiding his panting steed by the pressure of his knees alone, he bounded out of the prison yard surrounded by his splendid train.

For some minutes the courtyard remained empty, then a man hurriedly crossed it, unlocked the door of the room where Klea was, and informed her that he was a subaltern under Glaucus, and had brought her a message from him.

“My lord,” said the veteran soldier to the girl, “bid me greet you, and say that he found neither the Roman, Publius Scipio, nor his friend the Corinthian at home. He is prevented from coming to you himself; he has his hands full of business, for soldiers in the service of both the kings are quartered within the White Wall, and all sorts of squabbles break out between them. Still, you cannot remain in this room, for it will shortly be occupied by a party of young officers who began the fray. Glaucus proposes for your choice that you should either allow me to conduct you to his wife or return to the temple to which you are attached. In the latter case a chariot shall convey you as far as the second tavern in Khakem on the borders of the desert—for the city is full of drunken soldiery. There you may probably find an escort, if you explain to the host who you are. But the chariot must be back again in less than an hour, for it is one of the king's, and when the banquet is over there may be a scarcity of chariots."

"Yes—I will go back to the place I came from," said Klea eagerly, interrupting the messenger. "Take me at once to the chariot."

"Follow me, then," said the old man.

"But I have no veil," observed Klea, "and have only this thin robe on. Rough soldiers snatched my wrapper from my face, and my cloak from off my shoulders."

"I will bring you the captain's cloak which is lying here in the orderly's room, and his traveling hat too; that will hide your face with its broad flap. You are so tall that you might be taken for a man, and that is well, for a woman leaving the palace at this hour would hardly pass unmolested. A slave shall fetch the things from your temple to-morrow. I may inform you that my master ordered me to take as much care of you as if you were his own daughter. And he told me too—and I had almost forgotten it—to tell you that your sister was carried off by the Roman, and not by that other dangerous man—you would know whom he meant. Now please wait till I return; I shall not be gone long."

In a few minutes the guard returned with a large cloak, in which he wrapped Klea, and a broad-brimmed traveling hat which she pressed on her head; then led her to the quarter of the palace where the king's stables were. She kept close to the officer, and was soon seated on a chariot, and then conducted by the driver—who took her for a young Macedonian noble tempted out at night by an assignation—as far as the second tavern on the road back to the Serapeum.

BRAGGART AND PARASITE.

By TERENCE.

(From "The Eunuch.")

[P. TERENTIUS AFER was a Carthaginian, born probably B.C. 185; brought to Rome early, it is said, as a slave; was emancipated, became a protégé of the younger Scipio, exhibited his first play at nineteen, wrote five others in the next six years, and died B.C. 159 at twenty-six, one of the world's great classics from the purity and delicacy of his art, the universality of his types of character, the charm of his grace and humane irony. His work was largely a close imitation of the Greek Menander, and he combined scenes from other Greek originals; but his own contribution, like Virgil's to the epic, was still greater than his borrowing. The names of his plays are: "Andria" (The Maid of Andros), "Eunuchus" (The Eunuch), "Heautontimorumenos" (The Self-Tormentor), "Adelphi" (The Brothers), "Hecyra" (The Mother-in-Law), "Phormio."]

CHIEF DRAMATIS PERSONÆ: GNATHO, a parasite; THRASO, a military officer, braggart, and coxcomb; LACHES, an old Athenian gentleman, with two sons, PHÆDRIA and CHÆREA, the former having a servant PARMENO; CHREMES, an Athenian youth; THAIS, a courtesan admired by Thraso, and one of the two heroines of the piece, the other being PAMPHILA, sister of Chremes, who is second only to Mrs. Grundy as a curious stage heroine, for the latter never appears at all, while Pamphila appears but once, and never opens her mouth. She is a slave girl, originally of good family, who has been kidnapped when a baby and brought up by Thais' courtesan mother with her own daughter in Rhodes; Thais goes to Athens, her mother dies, and Pamphila is bought by Thraso, who intends giving her to Thais at Athens as a present, not knowing their old relations. He finds Thais in liaison with Phædria, and will not give her the girl till she has discarded her new lover; she, finding who the girl is and having discovered from Chremes' talk that she must be his sister, is determined to get her back, but not to give up Phædria, whom she likes much better than Thraso. Finally she induces Phædria to leave Thraso a clear field for two days, promising to throw him over as soon as she has the girl in her possession; he agrees, and sends her a eunuch and a negro girl by Parmeno, while Thraso sends Pamphila by his lickspittle Gnatho. Chærea sees and admires Pamphila; his brother's servant, Parmeno, dresses him in the eunuch's clothes and lets him into the house as her guardian, where he takes full advantage of the situation. Thraso quarrels with Thais, and comes with a train to demand Pamphila back, but cannot get her. Finally Pamphila is recognized by Chremes, and Chærea makes amends by marrying her—the standpoint of Clarissa Harlowe not being intelligible then or usual at any time.

ACT II. — SCENE III.

Enter GNATHO at a distance, leading PAMPHILA.

Gnatho [to himself] — Immortal Gods! how much does one man excel another! What a difference there is between a wise person and a fool! This strongly came into my mind from the following circumstance. As I was coming along to-day, I met a certain person of this place, of my own rank and station, no mean fellow, one who, like myself, had guttled away his paternal estate; I saw him, shabby, dirty, sickly, beset with rags and years; — “What’s the meaning of this garb?” said I; he answered, “Because, wretch that I am, I’ve lost what I possessed: see to what I am reduced,—all my acquaintances and friends forsake me.” On this I felt contempt for him in comparison with myself. “What!” said I, “you pitiful sluggard, have you so managed matters as to have no hope left? Have you lost your wits together with your estate? Don’t you see me, who have risen from the same condition? What a complexion I have, how spruce and well dressed, what portliness of person? I have everything, yet have nothing; and although I possess nothing, still, of nothing am I in want.” “But I,” said he, “unhappily, can neither be a butt nor submit to blows.” “What!” said I, “do you suppose it is managed by those means? You are quite mistaken. Once upon a time, in the early ages, there was a calling for that class: this is a new mode of coney-catching; I, in fact, have been the first to strike into this path. There is a class of men who strive to be the first in everything, but are not; to these I make my court; I do not present myself to them to be laughed at: but I am the first to laugh with them, and at the same time to admire their parts; whatever they say, I commend, if they contradict that selfsame thing, I commend again. Does any one deny? I deny: does he affirm? I affirm: in fine, I have so trained myself as to humor them in everything. This calling is now by far the most productive.”

Parmeno [apart] — A clever fellow, upon my faith! From being fools he makes men mad outright.

Gnatho [to himself, continuing] — While we were thus talking, in the meantime we arrived at the market place, overjoyed, all the confectioners ran at once to meet me; fish-mongers, butchers, cooks, sausage makers, and fishermen, whom, both when my fortunes were flourishing and when they were ruined, I had served, and often serve still: they complimented me, asked me to dinner, and gave me a hearty welcome. When this poor hungry wretch saw that I was in such great esteem, and that I obtained a living so easily, then the fellow began to entreat me that I would allow him to learn this method of me,

I bade him become my follower if he could ; as the disciples of the Philosophers take their names from the Philosophers themselves, so, too, the Parasites ought to be called Gnathonics.

Parmeno [apart to the AUDIENCE] — Do you see the effects of ease and feeding at another's cost?

Gnatho [to himself, continuing] — But why do I delay to take this girl to Thais, and to ask her to come to dinner? [Aside, on seeing PARMENO.] But I see Parmeno, our rival's servant, waiting before the door of Thais with a sorrowful air ; all's safe ; no doubt these people are finding a cold welcome. I'm resolved to have some sport with this knave.

Parmeno [aside] — They fancy that, through this present, Thais is quite their own.

Gnatho [accosting PARMENO] — With his very best wishes Gnatho greets Parmeno, his very good friend. — What are you doing?

Parmeno — I'm standing.

Gnatho — So I perceive. Pray, do you see anything here that don't please you?

Parmeno — Yourself.

Gnatho — I believe you — but anything else, pray?

Parmeno — Why so?

Gnatho — Because you are out of spirits.

Parmeno — Not in the least.

Gnatho — Well, don't be so ; but what think you of this slave? [Pointing to her.]

Parmeno — Really, not amiss.

Gnatho [aside] — I've galled the fellow.

Parmeno [aside, on overhearing him] — How mistaken you are in your notion !

Gnatho — How far do you suppose this gift will prove acceptable to Thais?

Parmeno — It's this you mean to say now, that we are discarded there. Hark you, there are vicissitudes in all things.

Gnatho — For the next six months, Parmeno, I'll set you at ease ; you shan't have to be running to and fro, or sitting up till daylight. Don't I make you happy?

Parmeno — Me? O prodigiously !

Gnatho — That's my way with my friends.

Parmeno — I commend you.

Gnatho — I'm detaining you ; perhaps you were about to go somewhere else.

Parmeno — Nowhere.

Gnatho — In that case, then, lend me your services a little ; let me be introduced to her.

Parmeno — Very well [GNATHO knocks at the door, which immediately opens] ; now the door is open for you [aside] because you are bringing her.

Gnatho [going into the house of THAIS, ironically] — Should you like any one to be called out from here ?

[Goes in with PAMPHILA, and shuts the door.]

ACT III. — SCENE I.

Enter THRASO and GNATHO.

Thraso — Did Thais really return me many thanks ?

Gnatho — Exceeding thanks.

Thraso — Was she delighted, say you ?

Gnatho — Not so much, indeed, at the present itself, as because it was given by you ; really, in right earnest, she does exult at that.

Enter PARMENO unseen, from LACHES' house.

Parmeno [apart] — I've come here to be on the lookout, that when there is an opportunity I may take the presents. But see, here's the Captain.

Thraso — Undoubtedly it is the case with me, that everything I do is a cause for thankfulness.

Gnatho — Upon my faith, I've observed it.

Thraso — The most mighty King, even, always used to give me especial thanks for whatever I did ; but not so to others.

Gnatho — He who has the wit that you have, often by his words appropriates to himself the glory that has been achieved by the labor of others.

Thraso — You've just hit it.

Gnatho — The king, then, kept you in his eye.

Thraso — Just so.

Gnatho — To enjoy your society.

Thraso — True ; he intrusted to me all his army, all his state secrets.

Gnatho — Astonishing !

Thraso — Then, if on any occasion a surfeit of society, or a dislike of business, came upon him, when he was desirous to take some recreation ; just as though — you understand ?

Gnatho — I know ; just as though on occasion he would rid his mind of those anxieties.

Thraso — You have it. Then he used to take me aside as his only boon companion.

Gnatho — Whew ! You are telling of a king of refined taste.

Thraso — Aye, he is a person of that sort ; a man of but very few acquaintanceships.

Gnatho [aside] — Indeed, of none, I fancy, if he's on intimate terms with you.

Thraso — All the people envied me, and attacked me privately. I didn't care one straw. They envied me dreadfully ; but one in particular, whom the King had appointed over the Indian elephants. Once, when he became particularly troublesome, "Prithee, Strato," said I, "are you so fierce because you hold command over the wild beasts?"

Gnatho — Cleverly said, upon my faith, and shrewdly. Astounding ! You did give the fellow a home thrust. What said he ?

Thraso — Dumfounded, instantaneously.

Gnatho — How could he be otherwise ?

Parmeno [apart] — Ye Gods, by our trust in you ! a lost and miserable fellow the one, and the other a scoundrel.

Thraso — Well then, about that matter, Gnatho, the way in which I touched up the Rhodian at a banquet — did I never tell you ?

Gnatho — Never ; but pray, do tell me. [Aside.] I've heard it more than a thousand times already.

Thraso — There was in my company at a banquet, this young man of Rhodes, whom I'm speaking of. By chance I had a mistress there ; he began to toy with her, and to annoy me. "What are you doing, sir impudence ?" said I to the fellow ; "a hare yourself, and looking out for game ?"

Gnatho [pretending to laugh very heartily] — Ha, ha, ha !

Thraso — What's the matter ?

Gnatho — How apt, how smart, how clever ; nothing could be more excellent. Prithee, was this a saying of yours ? I fancied it was an old one.

Thraso — Did you ever hear it before ?

Gnatho — Many a time ; and it is mentioned among the first-rate ones.

Thraso — It's my own.

Gnatho — I'm sorry though that it was said to a thoughtless young man, and one of respectability.

Parmeno [apart] — May the Gods confound you !

Gnatho — Pray, what did he do ?

Thraso — Quite disconcerted. All who were present were dying with laughter ; in short, they were all quite afraid of me.

Gnatho — Not without reason.

Thraso — But hark you, had I best clear myself of this to Thais, as to her suspicion that I'm fond of this girl ?

Gnatho — By no means : on the contrary, rather increase her jealousy.

Thraso — Why so ?

Gnatho — Do you ask me ? Don't you see, if on any occasion she makes mention of Phædria or commends him, to provoke you —

Thraso — I understand.

Gnatho — That such may not be the case, this method is the only remedy. When she speaks of Phædria, do you instantly mention Pamphila. If at any time she says, " Let's invite Phædria to make one," do you say, " Let's ask Pamphila to sing." If she praises his good looks, do you, on the other hand, praise hers. In short, do you return like for like, which will mortify her.

Thraso — If, indeed, she loved me, this might be of some use, Gnatho.

Gnatho — Since she is impatient for and loves that which you give her, she already loves you ; as it is, then, it is an easy matter for her to feel vexed. She will be always afraid lest the presents which she herself is now getting, you may on some occasion be taking elsewhere.

Thraso — Well said ; that never came into my mind.

Gnatho — Nonsense. You never thought about it ; else how much more readily would you yourself have hit upon it, Thraso !

SCENE II.

Enter THAIS from her house, attended by PYTHIAS.

Thais [as she comes out] — I thought I just now heard the Captain's voice. And look, here he is. Welcome, my dear Thraso.

Thraso — O my Thais, my sweet one, how are you? How much do you love me in return for that music girl?

Parmeno [apart] — How polite! What a beginning he has made on meeting her!

Thais — Very much, as you deserve.

Gnatho — Let's go to dinner then. [To THRASO.] What do you stand here for?

Parmeno [apart] — Then there's the other one; you would declare that he was born for his belly's sake.

Thraso — When you please; I shan't delay.

Parmeno [apart] — I'll accost them, and pretend as though I had just come out. [He comes forward.] Are you going anywhere, Thais?

Thais — Ha! Parmeno; well done; just going out for the day.

Parmeno — Where!

Thais [aside, pointing at THRASO] — Why! don't you see him?

Parmeno [aside] — I see him, and I'm sorry for it. [Aloud.] Phædria's presents are ready for you when you please.

Thraso [impatiently] — Why are we to stand here? Why don't we be off?

Parmeno [to THRASO] — Troth now, pray, do let us, with your leave, present to her the things we intend, and accost and speak to her.

Thraso [ironically] — Very fine presents, I suppose, or at least equal to mine.

Parmeno — The fact will prove itself. [Goes to the door of LACHES' house and calls.] Ho there! bid those people come out of doors at once, as I ordered.

Enter from the house a BLACK GIRL.

Parmeno — Do you step forward this way. [To THAIS.] She comes all the way from Æthiopia.

Thraso [contemptuously] — Here are some three minæ in value.

Gnatho — Hardly so much.

Parmeno — Where are you, Dorus? Step this way.

Enter CILAREA from the house dressed like the EUNUCH.

Parmeno — There's a eunuch for you — of what a genteel appearance! of what a prime age!

Thais — God bless me, he's handsome.

Parmeno — What say you, Gnatho? Do you see anything to find fault with? And what say you, Thraso? [Aside.] They hold their tongues; they praise him sufficiently thereby. [To THAIS.] Make trial of him in literature, try him in exercises and in music; I'll warrant him well skilled in what it becomes a gentleman to know.

Thraso — If there were no women present, I —

Parmeno — And he who has sent these things makes no request that you will live for him alone, and that for his own sake others may be excluded; he neither tells of battles nor shows his scars, nor does he restrict you as [looking at THRASO] a certain person does; but when it is not inconvenient, whenever you think fit, whenever you have the time, he is satisfied to be admitted.

Thraso [to GNATHO, contemptuously] — It appears that this is the servant of some beggarly, wretched master.

Gnatho — Why, faith, no person, I'm quite sure of that, could possibly put up with him, who had the means to get another.

Parmeno — You hold your tongue — a fellow whom I consider beneath all men of the very lowest grade: for when you can bring yourself to flatter that fellow [pointing at THRASO], I do believe you could pick your victuals off the funeral pyre.

Thraso — Are we to go now?

Thais — I'll take these indoors first [pointing to CILAREA and the ÆTHIOPIAN], and at the same time I'll order what I wish; after that I'll return immediately.

[Goes into the house with PYTHIAS, CILAREA, and the SLAVE.

Thraso [to GNATHO] — I shall be off. Do you wait for her.

Parmeno — It is not a proper thing for a general to be walking in the street with a mistress.

Thraso — Why should I use many words with you? You are the very ape of your master. [Exit PARMENO.]

Gnatho [laughing] — Ha, ha, ha!

Thraso — What are you laughing at?

Gnatho — At what you were mentioning just now; that saying, too, about the Rhodian, recurred to my mind. But Thais is coming out.

Thraso — You go before; take care that everything is ready at home.

Gnatho — Very well. [Exit.]

ACT IV. — SCENE VIII.

Enter THRASO, followed by GNATHO, SANGA, and other ATTENDANTS.

Thraso — Am I to submit, Gnatho, to such a glaring affront as this being put upon me? I'd die sooner. Simalio, Donax, Syrisceus, follow me! First, I'll storm the house.

Gnatho — Quite right.

Thraso — I'll carry off the girl.

Gnatho — Very good.

Thraso — I'll give her own self a mauling.

Gnatho — Very proper.

Thraso [arranging the men] — Advance hither to the main body, Donax, with your crowbar; you, Simalio, to the left wing; you, Syrisceus, to the right. Bring up the rest; where's the centurion Sanga, and his maniple of rogues?

Sanga [coming forward] — See, here he is.

Thraso — What, you booby, do you think of fighting with a dishelout, to be bringing that here?

Sanga — What, I? I knew the valor of the general, and the prowess of the soldiers; and that this could not possibly go on without bloodshed; how was I to wipe the wounds?

Thraso — Where are the others?

Sanga — Plague on you, what others? Sannio is the only one left on guard at home.

Thraso [to GNATHO] — Do you draw up your men in battle order; I'll be behind the second rank; from that position I'll give the word to all.

[Takes his place behind the second rank

Gnatho [aside] — That's showing prudence ; as soon as he has drawn them up, he secures a retreat for himself.

Thraso [pointing to the arrangements] — This is just the way Pyrrhus used to proceed.

CHREMES and THAIS appear above at a window.

Chremes — Do you see, Thais, what plan he is upon ? Assuredly, that advice of mine about closing the door was good.

Thais — He who now seems to you to be a hero, is in reality a mere vapor ; don't be alarmed.

Thraso [to GNATHO] — What seems best to you ?

Gnatho — I could very much like a sling to be given you just now, that you might pelt them from here on the sly at a distance ; they would be taking to flight.

Thraso [to GNATHO] — But look [pointing], I see Thais there herself.

Gnatho — How soon are we to fall to ?

Thraso — Hold [holding him back] ; it behooves a prudent person to make trial of everything before arms. How do you know but that she may do what I bid her without compulsion ?

Gnatho — Ye Gods, by our trust in you, what a thing it is to be wise ! I never come near you but what I go away from you the wiser.

Thraso — Thais, in the first place, answer me this. When I presented you that girl, did you not say that you would give yourself up to me alone for some days to come ?

Thais — Well, what then ?

Thraso — Do you ask the question ? You, who have been and brought your lover under my very eyes ? What business had you with him ? With him, too, you clandestinely betook yourself away from me.

Thais — I chose to do so.

Thraso — Then give me back Pamphila ; unless you had rather she were taken away by force.

Chremes — Give her back to you, or you lay hands upon her ? Of all the — Gnatho — Ha ! What are you about ? Hold your tongue.

Thraso — What do you mean ? Am I not to touch my own ?

Chremes — Your own, indeed, you gallows bird !

Gnatho [to CHREMES] — Have a care, if you please. You don't know what kind of man you are abusing now.

Chremes [to GNATHO] — Won't you be off from here? Do you know how matters stand with you? If you cause any disturbance here to-day, I'll make you remember the place and day, and me too, for the rest of your life.

Gnatho — I pity you, who are making so great a man as this your enemy.

Chremes — I'll break your head this instant if you are not off.

Gnatho — Do you really say so, puppy? Is it that you are at?

Thraso [to CHREMES] — What fellow are you? What do you mean? What business have you with her?

Chremes — I'll let you know: in the first place, I assert that she is a freeborn woman.

Thraso [starting] — Ha!

Chremes — A citizen of Attica.

Thraso — Whew!

Chremes — My own sister.

Thraso — Brazen face!

Chremes — Now, therefore, Captain, I give you warning; don't you use any violence towards her. Thais, I'm going to Sophrona, the nurse, that I may bring her here and show her these tokens.

Thraso — What! Are you to prevent me from touching what's my own?

Chremes — I will prevent it, I tell you.

Gnatho [to THRASO] — Do you hear him? He is convicting himself of theft. Is not that enough for you?

Thraso — Do you say the same, Thais?

Thais — Go, find some one to answer you.

[She and CHREMES go away from the window.]

Thraso [to GNATHO] — What are we to do now?

Gnatho — Why, go back again: she'll soon be with you of her own accord, to entreat forgiveness.

Thraso — Do you think so?

Gnatho — Certainly, yes. I know the disposition of women: when you will they won't; when you won't, they set their hearts upon you of their own inclination.

Thraso — You judge right.

Gnatho — Shall I dismiss the army then?

Thraso — Whenever you like.

Gnatho — Sanga, as befits gallant soldiers, take care in your turn to remember your homes and hearths.

Sanga — My thoughts have been for some time among the saucepans.

Gnatho — You are a worthy fellow.

Thraso [putting himself at their head] — You follow me this way. [Exeunt omnes.]

ACT V.—SCENE VIII.

Enter THRASO and GNATHO.

Gnatho [to THRASO] — Well now? With what hope, or what design, are we come hither? What do you intend to do, Thraso?

Thraso — What, I? To surrender myself to Thais, and do what she bids me.

Gnatho — What is it you say?

Thraso — Why any the less so, than Hercules served Omphale.

Gnatho — The precedent pleases me. [Aside.] I only wish I may see your head stroked down with a slipper; but her door makes a noise.

Thraso — Confusion! Why, what mischief's this? I never saw this person before; why, I wonder, is he rushing out in such a hurry? [They stand aside.]

SCENE IX.

Enter CHÆREA from the house of THAIS, on the other side of the stage.

Chærea [to himself, aloud] — O fellow townsmen, is there any one alive more fortunate than me this day? Not any one, upon my faith: for clearly in me have the Gods manifested all their power, on whom, thus suddenly, so many blessings are bestowed.

Parmeno [apart] — Why is he thus overjoyed?

Chærea [seeing PARMENO, and running up to him] — O my dear Parmeno, the contriver, the beginner, the perfecter of all my delights, do you know what are my transports? Are you aware that my Pamphila has been discovered to be a citizen?

Parmeno — I have heard so.

Chærea — Do you know that she is betrothed to me?

Parmeno — So may the Gods bless me, happily done.

Gnatho [apart to THRASO] — Do you hear what he says?

Chærea — And then, besides, I am delighted that my brother's mistress is secured to him; the family is united. Thais has committed herself to the patronage of my father; she has put herself under our care and protection.

Parmeno — Thais, then, is wholly your brother's.

Chærea — Of course.

Parmeno — Then this is another reason for us to rejoice, that the Captain will be beaten out of doors.

Chærea — Wherever my brother is, do you take care that he hears this as soon as possible.

Parmeno — I'll go look for him at home.

[Goes into the house of LACHES.]

Thraso [apart to GNATHO] — Do you at all doubt, Gnatho, but that I am now ruined everlastingly?

Gnatho [to THRASO] — Without doubt, I do think so.

Chærea [to himself] — What am I to make mention of first, or commend in especial? Him who gave me the advice to do so, or myself, who ventured to undertake it? Or ought I to extol fortune, who has been my guide, and has so opportunely crowded into a single day events so numerous, so important; or my father's kindness and indulgence? O Jupiter, I entreat you, do preserve these blessings unto us!

SCENE X.

Enter PHÆDRIA from the house of LACHES.

Phædria [to himself] — Ye Gods, by our trust in you, what incredible things has Parmeno just related to me! But where is my brother?

Chærea [stepping forward] — Here he is.

Phædria — I'm overjoyed.

Chærea — I quite believe you. There is no one, brother, more worthy to be loved than this Thais of yours: so much is she a benefactress to all our family.

Phædria — Whew! are you commending her too to me?

Thraso [apart] — I'm undone; the less the hope I have, the more I am in love. Prithee, Gnatho, my hope is in you.

Gnatho [apart] — What do you wish me to do?

Thraso [apart] — Bring this about, by entreaties or with money, that I may at least share 'Thais' favors in some degree.

Gnatho [apart] — It's a hard task.

Thraso [apart] — If you set your mind on anything, I know you well. If you manage this, ask me for any present you like as your reward; you shall have what you ask.

Gnatho [apart] — Is it so?

Thraso [apart] — It shall be so.

Gnatho [apart] — If I manage this, I ask that your house, whether you are present or absent, may be open to me; that, without invitation, there may always be a place for me.

Thraso [apart] — I pledge my honor that it shall be so.

Gnatho [apart] — I'll set about it then.

Phædria — Who is it I hear so close at hand? [Turning round.] O Thraso —

Thraso [coming forward] — Save you both —

Phædria — Perhaps you are not aware what has taken place here.

Thraso — I am quite aware.

Phædria — Why, then, do I see you in this neighborhood?

Thraso — Depending on your kindness.

Phædria — Do you know what sort of dependence you have? Captain, I give you notice, if ever I catch you in this street again, even if you should say to me, "I was looking for another person, I was on my road this way," you are undone.

Gnatho — Come, come, that's not handsome.

Phædria — I've said it.

Gnatho — I didn't know you gave yourself such airs.

Phædria — So it shall be.

Gnatho — First hear a few words from me; and when I have said the thing, if you approve of it, do it.

Phædria — Let's hear.

Gnatho — Do you step a little that way, Thraso. [THRASO stands aside.] In the first place, I wish you both implicitly to believe me in this, that whatever I do in this matter, I do it entirely for my own sake; but if the same thing is of advantage to yourselves, it would be folly for you not to do it.

Phædria — What is it?

Gnatho — I'm of opinion that the Captain, your rival, should be received among you.

Phædria [starting] — Hah !

Chærea — Be received ?

Gnatho [to PHÆDRIA] — Only consider, i' faith, Phædria, at the free rate you are living with her, and indeed very freely you are living, you have but little to give ; and it's necessary for Thais to receive a good deal. That all this may be supplied for your amour and not at your own expense, there is not an individual better suited or more fitted for your purpose than the Captain. In the first place, he both has got enough to give and no one does give more profusely. He is a fool, a dolt, a blockhead ; night and day he snores away ; and you need not fear that the lady will fall in love with him ; you may easily have him discarded whenever you please.

Chærea [to PHÆDRIA] — What shall we do ?

Gnatho — And this besides, which I deem to be of even greater importance, — not a single person entertains in better style or more bountifully.

Chærea — It's a wonder if this sort of man cannot be made use of in some way or other.

Phædria — I think so too.

Gnatho — You act properly. One thing I have still to beg of you, — that you'll receive me into your fraternity ; I've been rolling that stone for a considerable time past.

Phædria — We admit you.

Chærea — And with all my heart.

Gnatho — Then I, in return for this, Phædria, and you, Chærea, make him over to you to be eaten and drunk to the dregs.

Chærea — Agreed.

Phædria — He quite deserves it.

Gnatho [calling to THRASO] — Thraso, whenever you please, step this way.

Thraso — Prithee, how goes it ?

Gnatho — How ? Why, these people didn't know you ; after I had discovered to them your qualities, and had praised you as your actions and your virtues deserved, I prevailed upon them.

Thraso — You have managed well ; I give you my best thanks. Besides, I never was anywhere but what all were extremely fond of me.

Gnatho [to PHÆDRIA and CHÆREA] — Didn't I tell you that he was a master of the Attic elegance?

Phædria — He is no other than you mentioned. [Pointing to his FATHER'S house.] Walk this way. [To the AUDIENCE.] Fare you well, and grant us your applause.

THE SELF-TORMENTOR.

By TERENCE.

(From "Heautontimorumenos.")

ACT I. — SCENE I.

Enter CHREMES, and MENEDEMUS with a spade in his hand, who falls to digging.

Chremes — Although this acquaintanceship between us is of very recent date, from the time in fact of your purchasing an estate here in the neighborhood, yet either your good qualities, or our being neighbors (which I take to be a sort of friendship), induces me to inform you, frankly and familiarly, that you appear to me to labor beyond your years, and beyond what your affairs require. For, in the name of Gods and men, what would you have? What can be your aim? You are, as I conjecture, sixty years of age, or more. No man in these parts has a better or a more valuable estate, no one more servants; and yet you discharge their duties just as diligently as if there were none at all. However early in the morning I go out, and however late in the evening I return home, I see you either digging, or plowing, or doing something, in fact, in the fields. You take respite not an instant, and are quite regardless of yourself. I am very sure that this is not done for your amusement. But really I am vexed how little work is done here. If you were to employ the time you spend in laboring yourself, in keeping your servants at work, you would profit much more.

Menedemus — Have you so much leisure, Chremes, from your own affairs, that you can attend to those of others — those which don't concern you?

Chremes — I am a man ; there is nothing human that I think no concern of mine. Suppose I wish either to advise you in this matter, or to be informed myself : if what you do is right, that I may do the same ; if it is not, then that I may dissuade you.

Menedemus — It's requisite for me to do so ; do you as it is necessary for you to do.

Chremes — Is it requisite for any person to torment himself ?

Menedemus — It is for me.

Chremes — If you have any affliction, I could wish it otherwise. But prithee, what sorrow is this of yours ? How have you deserved so ill of yourself ?

Menedemus — Alas ! alas ! [He begins to weep.]

Chremes — Do not weep, but make me acquainted with it, whatever it is. Do not be reserved ; fear nothing ; trust me, I tell you. Either by consolation, or by counsel, or by any means, I will aid you.

Menedemus — Do you wish to know this matter ?

Chremes — Yes, and for the reason I mentioned to you.

Menedemus — I will tell you.

Chremes — But still, in the meantime, lay down that rake ; don't fatigue yourself.

Menedemus — By no means.

Chremes — What can be your object ?

[Tries to take the rake from him.]

Menedemus — Do leave me alone, that I may give myself no respite from my labor.

Chremes — I will not allow it, I tell you.

[Taking the rake from him.]

Menedemus — Ah ! that's not fair.

Chremes [poising the rake] — Whew ! such a heavy one as this, pray !

Menedemus — Such are my deserts.

Chremes — Now speak.

[Laying down the rake.]

Menedemus — I have an only son, — a young man, — alas ! why did I say — “ I have ” ? — rather I should say, “ I had ” one, Chremes : whether I have him now, or not, is uncertain.

Chremes — Why so ?

Menedemus — You shall know : There is a poor old woman here, a stranger from Corinth : her daughter, a young woman, he fell in love with, insomuch that he almost regarded her as his wife ; all this took place unknown to me. When I discovered the matter, I began to reprove him, not with gentleness, nor in the way suited to the lovesick mind of a youth, but with violence, and after the usual method of fathers. I was daily reproaching him, — “ Look you, do you expect to be allowed any longer to act thus, myself, your father, being alive ; to be keeping a mistress pretty much as though your wife ? You are mistaken, Clinia, and you don’t know me, if you fancy that. I am willing that you should be called my son, just as long as you do what becomes you ; but if you do not do so, I shall find out how it becomes me to act towards you. This arises from nothing, in fact, but too much idleness. At your time of life, I did not devote my time to dalliance, but, in consequence of my poverty, departed hence for Asia, and there acquired in arms both riches and military glory.” At length the matter came to this, — the youth, from hearing the same things so often, and with such severity, was overcome. He supposed that I, through age and affection, had more judgment and foresight for him than himself. He went off to Asia, Chremes, to serve under the king.

Chremes — What is it you say ?

Menedemus — He departed without my knowledge — and has been gone these three months.

Chremes — Both are to be blamed — although I still think this step shows an ingenuous and enterprising disposition.

Menedemus — When I learnt this from those who were in the secret, I returned home sad, and with feelings almost overwhelmed and distracted through grief. I sit down ; my servants run to me ; they take off my shoes : then some make all haste to spread the couches, and to prepare a repast ; each according to his ability did zealously what he could, in order to alleviate my sorrow. When I observed this, I began to reflect thus : “ What ! are so many persons anxious for my sake alone, to pleasure myself only ? Are so many female servants to provide me with dress ? Shall I alone keep up such an expensive establishment, while my only son, who ought equally, or even more so, to enjoy these things — inasmuch as his age is better suited for the enjoyment of them — him, poor youth, have I driven away from home by my severity ! Were I to do this, really I should deem myself deserving of any calamity. But so long as he leads this life of penury, banished from his country through my severity, I will revenge his wrongs upon myself, toiling, making money, saving, and laying up for him." At once I set about it; I left nothing in the house, neither movables nor clothing; everything I scraped together. Slaves, male and female, except those who could easily pay for their keep by working in the country, all of them I set up to auction and sold. I at once put up a bill to sell my house. I collected somewhere about fifteen talents, and purchased this farm; here I fatigue myself. I have come to this conclusion, Chremes, that I do my son a less injury, while I am unhappy; and that it is not right for me to enjoy any pleasure here, until such time as he returns home safe to share it with me.

Chremes—I believe you to be of an affectionate disposition towards your children, and him to be an obedient son, if one were to manage him rightly or prudently. But neither did you understand him sufficiently well, nor he you—a thing that happens where persons don't live on terms of frankness together. You never showed him how highly you valued him, nor did he ever dare put that confidence in you which is due to a father. Had this been done, these troubles would never have befallen you.

Menedemus—Such is the fact, I confess; the greatest fault is on my side.

Chremes—But still, Menedemus, I hope for the best, and I trust that he'll be here safe before long.

Menedemus—Oh that the Gods would grant it!

Chremes—They will do so. Now, if it is convenient to you—the festival of Bacchus is being kept here to-day—I wish you to give me your company.

Menedemus—I cannot.

Chremes—Why not? Do, pray, spare yourself a little while. Your absent son would wish you to do so.

Menedemus—It is not right that I, who have driven him hence to endure hardships, should now shun them myself. •

Chremes—Is such your determination?

Menedemus—It is.

Chremes—Then kindly fare you well.

Menedemus—And you the same. [Goes into his house.]

THE CONSPIRACY OF CATILINE.

By SALLUST.

[CAIUS SALLUSTIUS CRISPUS, Roman historical writer, was born B.C. 86. He was expelled from the Senate for debauchery, B.C. 54; readmitted by Caesar; made governor of Numidia by him, B.C. 46; gained immense wealth by plundering the inhabitants and worse unpopularity by seducing their women; the following year he returned to Rome and lived in lettered ease till his death, B.C. 35. His fame rests on his only surviving works, "The Conspiracy of Catiline" and "The War against Jugurtha," both pamphlets with an ulterior political purpose.]

LUCIUS CATILINE was a man of noble birth, and of eminent mental and personal endowments, but of a vicious and depraved disposition. His delight, from his youth, had been in civil commotions, bloodshed, robbery, and sedition; and in such scenes he had spent his early years. His constitution could endure hunger, want of sleep, and cold, to a degree surpassing belief. His mind was daring, subtle, and versatile, capable of pretending or dissembling whatever he wished. He was covetous of other men's property, and prodigal of his own. He had abundance of eloquence, though but little wisdom. His insatiable ambition was always pursuing objects extravagant, romantic, and unattainable.

Since the time of Sylla's dictatorship, a strong desire of seizing the government possessed him, nor did he at all care, provided that he secured power for himself, by what means he might arrive at it. His violent spirit was daily more and more hurried on by the diminution of his patrimony, and by his consciousness of guilt; both which evils he had increased by those practices which I have mentioned above. The corrupt morals of the state, too, which extravagance and selfishness, pernicious and contending vices, rendered thoroughly depraved, furnished him with additional incentives to action.

When wealth was once considered an honor, and glory, authority, and power attended on it, virtue lost her influence, poverty was thought a disgrace, and a life of innocence was regarded as a life of ill nature. From the influence of riches, accordingly, luxury, avarice, and pride prevailed among the youth; they grew at once rapacious and prodigal; they undervalued what was their own, and coveted what was another's; they set at naught modesty and continence; they lost all disinction between sacred and profane, and threw off all consideration and self-restraint.

The love of irregular gratification, open debauchery, and all kinds of luxury, had spread abroad. Men forgot their sex; women threw off all the restraints of modesty. To gratify appetite, they sought for every kind of production by land and by sea; they slept before there was any inclination for sleep; they no longer waited to feel hunger, thirst, cold, or fatigue, but anticipated them all by luxurious indulgence. Such propensities drove the youth, when their patrimonies were exhausted, to criminal practices; for their minds, impregnated with evil habits, could not easily abstain from gratifying their passions, and were thus the more inordinately devoted in every way to rapacity and extravagance.

In so populous and so corrupt a city, Catiline, as it was very easy to do, kept about him, like a bodyguard, crowds of the unprincipled and desperate. For all those shameless, libertine, and profligate characters, who had dissipated their patrimonies by gaming, luxury, and sensuality; all who had contracted heavy debts, to purchase immunity for their crimes or offenses; all assassins or sacrilegious persons from every quarter, convicted or dreading conviction for their evil deeds; all, besides, whom their tongue or their hand maintained by perjury or civil bloodshed; all, in fine, whom wickedness, poverty, or a guilty conscience disquieted, were the associates and intimate friends of Catiline. And if any one, as yet of unblemished character, fell into his society, he was presently rendered, by daily intercourse and temptation, similar and equal to the rest. But it was the young whose acquaintance he chiefly courted; as their minds, ductile and unsettled from their age, were easily ensnared by his stratagems. For as the passions of each, according to his years, appeared excited, he furnished mistresses to some, bought horses and dogs for others, and spared, in a word, neither his purse nor his character, if he could but make them his devoted and trustworthy supporters. There were some, I know, who thought that the youth who frequented the house of Catiline were guilty of crimes against nature; but this report arose rather from other causes than from any evidence of the fact.

Catiline, in his youth, had been guilty of many criminal connections, with a virgin of noble birth, with a priestess of Vesta, and of many other offenses of this nature, in defiance alike of law and religion. At last, when he was smitten with a passion for Aurelia Orestilla, in whom no good man, at any time of her life, commended anything but her beauty, it is confidently believed that because she hesitated to marry him, from the dread of having a grown-up step-son, he cleared the house for their nuptials by putting his son to death. And this crime appears to me to have been the chief cause of hurrying forward the conspiracy. For his guilty mind, at peace with neither gods nor men, found no comfort either waking or sleeping; so effectually did conscience desolate his tortured spirit. His complexion, in consequence, was pale, his eyes haggard, his walk sometimes quick and sometimes slow, and distraction was plainly apparent in every feature and look.

The young men, whom, as I said before, he had enticed to join him, he initiated, by various methods, in evil practices. From among them he furnished false witnesses, and forgers of signatures; and he taught them all to regard, with equal unconcern, honor, property, and danger. At length, when he had stripped them of all character and shame, he led them to other and greater enormities. If a motive for crime did not readily occur, he incited them, nevertheless, to circumvent and murder inoffensive persons, just as if they had injured him; for, lest their hand or heart should grow torpid for want of employment, he chose to be gratuitously wicked and cruel.

Depending on such accomplices and adherents, and knowing that the load of debt was everywhere great, and that the veterans of Sylla, having spent their money too liberally, and remembering their spoils and former victory, were longing for a civil war, Catiline formed the design of overthrowing the government. There was no army in Italy; Pompey was fighting in a distant part of the world; he himself had great hopes of obtaining the consulship; the senate was wholly off its guard; everything was quiet and tranquil; and all these circumstances were exceedingly favorable for Catiline.

Accordingly, about the beginning of June, in the consulship of Lucius Caesar and Caius Figulus, he at first addressed each of his accomplices separately, encouraged some, and sounded others, and informed them of his own resources, of the unprepared condition of the state, and of the great prizes to be expected from the conspiracy. When he had ascertained, to his satisfaction, all that he required, he summoned all whose necessities were the most urgent, and whose spirits were the most daring, to a general conference.

When Catiline saw these assembled, though he had often discussed many points with them singly, yet thinking it would be to his purpose to address and exhort them in a body, retired with them into a private apartment of his house, where, when all witnesses were withdrawn, he harangued them.

* * * * *

When these men, surrounded with numberless evils, but without any resources or hopes of good, had heard his address, though they thought it much for their advantage to disturb the public tranquillity, yet most of them called on Catiline to state on what terms they were to engage in the contest; what benefits they were to expect from taking up arms; and what support and encouragement they had, and in what quarters. Catiline then promised them the abolition of their debts; a proscription of the wealthy citizens; offices, sacerdotal dignities, plunder, and all other gratifications which war, and the license of conquerors, can afford. He added that Piso was in Hither Spain, and Publius Sittius Nucerinus with an army in Mauritania, both of whom were privy to his plans; that Caius Antonius, whom he hoped to have for a colleague, was canvassing for the consulship, a man with whom he was intimate, and who was involved in all manner of embarrassments; and that, in conjunction with him, he himself, when consul, would commence operations. He, moreover, assailed all the respectable citizens with reproaches, commended each of his associates by name, reminded one of his poverty, another of his ruling passion, several others of their danger or disgrace, and many of the spoils which they had obtained by the victory of Sylla. When he saw their spirits sufficiently elevated, he charged them to attend to his interest at the election of consuls, and dismissed the assembly.

There were some, at that time, who said that Catiline, having ended his speech, and wishing to bind his accomplices in guilt by an oath, handed round among them, in goblets, the blood of a human body mixed with wine; and that when all, after an imprecation, had tasted of it, as is usual in sacred rites, he disclosed his design; and they asserted that he did this, in order that they might be the more closely attached to one another, by being mutually conscious of such an atrocity. But some thought that this report, and many others, were invented by persons who supposed that the odium against Cicero, which afterward arose, might be lessened by imputing an enormity of guilt to the conspirators who had suffered death. The evidence which I have obtained, in support of this charge, is not at all in proportion to its magnitude.

Among those present at this meeting was Quintus Curius, a man of no mean family, but immersed in vices and crimes, and whom the censors had ignominiously expelled from the senate. In this person there was not less levity than impudence; he could neither keep secret what he heard, nor conceal his own crimes; he was altogether heedless what he said or what he did. He had long had a criminal intercourse with Fulvia, a woman of high birth; but growing less acceptable to her, because, in his reduced circumstances, he had less means of being liberal, he began, on a sudden, to boast, and to promise her seas and mountains; threatening her, at times, with the sword, if she were not submissive to his will; and acting, in his general conduct, with greater arrogance than ever. Fulvia, having learned the cause of his extravagant behavior, did not keep such danger to the state a secret; but, without naming her informant, communicated to several persons what she had heard and under what circumstances, concerning Catiline's conspiracy. This intelligence it was that incited the feelings of the citizens to give the consulship to Marcus Tullius Cicero. For before this period, most of the nobility were moved with jealousy, and thought the consulship in some degree sullied, if a man of no family, however meritorious, obtained it. But when danger showed itself, envy and pride were laid aside.

Accordingly, when the comitia were held, Marcus Tullius and Caius Antonius were declared consuls; an event which gave the first shock to the conspirators. The ardor of Catiline, however, was not at all diminished; he formed every day new schemes; he deposited arms, in convenient places, throughout Italy; he sent sums of money borrowed on his own credit, or that of his friends, to a certain Manlius, at Fesulæ, who was subsequently the first to engage in hostilities. At this period, too, he is said to have attached to his cause great numbers of men of all classes, and some women, who had, in their earlier days, supported an expensive life by the price of their beauty, but who, when age had lessened their gains but not their extravagance, had contracted heavy debts. By the influence of these females, Catiline hoped to gain over the slaves in Rome, to get the city set on fire, and either to secure the support of their husbands or take away their lives.

In the number of those ladies was Sempronia, a woman who had committed many crimes with the spirit of a man. In birth and beauty, in her husband and her children, she was extremely fortunate; she was skilled in Greek and Roman literature; she could sing, play, and dance, with greater elegance than became a woman of virtue, and possessed many other accomplishments that tend to excite the passions. But nothing was ever less valued by her than honor or chastity. Whether she was more prodigal of her money or her reputation, it would have been difficult to decide. Her desires were so ardent that she oftener made advances to the other sex than waited for solicitation. She had frequently, before this period, forfeited her word, forsworn debts, been privy to murder, and hurried into the utmost excesses by her extravagance and poverty. But her abilities were by no means despicable; she could compose verses, jest, and join in conversation either modest, tender, or licentious. In a word, she was distinguished by much refinement of wit, and much grace of expression.

Catiline, having made these arrangements, still canvassed for the consulship for the following year; hoping that, if he should be elected, he would easily manage Antonius according to his pleasure. Nor did he, in the mean time, remain inactive, but devised schemes, in every possible way, against Cicero, who, however, did not want skill or policy to guard against them. For, at the very beginning of his consulship, he had, by making many promises through Fulvia, prevailed on Quintus Curius, whom I have already mentioned, to give him secret information of Catiline's proceedings. He had also persuaded his colleague, Antonius, by an arrangement respecting their provinces, to entertain no sentiment of disaffection toward the state; and he kept around him, though without ostentation, a guard of his friends and dependents.

When the day of the comitia came, and neither Catiline's efforts for the consulship, nor the plots which he had laid for the consuls in the Campus Martius, were attended with success, he determined to proceed to war, and resort to the utmost extremities, since what he had attempted secretly had ended in confusion and disgrace.

He accordingly dispatched Caius Manlius to Fæsulæ, and the adjacent parts of Etruria ; one Septimius, of Camerinum, into the Picenian territory ; Caius Julius into Apulia ; and others to various places, wherever he thought each would be most serviceable. He himself, in the mean time, was making many simultaneous efforts at Rome ; he laid plots for the consul ; he arranged schemes for burning the city ; he occupied suitable posts with armed men ; he went constantly armed himself, and ordered his followers to do the same ; he exhorted them to be always on their guard and prepared for action ; he was active and vigilant by day and by night, and was exhausted neither by sleeplessness nor by toil. At last, however, when none of his numerous projects succeeded, he again, with the aid of Marcus Porcius Læca, convoked the leaders of the conspiracy in the dead of night, when, after many complaints of their apathy, he informed them that he had sent forward Manlius to that body of men whom he had prepared to take up arms ; and others of the confederates into other eligible places, to make a commencement of hostilities ; and that he himself was eager to set out to the army, if he could but first cut off Cicero, who was the chief obstruction to his measures.

While, therefore, the rest were in alarm and hesitation, Caius Cornelius, a Roman knight, who offered his services, and Lucius Vargunteius, a senator, in company with him, agreed to go with an armed force, on that very night, and with but little delay, to the house of Cicero, under pretense of paying their respects to him, and to kill him unawares, and unprepared for defense, in his own residence. But Curius, when he heard of the imminent danger that threatened the consul, immediately gave him notice, by the agency of Fulvia, of the treachery which was contemplated. The assassins, in consequence, were refused admission, and found that they had undertaken such an attempt only to be disappointed.

In the mean time, Manlius was in Etruria, stirring up the populace, who, both from poverty, and from resentment for their injuries (for, under the tyranny of Sylla, they had lost their lands and other property), were eager for a revolution. He also attached to himself all sorts of marauders, who were numerous in those parts, and some of Sylla's colonists, whose dissipation and extravagance had exhausted their enormous plunder.

When these proceedings were reported to Cicero, he, being alarmed at the twofold danger, since he could no longer secure the city against treachery by his private efforts, nor could gain satisfactory intelligence of the magnitude or intentions of the army of Manlius, laid the matter, which was already a subject of discussion among the people, before the senate. The senate, accordingly, as is usual in any perilous emergency, decreed that THE CONSULS SHOULD MAKE IT THEIR CARE THAT THE COMMONWEALTH SHOULD RECEIVE NO INJURY. This is the greatest power which, according to the practice at Rome, is granted by the senate to the magistrate, and which authorizes him to raise troops; to make war; to assume unlimited control over the allies and the citizens; to take the chief command and jurisdiction at home and in the field; rights which, without an order of the people, the consul is not permitted to exercise.

A few days afterward, Lucius Sænius, a senator, read to the senate a letter, which, he said, he had received from Fæsulæ, and in which it was stated that Caius Manlius, with a large force, had taken the field by the 27th of October. Others at the same time, as is not uncommon in such a crisis, spread reports of omens and prodigies; others of meetings being held, of arms being transported, and of insurrections of the slaves at Capua and Apulia. In consequence of these rumors, Quintus Marcius Rex was dispatched, by a decree of the senate, to Fæsulæ, and Quintus Metellus Creticus into Apulia and the parts adjacent; both which officers, with the title of commanders, were waiting near the city, having been prevented from entering in triumph, by the malice of a cabal, whose custom it was to ask a price for everything, whether honorable or infamous. The pretors, too, Quintus Pompeius Rufus and Quintus Metellus Celer, were sent off, the one to Capua, the other to Picenum, and power was given them to levy a force proportioned to the exigency and the danger. The senate also decreed, that if any one should give information of the conspiracy which had been formed against the state, his reward should be, if a slave, his freedom and a hundred sestertia; if a freeman, a complete pardon and two hundred sestertia. They further appointed that the schools of gladiators should be distributed in Capua and other municipal towns, according to the capacity of each; and that, at Rome, watches should be posted throughout the city, of which the inferior magistrates should have the charge.

By such proceedings as these the citizens were struck with alarm, and the appearance of the city was changed. In place of that extreme gayety and dissipation to which long tranquillity had given rise, a sudden gloom spread over all classes ; they became anxious and agitated ; they felt secure neither in any place, nor with any person , they were not at war, yet enjoyed no peace ; each measured the public danger by his own fear. The women, also, to whom, from the extent of the empire, the dread of war was new, gave way to lamentation, raised supplicating hands to heaven, mourned over their infants, made constant inquiries, trembled at everything, and, forgetting their pride and their pleasures, felt nothing but alarm for themselves and their country.

Yet the unrelenting spirit of Catiline persisted in the same purposes, notwithstanding the precautions that were adopted against him, and though he himself was accused by Lucius Paullus under the Plautian law. At last, with a view to dissemble, and under pretense of clearing his character, as if he had been provoked by some attack, he went into the senate house. It was then that Marcus Tullius, the consul, whether alarmed at his presence, or fired with indignation against him, delivered that splendid speech, so beneficial to the public, which he afterward wrote and published. [See following selection.]

When Cicero sat down, Catiline being prepared to pretend ignorance of the whole matter, entreated, with downcast looks and suppliant voice, that "the Conscrip't Fathers would not too hastily believe anything against him" ; saying "that he was sprung from such a family, and had so ordered his life from his youth, as to have every happiness in prospect : and that they were not to suppose that he, a patrician, whose services to the Roman people, as well as those of his ancestors, had been so numerous, should want to ruin the state, when Marcus Tullius, a mere adopted citizen of Rome, was eager to preserve it." When he was proceeding to add other invectives, they all raised an outcry against him, and called him an enemy and a traitor. Being thus exasperated, "Since I am encompassed by enemies," he exclaimed, "and driven to desperation, I will extinguish the flame kindled around me in a general ruin."

He then hurried from the senate to his own house ; and then, after much reflection with himself, thinking that, as his plots against the consul had been unsuccessful, and as he knew the city to be secured from fire by the watch, his best course would be to augment his army, and make provision for the war before the legions could be raised, he set out in the dead of night, and with a few attendants, to the camp of Manlius. But he left in charge to Lentulus and Cethegus, and others of whose prompt determination he was assured, to strengthen the interests of their party in every possible way, to forward the plots against the consul, and to make arrangements for a massacre, for firing the city, and for other destructive operations of war ; promising that he himself would shortly advance on the city with a large¹ army.

Catiline himself, having stayed a few days with Caius Flaminus Flamma in the neighborhood of Arretium, while he was supplying the adjacent parts, already excited to insurrection, with arms, marched with his fasces, and other ensigns of authority, to join Manlius in his camp.

When this was known at Rome, the senate declared Catiline and Manlius enemies to the state, and fixed a day as to the rest of their force, before which they might lay down their arms with impunity, except such as had been convicted of capital offenses. They also decreed that the consuls should hold a levy ; that Antonius, with an army, should hasten in pursuit of Catiline ; and that Cicero should protect the city.

At this period the empire of Rome appears to me to have been in an extremely deplorable condition ; for though every nation, from the rising to the setting of the sun, lay in subjection to her arms, and though peace and prosperity, which mankind think the greatest blessings, were hers in abundance, there yet were found, among her citizens, men who were bent with obstinate determination to plunge themselves and their country into ruin ; for, notwithstanding the two decrees of the senate, not one individual, out of so vast a number, was induced by the offer of reward to give information of the conspiracy ; nor was there a single deserter from the camp of Catiline. So strong a spirit of disaffection had, like a pestilence, pervaded the minds of most of the citizens.

Nor was this disaffected spirit confined to those who were actually concerned in the conspiracy ; for the whole of the common people, from a desire of change, favored the projects of Catiline. This they seemed to do in accordance with their general character ; for, in every state, they that are poor envy those of a better class, and endeavor to exalt the factious ; they dislike the established condition of things, and long for something new ; they are discontented with their own circumstances, and desire a general alteration ; they can support themselves amid tumult and sedition, without anxiety, since poverty does not easily suffer loss.

As for the populace of the city, they had become disaffected from various causes. In the first place, such as everywhere took the lead in crime and profligacy, with others who had squandered their fortunes in dissipation, and, in a word, all whom vice and villainy had driven from their homes, had flocked to Rome as a general receptacle of impurity. In the next place, many, who thought of the success of Sylla, when they had seen some raised from common soldiers into senators, and others so enriched as to live in regal luxury and pomp, hoped, each for himself, similar results from victory, if they should once take up arms. In addition to this, the youth, who, in the country, had earned a scanty livelihood by manual labor, tempted by public and private largesses, had preferred idleness in the city to unwelcome toil in the field. To these, and all others of similar character, public disorders would furnish subsistence. It is not at all surprising, therefore, that men in distress, of dissolute principles and extravagant expectations, should have consulted the interest of the state no further than as it was subservient to their own. Besides, those whose parents, by the victory of Sylla, had been proscribed, whose property had been confiscated, and whose civil rights had been curtailed, looked forward to the event of a war with precisely the same feelings.

All those, too, who were of any party opposed to that of the senate, were desirous rather that the state should be embroiled, than that they themselves should be out of power. This was an evil which, after many years, had returned upon the community to the extent to which it now prevailed.

Much about the same time there were commotions in Hither and Further Gaul, in the Picenian and Bruttian territories, and in Apulia. For those whom Catiline had previously sent to those parts had begun, without consideration, and seemingly with madness, to attempt everything at once; and by nocturnal meetings, by removing armor and weapons from place to place, and by hurrying and confusing everything, had created more alarm than danger. Of these, Quintus Metellus Celer, the pretor, having brought several to trial, under the decree of the senate, had thrown them into prison, as had also Caius Murena in Further Gaul, who governed that province in quality of legate.

But at Rome, in the mean time, Lentulus, with the other leaders of the conspiracy, having secured what they thought a large force, had arranged, that as soon as Catiline should reach the neighborhood of Fæstua, Lucius Bestia, a tribune of the people, having called an assembly, should complain of the proceedings of Cicero, and lay the odium of this most oppressive war on the excellent consul; and that the rest of the conspirators, taking this as a signal, should, on the following night, proceed to execute their respective parts.

These parts are said to have been thus distributed. Statilius and Gabinus, with a large force, were to set on fire twelve places of the city, convenient for their purpose, at the same time: in order that, during the consequent tumult, an easier access might be obtained to the consul, and to the others whose destruction was intended; Cethegus was to beset the gate of Cicero, and attack him personally with violence; others were to single out other victims; while the sons of certain families, mostly of the nobility, were to kill their fathers; and, when all were in consternation at the massacre and conflagration, they were to sally forth to join Catiline.

While they were thus forming and settling their plans, Cethegus was incessantly complaining of the want of spirit in his associates; observing, that they wasted excellent opportunities through hesitation and delay; that, in such an enterprise, there was need, not of deliberation, but of action; and that he himself, if a few would support him, would storm the senate house while the others remained inactive. Being naturally bold, sanguine, and prompt to act, he thought that success depended on rapidity of execution.

The Allobroges, according to the directions of Cicero, procured interviews, by means of Gabinus, with the other conspirators; and from Lentulus, Cethegus, Statilius, and Cassius they demanded an oath, which they might carry under seal to their countrymen, who otherwise would hardly join in so important an affair. To this the others consented without suspicion; but Cassius promised them soon to visit their country, and, indeed, left the city a little before the deputies.

In order that the Allobroges, before they reached home, might confirm their agreement with Catiline, by giving and receiving pledges of faith, Lentulus sent with them one Titus Volturcius, a native of Crotona, he himself giving Volturcius a letter for Catiline, of which the following is a copy:—

“Who I am, you will learn from the person whom I have sent to you. Reflect seriously in how desperate a situation you are placed, and remember that you are a man. Consider what your views demand, and seek aid from all, even the lowest.” In addition, he gave him this verbal message: “Since he was declared an enemy by the senate, for what reason should he reject the assistance of slaves? That, in the city, everything which he had directed was arranged; and that he should not delay to make nearer approaches to it.”

Matters having proceeded thus far, and a night being appointed for the departure of the deputies, Cicero, being by them made acquainted with everything, directed the pretors, Lucius Valerius Flaccus, and Caius Pomtinus, to arrest the retinue of the Allobroges, by lying in wait for them on the Milvian Bridge; he gave them a full explanation of the object with which they were sent, and left them to manage the rest as occasion might require. Being military men, they placed a force, as had been directed, without disturbance, and secretly invested the bridge; when the deputies, with Volturcius, came to the place, and a shout was raised from each side of the bridge, the Gauls, at once comprehending the matter, surrendered themselves immediately to the pretors. Volturcius, at first, encouraging his companions, defended himself against numbers with his sword; but afterward, being unsupported by the Allobroges, he began earnestly to beg Pomtinus, to whom he was known, to save his life, and at last, terrified and despairing of safety, he surrendered himself to the pretors as unconditionally as to foreign enemies.

The affair being thus concluded, a full account of it was immediately transmitted to the consul by messengers. Great anxiety, and great joy, affected him at the same moment. He rejoiced that, by the discovery of the conspiracy, the state was freed from danger; but he was doubtful how he ought to act, when citizens of such eminence were detected in treason so atrocious. He saw that their punishment would be a weight upon himself, and their escape the destruction of the Commonwealth. Having, however, formed his resolution, he ordered Lentulus, Cethegus, Statilius, Gabinius, and one Quintus Cæparius of Terracina, who was preparing to go to Apulia to raise the slaves, to be summoned before him. The others came without delay; but Cæparius, having left his house a little before, and heard of the discovery of the conspiracy, had fled from the city. The consul himself conducted Lentulus, as he was pretor, holding him by the hand, and ordered the others to be brought into the Temple of Concord, under a guard. Here he assembled the senate, and in a very full attendance of that body introduced Volturcius with the deputies. Hither also he ordered Valerius Flaccus, the pretor, to bring the box with the letters which he had taken from the deputies.

Volturcius, being questioned concerning his journey, concerning his letter, and lastly, what object he had had in view, and from what motives he had acted, at first began to prevaricate, and to pretend ignorance of the conspiracy; but at length, when he was told to speak on the security of the public faith, he disclosed every circumstance as it had really occurred, stating that he had been admitted as an associate, a few days before, by Gabinus and Cœparius; that he knew no more than the deputies, only that he used to hear from Gabinus, that Publius Autronius, Servius Sylla, Lucius Vargunteius, and many others, were engaged in the conspiracy. The Gauls made a similar confession, and charged Lentulus, who began to affect ignorance, not only with the letter to Catiline, but with remarks which he was in the habit of making, “that the sovereignty of Rome, by the Sibylline books, was predestined to three Cornelii; that Cinna and Sylla had ruled already; and that he himself was the third, whose fate it would be to govern the city; and that this, too, was the twentieth year since the Capitol was burned,—a year which the augurs, from certain omens, had often said would be stained with the blood of civil war.”

The letter then being read, the senate, when all had previously acknowledged their seals, decreed that Lentulus, being deprived of his office, should, as well as the rest, be placed in private custody. Lentulus, accordingly, was given in charge to Publius Lentulus Spinther, who was then ædile; Cethegus, to Quintus Cornificius; Statilius, to Caius Cæsar; Gabinus, to Marcus Crassus; and Cœparius, who had just before been arrested in his flight, to Cneius Terentius, a senator.

While these occurrences were passing in the senate, and while rewards were being voted, an approbation of their evidence, to the Allobrogian deputies and to Titus Volturcius, the freedmen and some of the other dependents of Lentulus were urging the artisans and slaves, in various directions throughout the city, to attempt his rescue; some, too, applied to the ring-leaders of the mob, who were always ready to disturb the state for pay. Cethegus, at the same time, was soliciting, through his agents, his slaves and freedmen, men trained to deeds of audacity, to collect themselves into an armed body, and force a way into his place of confinement.

The consul, when he heard that these things were in agitation, having distributed armed bodies of men, as the circumstances and occasion demanded, called a meeting of the senate, and desired to know "what they wished to be done concerning those who had been committed to custody." A full senate, however, had but a short time before declared them traitors to their country. On this occasion, Decimus Junius Silanus, who, as consul elect, was first asked his opinion, moved that capital punishment should be inflicted, not only on those who were in confinement, but also on Lucius Cassius, Publius Furius, Publius Umbrenus, and Quintus Annius, if they should be apprehended; but afterward, being influenced by the speech of Caius Cæsar, he said that he would go over to the opinion of Tiberius Nero, who had proposed that the guards should be increased, and that the senate should deliberate further on the matter.

[The speeches of Cæsar for lenity, and of Cato for death, are here given, with the characters of the two men.]

When the senate, as I have stated, had gone over to the opinion of Cato, the consul, thinking it best not to wait till night, which was coming on, lest any new attempts should be made during the interval, ordered the triumvirs to make such preparations as the execution of the conspirators required. He himself, having posted the necessary guards, conducted Lentulus to the prison; and the same office was performed for the rest by the pretors.

There is a place in the prison, which is called the Tullian dungeon, and which, after a slight ascent to the left, is sunk about twelve feet underground. Walls secure it on every side, and over it is a vaulted roof connected with stone arches; but its appearance is disgusting and horrible, by reason of the filth, darkness, and stench. When Lentulus had been let down into this place, certain men, to whom orders had been given, strangled him with a cord. Thus this patrician, who was of the illustrious family of the Cornelii, and who filled the office of consul at Rome, met with an end suited to his character and conduct. On Cethegus, Statilius, Gabinius, and Cæparius, punishment was inflicted in a similar manner.

During these proceedings at Rome, Catiline, out of the entire force which he himself had brought with him, and that which Manlius had previously collected, formed two legions, filling up the cohorts as far as his number would allow; and afterward, as any volunteers, or recruits from his confederates, arrived in his camp, he distributed them equally throughout the cohorts, and thus filled up his legions, in a short time, with their regular number of men, though at first he had not more than two thousand. But, of his whole army, only about a fourth part had the proper weapons of soldiers; the rest, as chance had equipped them, carried darts, spears, or sharpened stakes.

As Antonius approached with his army, Catiline directed his march over the hills, encamping, at one time, in the direction of Rome, at another in that of Gaul. He gave the enemy no opportunity of fighting, yet hoped himself shortly to find one, if his accomplices at Rome should succeed in their object. Slaves, meanwhile, of whom vast numbers had at first flocked to him, he continued to reject, not only as depending on the strength of the conspiracy, but as thinking it impolitic to appear to share the cause of citizens with runagates.

When it was reported in his camp, however, that the conspiracy had been discovered at Rome, and that Lentulus, Cethegus, and the rest whom I have named had been put to death, most of those whom the hope of plunder, or the love of change, had led to join in the war, fell away. The remainder Catiline conducted, over rugged mountains, and by forced marches, into the neighborhood of Pistoria, with a view to escape covertly, by crossroads, into Gaul.

But Quintus Metellus Celer, with a force of three legions, had, at that time, his station in Picenum, who suspected that Catiline, from the difficulties of his position, would adopt precisely the course which we have just described. When, therefore, he had learned his route from some deserters, he immediately broke up his camp, and took his post at the very foot of the hills, at the point where Catiline's descent would be, in his hurried march into Gaul. Nor was Antonius far distant, as he was pursuing, though with a large army, yet through plainer ground, and with fewer hindrances, the enemy in retreat.

Catiline, when he saw that he was surrounded by mountains and by hostile forces, that his schemes in the city had been unsuccessful, and that there was no hope either of escape or of succor, thinking it best, in such circumstances, to try the fortune of a battle, resolved upon engaging, as speedily as possible, with Antonius.

He ordered the signal for battle to be sounded, and led down his troops, in regular order, to the level ground. Having then sent away the horses of all the cavalry, in order to increase the men's courage by making their danger equal, he himself, on foot, drew up his troops suitably to their numbers and the nature of the ground. As a plain stretched between the mountains on the left, with a rugged rock on the right, he placed eight cohorts in front, and stationed the rest of his force, in close order, in the rear. From among these he removed all the ablest centurions, the veterans, and the stoutest of the common soldiers that were regularly armed, into the foremost ranks. He ordered Caius Manlius to take the command of the right, and a certain officer of Fæsulæ on the left; while he himself, with his freedmen and the colonists, took his station by the eagle, which Caius Marius was said to have had in his army in the Cimbrian war.

On the other side, Caius Antonius, who, being lame, was unable to be present in the engagement, gave the command of the army to Marcus Petreius, his lieutenant general. Petreius ranged the cohorts of veterans, which he had raised to meet the present insurrection, in front, and behind them the rest of his force in lines. Then, riding round among his troops, and addressing his men by name, he encouraged them, and bade them remember that they were to fight against unarmed marauders, in defense of their country, their children, their temples, and their homes. Being a military man, and having served with great reputation, for more than thirty years, as tribune, prefect, lieutenant, or pretor, he knew most of the soldiers and their honorable actions, and, by calling these to their remembrance, roused the spirits of the men.

When he had made a complete survey, he gave the signal with the trumpet, and ordered the cohorts to advance slowly. The army of the enemy followed his example; and when they approached so near that the action could be commenced by the light-armed troops, both sides, with a loud shout, rushed together in a furious charge. They threw aside their missiles, and fought only with their swords. The veterans, calling to mind their deeds of old, engaged fiercely in the closest combat. The enemy made an obstinate resistance: and both sides contended with the utmost fury. Catiline, during this time, was exerting himself with his light troops in the front, sustaining such as were pressed, substituting fresh men for the wounded, attending to every exigency, charging in person, wounding many an enemy, and performing at once the duties of a valiant soldier and a skillful general.

When Petreius, contrary to his expectation, found Catiline attacking him with such impetuosity, he led his pretorian cohort against the center of the enemy, among whom, being thus thrown into confusion, and offering but partial resistance, he made great slaughter, and ordered, at the same time, an assault on both flanks. Manlius and the Fæsulan, sword in hand, were among the first that fell; and Catiline, when he saw his army routed, and himself left with but few supporters, remembering his birth and former dignity, rushed into the thickest of the enemy, where he was slain, fighting to the last.

When the battle was over, it was plainly seen what boldness, and what energy of spirit, had prevailed throughout the army of Catiline; for, almost everywhere, every soldier, after yielding up his breath, covered with his corpse the spot which he had occupied when alive. A few, indeed, whom the pretorian cohort had dispersed, had fallen somewhat differently, but all with wounds in front. Catiline himself was found, far in advance of his men, among the dead bodies of the enemy; he was not quite breathless, and still expressed in his countenance the fierceness of spirit which he had shown during his life. Of his whole army, neither in the battle nor in flight, was any freeborn citizen made prisoner, for they had spared their own lives no more than those of the enemy.

Nor did the army of the Roman people obtain a joyful or bloodless victory; for all their bravest men were either killed in the battle, or left the field severely wounded.

Of many who went from the camp to view the ground, or plunder the slain, some, in turning over the bodies of the enemy, discovered a friend, others an acquaintance, others a relative; some, too, recognized their enemies. Thus, gladness and sorrow, grief and joy, were variously felt throughout the whole army.

CICERO'S SPEECH ON CATILINE'S CONSPIRACY.

[MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO, the greatest of Roman orators and perhaps the second of all time, was born B.C. 106, of the nobility. Trained for the bar, his first important case obliged him to go into exile for fear of the dictator Sulla. Returning after Sulla's death, he became the leader of the bar and high in political life; rose to be consul, B.C. 63, and gained great credit for suppressing Catiline's conspiracy. Later, he was again exiled for taking sides against the tribune Clodius, and again recalled in a storm of popular enthusiasm. He sided with Pompey against Cæsar, but made peace with the latter after Pharsalia. After the murder of Cæsar, Cicero sided with Octavius, and thundered against Antony, who on his coalition with Octavius demanded Cicero's life as the price of the junction; Octavius consented, and Cicero was assassinated by an officer whose life he had once saved at the bar. His orations, his letters saved and published by his freedman Tiro, and his varied disquisitions keep his fame unflinching bright.]

WHEN, O Catiline, do you mean to cease abusing our patience? How long is that madness of yours still to mock us? When is there to be an end of that unbridled audacity of yours, swaggering about as it does now? Do not the mighty guards placed on the Palatine Hill — do not the watches posted throughout the city — does not the alarm of the people, and the union of all good men — does not the precaution taken of assembling the senate in this most defensible place — do not the looks and countenances of this venerable body here present, have any effect upon you? Do you not feel that your plans are detected? Do you not see that your conspiracy is already arrested and rendered powerless by the knowledge which every one here possesses of it? What is there that you did last night, what the night before — where is it that you were — who was there that you summoned to meet you — what design was there which was adopted by you, with which you think that any one of us is unacquainted?

Shame on the age and on its principles! The senate is aware of these things; the consul sees them: and yet this man lives. Lives! ay, he comes even into the senate. He takes a part in the public deliberations; he is watching and marking down and checking off for slaughter every individual among us. And we, gallant men that we are, think that we are doing our duty to the republic if we keep out of the way of his frenzied attacks.

You ought, O Catiline, long ago to have been led to execution by command of the consul. That destruction which you have been long plotting against us ought to have already fallen on your own head.

What? Did not that most illustrious man, Publius Scipio, the Pontifex Maximus, in his capacity of a private citizen, put to death Tiberius Gracchus, though but slightly undermining the constitution? And shall we, who are the consuls, tolerate Catiline, openly desirous to destroy the whole world with fire and slaughter? For I pass over older instances, such as how Caius Servilius Ahala with his own hand slew Spurius Mælius when plotting a revolution in the state. There was—there was once such virtue in this republic, that brave men would repress mischievous citizens with severer chastisement than the most bitter enemy. For we have a resolution of the senate, a formidable and authoritative decree against you, O Catiline; the wisdom of the republic is not at fault, nor the dignity of this senatorial body. We, we alone—I say it openly—we, the consuls, are wanting in our duty.

The senate once passed a decree that Lucius Opimius, the consul, should take care that the republic suffered no injury. Not one night elapsed. There was put to death, on some mere suspicion of disaffection, Caius Gracchus, a man whose family had borne the most unblemished reputation for many generations. There was slain Marcus Fulvius, a man of consular rank, and all his children. By a like decree of the senate the safety of the republic was intrusted to Caius Marius and Lucius Valerius, the consuls. Did not the vengeance of the republic, did not execution overtake Lucius Saturninus, a tribune of the people, and Caius Servilius, the pretor, without the delay of one single day? But we, for these twenty days, have been allowing the edge of the senate's authority to grow blunt, as it were. For we are in possession of a similar decree of the senate, but we keep it locked up in its parchment—buried, I may say, in the sheath; and according to this decree you ought, O Catiline, to be put to death this instant. You live—and you live, not to lay aside, but to persist in your audacity.

I wish, O conscript fathers, to be merciful; I wish not to appear negligent amid such danger to the state; but I do now accuse myself of remissness and culpable inactivity. A camp is pitched in Italy, at the entrance of Etruria, in hostility to the republic; the number of the enemy increases every day; and yet the general of that camp, the leader of those enemies, we see within the walls—ay, and even in the senate—planning every day some internal injury to the republic. If, O Catiline, I should now order you to be arrested, to be put to death, I should, I suppose, have to fear lest all good men should say that I had acted tardily, rather than that any one should affirm that I acted cruelly. But yet this, which ought to have been done long since, I have good reason for not doing as yet; I will put you to death, then, when there shall be not one person possible to be found so wicked, so abandoned, so like yourself, as not to allow that it has been rightly done. As long as one person exists who can dare to defend you, you shall live; but you shall live as you do now, surrounded by my many and trusty guards, so that you shall not be able to stir one finger against the republic: many eyes and ears shall still observe and watch you, as they have hitherto done, though you shall not perceive them.

For what is there, O Catiline, that you can still expect, if night is not able to veil your nefarious meetings in darkness, and if private houses cannot conceal the voice of your conspiracy within their walls—if everything is seen and displayed? Change your mind: trust me: forget the slaughter and conflagration you are meditating. You are hemmed in on all sides; all your plans are clearer than the day to us; let me remind you of them. Do you recollect that on the 21st of October I said in the senate, that on a certain day, which was to be the 27th of October, C. Manlius, the satellite and servant of your audacity, would be in arms? Was I mistaken, Catiline, not only in so important, so atrocious, so incredible a fact, but, what is much more remarkable, in the very day? I said also in the senate that you had fixed the massacre of the nobles for the 28th of October, when many chief men of the senate had left Rome, not so much for the sake of saving themselves as of checking your designs. Can you deny that on that very day you were so hemmed in by my guards and my vigilance, that you were unable to stir one finger against the republic; when you said that you would be content with the flight of the rest, and the slaughter of us who remained? What? when you made sure that you would be able to seize Praneste on the first of November by a nocturnal attack, did you not find that that colony was fortified by my order, by my garrison, by my watchfulness and care? You do nothing, you plan nothing, think of nothing which I not only do not hear, but which I do not see and know every particular of.

Listen while I speak of the night before. You shall now see that I watch far more actively for the safety than you do for the destruction of the republic. I say that you came the night before (I will say nothing obscurely) into the Scythe-dealers' street, to the house of Marcus Lecca; that many of your accomplices in the same insanity and wickedness came there too. Do you dare to deny it? Why are you silent? I will prove it if you do deny it; for I see here in the senate some men who were there with you.

O ye immortal Gods, where on earth are we? in what city are we living? what constitution is ours? There are here — here in our body, O conscript fathers, in this the most holy and dignified assembly of the whole world, men who meditate my death, and the death of all of us, and the destruction of this city, and of the whole world. I, the consul, see them; I ask them their opinion about the republic, and I do not yet attack, even by words, those who ought to be put to death by the sword. You were, then, O Catiline, at Lecca's that night; you divided Italy into sections; you settled where every one was to go; you fixed whom you were to leave at Rome, whom you were to take with you; you portioned out the divisions of the city for conflagration; you undertook that you yourself would at once leave the city, and said that there was then only this to delay you, that I was still alive. Two Roman knights were found to deliver you from this anxiety, and to promise that very night, before daybreak, to slay me in my bed. All this I knew almost before your meeting had broken up. I strengthened and fortified my house with a stronger guard; I refused admittance, when they came, to those whom you sent in the morning to salute me, and of whom I had foretold to many eminent men that they would come to me at that time.

As, then, this is the case, O Catiline, continue as you have begun. Leave the city at last: the gates are open; depart. That Manlian camp of yours has been waiting too long for you as its general. And lead forth with you all your friends, or at least as many as you can; purge the city of your presence; you will deliver me from a great fear, when there is a wall between me and you. Among us you can dwell no longer — I will not bear it, I will not permit it, I will not tolerate it. Great thanks are due to the immortal gods, and to this very Jupiter Stator, in whose temple we are, the most ancient protector of this city, that we have already so often escaped so foul, so horrible, and so deadly an enemy to the republic. But the safety of the commonwealth must not be too often allowed to be risked on one man. As long as you, O Catiline, plotted against me while I was the consul elect, I defended myself not with a public guard, but by my own private diligence. When, in the next consular comitia, you wished to slay me when I was actually consul, and your competitors also, in the Campus Martius, I checked your nefarious attempt by the assistance and resources of my own friends, without exciting any disturbance publicly. In short, as often as you attacked me, I by myself opposed you, and that, too, though I saw that my ruin was connected with great disaster to the republic. But now you are openly attacking the entire republic.

You are summoning to destruction and devastation the temples of the immortal gods, the houses of the city, the lives of all the citizens; in short, all Italy. Wherefore, since I do not yet venture to do that which is the best thing, and which belongs to my office and to the discipline of our ancestors, I will do that which is more merciful if we regard its rigor, and more expedient for the state. For if I order you to be put to death, the rest of the conspirators will still remain in the republic; if, as I have long been exhorting you, you depart, your companions, these worthless dregs of the republic, will be drawn off from the city too. What is the matter, Catiline? Do you hesitate to do that when I order you which you were already doing of your own accord? The consul orders an enemy to depart from the city. Do you ask me, Are you to go into banishment? I do not order it; but, if you consult me, I advise it.

For what is there, O Catiline, that can now afford you any pleasure in this city? for there is no one in it, except that band of profligate conspirators of yours, who does not fear you — no one who does not hate you. What brand of domestic baseness is not stamped upon your life? What disgraceful circumstance is wanting to your infamy in your private affairs? From what licentiousness have your eyes, from what atrocity have your hands, from what iniquity has your whole body ever abstained? Is there one youth, when you have once entangled him in the temptations of your corruption, to whom you have not held out a sword for audacious crime, or a torch for licentious wickedness?

What? when lately by the death of your former wife you had made your house empty and ready for a new bridal, did you not even add another incredible wickedness to this wickedness? But I pass that over, and willingly allow it to be buried in silence, that so horrible a crime may not be seen to have existed in this city and not to have been chastised. I pass over the ruin of your fortune, which you know is hanging over you against the ides of the very next month; I come to those things which relate not to the infamy of your private vices, not to your domestic difficulties and baseness, but to the welfare of the republic and to the lives and safety of us all.

Can the light of this life, O Catiline, can the breath of this atmosphere be pleasant to you, when you know that there is not one man of those here present who is ignorant that you, on the last day of the year, when Lepidus and Tullus were consuls, stood in the assembly armed; that you had prepared your hand for the slaughter of the consuls and chief men of the state, and that no reason or fear of yours hindered your crime and madness, but the fortune of the republic? And I say no more of these things, for they are not unknown to every one. How often have you endeavored to slay me, both as consul elect and as actual consul? how many shots of yours, so aimed that they seemed impossible to be escaped, have I avoided by some slight stooping aside, and some dodging, as it were, of my body? You attempt nothing, you execute nothing, you devise nothing that can be kept hid from me at the proper time; and yet you do not cease to attempt and to contrive. How often already has that dagger of yours been wrested from your hands? how often has it slipped through them by some chance, and dropped down? and yet you cannot any longer do without it: and to what sacred mysteries it is consecrated and devoted by you I know not, that you think it necessary to plunge it in the body of the consul.

But now, what is that life of yours that you are leading? For I will speak to you not so as to seem influenced by the hatred I ought to feel, but by pity, nothing of which is due to you. You came a little while ago into the senate: in so numerous an assembly, who of so many friends and connections of yours saluted you? If this in the memory of man never happened to any one else, are you waiting for insults by word of mouth, when you are overwhelmed by the most irresistible condemnation of silence? Is it nothing that at your arrival all those seats were vacated? that all the men of consular rank, who had often been marked out by you for slaughter, the very moment you sat down, left that part of the benches bare and vacant? With what feelings do you think you ought to bear this? On my honor, if my slaves feared me as all your fellow-citizens fear you, I should think I must leave my house. Do not you think you should leave the city? If I saw that I was even undeservedly so suspected and hated by my fellow-citizens, I would rather flee from their sight than be gazed at by the hostile eyes of every one. And do you, who, from the consciousness of your wickedness, know that the hatred of all men is just and has been long due to you, hesitate to avoid the sight and presence of those men whose minds and senses you offend? If your parents feared and hated you, and if you could by no means pacify them, you would, I think, depart somewhere out of their sight. Now, your country, which is the common parent of all of us, hates and fears you, and has no other opinion of you than that you are meditating parricide in her case; and will you neither feel awe of her authority, nor deference for her judgment, nor fear of her power?

And she, O Catiline, thus pleads with you, and after a manner silently speaks to you: There has now for many years been no crime committed but by you; no atrocity has taken place without you; you alone unpunished and unquestioned have murdered the citizens, have harassed and plundered the allies; you alone have had power not only to neglect all laws and investigations, but to overthrow and break through them. Your former actions, though they ought not to have been borne, yet I did bear as well as I could; but now that I should be wholly occupied with fear of you alone, that at every sound I should dread Catiline, that no design should seem possible to be entertained against me which does not proceed from your wickedness, this is no longer endurable. Depart, then, and deliver me from this fear; that, if it be a just one, I may not be destroyed; if an imaginary one, that at least I may at last cease to fear.

If, as I have said, your country were thus to address you, ought she not to obtain her request, even if she were not able to enforce it? What shall I say of your having given yourself into custody? what of your having said, for the sake of avoiding suspicion, that you were willing to dwell in the house of Marcus Lepidus? And when you were not received by him, you dared even to come to me, and begged me to keep you in my house ; and when you had received answer from me that I could not possibly be safe in the same house with you, when I considered myself in great danger as long as we were in the same city, you came to Quintus Metellus, the pretor, and being rejected by him, you passed on to your associate, that most excellent man, Marcus Marcellus, who would be, I suppose you thought, most diligent in guarding you, most sagacious in suspecting you, and most bold in punishing you ; but how far can we think that man ought to be from bonds and imprisonment who has already judged himself deserving of being given into custody ?

Since, then, this is the case, do you hesitate, O Catiline, if you cannot remain here with tranquillity, to depart to some distant land, and to trust your life, saved from just and deserved punishment, to flight and solitude ? Make a motion, say you, to the senate (for that is what you demand), and if this body votes that you ought to go into banishment, you say that you will obey. I will not make such a motion,—it is contrary to my principles,—and yet I will let you see what these men think of you. Begone from the city, O Catiline, deliver the republic from fear ; depart into banishment, if that is the word you are waiting for. What now, O Catiline ? Do you not perceive, do you not see the silence of these men ? they permit it, they say nothing ; why wait you for the authority of their words, when you see their wishes in their silence ?

But had I said the same to this excellent young man, Publius Sextius, or to that brave man, Marcus Marcellus, before this time the senate would deservedly have laid violent hands on me, consul though I be, in this very temple. But as to you, Catiline, while they are quiet they approve, while they permit me to speak they vote, while they are silent they are loud and eloquent. And not they alone, whose authority forsooth is dear to you, though their lives are unimportant, but the Roman knights too, those most honorable and excellent men, and the other virtuous citizens who are now surrounding the senate, whose numbers you could see, whose desires you could know, and whose voices you a few minutes ago could hear—ay, whose very hands and weapons I have for some time been scarcely able to keep off from you ; but those, too, I will easily bring to attend you to the gates if you leave these places you have been long desiring to lay waste.

And yet, why am I speaking? that anything may change your purpose? that you may ever amend your life? that you may meditate flight or think of voluntary banishment? I wish the gods may give you such a mind; though I see, if alarmed at my words you bring your mind to go into banishment, what a storm of unpopularity hangs over me, if not at present, while the memory of your wickedness is fresh, at all events hereafter. But it is worth while to incur that, as long as that is but a private misfortune of my own, and is unconnected with the dangers of the republic. But we cannot expect that you should be concerned at your own vices, that you should fear the penalties of the laws, or that you should yield to the necessities of the republic, for you are not, O Catiline, one whom either shame can recall from infamy, or fear from danger, or reason from madness.

Wherefore, as I have said before, go forth, and if you wish to make me, your enemy as you call me, unpopular, go straight into banishment. I shall scarcely be able to endure all that will be said if you do so; I shall scarcely be able to support my load of unpopularity if you do go into banishment at the command of the consul; but if you wish to serve my credit and reputation, go forth with your ill-omened band of profligates; betake yourself to Manlius, rouse up the abandoned citizens, separate yourself from the good ones, wage war against your country, exult in your impious banditti, so that you may not seem to have been driven out by me and gone to strangers, but to have gone invited to your own friends.

Though why should I invite you, by whom I know men have been already sent on to wait in arms for you at the forum Aurelium; who I know has fixed and agreed with Manlius upon a settled day; by whom I know that that silver eagle, which I trust will be ruinous and fatal to you and to all your friends, and to which there was set up in your house a shrine as it were of your crimes, has been already sent forward? Need I fear that you can long do without that which you used to worship when going out to murder, and from whose altars you have often transferred your impious hand to the slaughter of citizens?

You will go at last where your unbridled and mad desire has been long hurrying you. And this causes you no grief, but an incredible pleasure. Nature has formed you, desire has trained you, fortune has preserved you for this insanity. Not only did you never desire quiet, but you never even desired any war but a criminal one; you have collected a band of profligates and worthless men, abandoned not only by all fortune but even by hope.

Then what happiness will you enjoy! with what delight will you exult! in what pleasure will you revel! when in so numerous a body of friends, you neither hear nor see one good man. All the toils you have gone through have always pointed to this sort of life; your lying on the ground not merely to lie in wait to gratify your unclean desires, but even to accomplish crimes; your vigilance, not only when plotting against the sleep of husbands, but also against the goods of your murdered victims, have all been preparations for this. Now you have an opportunity of displaying your splendid endurance of hunger, of cold, of want of everything; by which in a short time you will find yourself worn out. All this I effected when I procured your rejection from the consulship, that you should be reduced to make attempts on your country as an exile, instead of being able to distress it as consul, and that that which had been wickedly undertaken by you should be called piracy rather than war.

Now that I may remove and avert, O conscript fathers, any in the least reasonable complaint from myself, listen, I beseech you, carefully to what I say, and lay it up in your inmost hearts and minds. In truth, if my country, which is far dearer to me than my life—if all Italy—if the whole republic were to address me, “Marcus Tullius, what are you doing? will you permit that man to depart whom you have ascertained to be an enemy? whom you see ready to become the general of the war? whom you know to be expected in the camp of the enemy as their chief, the author of all this wickedness, the head of the conspiracy, the instigator of the slaves and abandoned citizens, so that he shall seem not driven out of the city by you, but let loose by you against the city? Will you not order him to be thrown into prison, to be hurried off to execution, to be put to death with the most prompt severity? What hinders you? Is it the customs of our ancestors? But even private men have often in this republic slain mischievous citizens. Is it the laws which have been passed about the punishment of Roman citizens? But in this city those who have rebelled against the republic have never had the rights of citizens. Do you fear odium with posterity? You are showing fine gratitude to the Roman people which has raised you, a man known only by your own actions, of no ancestral renown, through all the degrees of honor at so early an age to the very highest office, if from fear of unpopularity or of any danger you neglect the safety of your fellow-citizens. But if you have a fear of unpopularity, is that arising from the imputation of vigor and boldness, or that arising from that of inactivity and indecision most to be feared? When Italy is laid waste by war, when cities are attacked and houses in flames, do you not think that you will be then consumed by a perfect conflagration of hatred?"

To this holy address of the republic, and to the feelings of those men who entertain the same opinion, I will make this short answer: If, O conscript fathers, I thought it best that Catiline should be punished with death, I would not have given the space of one hour to this gladiator to live in. If, forsooth, those excellent men and most illustrious cities not only did not pollute themselves, but even glorified themselves by the blood of Saturninus, and the Gracchi, and Flaccus, and many others of old time, surely I had no cause to fear lest for slaying this parricidal murderer of the citizens any unpopularity should accrue to me with posterity. And if it did threaten me to ever so great a degree, yet I have always been of the disposition to think unpopularity earned by virtue and glory, not unpopularity.

Though there are some men in this body who either do not see what threatens, or dissemble what they do see; who have fed the hope of Catiline by mild sentiments, and have strengthened the rising conspiracy by not believing it; influenced by whose authority many, and they not wicked, but only ignorant, if I punished him would say that I had acted cruelly and tyrannically. But I know that if he arrives at the camp of Manlius, to which he is going, there will be no one so stupid as not to see that there has been a conspiracy, no one so hardened as not to confess it. But if this man alone were put to death, I know that this disease of the republic would be only checked for a while, not eradicated forever. But if he banishes himself, and takes with him all his friends, and collects at one point all the ruined men from every quarter, then not only will this full-grown plague of the republic be extinguished and eradicated, but also the root and seed of all future evils.

We have now for a long time, O conscript fathers, lived among these dangers and machinations of conspiracy ; but somehow or other, the ripeness of all wickedness, and of this long-standing madness and audacity, has come to a head at the time of my consulship. But if this man alone is removed from this piratical crew, we may appear, perhaps, for a short time relieved from fear and anxiety, but the danger will settle down and lie hid in the veins and bowels of the republic. As it often happens that men afflicted with a severe disease, when they are tortured with heat and fever, if they drink cold water, seem at first to be relieved, but afterward suffer more and more severely ; so this disease which is in the republic, if relieved by the punishment of this man, will only get worse and worse, as the rest will be still alive.

Wherefore, O conscript fathers, let the worthless begone — let them separate themselves from the good — let them collect in one place — let them, as I have often said before, be separated from us by a wall ; let them cease to plot against the consul in his own house — to surround the tribunal of the city pretor — to besiege the senate house with swords — to prepare brands and torches to burn the city ; let it, in short, be written on the brow of every citizen, what are his sentiments about the republic. I promise you this, O conscript fathers, that there shall be so much diligence in us the consuls, so much authority in you, so much virtue in the Roman knights, so much unanimity in all good men, that you shall see everything made plain and manifest by the departure of Catiline — everything checked and punished.

With these omens, O Catiline, begone to your impious and nefarious war, to the great safety of the republic, to your own misfortune and injury, and to the destruction of those who have joined themselves to you in every wickedness and atrocity. Then do you, O Jupiter, who were consecrated by Romulus with the same auspices as this city, whom we rightly call the stay of this city and empire, repel this man and his companions from your altars and from the other temples — from the houses and walls of the city — from the lives and fortunes of all the citizens ; and overwhelm all the enemies of good men, the foes of the republic, the robbers of Italy, men bound together by a treaty and infamous alliance of crimes, dead and alive, with eternal punishments.

THE DYING GLADIATOR.

By LORD BYRON.

THE seal is set. — Now welcome, thou dread power!
 Nameless, yet this omnipotent, which here
 Walk'st in the shadow of the midnight hour
 With a deep awe, yet all distinct from fear;
 Thy haunts are ever where the dead walls rear
 Their ivy mantles, and the solemn scene
 Derives from thee a sense so deep and clear
 That we become a part of what has been,
 And grow unto the spot, all-seeing but unseen.

And here the buzz of eager nations ran,
 In murmured pity or loud-roared applause,
 As man was slaughtered by his fellow-man.
 And wherefore slaughtered? wherefore, but because
 Such were the bloody Circus' genial laws,
 And the imperial pleasure. — Wherefore not?
 What matters where we fall to fill the maws
 Of worms — on battle plains or listed spot?
 Both are but theaters where the chief actors rot.

I see before me the Gladiator lie:
 He leans upon his hand; his manly brow
 Consents to death, but conquers agony,
 And his drooped head sinks gradually low;
 And through his side the last drops, ebbing slow
 From the red gash, fall heavy, one by one,
 Like the first of a thunder-shower, — and now
 The arena swims around him — he is gone,
 Ere ceased the inhuman shout that hailed the wretch who won.

He heard it, but he heeded not — his eyes
 Were with his heart, and that was far away;
 He recked not of the life he lost, nor prize,
 But where his rude hut by the Danube lay,
 There were his young barbarians all at play,
 There was their Dacian mother; he, their sire,
 Butchered to make a Roman holiday;
 All this gushed with his blood. — Shall he expire,
 And unavenged? Arise, ye Goths, and glut your ire!

CÆSAR'S FIRST INVASION OF BRITAIN.

(The "Commentaries.")

[CAIUS JULIUS CÆSAR, founder of the Roman monarchy, was born B.C. 100 and murdered B.C. 44. He was of an important family; engaged in politics with a profligacy and unscrupulousness equal to those of any other politician of his time, but with more humanity and generosity than most, and more sagacity and executive ability than any others; became a great military leader, and on his rival Pompey inducing the senate to remove him from the command, refused obedience, invaded Italy, overthrew the Republic, and made himself dictator (B.C. 49). After crushing all resistance, he was made perpetual dictator early in B.C. 44, — king in all but name; this aroused the friends of popular freedom to take his life, which was done in March of the same year. His literary repute rests on his "Commentaries," a report of his campaigns in Gaul, Germany, and Britain.]

THOUGH but a small part of the summer now remained, Cæsar resolved to pass over into Britain, having certain intelligence that in all his wars with the Gauls the enemies of the Commonwealth had ever received assistance from thence. . . .

Meanwhile the Britons having notice of his design by the merchants that resorted to their island, ambassadors from many of their states came to Cæsar, with an offer of hostages, and submission to the authority of the people of Rome. To these he gave a favorable audience, and, exhorting them to continue in the same mind, sent them back into their own country. Along with them he dispatched Comius, whom he had constituted king of the Atrebatians — a man in whose virtue, wisdom, and fidelity he greatly confided, and whose authority in the island was very considerable. To him he gave it in charge to visit as many states as he could, and persuade them to enter into an alliance with the Romans, letting them know at the same time that Cæsar designed as soon as possible to come over in person to their island.

Having got together about eighty transports, which he thought would be sufficient for the carrying over two legions, he distributed the galleys he had over and above to the questor, lieutenants, and officers of the cavalry. There were, in addition, eighteen transports detained by contrary winds at a port about eight miles off, which he appointed to carry over the cavalry.

Things being in this manner settled, and the winds springing up fair, he weighed anchor about one in the morning, ordering the cavalry to embark at the other port and follow him. But, as these orders were executed but slowly, he himself about ten in the morning reached the coast of Britain, where he saw all the cliffs covered with the enemy's forces. The nature of the place was such that, the sea being bounded by steep mountains, the enemy might easily launch their javelins on us from above. Not thinking this, therefore, a convenient landing place, he resolved to lie by till three in the afternoon, and wait the arrival of the rest of his fleet. Meanwhile, having called the lieutenants and military tribunes together, he informed them of what he had learned from Volusenus, instructed them in the part they were to act, and particularly exhorted them to do everything with readiness, and at a signal given, agreeable to the rules of military discipline, which in sea affairs especially required expedition and dispatch, because of all others the most changeable and uncertain. Having dismissed them, and finding both the wind and tide favorable, he made the signal for weighing anchor, and after sailing about eight miles further, stopped over against a plain and open shore.

But the barbarians, perceiving our design, sent their cavalry and chariots before, which they frequently make use of in battle, and, following with the rest of their forces, endeavored to oppose our landing. And indeed we found the difficulty very great on many accounts; for our ships, being large, required a great depth of water; and the soldiers, who were wholly unacquainted with the places, and had their hands embarrassed and laden with a weight of armor, were at the same time to leap from the ships, stand breast-high amidst the waves, and encounter the enemy, while they, fighting on dry ground, or advancing only a little way into the water, having the free use of all their limbs, and in places which they perfectly knew, could boldly cast their darts and spur on their horses, well inured to that kind of service. All these circumstances serving to spread a terror among our men, who were wholly strangers to this way of fighting, they pushed not the enemy with the same vigor and spirit as was usual for them in combats on dry ground.

Cæsar, observing this, ordered some galleys—a kind of shipping less common with the barbarians, and more easily governed and put in motion—to advance a little from the transports towards the shore, in order to set on the enemy in flank, and, by means of their engines, slings, and arrows, drive them to some distance. This proved of considerable service to our men, for, what with the surprise occasioned by the make of our galleys, the motion of the oars, and the playing of the engines, the enemy were forced to halt, and in a little time began to give back. But our men still demurring to leap into the sea, chiefly because of the depth of the water in those parts, the standard bearer of the tenth legion, having first invoked the gods for success, cried out aloud : "Follow me, fellow-soldiers, unless you will betray the Roman eagle into the hands of the enemy: for my part, I am resolved to discharge my duty to Cæsar and the Commonwealth." On this he jumped into the sea, and advanced with the eagle against the enemy; whereat, our men exhorting one another to prevent so signal a disgrace, all that were in the ship followed him; which being perceived by those in the nearest vessels, they also did the like, and boldly approached the enemy.

The battle was obstinate on both sides; but our men, as being neither able to keep their ranks, nor get firm footing, nor follow their respective standards,—because, leaping promiscuously from their ships, every one joined the first ensign he met,—were thereby thrown into great confusion. The enemy, on the other hand, being well acquainted with the shallows, when they saw our men advancing singly from the ships, spurred on their horses, and attacked them in that perplexity. In one place great numbers would gather round a handful of the Romans; others, falling on them in flank, galled them mightily with their darts, which Cæsar observing, ordered some small boats to be manned, and ply about with recruits. By this means the foremost ranks of our men, having got firm footing, were followed by all the rest, when, falling on the enemy briskly, they were soon put to the rout. But, as the cavalry were not yet arrived, we could not pursue or advance far into the island, which was the only thing wanting to render the victory complete.

The enemy, being thus vanquished in battle, no sooner got together after their defeat than they dispatched ambassadors to Cæsar to sue for peace, offering hostages, and an entire submission to his commands. Along with these ambassadors came Comius, the Atrebatian, whom Cæsar, as we have related above, had sent before him into Britain. The natives seized him as soon as he landed, and, though he was charged with a commission from Cæsar, threw him into irons. But on their late defeat they thought proper to send him back, throwing the blame of what had happened on the multitude, and begged of Cæsar to excuse a fault proceeding from ignorance. Cæsar, after some complaints of their behavior, in that, having of their own accord sent ambassadors to the continent to sue for peace, they had yet without any reason begun a war against him, told them at last he would forgive their fault, and ordered them to send a certain number of hostages. Part were sent immediately, and the rest, as living at some distance, they promised to deliver in a few days. Meantime they disbanded their troops, and the several chiefs came to Cæsar's camp, to manage their own concerns and those of the states to which they belonged.

A peace being thus concluded four days after Cæsar's arrival in Britain, the eighteen transports appointed to carry the cavalry, of whom we have spoken above, put to sea with a gentle gale. But when they had so near approached the coast as to be even within view of the camp, so violent a storm all on a sudden arose, that, being unable to hold on their course, some were obliged to return to the port whence they set out, and others driven to the lower end of the island, westward, not without great danger. There they cast anchor; but, the waves rising very high, so as to fill the ships with water, they were again in the night obliged to stand out to sea, and make for the continent of Gaul. That very night it happened to be full moon, when the tides on the seacoast always rise highest — a thing at that time wholly unknown to the Romans. Thus at one and the same time the galleys which Cæsar made use of to transport his men, and which he had ordered to be drawn up on the strand, were filled with the tide, and the tempest fell furiously on the transports that lay at anchor in the road; nor was it possible for our men to attempt anything for their preservation. Many of the ships being dashed to pieces, and the rest having lost their anchors, tackle, and rigging, which rendered them altogether unfit for sailing, a general consternation spread itself through the camp; for there were no other ships to carry back the troops, nor any materials to repair those that had been disabled by the tempest. And, as it had been all along Cæsar's design to winter in Gaul, he was wholly without corn to subsist the troops in those parts.

All this being known to the British chiefs who after the battle had repaired to Cæsar's camp, to perform the conditions of the treaty, they began to hold conferences among themselves; and as they plainly saw that the Romans were destitute both of cavalry, shipping, and corn, and easily judged, from the smallness of the camp, that the number of their troops was but inconsiderable—in which notion they were the more confirmed because Cæsar, having brought over the legions without baggage, had occasion to inclose but a small spot of ground—they thought this a convenient opportunity for taking up arms, and, by intercepting the Roman convoys, to protract the affair till winter; being confidently persuaded that by defeating these troops, or cutting off their return, they should effectually put a stop to all future attempts on Britain. Having therefore entered into a joint confederacy, they by degrees left the camp, and began to draw the islanders together; but Cæsar, though he was not yet apprised of their design, yet guessing in part at their intentions, by the disaster which had befallen his fleet, and the delays formed in relation to the hostages, determined to provide against all events. He therefore had corn daily brought into his camp, and ordered the timber of the ships that had been most damaged to be made use of in repairing the rest, sending to Gaul for what other materials he wanted. As the soldiers were indefatigable in their service, his fleet was soon in a condition to sail, having lost only twelve ships.

During these transactions, the seventh legion being sent out to forage, according to custom, as part were employed in cutting down the corn, and part in carrying it to the camp, without suspicion of attack, news was brought to Cæsar that a greater cloud of dust than ordinary was seen on that side where the legion was. Cæsar, suspecting how matters went, marched with the cohorts that were on guard, ordering two others to succeed in their room, and all the soldiers in the camp to arm and follow him as soon as possible. When he was advanced a little way from the camp, he saw his men overpowered by the enemy, and with great difficulty able to sustain the fight, being driven into a small compass, and exposed on every side to the darts of their adversaries. For, as the harvest was gathered in everywhere else, and one only field left, the enemy, suspecting that our men would come thither to forage, had hid themselves during the night in the woods, and waiting till our men had quitted their arms, and dispersed themselves to fall a reaping, they suddenly attacked them, killed some, put the rest into disorder, and began to surround them with their horses and chariots.

Their way of fighting with their chariots is this : First they drive their chariots on all sides, and throw their darts, inso-much that, by the very terror of the horses and noise of the wheels, they often break the ranks of the enemy. When they have forced their way into the midst of the cavalry, they quit their chariots, and fight on foot : meantime the drivers retire a little from the combat, and place themselves in such a manner as to favor the retreat of their countrymen, should they be overpowered by the enemy. Thus in action they perform the part both of nimble horsemen and stable infantry ; and by continual exercise and use have arrived at that expertness, that in the most steep and difficult places they can stop their horses on a full stretch, turn them which way they please, run along the pole, rest on the harness, and throw themselves back into their chariots with incredible dexterity.

Our men being astonished and confounded with this new way of fighting, Cæsar came very timely to their relief ; for on his approach the enemy made a stand, and the Romans began to recover from their fear. This satisfied Cæsar for the present, who, not thinking it a proper season to provoke the enemy and bring on a general engagement, stood facing them for some time, and then led back the legions to the camp. The continual rains that followed for some days after, both kept the Romans within their intrenchments, and withheld the enemy from attacking us. Meantime the Britons dispatched messengers into all parts, to make known to their countrymen the small number of the Roman troops, and the favorable opportunity they had of making immense spoils, and freeing their country forever from all future invasions, by storming the enemy's camp. Having by this means got together a great body of infantry and cavalry, they drew towards our intrenchments.

Cæsar, though he foresaw that the enemy, if beaten, would in the same manner as before escape the danger by flight, yet, having got about thirty horse, whom Comius, the Atrebatian, had brought over with him from Gaul, he drew up the legions in order of battle before the camp, and falling on the Britons, who were not able to sustain the shock of our men, soon put them to flight. The Romans, pursuing them as long as their strength would permit, made a terrible slaughter, and, setting fire to their houses and villages a great way round, returned to the camp.

The same day ambassadors came from the enemy to Cæsar, to sue for peace. Cæsar doubled the number of hostages he had before imposed on them, and ordered them to be sent over to him into Gaul, because, the equinox coming on, and his ships being leaky, he thought it not prudent to put off his return till winter. A fair wind offering, he set sail a little after midnight, and arrived safe in Gaul. Two of his transports, not being able to reach the same port with the rest, were driven into a haven a little lower in the country.

Only two of the British states sent hostages into Gaul, the rest neglecting to perform the conditions of the treaty. For these successes a thanksgiving of twenty days was decreed by the Senate.

BOADICEA.

BY WILLIAM COWPER.

[WILLIAM COWPER, English poet and letter-writer, was born in 1731 and died in 1800. Always acutely sensitive and physically delicate, ill-treatment by "fagging" at school aggravated this into later insanity, from attacks of which he suffered all his life; he could not undergo the strain of the most quiet methods of earning a living, and subsisted on the charity of relatives, and at last on a pension. His best known works are hymns, "The Task," "John Gilpin's Ride," other small poems, a translation of Homer, and a collection of charming letters.]

WHEN the British warrior queen,
Bleeding from the Roman rods,
Sought with an indignant mien
Counsel of her country's gods,

Sage beneath the spreading oak
Sat the Druid, hoary chief:
Every burning word he spoke
Full of rage and full of grief.

"Princess! if our aged eyes
Weep upon thy matchless wrongs,
'Tis because resentment ties
All the terrors of our tongues.

"Rome shall perish — write the word
In the blood that she has spilt;
Perish, hopeless and abhorred,
Deep in ruin as in guilt.

"Rome, for empire far renowned,
Tramples on a thousand states;
Soon her pride shall kiss the ground —
Hark! the Gaul is at her gates!

"Other Romans shall arise,
Heedless of a soldier's name,
Sounds, not arms, shall win the prize,
Harmony the path to fame.

"Then the progeny that springs
From the forests of our land,
Armed with thunder, clad with wings,
Shall a wider world command.

"Regions Cæsar never knew
Thy posterity shall sway;
Where his eagles never flew,
None invincible as they."

Such the bard's prophetic words,
Pregnant with celestial fire,
Bending as he swept the chords
Of his sweet but awful lyre.

She, with all a monarch's pride,
Felt them in her bosom glow;
Rushed to battle, fought, and died;
Dying, hurled them at the foe.

"Ruffians, pitiless as proud,
Heaven awards the vengeance due.
Empire is on us bestowed,
Shame and ruin wait on you."

CORRESPONDENCE OF CICERO.

(Translation of G. E. Jeans.)

FROM QUINTUS METELLUS CELER IN CISALPINE GAUL TO CICERO AT ROME, EARLY IN B.C. 62.

[It was usual for a consul to address the people from the rostra on laying down his office. But on Cicero's proposing to do so, one of the new tribunes, Quintus Metellus Nepos, the agent of Pompeius, interposed his veto on the ground that he "had put Roman citizens to death without trial." Cicero retorted with an oration entitled "Metellina." This produced the following letter from the brother of Nepos, acting proconsul in Cisalpine Gaul.]

I TRUST this will find you in health.

I had certainly supposed that mutual regard, as well as our reconciliation, would have secured me from being attacked and ridiculed in my absence, and my brother Metellus from being persecuted by you in respect of his rights and property, for a mere word. Even if he found but little protection in the respect due to him, yet surely the exalted rank of our family, or my own services to your order and to the state, might have proved an adequate defence. I see now that he has been entrapped, and I have been neglected by the very men in whom such conduct was least becoming. The result is that I, the governor of a province, the general of an army, nay, actually engaged in the conduct of a war, am wearing the garb of sorrow. But since you have thus deliberately acted in defiance alike of all reason and of the courtesy of former times, you must not be surprised if you have cause to rue it. I used to hope that you were not so lightly attached to me and mine; still, for my part, neither the slight to our family nor the injuries any one may inflict upon me shall ever alienate me from the patriotic cause.

CICERO'S REPLY TO THE PRECEDING.

Allow me to express my good wishes for the prosperity of yourself and your army.

Your letter to me says you had supposed that mutual regard and our reconciliation would have secured you from attack and ridicule on my part. Now what may be the meaning of this, I fail to see quite clearly. I suspect, however, that some one may have informed you how I, when insisting in the Senate that a considerable party still felt some bitterness at my having been the instrument of saving the country, stated that you had consented, at the request of some relations whom you could not well refuse, to suppress the encomiums you had intended to honor me with in the Senate. In saying this, however, I added that you and I had shared the duty of saving the constitution; for while my part was to defend the capital from intrigues at home and intestine treason, yours was to guard Italy from open attack and secret conspiracy; but that this alliance of ours for so great and glorious a work had been strained by your relations, who, though I had been the means of procuring you a most important and distinguished charge, were afraid of allowing you to pay me any portion of regard in return. As these words of mine showed how much I had looked forward to what you would say, and how entirely I was disappointed, my argument seemed to excite a little amusement, and was followed by a certain amount of laughter, not at you, but rather at my own disappointment, and because I was acknowledging so naïvely and openly that I had eagerly looked forward to being eulogized by you. And surely what I said cannot but be considered complimentary to you if even in the fullest splendor of my renown and achievements I still longed to have some confirmation of this from your own lips.

And as to your reference to our "mutual regard," I know not what you consider reciprocity in friendship. To me it seems to mean that friendly feeling is as freely rendered as it is expected. In my own case, if I affirm that for your sake I have allowed my claim to your province to be passed over, I shall perhaps seem to you to be trifling with words; for self-interest really brought about this resolution, and every day I reap therefrom additional fruit and satisfaction. What I do affirm is this—that from the moment I had declined the province in public, I began to cast about how I could best throw it into your hands. As to the balloting between you and the others I say nothing: I merely wish to suggest a surmise that nothing whatever which my colleague did therein was without my full cognizance. Look at what followed; at the promptness with which I convoked the Senate that very day when the balloting was over, and the ample terms I must have used in your favor when you yourself told me that my speech not only paid a high compliment to you, but was very disparaging to your colleagues. Nay, the very decree of the Senate passed that day is couched in such terms that as long as it remains extant my services to you cannot possibly be ignored. Then, again, I must beg you to recollect how after your departure I spoke about you in the Senate, how I addressed public meetings and how I corresponded with you; and when you have taken all these things into account, then I must ask you to judge for yourself whether you can fairly say that your late demonstration of coming to Rome was meeting me in a "mutual" spirit.

With reference to what you say about a "reconciliation" between us, I do not understand why you should speak of reconciliation where there has never been an interruption of friendship. As to your brother Metellus not deserving, as you say, to be exposed to attacks from me and all for a single word, I must ask you first of all to believe that I strongly sympathize with your motives in this, and the kindly feeling shown in your brotherly affection, but then to pardon me if for my country's good I have ever opposed your brother; for in patriotism I yield not even to the most ardent of mankind. Nay more, if it prove that I have but been defending my own position against a cruelly unjust attack he himself made upon me, you may well be satisfied that I do not make a personal complaint to you of your brother's injustice to me. For when I had ascertained that he was deliberately aiming a blow delivered with the whole weight of his position as tribune in order to crush me, I applied to your wife Claudia [sister of the notorious Clodius] and your sister Mucia, whose liking for me, owing to my intimacy with Pompeius, I had often tested, to deter him from the wrong he proposed doing me. In spite of this, as I know you must have heard, on the last day of the year he put upon me — the consul who had saved the Republic — an insult which the vilest citizen in the most beggarly office was never yet exposed to; actually debarring me when laying down my office from the privilege of a farewell address. Yet this insult of his resulted in a signal honor to myself; for as he would make no concession except that I might take the oath, I pronounced aloud the truest and noblest of oaths, and as loudly the people in answer solemnly attested that I had sworn this truly.

Yet though I had received this signal affront, on that very day I sent an amicable message to Metellus by our common friends to entreat him to reconsider his attitude toward me. His answer to them was that this was no longer open to him, for that not long before he had publicly expressed his opinion that a man who had punished others unheard ought himself to be debarred the privilege of being heard in his turn. How dignified! how patriotic! A punishment inflicted by the Senate, with the approval of every respectable citizen, on those who would have burned Rome, murdered her magistrates and Senate, and fanned the flames of a widespreading war, he would now inflict on one to whom it was granted to deliver the Senate from murder, the capital from fire, and Italy from civil war.

And so I withstood your brother to his face, for having to answer him in the Senate on the 1st of January about the political situation, I took care to let him know that he would find in me a most resolute and determined opponent. Upon the 3d of January, when he opened the debate upon his proposal, about one word out of three in his speech was aimed at me or contained a threat against me. Nothing could possibly be more deliberate than his attempt to effect my ruin by any means whatever, and that not by legal trial or argument, but by a violent and bullying attack. Had I not brought spirit and determination to meet his reckless onslaught, who could fail to believe that the resolution displayed in my consulship was due not to deliberation but to chance?

If you have not hitherto been aware that such was Metellus's attitude toward me, you have a right to think that your brother has suppressed some of the most material circumstances from you; while, if he has taken you into his counsels at all, I have a right to be credited with having shown great moderation of temper for not remonstrating with you about this very incident. And if you see now that I was driven into resentment, not by a word from Metellus, as you represent it, but by his deliberate and bitter animosity against myself, let me point out to you my forbearance, if indifference and laxity about resenting so malicious an attack deserves the name of forbearance. Never once did I speak for any motion attacking your brother in the Senate at all: whenever attention was called to his conduct I supported without rising those who seemed most moderate in their proposals. I will add this too, that though after what had passed I had no reason to take any trouble about the matter, I regarded without disfavor, and indeed supported to the best of my humble ability, the proposal for granting a bill of indemnity to my assailant, on the ground that he was your brother.

Thus you see that what I have done was not to "attack" your brother, but to repel your brother's attacks. Nor has my attachment to yourself been light as you say; on the contrary, it has been so strong, that my friendship for you remains as ever, though I have had to submit to the loss of your attentions. Even at this very moment, all that I have to say in answer to your (I might almost call it) threatening letter is this: I for my own part not only make allowance for your indignation, but applaud it highly, for my own feelings teach me to remember how strong is the influence of brotherly ties. From you I claim a similar candor in judging of my sense of wrong. If I have been bitterly, cruelly, and unreasonably attacked by one who is dear to you, I claim the admission not only that I was in the right to maintain my position, but that I might have called on you—yes, and your army too—to have aided me in so doing. I have ever been desirous of calling you my friend; I have now striven hard to convince you that I have been a true friend to you. To those sentiments I still adhere, and so long as you permit me will continue to retain them. I would far rather forget my resentment against your brother from love for you, than permit that resentment in the smallest degree to impair our good will to each other.

FROM CICERO AT DYRRACHIUM (OR THESSALONICA) TO HIS WIFE TERENTIA AT ROME, NOV. 25, B.C. 58.

I send this with love, my dearest Terentia, hoping that you, and my little Tullia, and my Marcus, are all well.

From the letters of several people and the talk of everybody I hear that your courage and endurance are simply wonderful, and that no troubles of body or mind can exhaust your energy. How unhappy I am to think that with all your courage and devotion, your virtues and gentleness, you should have fallen into such misfortunes for me! And my sweet Tullia too,—that she who was once so proud of her father should have to undergo such troubles owing to him! And what shall I say about my boy Marcus, who ever since his faculties of perception awoke has felt the sharpest pangs of sorrow and misery? Now could I but think, as you tell me, that all this comes in the natural course of things, I could bear it a little easier. But it has been brought about entirely by my own fault, for thinking myself loved by those who were jealous of me, and turning from those who wanted to win me. Yet had I but used my own judgment, and not let the advice of friends who were either weak or perfidious weigh so much with me, we might now be living in perfect happiness.

As it is, since my friends encourage me to hope, I will take care not to let my health be a bad ally to your exertions. I quite understand what a task it is, and how much easier it was to stop at home than to get back there again; still if we are sure of all the tribunes, and of Lentulus (supposing him to be as zealous as he seems), certainly if we are sure of Pompeius as well, and Cæsar too, the case cannot be desperate. About our slaves, we will let it be as you tell me your friends have advised. As to this place, it is true that the epidemic has only just passed off, but I escaped infection while it lasted. Plancius, who has been exceedingly kind, presses me to stay with him, and will not part with me yet. My own wish was to be in some more out-of-the-way place in Epirus, where Hispo and his soldiers would not be likely to come, but Plancius will not yet hear of my going; he hopes he may yet manage to return to Italy himself when I do. If I should ever see that day, and once more return to your arms, and feel that I was restored to you and to myself, I should admit that both your loyalty and mine had been abundantly repaid. Piso's kindness, constancy, and affection are beyond all description. May he reap satisfaction from it—reputation I feel certain he will.

As to Quintus, I make no complaint of you, but you are the very two people I should most wish to see living in harmony, especially since there are none too many of you left to me. I have thanked the people you wanted me to, and mentioned that my information came from you. As to the block of houses which you tell me you mean to sell—why, good heavens! my dear Terentia, what is to be done! Oh, what troubles I have to bear! And if misfortune continues to persecute us, what will become of our poor boy? I cannot continue to write—my tears are too much for me; nor would I wish to betray you into the same emotion. All I can say is, that if our friends act up to their bounden duty we shall not want for money; if they do not, you will not be able to succeed only with your own. Let our unhappy fortunes, I entreat you, be a warning to us not to ruin our boy, who is ruined enough already. If he only has something to save him from absolute want, a fair share of talent and a fair share of luck will be all that is necessary to win anything else. Do not neglect your health, and send me messengers with letters to let me know what goes on, and how you yourselves are faring. My suspense in any case cannot now be long. Give my love to my little Tullia and my Marcus.

Dyrrachium, Nov. 26.

P.S. — I have moved to Dyrrachium because it is not only a free city, but very much in my interest, and quite near to Italy; but if the bustle of the place proves an annoyance I shall betake myself elsewhere and give you notice.

FROM CÆSAR AT BRUNDISIUM TO CICERO AT FORMIÆ,
EARLY IN MARCH, B.C. 49.

I had barely seen our friend Furnius, and was not able to talk to him or hear his news without inconvenience to myself, being, as I am, in a great hurry, indeed actually on the march, and with my troops already gone on in advance, but I could not let the opportunity pass of writing you a letter and getting him to convey it, and with my thanks; though I have done this already many times, and it seems to me I shall have to do so many times more, so well do you deserve this from me. I must particularly request that, since I trust shortly to come to the neighborhood of Rome, I may see you there to avail myself of your judgment, your influence, your position, and your assistance in all that concerns me. To return to the point: excuse this hurry and the shortness of my letter; anything further you will be able to hear from Furnius.

CICERO'S REPLY TO THE PRECEDING, MARCH 18 (?).

Upon reading your letter — which I received through our friend Furnius — requesting me to stay somewhere within reach of town, I was not so much surprised at your expressing a wish to avail yourself of my “judgment” and my “position,” as doubtful of the meaning you intended to convey by my “influence and assistance.” Hope, however, led me to the interpretation of concluding that — as might be expected from one of your admirable, indeed preëminent wisdom — you were anxious that negotiations should be opened on behalf of the tranquillity, peace, and union of our countrymen; for which purpos I could not but reflect that both by my nature and the part I have played I was well enough suited.

If this be really the case, and if you feel any desire at all to show due consideration for my friend Pompeius, and bring him into harmony once more both with yourself and with the Republic, you will assuredly find no one better fitted for that task than I am; who have ever given pacific counsels to him, and to the Senate so soon as I found an opportunity. Since the appeal to arms not only have I not taken the smallest part in this war, but have come to the conclusion that by the war a grievous wrong is done to yourself, against whose rightful privileges, granted by special favor of the Roman people, the attacks of the spiteful and jealous were being directed. But just as at that time I not only personally supported your rightful position, but counseled everybody else to lend you their assistance, so now it is the rights of Pompeius for which I am deeply concerned; because it is now several years since I first selected you men as the objects of my most loyal devotion, with whom I would choose to be united, as I now am, in ties of the closest friendship. Consequently I have this request to make—say rather I implore and beseech you with every plea that I can use—even among your weighty anxieties to allot some time to this consideration also, how I may be allowed by your kind indulgence to show myself a man of honor; one, in short, who is grateful and affectionate from the recollection of the very great kindness he once received. Even if this concerned me alone, I should still flatter myself that to me you would grant it; but in my opinion it equally concerns both your own honor and the public welfare, that I, who am one of a very small number, should still be retained in the best possible position for promoting the harmony of you two and of our fellow-countrymen.

Though I have already thanked you in the matter of Lentulus for being the preserver of a man who had once been mine, yet, for my part, on reading the letter which he has sent me, written in a spirit of the warmest gratitude for your liberality and kindness, I even pictured myself as owing to you the safety which you have granted to him; and if this shows you that I am of a grateful nature in his case, secure me, I entreat you, some opportunity of showing myself no less so in the case of Pompeius.

FROM CICERO AT FORMIÆ TO ATTICUS AT ROME,
MARCH 26, B.C. 49.

[Pompeius having finally escaped from Brundisium, Cæsar was now returning to Rome by way of Capua and Sinuessa. From the former place he sent the letter here enclosed to Atticus, in answer to one from Cicero expressing admiration of his clemency at Corfinium.]

Though I have nothing to write to you about, I send this letter that I may leave no day without one. It is reported that Cæsar will stop on the 27th at Sinuessa. I now—the 26th—have received a letter from him, wherein this time he “hopes to avail himself of my means of assistance,” not merely my “assistance,” as in the previous one. In answer to a letter to express my admiration of the generosity he showed at Corfinium, he replied as follows:

Copy of Cæsar's Letter.

You know me too well not to keep up your character as an augur by divining that nothing is more entirely alien from my nature than cruelty: I will add that while my decision is in itself a great source of pleasure to me, to find my conduct approved by you is a triumph of gratification. Nor does the fact at all disturb me that those people whom I have set at liberty are reported to have gone their ways only to renew the attack upon me; because there is nothing I wish more than that I may ever be as true to my own character as they to theirs.

May I hope that you will be near town when I am there, so that I may as usual avail myself in everything of your advice and means of assistance? Let me assure you that I am charmed beyond everything with your relation Dolabella, to whom I shall acknowledge myself indeed indebted for this obligation; for his kindness is so great, and his feeling and affection for me are such, that he cannot possibly do otherwise.

FROM MARCUS ANTONIUS TO CICERO, MAY 1 (?), B.C. 49.

But that I have a strong affection for you—much greater indeed than you suppose—I should not have been greatly alarmed at the rumor which has been published about you, particularly as I took it to be a false one: but my liking for you is far too great to allow me to pretend that even the report, however false, is not to me a matter of great concern. That you will really go across seas I cannot believe when I think of the deep regard you entertain for Dolabella and his admirable wife, your daughter Tullia, and of the equal regard in which you yourself are held by us all, to whom, upon my word and honor, your name and position are perhaps dearer than they are to yourself. Nevertheless I did not think myself at liberty as a friend to be indifferent to the remarks even of unscrupulous people; and I have been the more eager to act because I hold that the part I have to play has been made more difficult by the coolness between us, which originated more in jealousy on my part than in any injury on yours. For I beg you will thoroughly assure yourself of this, that there is no one for whom my affection is greater than for yourself, with the exception of my dear friend Cæsar; and that among Cæsar's most honored friends a place is reserved for Marcus Cicero.

Therefore, my dear Cicero, I entreat you to keep your future action entirely open: reject the spurious honor of a man who did you a great wrong that he might afterward lay you under an obligation: do not, on the other hand, fly from one who, even if he shall lose his love for you—and that can never be the case—will none the less make it his study that you should be secure and rich in honors. I have been careful to send Calpurnius, who is my most intimate friend, to you, to let you know that your life and high position are to me a matter of deep concern.

[On the same day Philotimus brought a letter from Cæsar, of which this is a copy.]

FROM CÆSAR TO CICERO, APRIL 16, B.C. 49.

Though I had fully made up my mind that you would do nothing rashly, nothing imprudently, still I was so far impressed by the rumors in some quarters as to think it my duty to write to you, and ask it as a favor due to our mutual regard that you will not take any step, now that the scale is so decisively turned, which you would not have thought it necessary to take even though the balance still stood firm. For it will really be both a heavier blow to our friendship, and a step on your part still less judicious for yourself, if you are to be thought not even to have bowed the knee to success—for things seem to have fallen out as entirely favorably for us as disastrously for them,—nor yet to have been drawn by attachment to a particular cause—for that has undergone no change since you decided to remain aloof from their counsels,—but to have passed a stern judgment on some act of mine, than which, from you, no more painful thing could befall me; and I claim the right of our friendship to entreat that you will not take this course.

Finally, what more suitable part is there for a good, peace-loving man, and good citizen, than to keep aloof from civil dissensions? There were not a few who admired this course, but could not adopt it by reason of its danger: you, after having duly weighed both the conclusions of friendship and the unmistakable evidence of my whole life, will find that there is no safer nor more honorable course than to keep entirely aloof from the struggle.

I am writing this while on the march, April 16.

FROM SERVIUS SULPICIUS RUFUS AT ATHENS TO CICERO
AT ROME APRIL (?), B.C. 45.

On the Death of His Daughter.

For some time after I had received the information of the death of your daughter Tullia you may be sure that I bore it sadly and heavily, as much indeed as was right for me. I felt that I shared that terrible loss with you; and that had I but been where you are, you on your part would not have found me neglectful, and I on mine should not have failed to come to you and tell you myself how deeply grieved I am. And though it is true that consolations of this nature are painful and distressing, because those [dear friends and relations] upon whom the task naturally devolves are themselves afflicted with a similar burden, and incapable even of attempting it without many tears, so that one would rather suppose them in need of the consolations of others for themselves than capable of doing this kind office to others, yet nevertheless I have decided to write to you briefly such reflections as have occurred to me on the present occasion; not that I imagine them to be ignored by you, but because it is possible that you may be hindered by your sorrow from seeing them as clearly as usual.

What reason is there why you should allow the private grief which has befallen you to distress you so terribly? Recollect how fortune has hitherto dealt with us: how we have been bereft of all that ought to be no less dear to men than their own children — of country, position, rank, and every honorable office. If one more burden has now been laid upon you, could any addition be made to your pain? Or is there any heart that having been trained in the school of such events ought not now to be steeled by use against emotion, and think everything after them to be comparatively light?

Or it is for her sake, I suppose, that you are grieving? How many times must you have arrived at the same conclusion as that into which I too have frequently fallen, that in these days theirs is not the hardest lot who are permitted painlessly to exchange their life for the grave! Now what was there at the present time that could attach her very strongly to life? what hope? what fruition? what consolation for the soul? The prospect of a wedded life with a husband chosen from our young men of rank? Truly, one would think it was always in your power to choose a son-in-law of a position suitable to your rank out of our young men, one to whose keeping you would feel you could safely entrust the happiness of a child! Or that of being a joyful mother of children, who would be happy in seeing them succeeding in life; able by their own exertions to maintain in its integrity all that was bequeathed them by their father; intending gradually to rise to all the highest offices of the state; and to use that liberty to which they were born for the good of their country and the service of their friends? Is there any one of these things that has not been taken away before it was given? But surely it is hard to give up one's children? It is hard; but this is harder still — that they should bear and suffer what we are doing.

A circumstance which was such as to afford me no light consolation I cannot but mention to you, in the hope that it may be allowed to contribute equally toward mitigating your grief. As I was returning from Asia, when sailing from Ægina in the direction of Megara, I began to look around me at the various places by which I was surrounded. Behind me was Ægina, in front Megara; on the right, the Piræus, on the left,

Corinth; all of them towns, that in former days were most magnificent, but are now lying prostrate and in ruins before one's eyes. "Ah me," I began to reflect to myself, "we poor feeble mortals, who can claim but a short life in comparison, complain as though a wrong was done us if one of our number dies in the course of nature, or has met his death by violence; and here in one spot are lying stretched out before me the corpses of so many cities! Servius, be master of yourself, and remember that it is the lot of man to which you have been born." Believe me, I found myself in no small degree strengthened by these reflections.* Let me advise you too, if you think good, to keep this reflection before your eyes. How lately at one and the same time have many of our most illustrious men fallen! how grave an encroachment has been made on the rights of the sovereign people of Rome! every province in the world has been convulsed with the shock: if the frail life of a tender woman has gone too, who being born to the common lot of man must needs have died in a few short years, even if the time had not come for her now, are you thus utterly stricken down?

Do you then also recall your feelings and your thoughts from dwelling on this subject, and, as beseems your character, bethink yourself rather of this: that she has lived as long as life was of value to her; that she has passed away only together with her country's freedom; that she lived to see her father elected praetor, consul, augur; that she had been the wife of young men of the first rank; that after enjoying well-

* Byron has alluded to this celebrated description in a passage ("Childe Harold," iv. 44) which will be well worth comparing here in extenso:—

"Wandering in youth I traced the path of him,
 The Roman friend of Rome's least mortal mind,
 The friend of Tully: as my bark did skim
 The bright blue waters with a fanning wind
 Came Megara before me, and behind
 Ægina lay, Piræus on the right,
 And Corinth on the left: I lay reclined
 Along the prow, and saw all these unite
 In ruin, even as he had seen the desolate sight.
 "For time hath not rebuilt them, but upreared
 Barbaric dwellings on their shattered site,
 Which only make more mourned and more endeared
 The few last rays of their far-scattered light,
 And the crushed relics of their vanished might.
 The Roman saw these tombs in his own age,
 These sepulchres of cities which excite
 Sad wonder, and his yet surviving page
 The moral lesson bears drawn from such pilgrimage."

nigh every blessing that life can offer, she left it only when the Republic itself was falling. The account is closed, and what have you, what has she, to charge of injustice against Fate?

In a word, forget not that you are Cicero — that you are he who was always wont to guide others and give them good advice; and be not like those quack physicians who when others are sick boast that they hold the key of the knowledge of medicine, to heal themselves are never able; but rather minister to yourself with your own hand the remedies which you are in the habit of prescribing for others, and put them plainly before your own soul. There is no pain so great but the lapse of time will lessen and assuage it: it is not like yourself to wait till this time comes instead of stepping forward by your philosophy to anticipate that result. And if even those who are low in the grave have any consciousness at all, such was her love for you and her tenderness for all around her, that surely she does not wish to see this in you. Make this a tribute then to her who is dead; to all your friends and relations who are mourning in your grief; and make it to your country also, that if in anything the need should arise she may be able to trust to your energy and guidance. Finally, since such is the condition we have come to that even this consideration must perforce be obeyed, do not let your conduct induce any one to believe that it is not so much your daughter as the circumstances of the Republic and the victory of others which you are deploring.

I shrink from writing to you of greater length upon this subject, lest I should seem to be doubtful of your own good sense; allow me therefore to put before you one more consideration, and then I will bring my letter to a close. We have seen you not once but many times bearing prosperity most gracefully, and gaining yourself great reputation thereby: let us see at last that you are capable also of bearing adversity equally well, and that it is not in your eyes a heavier burden than it ought to seem; lest we should think that of all the virtues this is the only one in which you are wanting.

As for myself, when I find you are more composed in mind I will send you information about all that is being done in these parts, and the state in which the province finds itself at present. Farewell.

FROM CICERO AT ASTURA TO SERVIUS SULPICIUS RUFUS
AT ATHENS.Reply to the Preceding.

Yes, my dear Servius, I could indeed wish you had been with me, as you say, at the time of my terrible trial. How much it was in your power to help me if you had been here by sympathizing with, and, I may almost say, sharing equally in, my grief I readily perceive from the fact that after reading your letter I now feel myself considerably more composed; for not only was all that you wrote just what is best calculated to sooth affliction, but you yourself in comforting me showed that you too had no little pain at heart. Your son Servius, however, has made it clear by every kindly attention which such an occasion would permit of, both how great his respect was for myself, and also how much pleasure his kind feeling for me was likely to give you; and you may be sure that, while such attentions from him have often been more pleasant to me, they have never made me more grateful.

It is not, however, only your arguments and your equal share, I may almost call it, in this affliction which comforts me, but also your authority; because I hold it shame in me not to be bearing my trouble in a way that you, a man endowed with such wisdom, think it ought to be borne. But at times I do feel broken down, and I scarcely make any struggle against my grief, because those consolations fail me which under similar calamities were never wanting to any of those other people whom I put before myself as models for imitation. Both Fabius Maximus, for example, when he lost a son who had held the consulship, the hero of many a famous exploit; and Lucius Paulus, from whom two were taken in one week; and your own kinsman Gallus; and Marcus Cato, who was deprived of a son of the rarest talents and the rarest virtue, — all these lived in times when their individual affliction was capable of finding a solace in the distinctions they used to earn from their country.

For me, however, after being stripped of all those distinctions which you yourself recall to me, and which I had won for myself by unparalleled exertions, only that one solace remained which has been torn away. My thoughts were not diverted by work for my friends, or by the administration of affairs of state; there was no pleasure in pleading in the courts; I could not bear the very sight of the Senate House; I felt, as was indeed too true, that I had lost all the harvest of both my industry and my success. But whenever I wanted to recollect that all this was shared with you and other friends I could name, and whenever I was breaking myself in and forcing my spirit to bear these things with patience, I always had a refuge to go to where I might find peace, and in whose words of comfort and sweet society I could rid me of all my pains and griefs. Whereas now under this terrible blow even those old wounds which seemed to have healed up are bleeding afresh; for it is impossible for me now to find such a refuge from my sorrows at home in the business of the State, as in those days I did in that consolation of home which was always in store whenever I came away sad from thoughts of State, to seek for peace in her happiness.

And so I stay away both from home and from public life; because home now is no more able to make up for the sorrow I feel when I think of our country than our country is for my sorrow at home. I am therefore looking forward all the more eagerly to your coming, and long to see you as early as that may possibly be; no greater alleviation can be offered me than a meeting between us for friendly intercourse and conversation. I hope, however, that your return is to take place, as I hear it is, very shortly. As for myself, while there are abundant reasons for wanting to see you as soon as possible, my principal one is in order that we may discuss together beforehand the best method of conduct for present circumstances, which must entirely be adapted to the wishes of one man only, a man nevertheless who is far-seeing and generous, and, also, as I think I have thoroughly ascertained, to me not at all ill disposed and to you extremely friendly. But admitting this, it is still a matter for much deliberation what is the line, I do not say of action, but of keeping quiet, that we ought by his good leave and favor to adopt.

Farewell.

FROM CICERO AT THE HOUSE OF MATIUS NEAR ROME, TO ATTICUS AT ROME, ABOUT APRIL 7, B.C. 44.

On the Murder of Cæsar.

I have come on a visit to the subject of our conversation this morning. Desperation can go no farther. "The entanglement was hopeless: for if so great a genius could find no way out of it, who will find it now? In short all," he said, "was lost." And I am not sure but that he may be right, only he says it with satisfaction, and is positive about a rising in Gaul before three weeks are over. As for himself, "since the Ides of March he had not entered into conversation with anybody at all except Lepidus," and the summary was that "it would be impossible for such deeds to get off so lightly." Oh for your delicacy, Oppius! He grieves for his friend just as truly, and yet never says a word that could offend any good patriot. But enough of this. Please do not think it a trouble to write me any news there may be—there is much indeed that I am expecting to hear;—among other things whether it is fully known about Sextus Pompeius, and above all what about our friend Brutus? As to him indeed, I hear from the friend with whom I am staying that Cæsar used to say, "It makes all the difference what our friend sets his heart on, but whatever he does it is with his whole heart;" and that he had impressed him with this characteristic in his speech for Deiotarus at Nicæa; he seemed to be speaking with such extreme vehemence and freedom from restraint. Another fact—for I like jotting anything down just as it occurs to me:—quite recently when I called upon him at the entreaty of Sestius, and was sitting there waiting till I should be summoned, they say he remarked: "Can I have any doubt that I must be intensely disliked when Marcus Cicero is sitting there, and cannot come in and see me at his own convenience? Yet if anybody is easy-tempered it is he; but for all that I have no doubt he hates me bitterly." This and plenty more of the kind for you. But to my point: will you write anything, whatever it is, not only an important thing, but any little one as well? I for my part will omit nothing at all.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

BY SHAKESPEARE.

[WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE was born 1564, and died 1616.]

ACT III. — SCENE I. AFTER THE MURDER.

Brutus — Let no man abide this deed,
But we the doers.

Reënter TREBONIUS.

Cassius —
Where's Antony?

Trebonius — Fled to his house amazed:
Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,
As it were doomsday.

Brutus —
Fates! we will know your pleasures:
That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,
And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cassius —
Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life,
Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Brutus —
Grant that, and then is death a benefit:
So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridged
His time of fearing death. — Stoop, Romans, stoop,
And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood
Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords:
Then walk we forth, even to the market place:
And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,
Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cassius —
Stoop, then, and wash. How many ages hence,
Shall this our lofty scene be acted over,
In states unborn, and accents yet unknown!

Brutus —
How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
That now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust!

Cassius — So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the knot of us be called
The men that gave our country liberty.

Decius —

What, shall we forth?

Cassius —

Ay, every man away:
Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels
With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Brutus —

Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's.

Servant —

Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;
Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down:
And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say,
Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;
Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:
Say, I love Brutus, and I honor him;
Say, I feared Cæsar, honored him, and loved him;
If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony
May safely come to him, and be resolved
How Cæsar hath deserved to lie in death,
Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead
So well as Brutus living; but will follow
The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus
Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,
With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Brutus —

Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;
I never thought him worse.
Tell him, so please him come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied; and, by my honor,
Depart untouched.

Servant —

I'll fetch him presently. [Exit.

Brutus —

I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cassius —

I wish we may; but yet have I a mind,
That fears him much; and my misgiving still Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Reënter ANTONY.

Brutus —

But here comes Antony. — Welcome, Mark Antony.

Antony —

O mighty Cæsar! Dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? — Fare thee well, —

I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
 Who else must be let blood, who else is rank :
 If I myself, there is no hour so fit
 As Cæsar's death's hour ; nor no instrument
 Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich
 With the most noble blood of all this world.
 I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard,
 Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,
 Fulfill your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
 I shall not find myself so apt to die ;
 No place will please me so, no mean of death,
 As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
 The choice and master spirits of this age.

Brutus —

O Antony ! beg not your death of us.
 Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
 As, by our hands, and this our present act,
 You see we do ; yet see you but our hands,
 And this the bleeding business they have done :
 Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful ;
 And pity to the general wrong of Rome
 (As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity)
 Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
 To you our swords have leaden points, Mark Antony :
 Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts,
 Of brother's temper, do receive you in
 With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cassius —

Your voice shall be as strong as any man's,
 In the disposing of new dignities.

Brutus —

Only be patient, till we have appeased
 The multitude, beside themselves with fear,
 And then we will deliver you the cause,
 Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
 Have thus proceeded.

Antony —

I doubt not of your wisdom.

Let each man render me his bloody hand :
 First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you : —
 Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand ;
 Now, Decius Brutus, yours ; — now yours, Metellus ;
 Yours, Cinna ; — and, my valiant Casca, yours ; —
 Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.
 Gentlemen all, — alas ! what shall I say ?
 My credit now stands on such slippery ground,

That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,
 Either a coward, or a flatterer. —
 That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 'tis true :
 If then thy spirit look upon us now,
 Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death,
 To see thy Antony making his peace,
 Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,
 Most noble! in the presence of thy corse?
 Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
 Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
 It would become me better, than to close
 In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
 Pardon me, Julius! — Here wast thou bayed, brave hart;
 Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand,
 Signed in thy spoil, and crimsoned in thy lethe.
 O world! thou wast the forest to this hart;
 And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee. —
 How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
 Dost thou here lie!

Cassius —

Mark Antony, —

Antony — Pardon me, Caius Cassius,
 The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;
 Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.

Cassius —

I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;
 But what compáct mean you to have with us?
 Will you be pricked in number of our friends;
 Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Antony —

Therefore I took your hands; but was, indeed,
 Swayed from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.
 Friends am I with you all, and love you all;
 Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,
 Why, and wherein, Cæsar was dangerous.

Brutus —

Or else were this a savage spectacle:
 Our reasons are so full of good regard,
 That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,
 You should be satisfied.

Antony —

That's all I seek:
 And am moreover suitor, that I may
 Produce his body to the market place;
 And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
 Speak in the order of his funeral.

Brutus —

You shall, Mark Antony.

Cassius —

Brutus, a word with you. —

You know not what you do; Do not consent, [Aside.

That Antony speak in his funeral:

Know you how much the people may be moved

By that which he will utter?

Brutus —

By your pardon;

I will myself into the pulpit first,

And show the reason of our Cæsar's death:

What Antony shall speak, I will protest

He speaks by leave and by permission;

And that we are contented, Cæsar shall

Have all true rites, and lawful ceremonies.

It shall advantage more, than do us wrong.

Cassius —

I know not what may fall; I like it not.

Brutus —

Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body.

You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,

But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar;

And say, you do't by our permission;

Else shall you not have any hand at all

About his funeral: And you shall speak

In the same pulpit whereto I am going,

After my speech is ended.

Antony —

Be it so;

I do desire no more.

Brutus —

Prepare the body then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but ANTONY.

Antony —

O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,

That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,

That ever lived in the tide of times.

Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!

Over thy wounds now do I prophesy —

Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,

To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue; —

A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;

Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,

Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,

And dreadful objects so familiar,

That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
 Their infants quartered with the hands of war;
 All pity choked with custom of fell deeds:
 And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
 With Até by his side, come hot from hell,
 Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
 Cry, Havoc! and let slip the dogs of war;
 That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
 With carrion men groaning for burial.

SCENE II. — THE FORUM.

BRUTUS and a throng of Citizens. BRUTUS goes into the Rostrum.

Citizen —

The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!

Brutus —

Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent that ye may hear; believe me for mine honor; and have respect to mine honor, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer, — Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves; than that Cæsar were dead to live all free men? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honor him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: There is tears, for his love; joy, for his fortune; honor, for his valor; and death, for his ambition. Who is here so base that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

Citizens — None, Brutus, none. [Several speaking at once.]

Brutus — Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar, than you should do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol: his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offenses enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter ANTONY and others, with CÆSAR's body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony: Who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth: As which of you shall not? With this I depart: That as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

Citizens —

Live, Brutus, live! live!

1 Citizen —

Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2 Citizen —

Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 Citizen —

Let him be Cæsar.

4 Citizen —

Cæsar's better parts

Shall now be crowned in Brutus.

1 Citizen —

We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamors.

Brutus —

My countrymen, ——

2 Citizen —

Peace; silence! Brutus speaks.

1 Citizen —

Peace, ho!

Brutus —

Good countrymen, let me depart alone,

And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:

Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech

Tending to Cæsar's glories: which Mark Antony,

By our permission, is allowed to make.

I do entreat you not a man depart,

Save I alone, till Antony have spoke.

[Exit.]

Citizens —

Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Citizen —

Let him go up into the public chair;

We'll hear him: — Noble Antony, go up.

Antony —

For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you.

4 Citizen —

What does he say of Brutus?

3 Citizen —

He says, for Brutus' sake,

He finds himself beholden to us all.

4 Citizen —

'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1 Citizen —

This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Citizen — Nay, that's certain :
We are blessed that Rome is rid of him.

2 Citizen —
Peace ; let us hear what Antony can say.

Antony —
You gentle Romans, ——

Citizens — Peace, ho ! let us hear him.

Antony —
Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears ;
I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.
The evil, that men do, lives after them ;
The good is oft interred with their bones ;
So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus
Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious ;
If it were so, it was a grievous fault ;
And grievously hath Cæsar answered it.
Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
(For Brutus is an honorable man ;
So are they all, all honorable men ;)
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.
He was my friend, faithful and just to me :
But Brutus says he was ambitious ;
And Brutus is an honorable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill :
Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious ?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept :
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff :
Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious ;
And Brutus is an honorable man.
You all did see, that on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition ?
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious ;
And, sure, he is an honorable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once, not without cause ;
What cause withholds you then to mourn for him ?
O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason ! — bear with me ;
My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

1 Citizen —
Methinks there is much reason in his sayings.

And being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,
 It will inflame you, it will make you mad :
 'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs,
 For if you should, O, what would come of it !

4 Citizen —

Read the will ; we will hear it, Antony,
 You shall read us the will ; Cæsar's will.

Antony —

Will you be patient ? Will you stay awhile ?
 I have o'ershot myself, to tell you of it.
 I fear, I wrong the honorable men,
 Whose daggers have stabbed Cæsar : I do fear it.

4 Citizen —

They were traitors : Honorable men !

Citizens —

The will ! the testament !

2 Citizen —

They were villains, murderers : The will ! read the will !

Antony —

You will compel me then to read the will ?
 Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar,
 And let me show you him that made the will.
 Shall I descend ? And will you give me leave ?

Citizens —

Come down.

2 Citizen —

Descend.

[He comes down from the pulpit

3 Citizen —

You shall have leave.

4 Citizen —

A ring ; stand round.

1 Citizen —

Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2 Citizen —

Room for Antony ; — most noble Antony.

Antony —

Nay, press not so upon me ; stand far off.

Citizens —

Stand back ! room ! bear back !

Antony —

If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.
 You all do know this mantle : I remember
 The first time ever Cæsar put it on ;
 'Twas on a summer's evening in his tent ;
 That day he overcame the Nervii : —

Look! in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through:
 See, what a rent the envious Casca made:
 Through this, the well-beloved Brutus stabbed:
 And, as he plucked his cursed steel away,
 Mark how the blood of Cæsar followed it,
 As rushing out of doors, to be resolved
 If Brutus so unkindly knocked, or no;
 For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:
 Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar loved him!
 This was the most unkindest cut of all:
 For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
 Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
 Quite vanquished him: then burst his mighty heart;
 And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
 Even at the base of Pompey's statua,
 Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
 O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
 Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
 Whilst bloody treason flourished over us.
 O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
 The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.
 Kind souls, what, weep you, when you but behold
 Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here,
 Here is himself, marred, as you see, with traitors

1 Citizen —

O piteous spectacle!

2 Citizen —

O noble Cæsar!

3 Citizen —

O woeful day!

4 Citizen —

O traitors, villains!

1 Citizen —

O most bloody sight!

2 Citizen —

We will be revenged.

Citizens —

Revenge; about, — seek, — burn, — fire, — kill — slay! — let not a traitor live.

Antony —

Stay, countrymen.

1 Citizen —

Peace there: — Hear the noble Antony.

2 Citizen — We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Antony —

Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They, that have done this deed, are honorable ;
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
That made them do it ; they are wise and honorable,
And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts ;
I am no orator, as Brutus is :
But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend : and that they know full well
That gave me public leave to speak of him.
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood : I only speak right on ;
I tell you that, which you yourselves do know ;
Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths.
And bid them speak for me : But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Citizens —

We'll mutiny.

1 Citizen —

We'll burn the house of Brutus.

2 Citizen —

Away then, come, seek the conspirators.

Antony —

Yet hear me, countrymen, yet hear me speak.

Citizens —

Peace, ho ! Hear Antony, most noble Antony.

Antony —

Why, friends, you go to do you know not what :
Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserved your loves ?
Alas, you know not : — I must tell you then : —
You have forgot the will I told you of.

Citizens —

Most true ; — the will ; — let's stay, and hear the will.

Antony —

Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal.
To every Roman citizen he gives,
To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.

2 Citizen —

Most noble Cæsar ! — we'll revenge his death.

3 Citizen —

O royal Cæsar!

Antony —

Hear me with patience.

Citizens —

Peace, ho!

Antony —

Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbors, and new-planted orchards,
On this side Tyber: he hath left them you,
And to your heirs forever; common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Cæsar: When comes such another?

1 Citizen —

Never, never; — Comè, away, away:
We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.

2 Citizen —

Go, fetch fire.

3 Citizen —

Pluck down benches.

4 Citizen —

Pluck down forms, windows, anything.

[Exeunt Citizens with the body]

Antony —

Now let it work. Mischief, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt!

Enter A SERVANT.

How now, fellow?

Servant —

Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Antony —

Where is he?

Servant —

He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Antony —

And thither will I straight to visit him:
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us anything.

Servant —

I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Antony —

Belike they had some notice of the people,
How I had moved them. Bring me to Octavius.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

BY PLUTARCH.

[PLUTARCH: A Greek writer of biographies and miscellaneous works; born about A.D. 50. He came of a wealthy and distinguished family and received a careful philosophical training at Athens under the Peripatetic philosopher Ammonius. After this he made several journeys, and stayed a considerable time in Rome, where he enjoyed friendly intercourse with persons of distinction, and conducted the education of the future Emperor Hadrian. He died about A.D. 120 in his native town, in which he held the office of archon and priest of the Pythian Apollo. His fame as an author is founded upon the celebrated "Parallel Lives," consisting of the biographies of forty-six Greeks and Romans, divided into pairs. Each pair contains the life of a Greek and a Roman, and generally ends with a comparison of the two. Plutarch's other writings, short treatises on a great variety of subjects, are grouped under the title of "Morals."]

THE grandfather of Antony was the famous pleader, whom Marius put to death for having taken part with Sylla. His father was Antony, surnamed of Crete, not very famous or distinguished in public life, but a worthy good man, and particularly remarkable for his liberality, as may appear from a single example. He was not very rich, and was for that reason checked in the exercise of his good nature by his wife. A friend that stood in need of money came to borrow of him. Money he had none, but he bade a servant bring him water in a silver basin, with which, when it was brought, he wetted his face, as if he meant to shave, and, sending away the servant upon another errand, gave his friend the basin, desiring him to turn it to his purpose. And when there was afterwards a great inquiry for it in the house, and his wife was in a very ill humor, and was going to put the servants one by one to the search, he acknowledged what he had done, and begged her pardon.

Antony grew up a very beautiful youth, but by the worst of misfortunes he fell into the acquaintance and friendship of Curio, a man abandoned to his pleasures, who, to make Antony's dependence upon him a matter of greater necessity, plunged him into a life of drinking and dissipation, and led him through a course of such extravagance, that at that early age he ran into debt to the amount of two hundred and fifty talents [$300,000]. For this sum, Curio became his surety; on hearing which, the elder Curio, his father, drove Antony out of his house. After this, for some short time he took part with Clodius, the most insolent and outrageous demagogue of the time, in his course of violence and disorder; but getting weary before long of his madness, and apprehensive of the powerful party forming against him, he left Italy and traveled into Greece, where he spent his time in military exercises and in the study of eloquence. He took most to what was called the Asiatic taste in speaking, which was then at its height, and was in many ways suitable to his ostentatious, vaunting temper, full of empty flourishes and unsteady efforts for glory. . . .

In all the great and frequent skirmishes and battles, he gave continual proofs of his personal valor and military conduct. Nor was his humanity towards the deceased Archelaus less taken notice of. He had been formerly his guest and acquaintance, and as he was now compelled, he fought him bravely while alive; but on his death, sought out his body and buried it with royal honors. The consequence was that he left behind him a great name among the Alexandrians, and all who were serving in the Roman army looked upon him as a most gallant soldier.

He had also a very good and noble appearance; his beard was well grown, his forehead large, and his nose aquiline, giving him altogether a bold, masculine look, that reminded people of the faces of Hercules in paintings and sculptures. It was moreover an ancient tradition that the Antonys were descended from Hercules, by a son called Anton; and this opinion he thought to give credit to also by the fashion of his dress.

What might seem to some very insupportable, his vaunting, his raillery, his drinking in public, sitting down by the men as they were taking their food, and eating, as he stood, off the common soldiers' tables, made him the delight and pleasure of the army. In love affairs also he was very agreeable: he gained many friends by the assistance he gave them in theirs, and took other people's raillery upon his own with good humor. And his generous ways, his open and lavish hand in gifts and favors to his friends and fellow-soldiers, did a great deal for him in his first advance to power, and after he had become great, long maintained his fortunes when a thousand follies were hastening their overthrow. One instance of his liberality I must relate. He had ordered payment to one of his friends of twenty-five decies [over $1,000,000]; and his steward, wondering at the extravagance of the sum, laid all the silver in a heap, as he should pass by. Antony, seeing the heap, asked what it meant; his steward replied, "The money you have ordered to be given to your friend." So, perceiv-ing the man's malice, said he : " I thought the decies had been much more : 'tis too little ; let it be doubled."

When the Roman state finally broke up into two hostile factions, the aristocratical party joining Pompey, who was in the city, and the popular side seeking help from Cæsar, who was at the head of an army in Gaul, Curio, the friend of Antony, having changed his party and devoted himself to Cæsar, brought over Antony also to his service. . . .

Antony was not long in getting the hearts of the soldiers, joining with them in their exercises, and for the most part living amongst them, and making them presents to the utmost of his abilities ; but with all others he was unpopular enough. He was too lazy to pay attention to the complaints of persons who were injured ; he listened impatiently to petitions, and he had an ill name for familiarity with other people's wives. In short, the government of Cæsar (which, so far as he was concerned himself, seemed like anything rather than a tyranny) got a bad repute through his friends. And of these friends, Antony, as he had the largest trust and committed the greatest errors, was thought the most deeply in fault. . . .

This triumvirate was very hateful to the Romans, and Antony most of all bore the blame, because he was older than Cæsar and had greater authority than Lepidus ; and withal he was no sooner settled in his affairs, but he turned to his luxurious and dissolute way of living. Besides the ill reputation he gained by his general behavior, it was some considerable disadvantage to him his living in the house of Pompey the Great, who had been as much admired for his temperance and his sober, citizenlike habits of life, as ever he was for having triumphed three times. They could not without anger see the doors of that house shut against magistrates, officers, and envoys, who were shamefully refused admittance, while it was filled inside with players, jugglers, and drunken flatterers, upon whom were spent the greatest part of the wealth which violence and cruelty procured. For they did not limit themselves to the forfeiture of the estates of such as were proscribed, defrauding the widows and families, nor were they contented with laying on every possible kind of tax and imposition ; but hearing that several sums of money were as well by strangers as citizens of Rome deposited with the vestal virgins, they went and took the money away by force. When it was manifest that nothing would ever be enough for Antony, Cæsar at last called for a division of property.

Leaving Lucius Censorinus in Greece, he crossed over into Asia, and there laid his hands on the stores of accumulated wealth, while kings waited at his door, and queens were rivaling one another, who should make him the greatest presents or appear most charming in his eyes. Thus, whilst Cæsar in Rome was wearing out his strength amidst seditions and wars, Antony, with nothing to do amidst the enjoyments of peace, let his passions carry him easily back to the old course of life that was familiar to him. A set of harpers and pipers, Anaxenor and Xuthus, the dancing man, Metrodorus, and a whole Bacchic rout of the like Asiatic exhibitors, far outdoing in license and buffoonery the pests that had followed him out of Italy, came in and possessed the court; the thing was past patience, wealth of all kinds being wasted on objects like these. The whole of Asia was like the city in Sophocles, loaded, at one time,

— with incense in the air,
Jubilant songs, and outcries of despair.

When he made his entry into Ephesus, the women met him dressed up like Bacchantes, and the men and boys like Satyrs and Fauns, and throughout the town nothing was to be seen but spears wreathed about with ivy, harps, flutes, and psalteries, while Antony in their songs was Bacchus, the Giver of Joy, and the Gentle. And so indeed he was to some, but to far more the Devourer and the Savage; for he would deprive persons of worth and quality of their fortunes to gratify villains and flatterers, who would sometimes beg the estates of men yet living, pretending they were dead, and, obtaining a grant, take possession. He gave his cook the house of a Magnesian citizen, as a reward for a single highly successful supper; and at last, when he was proceeding to lay a second whole tribute on Asia, Hybreas, speaking on behalf of the cities, took courage, and told him broadly, but aptly enough for Antony's taste, "if you can take two yearly tributes, you can doubtless give us a couple of summers and a double harvest time;" and put it to him in the plainest and boldest way, that Asia had raised two hundred thousand talents for his service: "If this has not been paid to you, ask your collectors for it; if it has, and is all gone, we are ruined men."

These words touched Antony to the quick, who was simply ignorant of most things that were done in his name; not that he was so indolent, as he was prone to trust frankly in all about him. For there was much simplicity in his character; he was slow to see his faults, but when he did see them, was extremely repentant, and ready to ask pardon of those he had injured; prodigal in his acts of reparation, and severe in his punishments, but his generosity was much more extravagant than his severity; his raillery was sharp and insulting, but the edge of it was taken off by his readiness to submit to any kind of repartee; for he was as well contented to be rallied, as he was pleased to rally others. And this freedom of speech was, indeed, the cause of many of his disasters. He never imagined those who used so much liberty in their mirth would flatter or deceive him in business of consequence, not knowing how common it is with parasites to mix their flattery with boldness, as confectioners do their sweetmeats with something biting, to prevent the sense of satiety. Their freedoms and impertinences at table were designed expressly to give to their obsequiousness in council the air of being not complaisance, but conviction.

Such being his temper, the last and crowning mischief that could befall him came in the love of Cleopatra, to awaken and kindle to fury passions that as yet lay still and dormant in his nature, and to stifle and finely corrupt any elements that yet made resistance in him of goodness and a sound judgment. He fell into the snare thus. When making preparation for the Parthian war, he sent to command her to make her personal appearance in Cilicia, to answer an accusation that she had given great assistance, in the late wars, to Cassius. Dellius, who was sent on this message, had no sooner seen her face, and remarked her adroitness and subtlety in speech, but he felt convinced that Antony would not so much as think of giving any molestation to a woman like this; on the contrary, she would be the first in favor with him. So he set himself at once to pay his court to the Egyptian, and gave her his advice, "to go," in the Homeric style, to Cilicia, "in her best attire," and bade her fear nothing from Antony, the gentlest and kindest of soldiers.

She had some faith in the words of Dellius, but more in her own attractions; which, having formerly recommended her to Cæsar and the young Cnæus Pompey, she did not doubt might prove yet more successful with Antony. Their acquaintance was with her when a girl, young and ignorant of the world; but she was to meet Antony in the time of life when women's beauty is most splendid, and their intellects are in full maturity.

She made great preparation for her journey, of money, gifts and ornaments of value, such as so wealthy a kingdom might afford, but she brought with her her surest hopes in her own magic arts and charms.

She received several letters, both from Antony and from his friends, to summon her, but she took no account of these orders; and at last, as if in mockery of them, she came sailing up the river Cydnus, in a barge with gilded stern and outspread sails of purple, while oars of silver beat time to the music of flutes and fifes and harps. She herself lay all along under a canopy of cloth of gold, dressed as Venus in a picture, and beautiful young boys, like painted Cupids, stood on each side to fan her. Her maids were dressed like Sea Nymphs and Graces, some steering at the rudder, some working at the ropes. The perfumes diffused themselves from the vessel to the shore, which was covered with multitudes, part following the galley up the river on either bank, part running out of the city to see the sight. The market place was quite emptied, and Antony at last was left alone sitting upon the tribunal, while the word went through all the multitude, that Venus was come to feast with Bacchus, for the common good of Asia. On her arrival, Antony sent to invite her to supper. She thought it fitter he should come to her; so, willing to show his good humor and courtesy, he complied, and went. He found the preparations to receive him magnificent beyond expression, but nothing so admirable as the great number of lights; for on a sudden there was let down altogether so great a number of branches with lights in them so ingeniously disposed, some in squares, and some in circles, that the whole thing was a spectacle that has seldom been equaled for beauty.

The next day, Antony invited her to supper, and was very desirous to outdo her as well in magnificence as contrivance; but he found he was altogether beaten in both, and was so well convinced of it, that he was himself the first to jest and mock at his poverty of wit, and his rustic awkwardness. She, perceiving that his raillery was broad and gross, and savored more of the soldier than the courtier, rejoined in the same taste, and fell into it at once, without any sort of reluctance or reserve. For her actual beauty, it is said, was not in itself so remarkable that none could be compared with her, or that no one could see her without being struck by it, but the contact of her presence, if you lived with her, was irresistible; the attraction of her person, joining with the charm of her conversation, and the character that attended all she said or did, was something bewitching. It was a pleasure merely to hear the sound of her voice, with which, like an instrument of many strings, she could pass from one language to another; so that there were few of the barbarian nations that she answered by an interpreter; to most of them she spoke herself, as to the Ethiopians, Troglodytes, Hebrews, Arabians, Syrians, Medes, Parthians, and many others, whose language she had learnt; which was all the more surprising because most of the kings, her predecessors, scarcely gave themselves the trouble to acquire the Egyptian tongue, and several of them quite abandoned the Macedonian.

Antony was so captivated by her, that, while Fulvia his wife maintained his quarrels in Rome against Cæsar by actual force of arms, and the Parthian troops, commanded by Labienus (the king's generals having made him commander in chief), were assembled in Mesopotamia, and ready to enter Syria, he could yet suffer himself to be carried away by her to Alexandria, there to keep holiday, like a boy, in play and diversion, squandering and fooling away in enjoyments, that most costly, as Antiphon says, of all valuables, time.

They had a sort of company, to which they gave a particular name, calling it that of the Inimitable Livers. The members entertained one another daily in turn, with an extravagance of expenditure beyond measure or belief. Philotas, a physician of Amphissa, who was at that time a student of medicine in Alexandria, used to tell my grandfather Lamprias, that having some acquaintance with one of the royal cooks, he was invited by him, being a young man, to come and see the sumptuous preparations for supper. So he was taken into the kitchen, where he admired the prodigious variety of all things; but particularly, seeing eight wild boars roasting whole, says he, "Surely you have a great number of guests." The cook laughed at his simplicity, and told him there were not above twelve to sup, but that every dish was to be served up just roasted to a turn, and if anything was but one minute ill timed, it was spoiled; "And," said he, "maybe Antony will sup just now, maybe not this hour, maybe he will call for wine, or begin to talk, and will put it off. So that," he continued, "it is not one, but many suppers must be had in readiness, as it is impossible to guess at his hour."

This was Philotas' story; who related besides, that he afterwards came to be one of the medical attendants of Antony's eldest son by Fulvia, and used to be invited pretty often, among other companions, to his table, when he was not supping with his father. One day another physician had talked loudly, and given great disturbance to the company, whose mouth Philotas stopped with this sophistical syllogism: "In some states of fever the patient should take cold water; every one who has a fever is in some state of fever; therefore in a fever cold water should always be taken." The man was quite struck dumb, and Antony's son, very much pleased, laughed aloud, and said, "Philotas, I make you a present of all you see there," pointing to a sideboard covered with plate. Philotas thanked him much, but was far enough from ever imagining that a boy of his age could dispose of things of that value. Soon after, however, the plate was all brought to him, and he was desired to set his mark upon it; and when he put it away from him, and was afraid to accept the present, "What ails the man?" said he that brought it; "do you know that he who gives you this is Antony's son, who is free to give it, if it were all gold? but if you will be advised by me, I would counsel you to accept of the value in money from us; for there may be amongst the rest some antique or famous piece of workmanship, which Antony would be sorry to part with." These anecdotes, my grandfather told us, Philotas used frequently to relate.

To return to Cleopatra; Plato admits four sorts of flattery, but she had a thousand. Were Antony serious or disposed to mirth, she had at any moment some new delight or charm to meet his wishes; at every turn she was upon him, and let him escape her neither by day nor by night. She played at dice with him, drank with him, hunted with him; and when he exercised in arms, she was there to see. At night she would go rambling with him to disturb and torment people at their doors and windows, dressed like a servant woman, for Antony also went in servant's disguise, and from these expeditions he often came home very scurvily answered, and sometimes even beaten severely, though most people guessed who it was.

However, the Alexandrians in general liked it all well enough, and joined good-humoredly and kindly in his frolic and play, saying they were much obliged to Antony for acting his tragic parts at Rome, and keeping his comedy for them.

It would be trifling without end to be particular in his follies, but his fishing must not be forgotten. He went out one day to angle with Cleopatra, and, being so unfortunate as to catch nothing in the presence of his mistress, he gave secret orders to the fishermen to dive under water, and put fishes that had been already taken upon his hooks; and these he drew so fast that the Egyptian perceived it. But, feigning great admiration, she told everybody how dexterous Antony was, and invited them next day to come and see him again. So, when a number of them had come on board the fishing boats, as soon as he had let down his hook, one of her servants was beforehand with his divers, and fixed upon his hook a salted fish from Pontus. Antony, feeling his line give, drew up the prey, and when, as may be imagined, great laughter ensued, "Leave," said Cleopatra, "the fishing rod, general, to us poor sovereigns of Pharos and Canopus; your game is cities, provinces, and kingdoms."

* * * * *

When Octavia returned from Athens, Cæsar, who considered she had been injuriously treated, commanded her to live in a separate house; but she refused to leave the house of her husband, and entreated him unless he had already resolved, upon other motives, to make war with Antony, that he would on her account let it alone; it would be intolerable to have it said of the two greatest commanders in the world, that they had involved the Roman people in a civil war, the one out of passion for, the other out of resentment about, a woman. And her behavior proved her words to be sincere. She remained in Antony's house as if he were at home in it, and took the noblest and most generous care, not only of his children by her, but of those by Fulvia also. She received all the friends of Antony that came to Rome to seek office or upon any business, and did her utmost to prefer their requests to Cæsar; yet this her honorable deportment did but, without her meaning it, damage the reputation of Antony; the wrong he did to such a woman made him hated.

Nor was the division he made among his sons at Alexandria less unpopular; it seemed a theatrical piece of insolence and contempt of his country.

* * * * *

When it was resolved to stand to a fight at sea, they set fire to all the Egyptian ships except sixty; and of these the best and largest, from ten banks down to three, he manned with twenty thousand full-armed men, and two thousand archers. Here it is related that a foot captain, one that had fought often under Antony, and had his body all mangled with wounds, exclaimed: "O my general, what have our wounds and swords done to displease you, that you should give your confidence to rotten timbers? Let Egyptians and Phœnicians contend at sea, give us the land, where we know well how to die upon the spot or gain the victory." To which he answered nothing, but, by his look and motion of his hand seeming to bid him be of good courage, passed forwards, having already, it would seem, no very sure hopes, since when the masters proposed leaving the sails behind them, he commanded they should be put aboard, "For we must not," said he, "let one enemy escape."

That day and the three following the sea was so rough they could not engage. But on the fifth there was a calm, and they fought,—Antony commanding with Publicola the right, and Cœlius the left squadron, Marcus Octavius and Marcus Insteius the center. Cæsar gave the charge of the left to Agrippa, commanding in person on the right. As for the land forces, Canidius was general for Antony, Taurus for Cæsar, both armies remaining drawn up in order along the shore. Antony in a small boat went from one ship to another, encouraging his soldiers, and bidding them stand firm, and fight as steadily on their large ships as if they were on land. The masters he ordered that they should receive the enemy lying still as if they were at anchor, and maintain the entrance of the port, which was a narrow and difficult passage. Of Cæsar they relate, that, leaving his tent and going round, while it was yet dark, to visit the ships, he met a man driving an ass, and asked him his name. He answered him that his own name was "Fortunate, and my ass," says he, "is called Conqueror." And afterwards, when he disposed the beaks of the ships in that place in token of his victory, the statue of this man and his ass in bronze were placed amongst them. After examining the rest of his fleet, he went in a boat to the right wing, and looked with much admiration at the enemy lying perfectly still in the straits, in all appearance as if they had been at anchor. For some considerable length of time he actually thought they were so, and kept his own ships at rest, at a distance of about eight furlongs from them. But about noon a breeze sprang up from the sea, and Antony's men, weary of expecting the enemy so long, and trusting to their large tall vessels, as if they had been invincible, began to advance the left squadron. Cæsar was overjoyed to see them move, and ordered his own right squadron to retire, that he might entice them out to sea as far as he could, his design being to sail round and round, and so with his light and well-manned galleys to attack these huge vessels, which their size and their want of men made slow to move and difficult to manage.

When they engaged, there was no charging or striking of one ship by another, because Antony's, by reason of their great bulk, were incapable of the rapidity required to make the stroke effectual, and, on the other side, Cæsar's durst not charge head to head on Antony's, which were all armed with solid masses and spikes of brass; nor did they like even to run in on their sides, which were so strongly built with great squared pieces of timber, fastened together with iron bolts, that their vessels' beaks would easily have been shattered upon them. So that the engagement resembled a land fight, or, to speak yet more properly, the attack and defense of a fortified place; for there were always three or four vessels of Cæsar's about one of Antony's, pressing them with spears, javelins, poles, and several inventions of fire, which they flung among them, Antony's men using catapults also, to pour down missiles from wooden towers. Agrippa drawing out the squadron under his command to out-flank the enemy, Publicola was obliged to observe his motions, and gradually to break off from the middle squadron, where some confusion and alarm ensued, while Arruntius engaged them. But the fortune of the day was still undecided, and the battle equal, when, on a sudden, Cleopatra's sixty ships were seen hoisting sail and making out to sea in full flight, right through the ships that were engaged. For they were placed behind the great ships, which, in breaking through, they put into disorder. The enemy was astonished to see them sailing off with a fair wind towards Peloponnesus. Here it was that Antony showed to all the world that he was no longer actuated by the thoughts and motives of a commander or a man, or indeed by his own judgment at all, and what was once said as a jest, that the soul of a lover lives in some one else's body, he proved to be a serious truth. For, as if he had been born part of her, and must move with her wheresoever she went, as soon as he saw her ship sailing away, he abandoned all that were fighting and spending their lives for him, and put himself aboard a galley of five banks of oars, taking with him only Alexander of Syria and Scellias, to follow her that had so well begun his ruin and would hereafter accomplish it.

She, perceiving him to follow, gave the signal to come aboard. So, as soon as he came up with them, he was taken into the ship. But without seeing her or letting himself be seen by her, he went forward by himself, and sat alone, without a word, in the ship's prow, covering his face with his two hands. In the mean while, some of Cæsar's light Liburnian ships, that were in pursuit, came in sight. But on Antony's commanding to face about, they all gave back except Eurycles the Laconian, who pressed on, shaking a lance from the deck, as if he meant to hurl it at him. Antony, standing at the prow, demanded of him, "Who is this that pursues Antony?" "I am," said he, "Eurycles, the son of Lachares, armed with Cæsar's fortune to revenge my father's death." Lachares had been condemned for a robbery, and beheaded by Antony's orders. However, Eurycles did not attack Antony, but ran with his full force upon the other admiral galley (for there were two of them), and with the blow turned her round, and took both her and another ship, in which was a quantity of rich plate and furniture. So soon as Eurycles was gone, Antony returned to his posture, and sat silent, and thus he remained for three days, either in anger with Cleopatra, or wishing not to upbraid her, at the end of which they touched at Tænarus. Here the women of their company succeeded first in bringing them to speak, and afterwards to eat and sleep together. And, by this time, several of the ships of burden and some of his friends began to come in to him from the rout, bringing news of his fleet's being quite destroyed, but that the land forces, they thought, still stood firm. So that he sent messengers to Canidius to march the army with all speed through Macedonia into Asia. And, designing himself to go from Tænarus into Africa, he gave one of the merchant ships, laden with a large sum of money, and vessels of silver and gold of great value, belonging to the royal collections, to his friends, desiring them to share it amongst them, and provide for their own safety. They refusing his kindness with tears in their eyes, he comforted them with all the goodness and humanity imaginable, entreating them to leave him, and wrote letters in their behalf to Theophilus, his steward, at Corinth, that he would provide for their secu rity, and keep them concealed till such time as they could make their peace with Cæsar. This Theophilus was the father of Hipparchus, who had such interest with Antony, who was the first of all his freedmen that went over to Cæsar, and who settled afterwards at Corinth. In this posture were affairs with Antony.

But at Actium, his fleet, after a long resistance to Cæsar, and suffering the most damage from a heavy sea that set in right ahead, scarcely, at four in the afternoon, gave up the contest, with the loss of not more than five thousand men killed, but of three hundred ships taken, as Cæsar himself has recorded. Only a few had known of Antony's flight; and those who were told of it could not at first give any belief to so incredible a thing as that a general who had nineteen entire legions and twelve thousand horse upon the seashore, could abandon all and fly away; and he, above all, who had so often experienced both good and evil fortune, and had in a thousand wars and battles been inured to changes. His soldiers, however, would not give up their desires and expectations, still fancying he would appear from some part or other, and showed such a generous fidelity to his service, that when they were thoroughly assured that he was fled in earnest, they kept themselves in a body seven days, making no account of the messages that Cæsar sent to them. But at last, seeing that Canidius himself, who commanded them, was fled by night, and that all their officers had quite abandoned them, they gave way, and made their submission to the conqueror. . . .

Cleopatra was busied in making a collection of all varieties of poisonous drugs, and, in order to see which of them were the least painful in the operation, she had them tried upon prisoners condemned to die. But, finding that the quick poisons always worked with sharp pains, and that the less painful were slow, she next tried venomous animals, and watched with her own eyes whilst they were applied, one creature to the body of another. This was her daily practice, and she pretty well satisfied herself that nothing was comparable to the bite of the asp, which, without convulsion or groaning, brought on a heavy drowsiness and lethargy, with a gentle sweat on the face, the senses being stupefied by degrees; the patient, in appearance, being sensible of no pain, but rather troubled to be disturbed or awakened, like those that are in a profound natural sleep. . . .

Cæsar would not listen to any proposals for Antony, but he made answer to Cleopatra, that there was no reasonable favor which she might not expect, if she put Antony to death, or expelled him from Egypt. He sent back with the ambassadors his own freedman, Thyrsus, a man of understanding, and not at all ill-qualified for conveying the messages of a youthful general to a woman so proud of her charms and possessed with the opinion of the power of her beauty. But by the long audiences he received from her, and the special honors which she paid him, Antony's jealousy began to be awakened; he had him seized, whipped, and sent back, writing Cæsar word that the man's busy, impertinent ways had provoked him; in his circumstances he could not be expected to be very patient: "But if it offend you," he added, "you have got my freedman, Hipparchus, with you; hang him up and scourge him to make us even." But Cleopatra, after this, to clear herself, and to allay his jealousies, paid him all the attentions imaginable. When her own birthday came, she kept it as was suitable to their fallen fortunes; but his was observed with the utmost prodigality of splendor and magnificence, so that many of the guests sat down in want, and went home wealthy men. Meantime, continual letters came to Cæsar from Agrippa, telling him his presence was extremely required at Rome.

And so the war was deferred for a season. But, the winter being over, he began his march, — he himself by Syria, and his captains through Africa. Pelusium being taken, there went a report as if it had been delivered up to Cæsar by Seleucus, not without the consent of Cleopatra; but she, to justify herself, gave up into Antony's hands the wife and children of Seleucus to be put to death. She had caused to be built, joining to the temple of Isis, several tombs and monuments of wonderful height, and very remarkable for the workmanship; thither she removed her treasure, her gold, silver, emeralds, pearls, ebony, ivory, cinnamon, and, after all, a great quantity of torchwood and tow. Upon which Cæsar began to fear lest she should, in a desperate fit, set all these riches on fire; and, therefore, while he was marching towards the city with his army, he omitted no occasion of giving her new assurances of his good intentions. He took up his position in the Hippodrome, where Antony made a fierce sally upon him, routed the horse, and beat them back into their trenches, and so returned with great satisfaction to the palace, where, meeting Cleopatra, armed as he was, he kissed her, and commended to her favor one of his men, who had most signalized himself in the fight, to whom she made a present of a breastplate and helmet of gold; which he having received, went that very night and deserted to Cæsar.

After this, Antony sent a new challenge to Cæsar to fight him hand-to-hand; who made him answer that he might find several other ways to end his life; and he, considering with himself that he could not die more honorably than in battle, resolved to make an effort both by land and sea. At supper, it is said, he bade his servants help him freely, and pour him out wine plentifully, since to-morrow, perhaps, they should not do the same, but be servants to a new master, whilst he should lie on the ground, a dead corpse, and nothing. His friends that were about him wept to hear him talk so; which he perceiving, told them he would not lead them to a battle in which he expected rather an honorable death than either safety or victory. That night, it is related, about the middle of it, when the whole city was in a deep silence and general sadness, expecting the event of the next day, on a sudden was heard the sound of all sorts of instruments, and voices singing in tune, and the cry of a crowd of people shouting and dancing, like a troop of bacchanals on its way. This tumultuous procession seemed to take its course right through the middle of the city to the gate nearest the enemy; here it became the loudest, and suddenly passed out. People who reflected considered this to signify that Bacchus, the god whom Antony had always made it his study to copy and imitate, had now forsaken him.

As soon as it was light, he marched his infantry out of the city, and posted them upon a rising ground, from whence he saw his fleet make up to the enemy. There he stood in expectation of the event; but as soon as the fleets came near to one another, his men saluted Cæsar's with their oars; and on their responding, the whole body of the ships, forming into a single fleet, rowed up direct to the city. Antony had no sooner seen this, but the horse deserted him, and went over to Cæsar; and his foot being defeated, he retired into the city, crying out that Cleopatra had betrayed him to the enemies he had made for her sake. She, being afraid lest in his fury and despair he might do her a mischief, fled to her monument, and letting down the falling doors, which were strong with bars and bolts, she sent messengers who should tell Antony she was dead. He, believing it, cried out, "Now, Antony, why delay longer? Fate has snatched away the only pretext for which you could say you desired yet to live." Going into his chamber, and there loosening and opening his coat of armor, "I am not," said he, "troubled, Cleopatra, to be at present bereaved of you, for I shall soon be with you; but it distresses me that so great a general should be found of a tardier courage than a woman." He had a faithful servant, whose name was Eros; he had engaged him formerly to kill him when he should think it necessary, and now he put him to his promise. Eros drew his sword, as designing to kill him, but, suddenly turning round, he slew himself. And as he fell dead at his feet, "It is well done, Eros," said Antony; "you show your master how to do what you had not the heart to do yourself;" and so he ran himself into the belly, and laid himself upon the couch. The wound, however, was not immediately mortal; and the flow of blood ceasing when he lay down, presently he came to himself, and entreated those that were about him to put him out of his pain; but they all fled out of the chamber, and left him crying out and struggling, until Diomede, Cleopatra's secretary, came to him having orders from her to bring him into the monument.

When he understood she was alive, he eagerly gave order to the servants to take him up, and in their arms was carried to the door of the building. Cleopatra would not open the door, but, looking from a sort of window, she let down ropes and cords, to which Antony was fastened; and she and her two women, the only persons she had allowed to enter the monument, drew him up. Those that were present say that nothing was ever more sad than this spectacle, to see Antony, covered all over with blood and just expiring, thus drawn up, still holding up his hands to her, and lifting up his body with the little force he had left. As, indeed, it was no easy task for the women; and Cleopatra, with all her force, clinging to the rope, and straining with her head to the ground, with difficulty pulled him up, while those below encouraged her with their cries, and joined in all her efforts and anxiety. When she had got him up, she laid him on the bed, tearing all her clothes, which she spread upon him; and, beating her breast with her hands, lacerating herself, and disfiguring her own face with the blood from his wounds, she called him her lord, her husband, her emperor, and seemed to have pretty nearly forgotten all her own evils, she was so intent upon his misfortunes. Antony, stopping her lamentations as well as he could, called for wine to drink, either that he was thirsty, or that he imagined that it might put him the sooner out of pain. When he had drunk, he advised her to bring her own affairs, so far as might be honorably done, to a safe conclusion, and that, among all the friends of Cæsar, she should rely on Proculeius; that she should not pity him in this last turn of fate, but rather rejoice for him in remembrance of his past happiness, who had been of all men the most illustrious and powerful, and in the end had fallen not ignobly, a Roman by a Roman overcome.

Just as he breathed his last, Proculeius arrived from Cæsar; for when Antony gave himself his wound, and was carried in to Cleopatra, one of his guards, Dercetæus, took up Antony's sword and hid it; and, when he saw his opportunity, stole away to Cæsar, and brought him the first news of Antony's death, and withal showed him the bloody sword. Cæsar, upon this, retired into the inner part of his tent, and giving some tears to the death of one that had been nearly allied to him in marriage, his colleague in empire, and companion in so many wars and dangers, he came out to his friends, and, bringing with him many letters, he read to them with how much reason and moderation he had always addressed himself to Antony, and in return what overbearing and arrogant answers he received. Then he sent Proculeius to use his utmost endeavors to get Cleopatra alive into his power; for he was afraid of losing a great treasure, and, besides, she would be no small addition to the glory of his triumph. She, however, was careful not to put herself in Proculeius' power; but from within her monument, he standing on the outside of a door, on the level of the ground, which was strongly barred, but so that they might well enough hear one another's voice, she held a conference with him; she demanding that her kingdom might be given to her children, and he bidding her to be of good courage, and trust Cæsar in everything.

Having taken particular notice of the place, he returned to Cæsar, and Gallus was sent to parley with her the second time; who, being come to the door, on purpose prolonged the conference, while Proculeius fixed his scaling ladders in the window through which the women had pulled up Antony. And so entering, with two men to follow him, he went straight down to the door where Cleopatra was discoursing with Gallus. One of the two women who were shut up in the monument with her cried out, "Miserable Cleopatra, you are taken prisoner!" Upon which she turned quick, and, looking at Proculeius, drew out her dagger which she had with her to stab herself. But Proculeius ran up quickly, and, seizing her with both his hands, "For shame," said he, "Cleopatra; you wrong yourself and Cæsar much, who would rob him of so fair an occasion of showing his clemency, and would make the world believe the most gentle of commanders to be a faithless and implacable enemy." And so, taking the dagger out of her hand, he also shook her dress to see if there were any poison hid in it. After this, Cæsar sent Epaphroditus, one of his freedmen, with orders to treat her with all the gentleness and civility possible, but to take the strictest precautions to keep her alive. . . .

Many kings and great commanders made petition to Cæsar for the body of Antony, to give him his funeral rites: but he would not take away his corpse from Cleopatra, by whose hands he was buried with royal splendor and magnificence, it being granted to her to employ what she pleased on his funeral. In this extremity of grief and sorrow, and having inflamed and ulcerated her breasts with beating them, she fell into a high fever, and was very glad of the occasion, hoping, under this pretext, to abstain from food, and so to die in quiet without interference. She had her own physician, Olympus, to whom she told the truth, and asked his advice and help to put an end to herself, as Olympus himself has told us, in a narrative which he wrote of these events. But Cæsar, suspecting her purpose, took to menacing language about her children, and excited her fears for them, before which engines her purpose shook and gave way, so that she suffered those about her to give her what meat or medicine they pleased.

Some few days after, Cæsar himself came to make her a visit and comfort her. She lay then upon her pallet bed in undress, and, on his entering in, sprang up from off her bed, having nothing on but the one garment next her body, and flung herself at his feet, her hair and face looking wild and disfigured, her voice quivering, and her eyes sunk in her head. The marks of the blows she had given herself were visible about her bosom, and altogether her whole person seemed no less afflicted than her soul. But, for all this, her old charm, and the boldness of her youthful beauty, had not wholly left her, and, in spite of her present condition, still sparkled from within, and let itself appear in all the movements of her countenance. Cæsar, desiring her to repose herself, sat down by her; and, on this opportunity, she said something to justify her actions, attributing what she had done to the necessity she was under, and to her fear of Antony; and when Cæsar, on each point, made his objections, and she found herself confuted, she broke off at once into language of entreaty and deprecation, as if she desired nothing more than to prolong her life. And at last, having by her a list of her treasure, she gave it into his hands; and when Seleucus, one of her stewards, who was by, pointed out that various articles were omitted, and charged her with secreting them, she flew up and caught him by the hair, and struck him several blows on the face. Cæsar smiling and withholding her, "Is it not very hard, Cæsar," said she, "when you do me the honor to visit me in this condition I am in, that I should be accused by one of my own servants of laying by some women's toys, not meant to adorn, be sure, my unhappy self, but that I might have some little present by me to make your Octavia and your Livia, that by their intercession I might hope to find you in some measure disposed to mercy?" Cæsar was pleased to hear her talk thus, being now assured that she was desirous to live. And, therefore, letting her know that the things she had laid by she might dispose of as she pleased, and his usage of her should be honorable above her expectation, he went away, well satisfied that he had overreached her; but, in fact, he was himself deceived.

There was a young man of distinction among Cæsar's companions, named Cornelius Dolabella. He was not without a certain tenderness for Cleopatra, and sent her word privately, as she had besought him to do, that Cæsar was about to return through Syria, and that she and her children were to be sent on within three days. When she understood this, she made her request to Cæsar that he would be pleased to permit her to make oblations to the departed Antony; which being granted, she ordered herself to be carried to the place where he was buried, and there, accompanied by her women, she embraced his tomb with tears in her eyes, and spoke in this manner: "O dearest Antony," said she, "it is not long since that with these hands I buried you; then they were free, now I am a captive, and pay these last duties to you with a guard upon me, for fear that my just griefs and sorrows should impair my servile body, and make it less fit to appear in their triumph over you. No further offerings or libations expect from me; these are the last honors that Cleopatra can pay your memory, for she is to be hurried away far from you. Nothing could part us whilst we lived, but death seems to threaten to divide us. You, a Roman born, have found a grave in Egypt; I, an Egyptian, am to seek that favor, and none but that, in your country. But if the gods below, with whom you now are, either can or will do anything (since those above have betrayed us), suffer not your living wife to be abandoned; let me not be led in triumph to your shame, but hide me and bury me here with you, since, amongst all my bitter misfortunes, nothing has afflicted me like this brief time that I have lived away from you."

Having made these lamentations, crowning the tomb with garlands and kissing it, she gave orders to prepare her a bath, and, coming out of the bath, she lay down and made a sumptuous meal. And a country fellow brought her a little basket, which the guards intercepting and asking what it was, the fellow put the leaves which lay uppermost aside, and showed them it was full of figs; and on their admiring the largeness and beauty of the figs, he laughed, and invited them to take some, which they refused, and, suspecting nothing, bade him carry them in. After her repast, Cleopatra sent to Cæsar a letter which she had written and sealed; and, putting everybody out of the monument but her two women, she shut the doors. Cæsar, opening her letter, and finding pathetic prayers and entreaties that she might be buried in the same tomb with Antony, soon guessed what was doing. At first he was going himself in all haste, but, changing his mind, he sent others to see. The thing had been quickly done. The messengers came at full speed, and found the guards apprehensive of nothing; but on opening the doors they saw her stone-dead, lying upon a bed of gold, set out in all her royal ornaments. Iras, one of her women, lay dying at her feet, and Charmion, just ready to fall, scarce able to hold up her head, was adjusting her mistress' diadem. And when one that came in said angrily, "Was this well done of your lady, Charmion?" "Extremely well," she answered, "and as became the descendant of so many kings;" and as she said this, she fell down dead by the bedside.

Some relate that an asp was brought in amongst those figs and covered with the leaves, and that Cleopatra had arranged that it might settle on her before she knew, but, when she took away some of the figs and saw it, she said, "So here it is," and held out her bare arm to be bitten. Others say that it was kept in a vase, and that she vexed and pricked it with a golden spindle till it seized her arm. But what really took place is known to no one. Since it was also said that she carried poison in a hollow bodkin, about which she wound her hair; yet there was not so much as a spot found, or any symptom of poison upon her body, nor was the asp seen within the monument; only something like the trail of it was said to have been noticed on the sand by the sea, on the part towards which the building faced and where the windows were. Some relate that two faint puncture marks were found on Cleopatra's arm, and to this account Cæsar seems to have given credit; for in his triumph there was carried a figure of Cleopatra, with an asp clinging to her. Such are the various accounts. But Cæsar, though much disappointed by her death, yet could not but admire the greatness of her spirit, and gave order that her body should be buried beside Antony with royal splendor and magnificence. Her women also received honorable burial by his directions.

CLEOPATRA.

By WILLIAM WETMORE STORY.

[WILLIAM WETMORE STORY, lawyer, sculptor, and poet, was born in Salem, Mass., February 19, 1819, the son of Joseph Story, the eminent jurist. After graduating at Harvard, he studied law with his father and amused his leisure with sculpture. He went to Rome in 1848, and soon became proficient in the art which he had taken up as an amateur at home. He wrote legal treatises, and volumes of prose and poetry, among them being "Nature and Art: a Poem" (1844), "Roba di Roma, or Walks and Talks in Rome" (1862), "Excursus in Art and Letters" (1891), and "A Poet's Portfolio" (1894). He died at Vallombrosa, near Florence, October 8, 1895.]

HERE, Charmian, take my bracelets —

They bar with a purple stain

My arms; turn over my pillows —

They are hot where I have lain:

Open the lattice wider,

A gauze on my bosom throw,

And let me inhale the odors

That over the garden blow.

I dreamed I was with my Antony,
And in his arms I lay;
Ah, me! the vision has vanished —
Its music has died away.
The flame and the perfume have perished —
As this spiced aromatic pastille
That wound the blue smoke of its odor
Is now but an ashy hill.

Scatter upon me rose leaves, —
They cool me after my sleep;
And with sandal odors fan me
Till into my veins they creep;
Reach down the lute, and play me
A melancholy tune,
To rhyme with the dream that has vanished,
And the slumbering afternoon.

There, drowsing in golden sunlight,
Loiters the slow smooth Nile,
Through slender papyri, that cover
The sleeping crocodile.
The lotus lolls on the water,
And opens its heart of gold,
And over its broad leaf pavement
Never a ripple is rolled.
The twilight breeze is too lazy
Those feathery palms to wave,
And yon little cloud is motionless
As a stone above a grave.

Ah, me! this lifeless nature
Oppresses my heart and brain!
Oh! for a storm and thunder —
For lightning and wild fierce rain!
Fling down that lute — I hate it!
Take rather his buckler and sword,
And crash them and clash them together
Till this sleeping world is stirred.

Hark! to my Indian beauty —
My cockatoo, creamy white,
With roses under his feathers —
That flashes across the light.
Look! listen! as backward and forward
To his hoop of gold he clings,

How he trembles, with crest uplifted,
And shrieks as he madly swings!
Oh, cockatoo, shriek for Antony!
Cry, "Come, my love, come home!"
Shriek, "Antony! Antony! Antony!"
Till he hears you even in Rome.

There — leave me, and take from my chamber
That wretched little gazelle,
With its bright black eyes so meaningless,
And its silly tinkling bell!
Take him, — my nerves he vexes,
The thing without blood or brain, —
Or, by the body of Isis,
I'll snap his thin neck in twain!

Leave me to gaze at the landscape
Mistily stretching away,
When the afternoon's opaline tremors
O'er the mountains quivering play;
Till the fiercer splendor of sunset
Pours from the west its fire,
And melted, as in a crucible,
Their earthly forms expire;
And the bald blear skull of the desert
With glowing mountains is crowned,
That burning like molten jewels
Circle its temples round.

I will lie and dream of the past time,
Æons of thought away,
And through the jungle of memory
Loosen my fancy to play;
When, a smooth and velvety tiger,
Ribbed with yellow and black,
Supple and cushion-footed
I wandered, where never the track
Of a human creature had rustled
The silence of mighty woods,
And fierce in a tyrannous freedom,
I knew but the law of my moods.
The elephant, trumpeting, started,
When he heard my footstep near,
And the spotted giraffes fled wildly
In a yellow cloud of fear.

I sucked in the noontide splendor,
Quivering along the glade,
Or yawning, panting, and dreaming,
Basked in the tamarisk shade,
Till I heard my wild mate roaring,
As the shadows of night came on,
To brood in the trees' thick branches,
And the shadow of sleep was gone;
Then I roused, and roared in answer,
And unsheathed from my cushioned feet
My curving claws, and stretched me,
And wandered my mate to greet.
We toyed in the amber moonlight,
Upon the warm flat sand,
And struck at each other our massive arms —
How powerful he was and grand!
His yellow eyes flashed fiercely
As he crouched and gazed at me,
And his quivering tail, like a serpent,
Twitched, curving nervously.
Then like a storm he seized me,
With a wild triumphant cry,
And we met, as two clouds in heaven
When the thunders before them fly.
We grappled and struggled together,
For his love like his rage was rude;
And his teeth in the swelling folds of my neck
At times, in our play, drew blood.

Often another suitor —
For I was flexile and fair —
Fought for me in the moonlight,
While I lay crouching there,
Till his blood was drained by the desert;
And, ruffled with triumph and power,
He licked me and lay beside me
To breathe him a vast half-hour.
Then down to the fountain we loitered,
Where the antelopes came to drink;
Like a bolt we sprang upon them,
Ere they had time to shrink.
We drank their blood and crushed them,
And tore them limb from limb,
And the hungriest lion doubted
Ere he disputed with him.

That was a life to live for!
 Not this weak human life,
 With its frivolous, bloodless passions,
 Its poor and petty strife!
 Come to my arms, my hero:
 The shadows of twilight grow,
 And the tiger's ancient fierceness
 In my veins begins to flow.
 Come not cringing to sue me!
 Take me with triumph and power,
 As a warrior that storms a fortress!
 I will not shrink or cower.
 Come, as you came in the desert,
 Ere we were women and men,
 When the tiger passions were in us,
 And love as you loved me then!

THE SAVAGERY OF CLASSIC TIMES.

By ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

[ANTHONY TROLLOPE: An English novelist; born in London, April 24, 1815; died December 6, 1882. He assisted in establishing the Fortnightly Review (1865). Among his works are: "The Macdermots of Ballycloran" (1847); "The Kellys and the O'Kellys" (1848); "La Vendée" (1850); "The Warden" (1855); "Barchester Towers" (1857); "Doctor Thorne" (1858); "The West Indies and the Spanish Main," a book of travel (1859); "Castle Richmond" (1860); "Orley Farm" (1861-1862); "Framley Parsonage" (1861); "Tales of All Countries" (1861-1863); "North America," travels (1862); "Rachel Ray" (1863); "The Small House at Allington" (1864); "Can You Forgive Her?" (1864); "Miss Mackenzie" (1865); "The Last Chronicle of Barset" (1867); "Linda Tressel" (1868); "Phineas Finn" (1869); "The Vicar of Bullhampton" (1870); "Phineas Redux" (1873); "Lady Anna" (1874); "The Prime Minister" (1875); "The American Senator" (1877); "Is He Popenjoy?" (1878); "Thackeray," in English Men of Letters (1879); "Life of Cicero" (1880); "Ayala's Angel" (1881); "Mr. Scarborough's Family" (1882); "The Landleaguers," unfinished (1882); "An Old Man's Love" (1884).]

THAT which will most strike the ordinary English reader in the narrative of Cæsar is the cruelty of the Romans, — cruelty of which Cæsar himself is guilty to a frightful extent, and of which he never expresses horror. And yet among his contemporaries he achieved a character for clemency which he has retained to the present day. In describing the character of Cæsar, without reference to that of his contemporaries, it is impossible not to declare him to have been terribly cruel. From blood-thirstiness he slaughtered none; but neither from tenderness did he spare any. All was done from policy; and when policy seemed to him to demand blood, he could, without a scruple, — as far as we can judge, without a pang, — order the destruction of human beings, having no regard to number, sex, age, innocence, or helplessness. Our only excuse for him is that he was a Roman, and that Romans were indifferent to blood. Suicide was with them the common mode of avoiding otherwise inevitable misfortune, and it was natural that men who made light of their own lives should also make light of the lives of others.

Of all those with whose names the reader will become acquainted in the following pages [of Roman history], hardly one or two died in their beds. Cæsar and Pompey, the two great ones, were murdered. Dumnorix, the Eduan, was killed by Cæsar's orders. Vercingetorix, the gallantest of the Gauls, was kept alive for years that his death might grace Cæsar's Triumph. Ariovistus, the German, escaped from Cæsar, but we hear soon after of his death, and that the Germans resented it: he doubtless was killed by a Roman weapon. What became of the hunted Ambiorix we do not know, but his brother king Cativoleus poisoned himself with the juice of a yew tree. Crassus, the partner of Cæsar and Pompey in the first triumvirate, was killed by the Parthians. Young Crassus, the son, Cæsar's officer in Gaul, had himself killed by his own men that he might not fall into the hands of the Parthians, and his head was cut off and sent to his father. Labienus fell at Munda, in the last civil war with Spain. Quintus Cicero, Cæsar's lieutenant, and his greater brother, the orator, and his son, perished in the proscriptions of the second triumvirate. Titurius and Cotta were slaughtered with all their army by Ambiorix. Afranius was killed by Cæsar's soldiers after the last battle in Africa. Petreius was hacked to pieces in amicable contest by King Juba. Varro indeed lived to be an old man, and to write many books. Domitius, who defended Marseilles for Pompey, was killed in the flight after Pharsalia. Trebonius, who attacked Marseilles by land, was killed by a son-in-law of Cicero at Smyrna. Of Decimus Brutus, who attacked Marseilles by sea, one Camillus cut off the head and sent it as a present to Antony. Curio, who attempted to master the province of Africa on behalf of Cæsar, rushed amidst his enemies' swords and was slaughtered. King Juba, who conquered him, failing to kill himself, had himself killed by a slave. Attius Varus, who had held the province for Pompey, fell afterwards at Munda. Marc Antony, Cæsar's great lieutenant in the Pharsalian wars, stabbed himself. Cassius Longinus, another lieutenant under Cæsar, was drowned. Scipio, Pompey's partner in greatness at Pharsalia, destroyed himself in Africa. Bibulus, his chief admiral, pined to death. Young Ptolemy, to whom Pompey fled, was drowned in the Nile. The fate of his sister Cleopatra is known to all the world. Pharnaces, Cæsar's enemy in Asia, fell in battle. Cato destroyed himself at Utica. Pompey's eldest son, Cnæus, was caught wounded in Spain and slaughtered. Sextus the younger was killed some years afterwards by one of Antony's soldiers. Brutus and Cassius, the two great conspirators, both committed suicide. But of these two we hear little or nothing in the "Commentaries"; nor of Augustus Cæsar, who did contrive to live in spite of all the bloodshed through which he had waded to the throne. Among the whole number there are not above three, if so many, who died fairly fighting in battle.

The above is a list of the names of men of mark, — of warriors chiefly, of men who, with their eyes open, knowing what was before them, went out to encounter danger for certain purposes. The bloody catalogue is so complete, so nearly comprises all whose names are mentioned, that it strikes the reader with almost a comic horror. But when we come to the slaughter of whole towns, the devastation of a country effected purposely that men and women might starve, to the abandonment of the old, the young, and the tender, that they might perish on the hillsides, to the mutilation of crowds of men, to the burning of cities told us in a passing word, to the drowning of many thousands, — mentioned as we should mention the destruction of a brood of rats, — the comedy is all over, and the heart becomes sick. Then it is that we remember that the coming of Christ has changed all things, and that men now — though terrible things have been done since Christ came to us — are not as men were in the days of Cæsar."

ROMAN AND CELT IN OUR DAYS.

BY PROFESSOR CHARLES F. JOHNSON.

UNDER the slanting light of the yellow sun of October,
 A "gang of Dagos" were working close by the side of the car track.
 Pausing a moment to catch a note of their liquid Italian,
 Faintly I heard an echo of Rome's imperial accents, —
 Broken-down forms of Latin words from the Senate and Forum,
 Now smoothed over by use to the musical lingua Romana.
 Then came the thought — Why! these are the heirs of the conquering Romans;

These are the sons of the men who founded the empire of Cæsar.
 These are they whose fathers carried the conquering eagles
 Over all Gaul and across the sea to Ultima Thule. [figures
 The race type persists unchanged in their eyes, and profiles, and Muscular, short, and thick-set, with prominent noses, recalling
 "Romanos rerum dominos, gentemque togatam."
 See, Labienus is swinging a pick with rhythmical motion;
 Yonder one pushing the shovel might be Julius Cæsar, —
 Lean, deep-eyed, broad-browed, and bald, a man of a thousand;
 Further along stands the jolly Horatius Flaccus;
 Grim and grave, with rings in his ears, see Cato the Censor;
 And the next has precisely the bust of Cneius Pompeius.
 Blurred and worn the surface, I grant, and the coin is but copper;
 Look more closely, you'll catch a hint of the old superscription,
 Perhaps the stem of a letter, perhaps a leaf of the laurel.

On the side of the street, in proud and gloomy seclusion,
 "Bossing the job," stood a Celt, the race enslaved by the legions,
 Sold in the market of Rome to meet the expenses of Cæsar.
 And as I loitered, the Celt cried out, "Worruk, ye Dagos!
 Full up your shovel, I'aythro, ye haythen, — I'll dock yees a quarther!"
 This he said to the one who resembled the great Imperator.
 Meekly the dignified Roman kept on patiently digging.

Such are the changes and chances the centuries bring to the nations;
 Surely the ups and downs of this world are past calculation.
 How the races troop over the stage in endless procession!
 Persian and Arab and Greek, and Hun and Roman and Saxon,
 Master the world in turn, and then disappear in the darkness,
 Leaving a remnant as hewers of wood and drawers of water.
 "Possibly" (this I thought to myself) "the yoke of the Irish
 May in turn be lifted from us in the tenth generation.
 Now the Celt is on top; but Time may bring his revenges,
 Turning the Fenian down once more to be 'bossed by a Dago.'"

EARLY CELTIC LITERATURE.

THE DEATH OF THE CHILDREN OF USNACH.

(From the King Conor MacNessa Cycle. Time : first century B.C. Abridged by Lady Ferguson.)

[KING CONOR goes to a banquet in the house of Feilimid, his story-teller. During the festivity, Deirdré, the daughter of Feilimid, is born. Cathbad, the Druid, foretells her future beauty and the destruction it will bring on Ulster and on the king and nobles. Thereupon, the nobles demand the death of the infant ; but the king orders her to be shut up in a strong tower until she grows old enough to become his wife.]

Notwithstanding the precautions of Conor, Deirdré saw and loved Naisi, the son of Usnach. He was sitting in the midst of the plain of Emania, playing on a harp. Sweet was the music of the sons of Usnach — great also was their prowess ; they were fleet as hounds in the chase — they slew deer with their speed. As Naisi sat singing, he perceived a maiden approaching him. She held down her head as she came near him, and would have passed in silence. “Gentle is the damsel who passeth by,” said Naisi. Then the maiden, looking up, replied, “Damsels may well be gentle when there are no youths.” Then Naisi knew it was Deirdré, and great dread fell upon him. “The king of the province is betrothed to thee, O damsel,” he said. “I love him not,” she replied ; “he is an aged man. I would rather love a youth like thee.” “Say not so, O damsel,” answered Naisi ; “the king is a better spouse than the king’s servant.” “Thou sayest so,” said Deirdré, “that thou mayest avoid me.” Then plucking a rose from a brier, she flung it towards him, and said, “Now thou art ever disgraced if thou rejectest me.” “Depart from me, I beseech thee, damsel,” said Naisi. “If thou dost not take me to be thy wife,” said Deirdré, “thou art dishonored before all the men of Erin after what I have done.” Then Naisi said no more, and Deirdré took the harp, and sat beside him, playing sweetly. But the other sons of Usnach, rushing forth, came running to the spot where Naisi sat, and Deirdré with him. “Alas !” they cried, “what hast thou done, O brother ?

Is not this damsel fated to ruin Ulster?" "I am disgraced before the men of Erin forever," replied Naisi, "if I take her not after that which she hath done." "Evil will come of it," said the brothers. "I care not," said Naisi. "I would rather be in misfortune than dishonor. We will fly with her to another country." So that night they departed, taking with them three times fifty men of might, and three times fifty women, and three times fifty greyhounds, and three times fifty attendants; and Naisi took Deirdré to be his wife.

After wandering through various parts of Erin, from Easroe to Ben Edar, from Dundalgan to Almain, the fugitives at length took shelter in Alba,¹ where they found an asylum on the banks of Loch Etive. The loss of three warriors of such renown soon began to be felt by the nobles of Ulster, who no longer found themselves able to make head with their accustomed success against the southern provinces. They therefore urged Conor to abandon his resentment and recall the fugitives. Conor, with no other intention than that of repossessing himself of Deirdré, feigned compliance. But, to induce Clan Usnach to trust themselves again in the hands of him whom their leader had so outraged, it was necessary that the message of pardon should be borne by one on whose warranty of safe conduct the most implicit reliance could be placed. After sounding some of his chief nobles who were of sufficient authority to undertake the mission, and finding that any attempt to tamper with them would be unavailing, Conor fixes on Fergus, the son of Roy, as a more likely instrument, and commits the embassy to him. But though he does not much fear the consequences of compromising the safe conduct of Fergus, he yet does not venture to enlist him openly in the meditated treachery, but proceeds by a stratagem. Fergus was of the order of the Red Branch knights, and the brethren of the Red Branch were under vow never to refuse hospitality at one another's hands. Conor, therefore, arranged with Barach, one of his minions, and a brother of the order, to intercept Fergus on his return by the tender of a three days' banquet, well knowing that Clan Usnach must in that case proceed to Emania without the presence of their protector. Meanwhile, Fergus, arriving in the harbor of Loch Etive, where dwelt Clan Usnach in green hunting booths along the shore, "sends forth the loud cry of a mighty man of chase." Deirdré and Naisi were sitting together in their tent, and Conor's polished chessboard between them. And Naisi, hearing the cry, said, "I hear the call of a man of Erin." "That was not the call of a man of Erin," replied Deirdré, "but the call of a man of Alba." Then again Fergus shouted a second time. "Surely that was the call of a man of Erin," said Naisi. "Surely no," said Deirdré; "let us play on." Then again Fergus shouted a third time, and Naisi knew that it was the cry of Fergus, and he said: "If the son of Roy be in existence, I hear his hunting shout from the Loch. Go forth, Ardan, my brother, and give our kinsman welcome." "Alas!" cried Deirdré, "I knew the call of Fergus from the first." For she has a prophetic dread that foul play is intended them, and this feeling never subsides in her breast from that hour until the catastrophe. Quite different are the feelings of Naisi; he reposes the most unlimited confidence in the safe conduct vouched for by his brother in arms, and, in spite of the remonstrance of Deirdré, embarks with all his retainers for Ireland. Deirdré, on leaving the only secure or happy home she ever expects to enjoy, sings this farewell to Alba and her green sheeling on the shores of Glen Etive:—

¹ Scotland.

(Translation of Sir Samuel Ferguson.)

Harp, take my bosom's burthen on thy string,
And, turning it to sad, sweet melody,
Waste and disperse it on the careless air.

Air, take the harp string's burthen on thy breast,
And, softly thrilling soulward through the sense,
Bring my love's heart again in tune with mine.

Blessed were the hours when, heart in tune with heart,
My love and I desired no happier home
Than Etive's airy glades and lonely shore.

Alba, farewell! Farewell, fair Etive bank!
Sun kiss thee; moon caress thee; dewy stars
Refresh thee long, dear scene of quiet days!

Barach meets them on their landing, near Dunseverick on the coast of Antrim, and detains Fergus, who reluctantly assigns his charge to his two sons, Red Buiné Borb and Illan Fim, to conduct them in safety to their journey's end. Deirdré's fears are more and more excited. "A blood-red cloud floats before her and hovers above the palace of Emania." She has dreams and visions of disasters. She urges Naisi to go to Dunseverick or to Dundalgan and there await the coming of Fergus. Naisi is inflexible. It would injure the honor of his companion in arms to admit any apprehension of danger while under his safe conduct. The omens multiply. Deirdré's sense of danger becomes more and more acute. Still Naisi's reply is: "I fear not; let us proceed." At length they reach Emania, and are assigned the house of the Red Branch for their lodging. Calm, and to all appearance unconscious of any cause for apprehension, Naisi takes his place at the chess table, and Deirdré, full of fears, sits opposite. Meanwhile the king, knowing that Deirdré was again within his reach, could not rest at the banquet, but sends spies to bring him word "if her beauty yet lived upon her." The first messenger, friendly to Clan Usnach, reports that she is "quite bereft of her own aspect, and is lovely and desirable no longer." This allays Conor's passion for a time; but growing heated with wine, he shortly after sends another messenger, who brings back the intelligence that not only is Deirdré "the fairest woman on the ridge of the world," but that he himself has been wounded by Naisi, who had resented his gazing in at the window of the Red Branch by flinging a chessman at his head, and dashing out one of his eyes. This was all that Conor wanted; he starts up in pretended indignation at the violence done his servant, calls his bodyguard, and attacks the Red Branch. The defense now devolves on the sons of Fergus. Clan Usnach scorn to evince alarm, or interfere in any way with the duties of their protectors. But Deirdré cannot conceal her consciousness that they are betrayed. "Ah, me!" she cries, hearing the soldiery of Conor at the gates, "I knew that Fergus was a traitor." "If Fergus hath betrayed you," replied Red Buiné Borb, "yet will not I betray you." And he issues out and slays his "thrice fifty men of might." But when Conor offers him Slieve Fuad for a bribe, he holds back his hand from the slaughter, and goes his way. Then calls Deirdré, "Traitor father, traitor son!" "No," replied Illan Finn, "though Red Buiné Borb be a traitor, yet will not I be a traitor. While liveth this small straight sword in my hand, I will not forsake Clan Usnach." Then Illan Finn, encountering Fiachra, the son of Conor, who was armed with Ocean, Flight, and Victory, the shield, spear, and sword of his father, they fight "a fair fight, stout and manly, bitter and bloody, savage and hot, and vehement and terrible, until the waves round the blue rim of Ocean roared, for it was the nature of Conor's shield that it ever resounded as with the noise of stormy waters when he who bore it was in danger." Summoned by which signal, one of King Conor's nobles, coming behind Illan Finn, thrusts him through. "The weakness of death then fell darkly upon Illan, and he threw his arms into the mansion, and called to Naisi to fight manfully, and expired." Clan Usnach at length designed to lay aside their chess tables and stand to their arms. Ardan first sallies out, and slays his "three hundred men of might," then Ainlé, who makes twice that havoc; and last Naisi himself; and "till the sands of the sea, the dewdrops of the meadows, the leaves of the forest, or the stars of heaven be counted, it is not possible to tell the number of heads and hands and lopped limbs of heroes that there lay bare and red from the hands of Naisi and his brothers on that plain." Then Naisi came again into the Red Branch to Deirdré; and she encouraged him, and said, "We will yet escape; fight manfully, and fear not." Then the sons of Usnach made a phalanx of their shields, and spread the links of their joined bucklers round Deirdré, and bounding forth like three eagles, swept down upon the troops of Conor, making great havoc of the people. But when Cathbad, the Druid, saw that the sons of Usnach were bent on the destruction of Conor himself, he had recourse to his arts of magic and he cast an enchantment over them, so that their arms fell from their hands, and they were taken by the men of Ulster; for the spell was like a sea of thick gums about them, and their limbs were clogged in it, that they could not move. The sons of Usnach were then put to death, and Deirdré, standing over their grave, sang this funeral song:—

(Translation of Sir Samuel Ferguson.)

The lions of the hill are gone,
And I am left alone—alone.
Dig the grave both wide and deep,
For I am sick, and fain would sleep!

The falcons of the wood are flown,
And I am left alone—alone.
Dig the grave both deep and wide,
And let us slumber side by side.

EARLY CELTIC LITERATURE.

The dragons of the rock are sleeping,
 Sleep that wakes not for our weeping.
 Dig the grave, and make it ready,
 Lay me on my true love's body.

Lay their spears and bucklers bright
 By the warriors' sides aright.
 Many a day the three before me
 On their linked bucklers bore me.

Lay upon the low grave floor,
 'Neath each head, the blue claymore;
 Many a time the noble three
 Reddened these blue blades for me.

Lay the collars, as is meet,
 Of their greyhounds at their feet;
 Many a time for me have they Brought the tall red deer to bay.

In the falcon's jesses throw
 Hook and arrow, line and bow:
 Never again by stream or plain
 Shall the gentle woodsmen go.

Sweet companions ye were ever —
 Harsh to me, your sister, never;
 Woods and wilds and misty valleys
 Were with you as good's a palace.

Oh! to hear my true love singing,
 Sweet as sound of trumpets ringing;
 Like the sway of Ocean swelling
 Rolled his deep voice round our dwelling.

Oh! to hear the echoes pealing
 Round our green and fairy sheeling,
 When the three, with soaring chorus,
 Passed the silent skylark o'er us.

Echo, now sleep morn and even —
 Lark, alone enchant the heaven! —
 Ardan's lips are scant of breath,
 Naisi's tongue is cold in death.

Stag, exult on glen and mountain;
 Salmon, leap from loch to fountain;
 Heron, in the free air warm ye;
 Usnach's sons no more will harm ye.

Erin's stay no more ye are,
 Rulers of the ridge of war!
 Nevermore 'twill be your fate
 To keep the beam of battle straight!

Woe is me! by fraud and wrong,
 Traitors false and tyrants strong,
 Fell Clan Usnach, bought and sold,
 For Barach's feast and Conor's gold!

Woe to Emain, roof and wall!
 Woe to Red Branch, hearth and hall!
 Tenfold woe and black dishonor
 To the foul and false Clan Conor!

Dig the grave both wide and deep,
 Sick I am, and fain would sleep.
 Dig the grave and make it ready,
 Lay me on my true love's body!

So saying, she flung herself into the grave, and expired.

(Episodes from the TAIN BO CUALIGNÉ, or CATTLE SPOIL OF COOLNEY, the chief epic of ancient Ireland. Time : the first century B.C.)

THE PILLOW CONVERSATION OF KING AILILL AND QUEEN MAEV THAT CAUSED THE WAR.

TRANSLATION OF O'CURRY.

On one occasion that Ailill and Maev had arisen from their royal bed in Cruachan of Rath Conrach, a pillow conversation was carried on between them : —

"It is a true saying, O woman," said Ailill, "that a good man's wife is a happy creature."

"Why do you say so?" said Maev.

"The reason that I say so," said Ailill, "is because you are happier this day than the day I espoused you."

"I was happy before I knew you," said Maev.

"It was a happiness of which we never heard," said Ailill.

"We only heard of your being in the dependent position of a woman, while your nearest enemies stole and plundered, and carried off your property."

"Not so was I," said Maev, "but my father was arch king of Erin; that is, Eochy Fiedlech, son of Finn, son of Finno-man, son of Finneon, son of Finnlag, etc. He had six daughters of daughters; namely, Derbrin, Eithne, Ele, Clothra, Mugain, and Maev, myself, who was the most noble and illustrious of them, for I was the best for gifts and presents of them. I was the best for battle and fight and combat of them. It was I that had fifteen hundred noble mercenaries, soldiers—sons of foreign chiefs—and as many more of the sons of my own landholders; and there were ten men with every soldier of them; and eight with every soldier, and seven with every soldier, and six with every soldier, and five with every soldier, and three with every soldier, and two with every soldier, and a soldier with every soldier. These I had for my ordinary household, and for that it was that my father gave me a province of the provinces of Erin; namely, the province of Cruachan, where I am called Maev of Cruachan. And I was sought in marriage by Finn, son of Ross Ruadh, king of Laighin, and by Cairpri Nia Fear, son of the king of Flamair, and by Conor, son of Fachna Fathach. And I was sought by Eochy, son of Luchta; and I did not go, because it was I that demanded the extraordinary dowry, such as no woman ever sought before from the men of Erin; namely, a man without parsimoniousness, without jealousy, without fear. If the man who would have me were parsimonious, we were not fit to be united in one, because I am good at bestowing gifts and presents, and it would be a reproach to my husband that I were better in gifts than he; and it would be no reproach now, if we were equally good, provided that we were both good. If my husband were timid, we were not the more fit to unite, because I go in battle and fights and combats, by myself alone; and it would be a reproach to my husband that his wife were more active than himself; and it is no reproach if we are equally active. If the man who had me were jealous, we were not matched either, because I never was without having a man in the shadow of another. I have found that man; namely, you; namely, Ailill, the son of Ross Ruadh, of the men of Laighin. You were not parsimonious; you were not jealous; you were not timid. I gave you an engagement and a dowry, the best that is desired of woman ; namely, of clothes, the array of twelve men ; a chariot, with thrice seven cumhals (steeds) ; the breadth of your face of red gold ; the span of your left wrist of carved silver. Should any one work reproach or injury or incantation on you, you are not entitled to Diré (fine for bodily injury) or Eneclann (fine for satire and calumny) for it, but what comes to me. Because a man in attendance on a woman is what you are."

"Such was not my state," said Ailill, "but I had two brothers, one the king of Temar, and the other the king of Laighin. I left them the sovereignty because of their seniority. And you were not the better for gifts and presents than I was. I have not heard of a province of Erin in woman's keeping but this province alone. I came, then, and I assumed sovereignty here in succession to my mother ; for Mata of Murisy, the daughter of Magach, was my mother, and what better queen need I desire to have than you, since you happen to be the daughter of the arch king of Erin."

"It happens, however," said Maev, "that my goodness is greater than yours."

"I wonder at that," said Ailill, "since there is no one that has more jewels, and wealth, and riches than I have — and I know there is not."

Ailill and Maev then commenced a comparison of their goods and effects — for women at this time did not lose by marriage their separate rights of property. Their jewels, garments, flocks, were compared, and found to be of equal value, with one exception. There was a particularly splendid bull of Ailill's cows. Now he was the calf of one of Maev's cows, and Finnbennach (White Horn) was his name ; but he deemed it not honorable to be in a woman's dependence, and he passed over to the king's cows. And the queen was indignant, but hearing that Daré, son of Factna, of Cuailgné, was the possessor of a brown bull, a still finer animal than the white-horned deserter of her drove, she dispatched her courier, MacRoth, to Daré, requesting of him the loan of the Donn Cuailgné (the Brown One of Coolney) for a year, and promising to restore him with fifty heifers to boot, a chariot worth sixty-three cows, and other tokens of her friendship. On his refusal, she summoned her forces to join in a foray for the capture of the Donn Cuailgné.

HOW SETANTA, THE HERO OF THE TAIN, RECEIVED THE NAME OF CUCHULLIN, THE HOUND OF CULLAN.

TRANSLATION OF SIR SAMUEL FERGUSON.

[King Conor, going with a few guests to a feast at the Dun of Cullan, the Smith, meets his nephew, Setanta, who is playing with his companions on the plain of Emania.]

Conor —

Setanta, if bird nesting in the woods
And ball feats on the playgreen please thee not More than discourse of warrior and sage,
And sight of warrior weapons in the forge,
I offer an indulgence. For we go —
Myself, my step-sire Fergus, and my Bard —
To visit Cullan, the illustrious smith
Of Coolney. Come thou also if thou wilt.

Setanta —

Ask me not, O good Conor, yet to leave
The playgreen; for the ball feats just begun
Are those which most delight my playmate youths,
And they entreat me to defend the goal:
But let me follow; for the chariot tracks
Are easy to discern; and much I long
To hear discourse of warrior and sage,
And see the nest that hatches deaths of men,
The tongs a-flash, and Cullan's welding blow.

Conor —

Too late the hour; too difficult the way.
Set forward, drivers: give our steeds the goad.

Cullan —

Great King of Emain, welcome. Welcome, thou,
Fergus, illustrious step-sire of the King:
And, Seer and Poet, Cathbad, welcome too,
Behold the tables set, the feast prepared.
Sit. But before I cast my chain hound loose,
Give me assurance that ye be all in.
For night descends; and perilous the wild;
And other watchman none of house or herds,
Here, in this solitude remote from men,
Own I, but one hound only. Once his chain
Is loosened, and he makes three bounds at large
Before my doorposts, after fall of night,

There lives not man nor company of men,
 Less than a cohort, shall within my close
 Set foot of trespass, short of life or limb.

Conor —

Yea; all are in. Let loose, and sit secure.
 Good are thy viands, Smith, and strong thine ale.
 Hark, the hound growling! —

Cullan —

Wild dogs are abroad.

Fergus —

Not ruddier the fire that laps a sword
 Steeled for a king, oh Cullan, than thy wine. —
 Hark, the hound baying! —

Cullan —

Wolves, belike, are near.

Cathbad —

Not cheerfuller the ruddy forge's light
 To wayfarer benighted, nor the glow
 Of wine and viands to a hungry man
 Than look of welcome passed from host to guest. —
 Hark, the hound yelling! —

Cullan —

Friends, arise and arm!

Some enemy intrudes! — Tush! 'tis a boy.

Setanta —

Setanta here, the son of Suaitam.

Conor —

Setanta, whom I deemed on Ennain green,
 Engaged at ball play, on our track, indeed!

Setanta —

Not difficult the track to find, oh King,
 But difficult, indeed, to follow home.
 Cullan, 'tis evil welcome for a guest
 This unwarned onset of a savage beast,
 Which, but that 'gainst the stone posts of thy gate
 I three times threw him, leaping at my throat,
 And, at the third throw, on the stone edge, slew,
 Had brought on thee the shame indelible
 Of bidden guest, at his host's threshold, torn.

Conor —

Yea, he was bidden: it was I myself
 Said, as I passed him with the youths at play,
 This morning: Come thou also if thou wilt.
 But little thought I, — when he said the youths
 Desired his presence still to hold the goal,
 Yet asked to follow — for he said he longed
 To hear discourse of warrior and sage,
 And see the nest that hatches deaths of men

The tongs a-flash, and Cullan's welding blow —
That such a playful, young, untutored boy
Would come on this adventure of a man.

Cullan —

I knew not he was bidden; and I asked,
Ere I cast loose, if all the train were in.
But, since thy word has made the boy my guest, —
Boy, for his sake who bade thee to my board,
I give thee welcome: for thine own sake, no.
For thou hast slain my servant and my friend,
The hound I loved, that fierce, intractable
To all men else, was ever mild to me.
He knew me; and he knew my uttered words,
All my commandments, as a man might know:
More than a man, he knew my looks and tones
And turns of gesture, and discerned my mind,
Unspoken, if in grief or if in joy.
He was my pride, my strength, my company,
For I am childless; and that hand of thine
Has left an old man lonely in the world.

Setanta —

Since, Cullan, by mischance, I've slain thy hound,
So much thy grief compassion stirs in me,
Hear me pronounce a sentence on myself.
If of his seed there liveth but a whelp
In Uladh, I will rear him till he grow
To such ability as had his sire
For knowing, honoring, and serving thee.
Meantime, but give a javelin in my hand,
And a good buckler, and there never went
About thy bounds, from daylight — gone till dawn.
Hound watchfuller, or of a keener fang
Against intruder, than myself shall be.

Cullan —

A sentence, a just sentence.

Conor —

Not myself

Hath made award more righteous. Be it so.
Wherefore what hinders that we give him now
His hero name, no more Setanta called
But now Cuchullin, chain hound of the Smith?

Setanta —

Setanta I, the son of Suaitam,
Nor other name assume I, or desire.

Cuthbad —

Take, son of Suaitam, the offered name.

Setanta —

Setanta I, Setanta let me be.

Conor —

Mark Cathbad! —

Fergus —

'Tis his seer fit!

Cathbad —

To my ears

There comes a clamor from the rising years,
The tumult of a passion torrent-swollen,
Rolled hitherward, and 'mid its mingling noises,

I hear perpetual voices

Proclaim to land and fame

The name,

CUCHULLIN!

Hound of the Smith, thy boyish vow

Devotes thy manhood even now

To vigilance, fidelity, and toil:

'Tis not alone the wolf, fang-bare to snatch,

Not the marauder from the lifted latch

Alone, thy coming footfall makes recoil,

The nobler service thine to chase afar

Seditious tumult and intestine war,

Envy and unfraternal hate,

From all the households of the state.

* * * * *

Great is the land and splendid:

The borders of the country are extended:

The extern tribes look up with wondering awe

And own the central law.

Fair show the fields, and fair the friendly faces

Of men in all their places.

With song and chosen story,

With game and dance, with revelries and races,

Life glides on joyous wing —

The tales they tell of love and war and glory,

Tales that the soft bright daughters of the land

Delight to understand,

The songs they sing,

To harps of double string,

To gitterns and new reeds,

Are of the glorious deeds

Of young Cuchullin in the Cuelgnian foray.

Take, son of Suaitam, the offered name.

For at that name the mightiest of the men

Of Erin and of Alba shall turn pale:

And of that name the mouths of all the men
Of Erin and of Alba shall be full.

Setanta —

Yea, then if that be so — Cuchullin here !

CUCHULLIN'S WOOING OF EIMER.

TRANSLATION OF STANDISH O'GRADY.

"Hers were the gift of beauty of person, the gift of voice, the gift of music, the gift of embroidery and of all needlework, the gift of wisdom, and the gift of virtuous chastity."

Cuchullin —

Come down, O daughter of Forgal Manah,
Sweet Eimer, come down without fear.
The moon has arisen to light us on our way,
Come down from thy grenan¹ without fear.

Eimer —

Who is that beneath my chamber window
Sends up to me his words through the dim night ?
Who art thou, standing in the beechen shadows,
White-browed and tall, with thy golden hair ?

Cuchullin —

It is I, Setanta, O gentle Eimer !
I, thy lover, come to seek thee from the north ;
It is I who stand in the beechen shadows,
Sending up my heart in words through the dim night.

Eimer —

I fear my proud father, O Setanta,
My brothers, and my kinsmen, and the guards,
Ere I come unto thy hands, O my lover !
Through their well-lit feasting chamber I must pass.

Cuchullin —

Fear not the guards, O noble Eimer !
Fear not thy brothers or thy sire,
Dull with ale are they all, and pressed with slumber,
And the lights extinguished in the hall.

Eimer —

I fear the fierce watchdogs, O Setanta,
The deep water of the moat how shall I cross ?
Not alone for myself, I fear, Setanta,
They will rend thee without ruth, Cuchullin.

¹ Women's apartments.

Cuchullin—

The dogs are my comrades and my namesakes;
Like my Luath they are friendly unto me.
O'er the foss I will bear thee in my arms—
I will leap across the foss, my love, with thee.

Eimer—

Forward wide, all the tribes and the nations
Over Bregia, northwards to Dun—Sir,
They are kin to my father and his subjects—
For thy life I fear, O noble Cuchullin.

Cuchullin—

On the lawn within the beechen shadows
Is my chariot light and strong, bright with gold;
And steeds like the March wind in their swiftness
Will bear thee to Dundalgan ere the dawn.

Eimer—

I grieve to leave my father, O Setanta,
Mild to me, though his nature be not mild;
I grieve to leave my native land, Setanta,
Frisk with its streams and fairy glades.

I grieve to leave my Dun, O Setanta,
And this lawn, and the trees I know so well,
And this, my tiny chamber looking eastward,
Where love found me unknowing of his power.

Well I know the great wrong I do my father,
But thus, even thus I fly with thee;
As the sea draws down the little Tolka
So thou, O Cuchullin, drawest me.

Like a god descending from the mountains,
So hast thou descended upon me;
I would die to save thy life, O Setanta,
I would die if thou caredst not for me.

THE FIGHT OF CUCHULLIN AND FERDIAH AT THE FORD.

TRANSLATION OF O'CURRY.

[King Ailill and Queen Maev threaten Ferdiah with the bardic curse "which withers and dishonors heroes" if he refuses to meet his former friend and companion, Cuchullin, in combat.]

Maev and Ailill sent to the Bards to make a great outcry and get up an excitement, and raise up a triple barrier of scandal and reproach against his name unless he came to them. Then came Ferdiah to them, for it was better for him to fall in chivalrous and martial exploit than to fall by the libels and outeries of the Bards. And when he came, a full and wondrous joy took possession of Ailill and Maev, and they promised him abundance of goods if he would go and encounter exalted Cuchullin, and that he should be free of imposition of exaction or tribute, and that nothing should ever be required of him during eternity. And that he should get for a wife Fionbar, the beauteous only daughter of Ailill and Maev, who excelled in beauty and in form all the women of the world, and that he should take the golden jewel that was in the cloak of Maev, a talisman of great virtue. . . . Ferdiah took his steeds and mounted his chariot at the rising of the sun. . . . And Ferdiah beheld the polished bounding chariot of Cuchullin coming rapidly and actively, with his people clad in green, and with a shaking of stout spears and dexterous bloodthirsty javelins held up aloft. And two fleet steeds under the chariot, bounding broad-chested, high-spirited, holding high their heads and arching their long necks. And they were as a hawk on a sharp blustering day, or as a whirlwind in a brisk spring day in March in its course over the lovely wide marshy plains. Or like a beauteous excellent deer at the first starting of the hounds—such were those two steeds under the chariot of Cuchullin.

And Ferdiah gave Cuchullin a manly and a truly mild welcome. And then said Cuchullin: "O Ferdiah, it was not meet of thee to come to do battle with me at the jealous instigation and complaint of Ailill and Maev, and for the sake of their false promises and deceitful gifts. O Ferdiah, and woe is it to thee to have abandoned my friendship for the friendship of any one woman. Fifty champions have hitherto fallen by me, and long is it ere I would forsake thee for the promises of any woman; for we were together gaining instruction in chivalry, and together went we to every battle and conflict, and together pursued we the chase, and together were we in every desolate place of darkness and sorcery."

"Dost thou bear in mind, great Cuchullin," said Ferdiah, "the generous exercise we used to go through with Uatha and Scatha and with Aifé?" "Well do I remember them," said Cuchullin. "And now let us joust with our trusty spears."

And they made ready their chariots and did so. And they began piercing and overthrowing one another from the dusky dawn of the morning until eventide. And after that they ceased. And they handed their arms to their attendants, and gave each other many a kiss. And their steeds rested at the same time ; and their attendants were at the same fire for the night. And two lofty beds of rushes were made ready for these wounded heroes. The herbs that assuage pain were brought, and cures to alleviate their sufferings, and they tended them that night, and every remedy and every charm that was applied to Cuchullin was equally divided with Ferdiah.

Thus were they that night, and they arose early in the morning to go to the field of combat. — “Thou art looking badly to-day, O Ferdiah,” said Cuchullin ; “for thine hair has lost its gloss, and thine eyes are heavy, and thine upright form and sprightliness have deserted thee.” “It is neither through fear or dread of thine encounter I am so,” said Ferdiah ; “for there is not in Erin a champion that I would not do battle with this day.” “It is a pity, O Ferdiah, nor is it for thy good to confront thine own comrade and fellow-soldier at the instigation of any woman of the world.” “Pity it is,” said Ferdiah, “but were I to go hence without encountering thee, I shall be forever under the aspersion of cowardice with Maev and with Ailill and with all the men of Erin.” . . .

And so Ferdiah fought for the sake of his honor, for he preferred to fall by the shafts of valor, gallantry, and bravery, rather than by the shafts of satire, censure, and reproach. . . . And at last Ferdiah fell down there, and a cloud, and a faint, and a weakness came on Cuchullin, and the hero, exhausted by his wounds and long-continued strife, and still more by the distress of mind caused by the death of his loved friend, lay long on his bed of sickness, and was unable to take part in the coming battle between the Ultonians and the forces of Ailill and Maev.

THE DEATH OF CUCHULLIN.

TRANSLATION OF STANDISH O'GRADY.

As Cuchullin and Leagh, his charioteer, traveled, they saw a smoke on the edge of the wood that ascended not into the still air, but lay low, hovering around the leafless trees, and soon they saw where a party of wandering outcasts had made their encampment beside the wood, and they sat around the fire cooking ; for a brazen pot was suspended from a branch between forked supporters, and they were cooking their evening meal.

And Leagh said : —

“Methinks I never saw such miserable wanderers as these. There are three men and three women, all very old, and wretched, and meanly clad.”

But when the outcasts saw Cuchullin, they lifted up their voices in a hard and dissonant chorus, and said : —

“Right well have we chosen our encampment, O mighty prince, for we said that this way thou wouldst go down to the battle, and we knew that no arts or persuasions would restrain thee that thou shouldst not come out, as of yore, to the assistance of thy people. Hail to thee, O Cuchullin, O flame of the heroes of Erin, and to thee, O illustrious son of Riagowra.”

But as they spake they all stood up, and they were very hideous to look upon, marred, as Cuchullin and Leagh thought, by some evil destiny. They were clad in the skins of black he-goats, and on the breast of each, instead of pin or brooch, was the shank bone of a heron, or a swan, or such like bird ; their arms and legs were lean and bony, but their hands and feet large, and they were all maimed in the right hand and the right foot.

But Cuchullin answered them as was his wont, for many such a greeting had he received from unwarlike people and outcasts, for such especially cherished his glory. Then, as Leagh was urging on the steeds, one limped forward and stood before the steeds and said : —

“O Cuchullin, partake with us of our poor repast, not meet for princes, but such as we outcasts can procure trapping wild animals ; and we ourselves are like wild animals hunted to and fro. They say indeed that in many a poor man's cot thou hast eaten food, and sat beside many a humble fire, not knowing thine own greatness.”

And Cuchullin said : —

“The night is already upon us, O Leagh, and we cannot travel further ; let us not insult these unhappy people, maimed and outcast, by refusing what they offer.”

Leagh reluctantly consented, and unharnessed the steeds from the great war car, and he returned to Cuchullin, who sat beside the fire among the outlaws, for he was chill from sitting all day in the war car. Nevertheless, he was not warmed by the fire.

But Cuchullin was glad when the charioteer drew nigh, for he was distressed at the conversation of these homeless people, and their countenances, and their forms; for their wretchedness sat lightly upon them, and they were very gay and mirthful, as they sat holding the flesh on skewers of the rowan over the embers, and they made obscene jests, and answered in a language which he could not comprehend, and it seemed to him that the women were worse than the men. Moreover, the sun set, and the darkness came down, and mysterious sounds came from the sacred hill, the noise of the trees, and of the falling water, and he saw naught but these unlovely faces around.

When the flesh was cooked they gave a portion to Cuchullin, and he ate thereof, but Leagh refused with an oath. Then these outcasts laughed and sprang to their feet, and they joined hands around them twain, and danced upon their misshapen feet, and sang:—

“Sisters and brothers, join hands, he is ours;
Let the charm work, he is ours.
A rath in Murthemney holds twenty-eight skulls—
Work on, little charm, he is ours!”

“Hast thou heard, O Cuchullin, of Clan Cailitin?”¹

But Cuchullin drew his sword, crying:—

“O brood of hell, see now if your charms are proof against keen bronze.”

But they bounded away nimbly like goats, and still encircled him, singing. Then one plunged into the wood, and all followed; and there was cracked, obscene laughter in the forest, and then silence. Cuchullin stood panting, and very pallid, with wide eyes; but Leagh crouched upon the ground.

And Cuchullin said:—

“They are gone, O Leagh. It was some horrible vision. Here was the fire where the grass is yet unburned, and there is no trace of the rowan-tree spits, or of the flesh.”

But Leagh recovered himself with difficulty, and spake with a stammering tongue; and they found there no trace of the encampment of the outcasts save the skin of a wolf lately slain.

And Cuchullin said:—

“I marvel, O Leagh, how the mighty and righteous Loi, to whom this mountain is sacred, can suffer within his precincts

¹A druidical clan, powerful in working evil enchantments, and implacable enemies of Cuchullin.

this horrid brood. O mountain dwelling, unseen king, shield us at least within thine own borders against these powers of darkness ! ”

Cuchullin and Leagh slept not that night. And when it was dawn Leagh harnessed the steeds and yoked the chariot. And about noon they beheld the first signs of the invasion, and saw afar the lurid smoke of conflagration, and heard the distant noise of battle. Then Leagh unfolded and closed the glittering scythes, to see if they would work freely, urging on the steeds, and Cuchullin stood erect in the chariot, looking southwards. . . .

And as the Ultonians grew less in the dread conflict, the southern warriors precipitated themselves upon Cuchullin, and like a great rock over which rolls some mighty billow of the western sea, so was Cuchullin often submerged in the overflowing tide; and as with the down-sinking billow the same rock reappears in its invincible greatness, and the white brine runs down its stubborn ribs, so the son of Suaittam perpetually reappeared, scattering and destroying his foes. Then crashed his battle mace through opposing shields; then flew the foam flakes from his lips over his reddened garments; baleful shone his eyes beneath his brows, and his voice died away in his throat till it became a hoarse whisper. Often, too, Leagh charged with the war car, and extricated him surrounded, and the mighty steeds trampled down opposing squadrons, and many a southern hero was transfixed with the chariot spear, or divided by the brazen scythes.

And on the eighth day, two hours after noon, Cuchullin, raising his eyes, beheld where the last of the Red Branch were overwhelmed; and he and Leagh were abandoned and alone, and he heard Leagh shouting, for he was surrounded by a battalion, and Cuchullin hastened back to defend him, and sprang into the chariot, bounding over the rim. There he intercepted three javelins cast against the charioteer by a Lagenian band; but Ere, son of Cairbré Nia-Far, pursued him, and at the same time cast his spear from the right. Through Cuchullin it passed, breaking through the battle shirt and the waist piece, and it pierced his left side between the hip bone and the lowest rib, and transfixed Leagh in the stomach above the navel. Then fell the reins from the hands of Leagh.

“How is it with thee, O Leagh?” said then Cuchullin.

And Leagh answered : —

“I have had enough this time, O my dear master.”

Then Cuchullin cut through the spear tree with his colg, and tore forth the tree out of himself; but meantime, Lewy Mac Conroi stabbed the steed, black Shanglan, with his red hands, driving the spear through his left side, behind the shoulder, and Shanglan fell, overturning the war car, and Cuchullin sprang forth, but as he sprang Lewy Mac Conroi pierced him through the bowels. Then fell the great hero of the Gael.

Thereat the sun darkened, and the earth trembled, and a wail of agony from immortal mouths shrilled across the land, and a pale panic smote the vast host of Meav when, with a crash, fell that pillar of heroism, and that flame of the warlike valor of Erin was extinguished. Then, too, from his slain comrade brake the divine steed, the Liath Macha; for, like a housewife's thread, the divine steed brake the traces, and the brazen chains, and the yoke and bounded forth neighing, and three times he encircled the heroes, trampling down the hosts of Meav. Afar then retreated the host, and the Liath Macha, wearing still the broken collar, went back into the realms of the unseen.

But Cuchullin kissed Leagh, and Leagh, dying, said: "Farewell, O dear master and schoolfellow. Till the end of the world no servant will have a better master than thou hast been to me."

And Cuchullin said: "Farewell, O dear Leagh. The gods of Erin have deserted us, and the Clan Cailitin are now abroad, and what will happen to us henceforward I know not. But true and faithful thou hast ever been to me, and it is now seventeen years since we plighted friendship, and no angry word has ever passed between us since then."

Then the spirit went out of Leagh, and he died, and Cuchullin, raising his eyes, saw thence northwestward, about two hundred yards, a small lake called Loch-an-Tanaigté, and he tore forth from himself the bloody spear, and went staggering, and at times he fell; nevertheless, he reached the lake, and stooped down and drank a deep draught of the pure cold water, keen with frost, and the burning fever in his veins was allayed. After that he arose, and saw northward from the lake a tall pillar stone, the grave of a warrior slain there in some ancient war, and its name was Carrig-an-Compan. With difficulty he reached it, and he leaned awhile against the pillar, for his mind wandered, and he knew nothing for a space.

After that he took off his brooch, and removing the torn bratta, he passed it round the top of the pillar, where there was an indentation in the stone, and passed the ends under his arms and around his breast, tying with languid hands a loose knot, which soon was made fast by the weight of the dying hero; so that he might not die in his sitting, or lying, but that he might die in his standing. But the host of Meav, when they beheld him, retired again, for they said that he was immortal, and that Lu Lamfada would once more come down from fairyland to his aid, and that they would wreak a terrible vengeance. So afar they retreated, when they beheld him standing with a drawn sword in his hand and the rays of the setting sun bright on his panic-striking helmet.

Now, as Cuchullin stood dying, a stream of blood trickled from his wounds, and ran in a devious way down to the lake, and poured its tiny red current into the pure water; and as Cuchullin looked upon it, thinking many things in his deep mind, there came forth an otter out of the reeds of the lake and approached the pebbly strand, where the blood flowed into the water, having been attracted thither by the smell, and at the point where the blood flowed into the lake, he lapped up the lifeblood of the hero, looking up from time to time, after the manner of a dog feeding. Which seeing, Cuchullin gazed upon the otter, and he smiled for the last time, and said:—

“O thou greedy water dog, often in my boyhood have I pursued thy race in the rivers and lakes of Murthemney; but now thou hast a full eric [blood-money], who drinkest the blood of me dying. Nor do I grudge thee this thy bloody meal. Drink on, thou happy beast. To thee, too, doubtless there will some time be an hour of woe.”

Then a terrible loneliness and desolation came over his mind, and again he saw the faces of the wandering clan; and they laughed around him, and taunted him, and said:—

“Thus shalt thou perish, O Hound, and thus shall all like thee be forsaken and deserted. An early death and desolation shall be their lot, for we are powerful over men and over gods, and the kingdom that is seen and the kingdom that is unseen belong to us;” and they ringed him round, and chanted obscene songs, and triumphed.

Nevertheless, they terrified him not, for a deep spring of stern valor was opened in his soul, and the might of his unfathomable spirit sustained him.

Then was Cuchullin aware that the Clan Cailitin retired, as though in fear; and after that the soul of the mild, handsome, invincible hero departed from him.

KING DATHY'S DEATH.

(Translated from the Irish by James Clarence Mangan.)

[JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN, an Irish poet, was born in Dublin, May 1, 1803. As a boy he was a copyist and attorney's clerk, and worked at the former trade intermittently all his life. Extreme poverty, overwork, bohemian irregularity and exposure, and opium, made him a physical wreck; and he died of cholera June 20, 1849. Several partial editions of his poems have been published. The bulk of them, and his best work, are translations.]

KING DATHY assembled his Druids and Sages,
And thus he spake them: "Druids and Sages!

What of King Dathy?

What is revealed in Destiny's pages

Of him or his? Hath he

Aught for the Future to dread or to dree?

Good to rejoice in, or evil to flee?

Is he a foe of the Gall—

Fitted to conquer or fated to fall?"

And Beirdra, the Druid, made answer as thus,—

A priest of a hundred years was he:—

"Dathy! thy fate is not hidden from us!

Hear it through me!—

Thou shalt work thine own will!

Thou shalt slay, thou shalt prey,

And be Conqueror still!

Thee the Earth shall not harm!

Thee we charter and charm

From all evil and ill!

Thee the laurel shall crown!

Thee the wave shall not drown!

Thee the chain shall not bind!

Thee the spear shall not find!

Thee the sword shall not slay!

Thee the shaft shall not pierce!

Thou, therefore, be fearless and fierce!

And sail with thy warriors away

To the lands of the Gall,

There to slaughter and sway,

And be Victor o'er all!"

So Dathy he sailed away, away,

Over the deep resounding sea;

Sailed with his hosts in armor gray
 Over the deep resounding sea,
 Many a night and many a day;
 And many an islet conquered he,
 He and his hosts in armor gray.
 And the billow drowned him not,
 And a fetter bound him not,
 And the blue spear found him not,
 And the red sword slew him not,
 And the swift shaft knew him not,
 And the foe o'erthrew him not:
 Till, one bright morn, at the base
 Of the Alps, in rich Ausonia's regions,
 His men stood marshaled face to face
 With the mighty Roman legions.
 Noble foes!
 Christian and Heathen stood there amongst those,
 Resolute all to overcome,
 Or die for the Eagles of Ancient Rome!

When, behold! from a temple anear
 Came forth an aged priestlike man,
 Of a countenance meek and clear,
 Who, turning to Eirè's Ceann,
 Spake him as thus: "King Dathy! hear!
 Thee would I warn!
 Retreat! retire! Repent in time
 The invader's crime;
 Or better for thee thou hadst never been born!"
 But Dathy replied: "False Nazarene!
 Dost thou then menace Dathy? thou!
 And dreamest thou that he will bow
 To One unknown, to One so mean,
 So powerless as a priest must be?
 He scorns alike thy threats and thee!
 On! on, my men! to victory!"

And, with loud shouts for Eirè's King,
 The Irish rush to meet the foe;
 And falchions clash and bucklers ring,—
 When, lo!
 Lo! a mighty earthquake's shock!
 And the cleft plains reel and rock;
 Clouds of darkness pall the skies;
 Thunder crashes,
 Lightning flashes,

And in an instant Dathy lies
 On the earth a mass of blackened ashes !
 Then, mournfully and dolefully,
 The Irish warriors sailed away
 Over the deep resounding sea,
 Till wearily and mournfully,
 They anchored in Eblana's Bay. —
 Thus the Seanachies and Sages
 Tell this tale of long-gone ages.

THE MAGUIRE.

WHERE is my Chief, my Master, this bleak night ? mavrone !
 O, cold, cold, miserably cold is this bleak night for Hugh !
 Its showery, arrowy, speary sleet pierceth one through and through,
 Pierceth one to the very bone.

Rolls real thunder ? Or, was that red livid light
 Only a meteor ? I scarce know ; but through the midnight dim
 The pitiless ice wind streams. Except the hate that persecutes him
 Nothing hath crueller venom might.

An awful, a tremendous night is this, meseems !
 The flood gates of the rivers of heaven, I think, have been burst wide ;
 Down from the overcharged clouds, like unto headlong ocean's tide,
 Descends gray rain in roaring streams.

Though he were even a wolf ranging the round green woods,
 Though he were even a pleasant salmon in the unchainable sea,
 Though he were a wild mountain eagle, he could scarce bear, he,
 This sharp sore sleet, these howling floods.

O, mournful is my soul this night for Hugh Maguire !
 Darkly as in a dream he strays ! Before him and behind
 Triumphs the tyrannous anger of the wounding wind,
 The wounding wind, that burns as fire !

It is my bitter grief — it cuts me to the heart —
 That in the country of Clan Darry this should be his fate !
 O, woe is me ! where is he ? Wandering houseless, desolate,
 Alone, without or guide or chart !

Medreams I see just now his face, the strawberry-bright,
Uplifted to the blackened heavens, while the tempestuous winds
Blow fiercely over and round him, and the smiting sleet shower blinds

 The hero of Galang to-night!

Large, large affliction unto me and mine it is,
That one of his majestic bearing, his fair stately form,
Should thus be tortured and o'erborne; that this unsparing storm
 Should wreak its wrath on head like his!

That his great hand, so oft the avenger of the oppressed,
Should this chill, churlish night, perchance, be paralyzed by frost;
While through some icicle-hung thicket, as One lorn and lost,
 He walks and wanders without rest.

The tempest-driven torrent deluges the mead,
It overflows the low banks of the rivulets and ponds;
The lawns and pasture grounds lie locked in icy bonds,
 So that the cattle cannot feed.

The pale bright margins of the streams are seen by none;
Rushes and sweeps along the untamable flood on every side;
It penetrates and fills the cottagers' dwellings far and wide;
 Water and land are blent in one.

Through some dark woods, 'mid bones of monsters, Hugh now strays;
As he confronts the storm with anguished heart, but manly brow, --
O! what a sword wound to that tender heart of his were now
 A backward glance at peaceful days!

But other thoughts are his, -- thoughts that can still inspire
With joy and an onward-bounding hope the bosom of MacNee, --
Thoughts of his warriors charging like bright billows of the sea,
 Borne on the wind's wings, flashing fire!

And though frost glaze to-night the clear dew of his eyes,
And white ice gauntlets glove his noble fine fair fingers o'er,
A warm dress is to him that lightning garb he ever wore, --
 The lightning of the soul, not skies.

Hugh marched forth to the fight -- I grieved to see him so depart;
And lo! to-night he wanders frozen, rain-drenched, sad, betrayed:
But the memory of the lime-white mansions his right hand hath laid
 In ashes warms the hero's heart!

MAN WANTS BUT LITTLE.

By LUCRETIUS.

(Translation by W. H. Mallock.)

[TITUS LUCRETIUS CARUS, a Roman poet of the first rank in original genius and artistic ability, was probably born B.C. 99 or 98, and died B.C. 55, perhaps by suicide from melancholia or mental overstrain. Nothing is really known of his life, though he was younger than Cicero (who probably published his great poem posthumously) and Cæsar, and died when Catullus was over thirty and Horace a boy: his one brief biography dates four centuries later and is fabulous. But this silence proves that he was a quiet student and artist: apparently a member of a great Roman aristocratic house, certainly of the highest culture, and used in early life to all the luxury of the best society; very sensitive and of broad humanity, and keenly appreciative of nature in all aspects. He adopted enthusiastically the Epicurean system of philosophy on its highest plane, — as opposed to the Stoic system which was coming into general vogue in Rome, — and embodied it in his great poem “On the Nature of Things,” which works out the atomistic theory of the universe with great splendor of thought and poetry.]

MOTHER and mistress of the Roman race,
Pleasure of gods and men, O fostering
Venus, whose presence breathes in every place,
Peopling all soils whence fruits and grasses spring,
And all the water's navigable ways,
Water and earth and air and everything,
Since by thy power alone their life is given
To all beneath the sliding signs of heaven;

Goddess, thou comest, and the clouds before thee
Melt, and the ruffian blasts take flight and fly;
The dædal lands, they know thee and adore thee,
And clothe themselves with sweet flowers instantly;
Whilst pouring down its largest radiance o'er thee,
In azure calm subsides the rounded sky,
To overarch thine advent; and for thee
A livelier sunlight laughs along the sea.

For lo, no sooner come the soft and glowing
Days of the spring, and all the air is stirred
With amorous breaths of zephyr freshly blowing,
Than the first prelude of thy power is heard
On all sides, in ærial music flowing
Out of the bill of every pairing bird;
And every songster feels, on every tree,
Its small heart pulsing with the power of thee.

Next the herds feel thee ; and the wild fleet races
 Bound o'er the fields, that smile in the bright weather,
 And swim the streaming floods in fordless places,
 Led by thy chain, and captive in thy tether.
 At last through seas and hills, thine influence passes,
 Through field and flood and all the world together,
 And the birds' leafy homes ; and thou dost fire
 Each to renew his kind with sweet desire.

Wherefore, since thou, O lady, only thou
 Art she who guides the world upon its way ;
 Nor can aught rise without thee anyhow
 Up into the clear borders of the day,
 Neither can aught without thee ever grow
 Lovely and sweet — to thee, to thee I pray —
 Aid and be near thy suppliant as he sings
 Of nature and the secret ways of things. . . .

When human life a shame to human eyes,
 Lay sprawling in the mire in foul estate,
 A cowering thing without the strength to rise,
 Held down by fell Religion's heavy weight —
 Religion scowling downward from the skies,
 With hideous head, and vigilant eyes of hate —
 First did a man of Greece presume to raise
 His brows, and give the monster gaze for gaze.

Him not the tales of all the gods in heaven,
 Nor the heaven's lightnings, nor the menacing roar
 Of thunder daunted. He was only driven,
 By these vain vauntings, to desire the more
 To burst through Nature's gates, and rive the unruven
 Bars. And he gained the day ; and, conqueror,
 His spirit broke beyond our world, and past
 Its flaming walls, and fathomed all the vast.

And back returning, crowned with victory, he
 Divulged of things the hidden mysteries,
 Laying quite bare what can and cannot be,
 How to each force is set strong boundaries,
 How no power raves unchained, and naught is free.
 So the times change ; and now religion lies
 Trampled by us ; and unto us 'tis given
 Fearless with level gaze to scan the heaven.

Yet fear I lest thou haply deem that thus
 We sin, and enter wicked ways of reason.
 Whereas 'gainst all things good and beauteous
 'Tis oft religion does the foulest treason.
 Has not the tale of Aulis come to us,
 And those great chiefs who, in the windless season,
 Bade young Iphianassa's form be laid
 Upon the altar of the Trivian maid ?

Soon as the fillet round her virgin hair
 Fell in its equal lengths down either cheek, —
 Soon as she saw her father standing there,
 Sad, by the altar, without power to speak,
 And at his side the murderous minister,
 Hiding the knife, and many a faithful Greek
 Weeping — her knees grew weak, and with no sound
 She sank, in speechless terror, on the ground.

But naught availed it in that hour accurst
 To save the maid from such a doom as this,
 That her lips were the baby lips that first
 Called the king father with their cries and kiss.
 For round her came the strong men, and none durst
 Refuse to do what cruel part was his ;
 So silently they raised her up, and bore her,
 All quivering, to the deadly shrine before her.

And as they bore her, ne'er a golden lyre
 Rang round her coming with a bridal strain;
 But in the very season of desire,
 A stainless maiden, amid bloody stain,
 She died — a victim felled by its own sire —
 That so the ships the wished-for wind might gain,
 And air puff out their canvas. Learn thou, then,
 To what damned deeds religion urges men.

* * * * *

'Tis sweet when tempests roar upon the sea
 To watch from land another's deep distress
 Amongst the waves — his toil and misery :
 Not that his sorrow makes our happiness,
 But that some sweetness there must ever be Watching what sorrows we do not possess :
 So, too, 'tis sweet to safely view from far
 Gleam o'er the plains the savage ways of war.

But sweeter far to look with purgèd eyes
 Down from the battlements and topmost towers
 Of learning, those high bastions of the wise,
 And far below us see this world of ours,
 The vain crowds wandering blindly, led by lies,
 Spending in pride and wrangling all their powers
 So far below — the pygmy toil and strife,
 The pain and piteous rivalries of life.

O peoples miserable! O fools and blind!
 What night you cast o'er all the days of man,
 And in that night before you and behind
 What perils prowl! But you nor will nor can See that the treasure of a tranquil mind
 Is all that Nature pleads for, for this span,
 So that between our birth and grave we gain
 Some quiet pleasures, and a pause from pain.

Wherefore we see that for the body's need
 A pause from pain almost itself suffices.
 For only let our life from pain be freed,
 It oft itself with its own smile entices,
 And fills our healthy hearts with joys indeed,
 That leave us small desire for art's devices.
 Nor do we sigh for more in hours like these,
 Rich in our wealth of sweet simplicities.

What though about the halls no silent band
 Of golden boys on many a pedestal
 Dangle their hanging lamps from outstretched hand,
 To flare along the midnight festival —
 Though on our board no priceless vessels stand,
 Nor gold nor silver fret the dazzling wall,
 Nor does the soft voluptuous air resound
 From gilded ceilings with the cithern's sound;

The grass is ours, and sweeter sounds than these,
 As down we couch us by the babbling spring,
 And overhead we hear the branching trees
 That shade us, whisper; and for food we bring
 Only the country's simple luxuries.
 Ah, sweet is this, and sweetest in the spring,
 When the sun goes through all the balmy hours,
 And all the green earth's lap is filled with flowers!

THE BUGBEAR OF DEATH.

By LUCRETIVS.

(Translated by Dryden.)

WHAT has this bugbear death to frighten man,
 If souls can die, as well as bodies can ?
 For, as before our birth we felt no pain,
 When Punic arms infested land and main,
 When heaven and earth were in confusion hurled,
 For the debated empire of the world,
 Which awed with dreadful expectation lay,
 Sure to be slaves, uncertain who should sway :
 So when our mortal frame shall be disjoined,
 The lifeless lump uncoupled from the mind,
 From sense of grief and pain we shall be free ;
 We shall not feel, because we shall not be. . . .

Nay, e'en suppose, when we have suffered fate,
 The soul should feel in her divided state,
 What's that to us ? for we are only we
 While souls and bodies in one frame agree.
 Nay, though our atoms should revolve by chance,
 And matter leap into the former dance ;
 Though time our life and motion could restore,
 And make our bodies what they were before,
 What gain to us would all this bustle bring ?
 The new-made man would be another thing.
 When once an interrupting pause is made,
 That individual being is decayed.

We, who are dead and gone, shall bear no part
 In all the pleasures, nor shall feel the smart
 Which to that other mortal shall accrue,
 Whom of our matter time shall mold anew.

For backward if you look on that long space
 Of ages past, and view the changing face
 Of matter, tossed and variously combined
 In sundry shapes, 'tis easy for the mind
 From thence to infer, that seeds of things have been
 In the same order as they now are seen :
 Which yet our dark remembrance cannot trace,
 Because a pause of life, a gaping space,
 Has come betwixt. . . .
 For whosoe'er shall in misfortunes live,
 Must be, when those misfortunes shall arrive ;
 And since the man who is not, feels not woe,

(For death exempts him, and wards off the blow,
Which we, the living, only feel and bear)
What is there left for us in death to fear?
When once that pause of life has come between,
'Tis just the same as we had never been.

And therefore if a man bemoan his lot,
That after death his moldering limbs shall rot,
Or flames, or jaws of beasts devour his mass,
Know, he's an unsincere, unthinking ass.
A secret sting remains within his mind;
The fool is to his own cast offals kind.
He boasts no sense can after death remain;
Yet makes himself a part of life again;
As if some other He could feel the pain.
If, while we live, this thought molest his head,
What wolf or vulture shall devour me dead?
He wastes his days in idle grief, nor can Distinguish 'twixt the body and the man:
But thinks himself can still himself survive;
And, what when dead he feels not, feels alive.
Then he repines that he was born to die,
Nor knows in death there is no other He,
No living He remains his grief to vent,
And o'er his senseless carcass to lament.
If after death 'tis painful to be torn
By birds, and beasts, then why not so to burn,
Or drenched in floods of honey to be soaked,
Embalmed to be at once preserved and choked;
Or on an airy mountain's top to lie,
Exposed to cold and heaven's inclemency;
Or crowded in a tomb to be oppressed
With monumental marble on thy breast?

But to be snatched from all the household joys,
From thy chaste wife, and thy dear prattling boys,
Whose little arms about thy legs are cast,
And climbing for a kiss prevent their mother's haste,
Inspiring secret pleasure through thy breast;
Ah! these shall be no more: thy friends oppressed
Thy care and courage now no more shall free:
Ah! wretch, thou criest, ah! miserable me!
One woeful day sweeps children, friends, and wife,
And all the brittle blessings of my life!

Add one thing more, and all thou sayest is true;
Thy want and wish of them is vanished too:
Which, well considered, were a quick relief

To all thy vain imaginary grief.
 For thou shalt sleep, and never wake again,
 And, quitting life, shalt quit thy living pain.
 But we, thy friends, shall all those sorrows find,
 Which in forgetful death thou leav'st behind ;
 No time shall dry our tears, nor drive thee from our mind.
 The worst that can befall thee, measured right,
 Is a sound slumber, and a long good night.

Yet thus the fools, that would be thought the wits,
 Disturb their mirth with melancholy fits :
 When healths go round, and kindly brimmers flow,
 Till the fresh garlands on their foreheads glow,
 They whine, and cry, " Let us make haste to live,
 Short are the joys that human life can give."
 Eternal preachers, that corrupt the draught,
 And pall the god, that never thinks, with thought ;
 Idiots with all that thought, to whom the worst
 Of death, is want of drink, and endless thirst,
 Or any fond desire as vain as these.

For, even in sleep, the body, wrapt in ease,
 Supinely lies, as in the peaceful grave ;
 And, wanting nothing, nothing can it crave.
 Were that sound sleep eternal, it were death ;
 Yet the first atoms then, the seeds of breath,
 Are moving near to sense ; we do but shake
 And rouse that sense, and straight we are awake.
 Then death to us, and death's anxiety,
 Is less than nothing, if a less could be.
 For then our atoms, which in order lay,
 Are scattered from their heap, and puffed away,
 And never can return into their place,
 When once the pause of life has left an empty space.

And last, suppose great Nature's voice should call
 To thee, or me, or any of us all,
 " What dost thou mean, ungrateful wretch, thou vain,
 Thou mortal thing, thus idly to complain,
 And sigh and sob, that thou shalt be no more ?
 For if thy life were pleasant heretofore,
 If all the bounteous blessings, I could give,
 Thou hast enjoyed, if thou hast known to live,
 And pleasure not leaked through thee like a sieve ;
 Why dost thou not give thanks, as at a plenteous feast,
 Crammed to the throat with life, and rise and take thy rest ?
 But if My blessings thou hast thrown away,
 If indigested joys passed through, and would not stay,

Why dost thou wish for more to squander still ?
 If life be grown a load, a real ill,
 And I would all thy cares and labors end,
 Lay down thy burden, fool, and know thy friend
 To please thee, I have emptied all my store,
 I can invent, and can supply no more ;
 But run the round again, the round I ran before.
 Suppose thou art not broken yet with years,
 Yet still the selfsame scene of things appears,
 And would be ever, couldst thou ever live :
 For life is still but life, there's nothing new to give."
 What can we plead against so just a bill ?
 We stand convicted, and our cause goes ill.

But if a wretch, a man oppressed by fate,
 Should beg of Nature to prolong his date,
 She speaks aloud to him with more disdain,
 " Be still, thou martyr fool, thou covetous of pain."
 But if an old decrepit sot lament ;
 " What thou " (she cries) " who hast outlived content !
 Dost thou complain, who hast enjoyed my store ?
 But this is still the effect of wishing more.
 Unsatisfied with all that Nature brings ;
 Loathing the present, liking absent things ;
 From hence it comes, thy vain desires, at strife
 Within themselves, have tantalized thy life,
 And ghastly death appeared before thy sight.
 Ere thou hast gorged thy soul and senses with delight.
 Now leave those joys, unsuited to thy age,
 To a fresh comer, and resign the stage."

Is Nature to be blamed if thus she chide ?
 No, sure ; for 'tis her business to provide Against this ever-changing frame's decay,
 New things to come, and old to pass away.
 One being, worn, another being makes ;
 Changed, but not lost ; for Nature gives and takes :
 New matter must be found for things to come,
 And these must waste like those, and follow Nature's doom.
 All things, like thee, have time to rise and rot ;
 And from each other's ruin are begot ;
 For life is not confined to him or thee :
 'Tis given to all for use, to none for property.
 Consider former ages past and gone,
 Whose circles ended long ere thine begun,
 Then tell me, fool, what part in them thou hast ?
 Thus mayest thou judge the future by the past.

What horror seest thou in that quiet state,
What bugbear dreams to fright thee after fate ?
No ghost, no goblins, that still passage keep ;
But all is there serene, in that eternal sleep.
For all the dismal tales, that Poets tell,
Are verified on earth, and not in hell.
No Tantalus looks up with fearful eye,
Or dreads the impending rock to crush him from on high :
But fear of chance on earth disturbs our easy hours,
Or vain, imagined wrath of vain imagined powers.
No Tityus torn by vultures lies in hell ;
Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal :
Not though his monstrous bulk had covered o'er
Nine spreading acres, or nine thousand more ;
Not though the globe of earth had been the giant's floor.
Nor in eternal torments could he lie ;
Nor could his corpse sufficient food supply.

But he's the Tityus, who by love oppressed,
Or tyrant passion preying on his breast,
And ever anxious thoughts, is robbed of rest.
The Sisyphus is he, whom noise and strife
Seduce from all the soft retreats of life,
To vex the government, disturb the laws :
Drunk with the fumes of popular applause
He courts the giddy crowd to make him great,
And sweats and toils in vain, to mount the sovereign seat.
For still to aim at power, and still to fail,
Ever to strive, and never to prevail,
What is it, but, in reason's true account,
To heave the stone against the rising mount ?
Which urged, and labored, and forced up with pain, Recoils, and rolls impetuous down, and smokes along the plain.

Then still to treat thy ever craving mind
With every blessing, and of every kind,
Yet never fill thy ravening appetite ;
Though years and seasons vary thy delight,
Yet nothing to be seen of all the store,
But still the wolf within thee barks for more ;
This is the fable's moral, which they tell
Of fifty foolish virgins damned in hell
To leaky vessels, which the liquor spill ;
To vessels of their sex, which none could ever fill
As for the Dog, the Furies, and their snakes,

The gloomy caverns, and the burning lakes,
And all the vain infernal trumpery,
They neither are, nor were, nor e'er can be.
But here on earth the guilty have in view
The mighty pains to mighty mischiefs due;
Racks, prisons, poisons, the Tarpeian rock,
Stripes, hangmen, pitch, and suffocating smoke;
And last, and most, if these were cast behind,
The avenging horror of a conscious mind,
Whose deadly fear anticipates the blow,
And sees no end of punishment and woe;
But looks for more, at the last gasp of breath:
This makes a hell on earth, and life a death.

Meantime when thoughts of death disturb thy head,
Consider, Ancus, great and good, is dead;
Ancus, thy better far, was born to die;
And thou, dost thou bewail mortality?
So many monarchs, with their mighty state,
Who ruled the world, were overruled by fate.
That haughty king, who lorded o'er the main,
And whose stupendous bridge did the wild waves restrain,
(In vain they foamed, in vain they threatened wrack,
While his proud legions marched upon their back:)
Him Death, a greater monarch, overcame;
Nor spared his guards the more, for their immortal name.
The Roman chief, the Carthaginian dread,
Scipio the thunderbolt of war, is dead,
And, like a common slave, by Fate in triumph led.
The founders of invented arts are lost;
And wits, who made eternity their boast.
Where now is Homer, who possessed the throne?
The immortal work remains, the immortal author's gone.
Democritus, perceiving age invade
His body weakened, and his mind decayed,
Obeyed the summons with a cheerful face;
Made haste to welcome death, and met him half the race.
That stroke even Epicurus could not bar,
Though he in wit surpassed mankind, as far
As does the midday sun the midnight star.
And thou, dost thou disdain to yield thy breath,
Whose very life is little more than death?
More than one half by lazy sleep possessed;
And when awake, thy soul but nods at best,
Daydreams and sickly thoughts revolving in thy breast.
Eternal troubles haunt thy anxious mind,

Whose cause and cure thou never hopest to find;
But still uncertain, with thyself at strife,
Thou wanderest in the labyrinth of life.

Oh, if the foolish race of man, who find
A weight of cares still pressing on their mind,
Could find as well the cause of this unrest,
And all this burden lodged within the breast;
Sure they would change their course, nor live as now
Uncertain what to wish, or what to vow.
Uneasy both in country and in town,
They search a place to lay their burden down. . . .

Thus every man o'erworks his weary will,
To shun himself, and to shake off his ill;
The shaking fit returns, and hangs upon him still.
No prospect of repose, nor hope of ease;
The wretch is ignorant of his disease;
Which known would all his fruitless trouble spare;
For he would know the world not worth his care;
Then would he search more deeply for the cause,
And study Nature well, and Nature's laws;
For in this moment lies not the debate,
But on our future, fixed, eternal state;
That never changing state, which all must keep,
Whom death has doomed to everlasting sleep.

Why are we then so fond of mortal life,
Beset with dangers, and maintained with strife?
A life, which all our care can never save;
One fate attends us, and one common grave.
Besides, we tread but a perpetual round;
We ne'er strike out, but beat the former ground,
And the same mawkish joys in the same track are found.
For still we think an absent blessing best,
Which cloy, and is no blessing when possessed:
A new arising wish expels it from the breast.
The feverish thirst of life increases still;
We call for more and more, and never have our fill;
Yet know not what to-morrow we shall try,
What dregs of life in the last draught may lie:
Nor, by the longest life we can attain,
One moment from the length of death we gain;
For all behind belongs to his eternal reign.
When once the Fates have cut the mortal thread,
The man as much to all intents is dead,
Who dies to-day, and will as long be so,
As he who died a thousand years ago.

THE SPINNING OF THE FATES.

By CATULLUS.

(Translated by Sir Richard F. Burton.)

[CAIUS VALERIUS CATULLUS, a leading Roman poet, was born at Verona, B.C. 87; died about B.C. 47. He was a wealthy and pleasure-loving gentleman, the friend of Cicero and other chief men of his time. He wrote lyrics, elegies, odes, etc.]

IN the mean time, with shaking bodies and infirm gesture, the Parcae began to intone their veridical chant. Their trembling frames were enwrapped around with white garments, encircled with a purple border at their heels: snowy fillets bound each aged brow, and their hands pursued their never-ending toil, as of custom. The left hand bore the distaff enwrapped in soft wool; the right hand, lightly withdrawing the threads with upturned fingers, did shape them, then twisting them with the prone thumb it turned the balanced spindle with well-polished whirl. And then with a pluck of their tooth the work was always made even, and the bitten wool shreds adhered to their dried lips, which shreds at first had stood out from the fine thread. And in front of their feet wicker baskets of osier twigs took charge of the soft white woolly fleece. These, with clear-sounding voice, as they combed out the wool, outpoured fates of such kind in sacred song, in song which none age yet to come could tax with untruth.

“O with great virtues thine exceeding honor augmenting, stay of Emathia-land, most famous in thine issue, receive what the sisters make known to thee on this gladsome day, a weird veridical! But ye whom the fates do follow: Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

“Now Hesperus shall come unto thee bearing what is longed for by bridegrooms; with that fortunate star shall thy bride come, who ensteeps thy soul with the sway of softening love, and prepares with thee to conjoin in languorous slumber, making her smooth arms thy pillow round 'neath thy sinewy neck. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

“No house ever yet inclosed such loves, no love bound lovers with such pact, as abideth with Thetis, as is the concord of Peleus. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"To ye shall Achilles be born, a stranger to fear, to his foemen not by his back, but by his broad breast known, who, oft-times the victor in the uncertain struggle of the foot race, shall outrun the fire-fleet footsteps of the speedy doe. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"None in war with him may compare as a hero, when the Phrygian streams shall trickle with Trojan blood; and when besieging the walls of Troy with a long-drawn-out warfare, perjured Pelops' third heir shall lay that city waste. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"His glorious acts and illustrious deeds often shall mothers attest o'er funeral rites of their sons, when the white locks from their heads are unloosed amid ashes, and they bruise their discolored breasts with feeble fists. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"For as the husbandman bestrewing the dense wheat ears mows the harvest yellowed 'neath ardent sun, so shall he cast prostrate the corpses of Troy's sons with grim swords. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"His great valor shall be attested by Scamander's wave, which ever pours itself into the swift Hellespont, narrowing whose course with slaughtered heaps of corpses, he shall make tepid its deep stream by mingling warm blood with the water. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"And she a witness in fine shall be the captive maid handed to death, when the heaped-up tomb of earth built in lofty mound shall receive the snowy limbs of the stricken virgin. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"For instant fortune shall give the means to the war-worn Greeks to break Neptune's stone bonds of the Dardanian city, the tall tomb shall be made dank with Polyxena's blood, who as the victim succumbing 'neath two-edged sword, with yielding hams shall fall forward a headless corpse. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"Wherefore haste ye to conjoin in the longed-for delights of your love. Bridegroom, thy goddess receive in felicitous compact; let the bride be given to her eager husband. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.

"Nor shall the nurse at orient light returning, with yester-e'en's thread succeed in circling her neck. [Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles.] Nor need her solicitous mother fear sad discord shall cause a parted bed for her daughter, nor need she cease to hope for dear grandchildren. Haste ye, a weaving the woof, O hasten, ye spindles."

With such soothsaying songs of yore did the Parcæ chant from divine breast the felicitous fate of Peleus. For of aforetime the heaven dwellers were wont to visit the chaste homes of heroes, and to show themselves in mortal assembly, ere yet their worship was scorned. Often the father of the gods, a resting in his glorious temple, when on the festal days his annual rites appeared, gazed on an hundred bulls strewn prone on the earth. Often wandering Liber on topmost summit of Parnassus led his yelling Thyiads with loosely tossed locks. . . . When the Delphians tumultuously trooping from the whole of their city joyously acclaimed the god with smoking altars. Often in lethal strife of war Mavors, or swift Triton's queen, or the Rhamnusian virgin, in person did exhort armed bodies of men. But after the earth was infected with heinous crime, and each one banished justice from their grasping mind, and brothers steeped their hands in fraternal blood, the son ceased grieving o'er departed parents, the sire craved for the funeral rites of his firstborn that freely he might take of the flower of unwedded stepdame, the unholy mother, lying under her unknowing son, did not fear to sully her household gods with dishonor: everything licit and lawless commingled with mad infamy turned away from us the just-seeing mind of the gods. Wherefore nor do they deign to appear at such like assemblies, nor will they permit themselves to be met in the daylight.

EPITHALAMIUM.

By CATULLUS.

(Translated by John Hookham Frere.)

You that from the mother's side
Lead the lingering, blushing bride,
Fair Urania's son —
Leave awhile the lonely mount,
The haunted grove and holy fount
Of chilling Helicon,

With myrtle wreaths enweave thy hair —
Wave the torch aloft in air —

Make no long delay :
With flowing robe and footsteps light,
And gilded buskin glancing bright,
Hither bend thy way.

Join at once, with airy vigor,
In the dance's varied figure,
To the cymbal's chime :
Frolic unrestrained and free —
Let voice, and air, and verse agree,
And the torch beat time.

Hymen come, for Julia
Weds with Manlius to-day,
And deigns to be a bride.
Such a form as Venus wore
In the contest famed of yore,
On Mount Ida's side ;

Like the myrtle or the bay,
Florid, elegant, and gay,
With foliage fresh and new ;
Which the nymphs and forest maids
Have fostered in sequestered shades,
With drops of holy dew.

Leave, then, all the rocks and cells
Of the deep Aonian dells,
And the caverns hoar ;
And the dreary streams that weep
From the stony Thespian steep,
Dripping evermore.

Haste away to new delights,
To domestic happy rites,
Human haunts and ways ;
With a kindly charm applied,
Softened and appease the bride,
And shorten our delays.

Bring her hither, bound to move,
Drawn and led with bands of love,
Like the tender twine

Which the searching ivy plies,
Clinging in a thousand ties
O'er the clasping vine.

Gentle virgins, you besides,
Whom the like event betides,
With the coming year;
Call on Hymen! call him now!
Call aloud! A virgin vow
Best befits his ear.

"Is there any deity
More beloved and kind than he —
More disposed to bless;
Worthy to be worshiped more;
Master of a richer store
Of wealth and happiness?

"Youth and age alike agree
Serving and adoring thee,
The source of hope and care
Care and hope alike engage
The wary parent sunk in age
And the restless heir.

"She the maiden, half afraid,
Hears the new proposal made,
That proceeds from thee;
You resign and hand her over
To the rash and hardy lover
With a fixt decree.

"Hymen, Hymen, you preside,
Maintaining honor and the pride
Of women free from blame,
With a solemn warrant given,
Is there any power in heaven
That can do the same?

"Love, accompanied by thee,
Passes unproved and free,
But without thee, not:
Where on earth, or in the sky,
Can you find a deity
With a fairer lot?

“Heirship in an honored line
 Is sacred as a gift of thine,
 But without thee, not :
 Where on earth, or in the sky,
 Can you find a deity
 With a fairer lot ?

“Rule and empire — royalty,
 Are rightful, as derived from thee,
 But without thee, not :
 Where on earth, or in the sky,
 Can you find a deity
 With a fairer lot ?”

The poet is here in his office as manager of the mob, mediating between them and the gentlefolks within. In the next stanza he speaks as the prolocutor of the rabble outside.

Open locks ! unbar the gate !
 Behold the ready troop that wait
 The coming of the bride ;
 Behold the torches, how they flare !
 Spreading aloft their sparkling hair,
 Flashing far and wide.

Lovely maiden ! here we waste
 The timely moments ; — Come in haste !
 Come then . . . Out, alack !
 Startled at the glare and din,
 She retires to weep within,
 Lingering, hanging back.

Bashful honor and regret,
 For a while detain her yet,
 Lingering, taking leave :
 Taking leave and lingering still,
 With a slow, reluctant will,
 With grief that does not grieve.

Aurunculeia, cease your tears,
 And when to-morrow's morn appears,
 Fear not that the sun
 Will dawn upon a fairer face, —
 Nor in his airy, lofty race
 Behold a lovelier one.

The town minstrels are here introduced ; they begin with the same image which the poet has already employed in his proper person.

“Mark and hear us, gentle bride ;
Behold the torches nimbly plied,
 Waving here and there ;
Along the street and in the porch,
See the fiery-tressed torch,
 Spreads its sparkling hair.

“Like a lily, fair and chaste,
Lovely bride, you shall be placed
 In a garden gay,
A wealthy lord’s delight and pride ;
Come away then, happy bride,
 Hasten, hence away !

“Mark and hear us — he your lord
Will be true at bed and board,
 Nor ever walk astray,
Withdrawing from your lovely side ;
Mark and hear us, gentle bride,
 Hasten, hence away !

“Like unto the tender vine,
He shall ever clasp and twine,
 Clinging night and day,
Fairly bound and firmly tied ;
Come away then, happy bride,
 Hasten, hence away !”

Happy chamber, happy bed,
Can the joys be told or said
 That await you soon ;
Fresh renewals of delight,
In the silent fleeting night
 And the summer noon.

Make ready. There I see within
The bride is veiled ; the guests begin
 To muster close and slow :
Trooping onward close about,
Boys, be ready with a shout —
 “Hymen ! Hymen ! ho !”

Now begins the free career, —
 For many a jest and many a jeer,
 And many a merry saw;
 Customary taunts and gibes,
 Such as ancient use prescribes,
 And immemorial law.

“Some at home, it must be feared,
 Will be slighted and cashiered,
 Pride will have a fall;
 Now the favorites’ reign is o’er:
 Proud enough they were before —
 Proud and nice withal.

“Full of pride and full of scorn,
 Now you see them elipt and shorn,
 Humbler in array;
 Sent away, for fear of harm,
 To the village or the farm, —
 Packed in haste away.

“Other doings must be done,
 Another empire is begun,
 Behold your own domain!
 Gentle bride! Behold it there!
 The lordly palace proud and fair: —
 You shall live and reign,

“In that rich and noble house,
 Till age shall silver o’er the brows,
 And nod the trembling head,
 Not regarding what is meant,
 Incessant uniform assent
 To all that’s done or said.

“Let the faithful threshold greet,
 With omens fair, those lovely feet,
 Lightly lifted o’er;
 Let the garlands wave and bow
 From the lofty lintel’s brow
 That bedeck the door.”

See the couch with crimson dress —
 Where, seated in the deep recess,
 With expectation warm,

The bridegroom views her coming near, —
 The slender youth that led her here
 May now release her arm.

With a fixt intense regard
 He beholds her close and hard
 In awful interview :
 Shortly now she must be sped
 To the chamber and the bed,
 With attendance due.

Let the ancient worthy wives,
 That have past their constant lives
 With a single mate,
 As befits advised age,
 With council and precaution sage Assist and regulate.

She the mistress of the band
 Comes again with high command,
 “ Bridegroom, go your way ;
 There your bride is in the bower,
 Like a lovely lily flower,
 Or a rose in May.

* * * * *

“ Ay, and you yourself, in truth,
 Are a goodly comely youth,
 Proper, tall, and fair ;
 Venus and the Graces too
 Have befriended each of you
 For a lovely pair.

“ There you go ! may Venus bless
 Such as you with good success
 In the lawful track ;
 You that, in an honest way,
 Purchase in the face of day
 Whatsoe'er you lack.”

Sport your fill and never spare —
 Let us have an infant heir
 Of the noble name ;
 Such a line should ever last,
 As it has for ages past,
 Another and the same.

Fear not! with the coming year
 The new Torquatus will be here:
 Him we soon shall see
 With infant gesture fondly seek
 To reach his father's manly cheek,
 From his mother's knee.

With laughing eyes and dewy lip,
 Pouting like the purple tip
 That points the rose's bud;
 While mingled with the mother's grace,
 Strangers shall recognize the trace
 That marks the Manlian blood.

So the mother's fair renown
 Shall betimes adorn and crown
 The child with dignity,
 As we read in stories old
 Of Telemachus the bold
 And chaste Penelope.

Now the merry task is o'er,
 Let us hence and close the door,
 While loud adieus are paid;
 "Live in honor, love, and truth,
 And exercise your lusty youth
 In matches fairly played."

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS OF CATULLUS.

TAKEN AT HIS WORD.

(Version of Walter Savage Landor.)

VARUS would take me t'other day
 To see a little girl he knew;
 Pretty and witty in her way,
 With impudence enough for two.

Scarce are we seated, ere she chatters
 (As pretty girls are wont to do)

About all persons, places, matters :

“And pray, what has been done for you ?”

“Bithynia, lady,” I replied,

“Is a fine province for a prætor,

For none, I promise you, beside,
And least of all am I her debtor.”

“Sorry for that !” said she. “However,
You have brought with you, I dare say,
Some litter-bearers : none so clever
In any other part as they.

“Bithynia is the very place
For all that’s steady, tall, and straight;
It is the nature of the race:
Could you not lend me six or eight ?”

“Why, six or eight of them or so,”
Said I, determined to be grand :
“My fortune is not quite so low
But these are still at my command.”

“You’ll send them ?” — “Willingly !” I told her;
Although I had not here or there
One who could carry on his shoulder
The leg of an old broken chair.

“Catullus, what a charming hap is
Our meeting in this sort of way !
I would be carried to Serapis
To-morrow !” — “Stay, fair lady, stay !

“You overvalue my intention;
Yes, there are eight . . . there may be nine;
I merely had forgot to mention
That they are Cinna’s, and not mine.”

TO LESBIA’S SPARROW.

(Translation of Sir Charles Elton.)

Sparrow ! my nymph’s delicious pleasure !
Who with thee, her pretty treasure,
Fanciful in frolic, plays

Thousand, thousand wanton ways;
 And, fluttering, lays to panting rest
 On the soft orbings of her breast;
 Thy beak with finger-tip incites,
 And dallies with thy becks and bites;
 When my beauty, my desire,
 Feels her darling whim inspire,
 With nameless triflings, such as these,
 To snatch, I trow, a tiny ease
 For some keen fever of the breast,
 While passion toys itself to rest;
 I would that happy lady be,
 And so in pastime sport with thee,
 And lighten love's soft agony.
 The sweet resource were bliss untold,
 Dear as that apple of ripe gold,
 Which, by the nimble virgin found,
 Unloos'd the zone that had so fast been bound.

TO HIMSELF; ON LESBIA'S INCONSTANCY.

(Translation of Thomas Moore.)

Cease the sighing fool to play;
 Cease to trifle life away;
 Nor vainly think those joys thine own,
 Which all, alas, have falsely flown.
 What hours, Catullus, once were thine,
 How fairly seem'd thy day to shine,
 When lightly thou didst fly to meet
 The girl whose smile was then so sweet —
 The girl thou lov'dst with fonder pain
 Than e'er thy heart can feel again.
 Ye met — your souls seem'd all in one,
 Like tapers that commingling shone;
 Thy heart was warm enough for both,
 And hers in truth was nothing loath.
 Such were the hours that once were thine;
 But, ah! those hours no longer shine.
 For now the nymph delights no more
 In what she loved so much before;
 And all Catullus now can do,
 Is to be proud and frigid too;
 Nor follow where the wanton flies,
 Nor sue the bliss that she denies.

False maid! he bids farewell to thee,
 To love, and all love's misery;
 The heyday of his heart is o'er,
 Nor will he court one favor more.

Fly, perjured girl! — but whither fly?
 Who now will praise thy cheek and eye?
 Who now will drink the siren tone,
 Which tells him thou art all his own?
 Oh, none: — and he who loved before
 Can never, never love thee more.

A WOMAN'S PROMISES.

(Translation of Sir Theodore Martin.)

Never a soul but myself, though Jove himself were to woo her,
 Lesbia says she would choose, might she have me for her mate.
 Says — but what woman will say to a lover on fire to possess her
 Write on the bodiless wind, write on the stream as it runs.

TO LESBIA, ON HER FALSEHOOD.

(Translation of Thomas Moore.)

Thou told'st me, in our days of love,
 That I had all that heart of thine;
 That ev'n to share the couch of Jove,
 Thou wouldst not, Lesbia, part from mine.

How purely wert thou worship'd then!
 Not with the vague and vulgar fires
 Which Beauty wakes in soulless men, —
 But loved, as children by their sires.

That flattering dream, alas, is o'er; —
 I know thee now — and though these eyes
 Dote on thee wildly as before,
 Yet, ev'n in doting, I despise.

Yes, sorceress — mad as it may seem —
 With all thy craft, such spells adorn thee,
 That passion ev'n outlives esteem,
 And I at once adore — and scorn thee.

THE PARTING MESSAGE TO LESBIA.

Addressed to Furius and Aurelius.

(Translation of Lamb.)

Companions, who would gladly go
With me through every toil below
To man's remotest seats:
Whether Catullus should explore
Far India, on whose echoing shore
The eastern billow beats:

Whether he seek Hyrcania wild,
The Tartar hordes, or Arabs mild,
Or Parthia's archer train:
Or tread that intersected isle,
Whence pouring forth the sev'nfold Nile
Discolors all the main.

Whether across the Alps he toil,
To view the war-ennobled soil
Where Cæsar's trophies stand;
The Rhine that saw its Gaul's disgrace,
Or dare the painted Briton race
In their extremest land.

Companions dear, prepared to wend
Where'er the gods may place your friend,
And every lot to share;
A few unwelcome words receive,
And to that once-loved fair I leave
My latest message bear.

Still let her live and still be blest,
By profligates in hundreds prest,
Still sport in ease and wealth;
Still of those hundreds love not one,
Still cast off each by turns undone
In fortune and in health.

But let her deem my passion o'er:
Her guilt has crush'd, to bloom no more,
The love her beauty raised;
As droops the flower, the meadow's pride,
Which springing by the furrow's side
The passing share has grazed.

INVITATION TO CÆCILIUS.

(Translation of Lamb.)

Go, paper, to Cæcilius say,
 To him I love, the bard whose lay
 The sweetest thoughts attend;
 Say, he must quit his loved retreat,
 Comum and Larius' lake, to greet
 Verona and his friend.

Here let him some advice receive,
 A friend of his and mine will give.
 If wise, he'll speed his way;
 Although the fair his haste may check
 A thousand times, and on his neck
 May hang, and beg his stay.

For, when of old she read his strains
 To her on Dindymus who reigns,
 Did raging passion seize
 On all her heart; and since that day
 She idly wears his youth away
 In love and slothful ease.

Yet thee, fair girl, I not abuse,
 More learned than the Sapphic Muse,
 And warm with all her fire;
 For, ah! so soft, so sweetly flow'd
 His melting strains, his tender ode,
 They well might love inspire.

THE ORIGINAL OF "DR. FELL."

(Translation of Thomas Moore.)

I love thee and hate thee, but if I can tell
 The cause of my love and my hate, why I die!
 I can feel it, alas! I can feel it too well,
 That I love thee and hate thee, but cannot tell why.

TO THE PENINSULA OF SIRMIO, ON HIS RETURN HOME.

(Translation of Leigh Hunt.)

O best of all the scatter'd spots that lie
 In sea or lake,—apple of landscape's eye,—

How gladly do I drop within thy nest,
 With what a sigh of full, contented rest,
 Scarce able to believe my journey's o'er,
 And that these eyes behold thee safe once more!
 Oh where's the luxury like the smile at heart,
 When the mind breathing, lays its load apart,—
 When we come home again, tired out, and spread
 The loosen'd limbs o'er all the wish'd-for bed!
 This, this alone is worth an age of toil.
 Hail, lovely Sirmio! Hail, paternal soil!
 Joy, my bright waters, joy: your master's come!
 Laugh every dimple on the cheek of home!

TO CORNIFICIUS.

(Translation of Leigh Hunt.)

Sick, Cornificius, is thy friend,
 Sick to the heart; and sees no end
 Of wretched thoughts, that gathering fast
 Threaten to wear him out at last.
 And yet you never come and bring—
 Though 'twere the least and easiest thing—
 A comfort in that talk of thine:—
 You vex me:—this, to love like mine?
 Prithee, a little talk for ease, for ease,
 Full as the tears of poor Simonides.

TO HIS DEAD BROTHER.

(Translation of James Cranstoun.)

Brother! o'er many lands and oceans borne,
 I reach thy grave, death's last sad rites to pay;
 To call thy silent dust in vain, and mourn,
 Since ruthless fate has hurried thee away:
 Woe's me! yet now upon thy tomb I lay—
 All soaked with tears for thee, thee loved so well—
 What gifts our fathers gave the honored clay
 Of valued friends; take them—my grief they tell:
 And now, forever hail! forever fare thee well!

POEMS OF TIBULLUS.

[ALBIUS TIBULLUS, a leading Roman elegiac poet, — the great quartet being, in order of seniority, Gallus, Tibullus, Propertius, and Ovid, — was probably born B.C. 54, and died B.C. 19. He was a Roman knight of wealthy family, but early orphaned and his property confiscated in the civil wars; and was attached to the circle of Valerius Messala as Horace to that of Mæcenas. He distinguished himself in a campaign for Augustus, and accompanied Messala on a mission to Asia as far as Coreyra, where he fell sick; but hated war, had no ambition, and chose to live quietly in the country rather even than at Rome. He was of a gentle and affectionate nature, of fine person and winning manners, greatly beloved and his death deeply regretted. His poems, though not of great number or variety, rank high for style and artistic finish; he has been compared to Collins.]

A HUSBANDMAN'S LIFE THE IDEAL ONE.

(Translation by Sir Charles Elton.)

LET others pile their yellow ingots high,
And see their cultured acres round them spread;
While hostile borderers draw their anxious eye,
And at the trumpet's blast their sleep is fled.

Me let my poverty to ease resign;
While my bright hearth reflects its blazing cheer;
In season let me plant the pliant vine,
And, with light hand, my swelling apples rear.

Hope, fail not thou! let earth her fruitage yield;
Let the brimmed vat flow red with virgin wine:
For still some lone, bare stump that marks the field,
Or antique crossway stone, with flowers I twine,

In pious rite; and, when the year anew
Matures the blossom on the budding spray,
I bear the peasant's god his grateful due,
And firstling fruits upon his altar lay.

Still let thy temple's porch, O Ceres! wear
The spiky garland from my harvest field;
And 'midst my orchard, 'gainst the birds of air,
His threatening hook let red Priapus wield.

Ye too, once guardians of a rich domain,
Now of poor fields, domestic gods! be kind.
Then, for unnumbered herds, a calf was slain;
Now to your altars is a lamb consigned.

The mighty victim of a scanty scil,
 A lamb alone shall bleed before your shrine;
 While round it shout the youthful sons of toil,
 "Hail! grant the harvest! grant the generous wine!"

Content with little, I no more would tread
 The lengthening road, but shun the summer day,
 Where some o'er-branching tree might shade my head,
 And watch the murmuring rivulet glide away.

Nor could I blush to wield the rustic prong,
 The lingering oxen goad; or some stray lamb,
 Embosomed in my garment, bear along,
 Or kid forgotten by its heedless dam.

Spare my small flock! ye thieves and wolves, assail
 The wealthier cotes, that ampler booty hold;
 Ne'er for my shepherd due lustrations fail;
 I soothe with milk the goddess of the fold.

Be present, deities! nor gifts disdain
 From homely board; nor cups with scorn survey,
 Earthen, yet pure; for such the ancient swain
 Formed for himself, and shaped of ductile clay.

I envy not my sires their golden heap;
 Their garner's floors with sheafy corn bespread;
 Few sheaves suffice: enough, in easy sleep
 To lay my limbs upon th' accustomed bed.

How sweet to hear, without, the howling blast,
 And strain a yielding mistress to my breast!
 Or, when the gusty torrent's rush has past,
 Sink, lulled by beating rains, to sheltered rest!

Be this my lot; be his th' unenvied store,
 Who the drear storm endures, and raging sea;
 Ah! perish emeralds and the golden ore,
 If the fond, anxious nymph must weep for me!

Messala! range the earth and main, that Rome
 May shine with trophies of the foes that fell;
 But me a beauteous nymph enchains at home,
 At her hard door a sleepless sentinel.

I heed not praise, my Delia! while with thee;
 Sloth brand my name, so I thy sight behold.

Let me the oxen yoke; oh come with me!
On desert mountains I will feed my fold.

And, while I pressed thee in my tender arms,
Sweet were my slumber on the rugged ground:
What boots the purple couch, if cruel charms
In wakeful tears the midnight hours have drowned?

Not the soft plume can yield the limbs repose,
Nor yet the brodered covering soothe to sleep;
Not the calm streamlet that in murmurs flows,
With sound oblivious o'er the eyelids creep.

Iron is he who might thy form possess,
Yet flies to arms, and thirsts for plunder's gains;
What though his spear Cilician squadrons press,
What though his tent be pitched on conquered plains?

In gold and silver mail conspicuous he
May stride the steed, that, pawing, spurs the sand;
May I my last looks fondly bend on thee,
And grasp thee with my dying, faltering hand!

And thou wilt weep when, cold, I press the bier,
That soon shall on the flaming pyre be thrown;
And print the kiss, and mingle many a tear;
Not thine a breast of steel, a heart of stone.

Yes — thou wilt weep. No youth shall thence return
With tearless eye, no virgin homeward wend:
But thou forbear to violate my urn,
Spare thy soft cheeks, nor those loose tresses rend.

Now fate permits, now blend the sweet embrace:
Death, cowed in darkness, creeps with stealing tread,
Ill suits with sluggish age love's sprightly grace,
And murmured fondness with a hoary head.

The light amour be mine; the shivered door;
The midnight fray; ye trumps and standards, hence!
Here is my camp; bleed they who thirst for ore:
Wealth I despise in easy competence.

AN UNWILLING WELCOME TO LOVE.

(Translation of Sir Charles Elton.)

I see my slavery and a mistress near;
Oh, freedom of my fathers! fare thee well!

A slavery wretched, and a chain severe,
Nor Love remits the bonds that o'er me fell.

How have I then deserved consuming pain?
Or for what sin am I of flames the prey?
I burn, ah me! I burn in every vein!
Take, cruel girl, oh take thy torch away!

Oh! but to 'scape this agonizing heat,
Might I a stone on icy mountains lie!
Stand a bleak rock by wreaking billows beat,
And swept by madding whirlwinds of the sky!

Bitter the day, and ah! the nightly shade;
And all my hours in venom'd stream have rolled;
No elegies, no lays of Phœbus, aid;
With hollow palm she craves the tinkling gold.

Away, ye Muses! if ye serve not Love:
I, not to sing of battles, woo your strain;
How walks the bright-haired sun the heavens above,
Or turns the full-orbed moon her steeds again.

By verse I seek soft access to my fair;
Away, ye Muses! with the useless lore;
Through blood and pillage I must gifts prepare;
Or weep, thrown prostrate at her bolted door.

Suspended spoils I'll snatch from pompous fanes;
But Venus first shall violated be;
She prompts the sacrilege, who forged the chains
And gave that nymph insatiable to me.

Perish the wretch! who culls the emerald green,
Or paints the snowy fleece with Tyrian red!
Through filmy Coan robes her limbs are seen,
And India's pearls gleam lucid from her head.

'Tis pampered avarice thus corrupts the fair;
The key is turned; the mastiff guards the door:
The guard's disarmed, if large the bribe you bear;
The dog is hushed; the key withstands no more.

Alas! that e'er a heavenly form should grace
The nymph that pants with covetous desires!
Hence tears and clamorous brawls, and sore disgrace
E'en to the name of love, that bliss inspires.

For thee, that shutt'st the lover from thy door,
 Foiled by a price, the gilded hire of shame,
 May tempests scatter this thy ill-got ore,
 Strewn on the winds, or melted in the flame.

May climbing fires thy mansion's roof devour,
 And youths gaze glad, nor throw the quenching wave;
 May none bemoan thee at thy dying hour,
 None pay the mournful tribute to thy grave.

But she, unbribed, unbought, yet melting kind,
 May she a hundred years, unfading, bloom;
 Be wept, while on the flaming pile reclined,
 And yearly garlands twine her pillared tomb.

Some ancient lover, with his locks of gray,
 Honoring the raptures that his youth had blest,
 Shall hang the wreath, and slow-departing say,
 "Sleep! — and may earth lie light upon thy breast!"

Truth prompts my tongue; but what can truth avail?
 The love her laws prescribe must now be mine;
 My ancestors' loved groves I set to sale —
 My household gods, your title I resign!

Nay — Circe's juice, Medea's drugs, each plant
 Of Thessaly, whence dews of poison fall; —
 Let but my Nemesis' soft smile enchant,
 Then let her mix the cup — I'll drink them all!

TO MESSALA.

(Translation of James Cranstoun.)

Thou'lt cross the Ægean waves, but not with me,
 Messala; yet by thee and all thy band
 I pray that I may still remembered be,
 Lingering on lone Phæacia's foreign strand.

Spare me, fell Death! no mother have I here
 My charred bones in Sorrow's lap to lay;
 Oh, spare! for here I have no sister dear
 To shower Assyrian odors o'er my clay,

Or to my tomb with locks disheveled come,
 And pour the tear of tender piety:
 Nor Delia, who, ere yet I quitted Rome,
 'Tis said consulted all the gods on high;

Thrice from the boy the sacred tale she drew,
 Thrice from the streets he brought her omens sure;
 All smiled, but tears would still her cheeks bedew:
 Naught could her thoughts from that sad journey lure.

I blent sweet comfort with my parting words,
 Yet anxiously I yearned for more delay.
 Dire omens now, now inauspicious birds
 Detained me, now old Saturn's baleful day.

How oft I said, ere yet I left the town,
 My awkward feet had stumbled at the door!
 Enough: if lover heed not Cupid's frown,
 His headstrong ways he'll bitterly deplore.

Where is thine Isis? What avail thee now
 Her brazen sistra clashed so oft by thee?
 What, while thou didst before her altars bow,
 Thy pure lavations and thy chastity?

Great Isis, help! for in thy fanes displayed,
 Full many a tablet proves thy power to heal;
 So Delia shall, in linen robes arrayed,
 Her vows before thy holy threshold seal.

And morn and eve, loose-tressed, thy praise to pour,
 Mid Pharian crowds conspicuous she'll return;
 But let me still my father's gods adore,
 And to the old Lar his monthly incense burn.

How blest men lived when good old Saturn reigned,
 Ere roads had intersected hill and dale!
 No pine had then the azure wave disdained,
 Or spread the swelling canvas to the gale;

No roving mariner, on wealth intent,
 From foreign climes a cargo homeward bore;
 No sturdy steer beneath the yoke had bent,
 No galling bit the conquered courser wore;

No house had doors, no pillar on the wold
 Was reared to mark the limits of the plain;
 The oaks ran honey, and all uncontrolled
 The fleecy ewes brought milk to glad the swain.

Rage, broils, the curse of war, were all unknown;
 The cruel smith had never forged the spear:

Now Jove is king, the seeds of bale are sown,
Scars, wounds, and shipwrecks, thousand deaths loom near.

Spare me, great Jove! No perjuries, I ween,
Distract my heart with agonizing woe;
No impious words by me have uttered been,
Against the gods above or gods below.

But if my thread of life be wholly run,
Upon my stone these lines engraven be:
"HERE BY FELL FATE TIBULLUS LIES UNDONE, WHOM DEAR MESSALA LED O'ER LAND AND SEA."

But me, the facile child of tender Love,
Will Venus waft to blest Elysium's plains,
Where dance and song resound, and every grove
Rings with clear-throated warblers' dulcet strains.

Here lands untilled their richest treasures yield;
Here sweetest cassia all untended grows;
With lavish lap the earth, in every field,
Outpours the blossom of the fragrant rose.

Here bands of youths and tender maidens chime
In love's sweet lures, and pay the untiring vow;
Here reigns the lover, slain in youthhood's prime,
With myrtle garland round his honored brow.

But wrapt in ebon gloom, the torture hell
Low lies, and pitchy rivers round it roar;
There serpent-haired Tisiphone doth yell,
And lash the damnèd crew from shore to shore.

Mark in the gate the snake-tongued sable hound,
Whose hideous howls the brazen portals close;
There lewd Ixion, Juno's tempter, bound,
Spins round his wheel in endless unreprieve.

O'er nine broad acres stretched, base Tityus lies,
On whose black entrails vultures ever prey;
And Tantalus is there, 'mid waves that rise
To mock his misery and rush away.

The Danaïdes, who soiled Love's lovely shrine,
Fill on, and bear their piercèd pails in vain;—
There writhe the wretch who's wronged a love of mine,
And wished me absent on a long campaign!

Be chaste, my love ; and let thine old nurse e'er,
 To shield thy maiden fame, around thee tread,
 Tell thee sweet tales, and by the lamp's bright glare
 From the full distaff draw the lengthening thread.

And when thy maidens, spinning round thy knee,
 Sleep-worn, by slow degrees their work lay by,
 Oh, let me speed unheralded to thee,
 Like an immortal rushing down the sky !

Then all undrest, with ruffled locks astream,
 And feet unsandaled, meet me on my way !
 Aurora, goddess of the morning beam,
 Bear, on thy rosy steeds, that happy day !

SULFICIA'S APPEAL.

(Translation of Sir Charles Elton.)

Oh savage boar ! where'er thy haunt is found,
 In champaign meads or mountain thickets deep,
 Spare my dear youth ; nor whet thy fangs to wound ;
 May guardian Love the lover harmless keep.

Him far away the wandering chase has led :
 Wither all woods and perish every hound !
 What frantic mood, the tangled net to spread,
 And sore his tender hands with brambles wound !

Where is the joy, to thread the forest lair,
 While with hooked thorns thy snowy legs are frayed ?
 But if, Cherinthus, I thy wanderings share,
 Thy nets I'll trail through every mountain glade.

Myself will track the nimble roebuck's trace,
 And from the hound the iron leash remove :
 Then woods will charm me, when in thy embrace
 The conscious nets behold me, oh my love !

Unharm'd the boar shall break the tangling snare,
 Lest our stolen hours of bliss impeded be :
 But, far from me, soft Venus' joys forbear ;
 With Dian spread the nets, when far from me.

May she, that robs me of thy dear embrace,
 Fall to the woodland beasts, by piecemeal torn :
 But to thy father leave the toilsome chase ;
 Fly to my arms, on wings of transport borne.

TO HIS MISTRESS.

(Translation of Thomas Moore.)

“Never shall woman’s smile have power
 To win me from those gentle charms!”
 Thus swore I in that happy hour
 When Love first gave them to my arms.

And still alone thou charm’st my sight —
 Still, though our city proudly shine
 With forms and faces fair and bright,
 I see none fair or bright but thine.

Would thou wert fair for only me,
 And couldst no heart but mine allure!
 To all men else unpleasing be,
 So shall I feel my prize secure.

Oh, love like mine ne’er wants the zest
 Of others’ envy, others’ praise;
 But in its silence safely blest,
 Broods o’er a bliss it ne’er betrays.

Charm of my life! by whose sweet power
 All cares are hushed, all ills subdued —
 My light in ev’n the darkest hour,
 My crowd in deepest solitude!

No; not though heaven itself sent down
 Some maid of more than heavenly charms,
 With bliss undreamt thy bard to crown,
 Would I for her forsake those arms.

LOVE DEAF TO DOUBT.

(Translation of James Grainger.)

Fame says, my mistress loves another swain;
 Would I were deaf, when Fame repeats the wrong!
 All crimes to her imputed give me pain,
 Not change my love: Fame, stop your saucy tongue!

ELEGIES OF PROPERTIUS.

[SEXTUS PROPERTIUS, the foremost of Roman elegiac poets, was a wealthy country gentleman, born at Assisium (Assisi), in Umbria, — the birthplace of St. Francis, — about B.C. 50. Like Tibullus he was early orphaned, and his property confiscated after Philippi; but his mother secured him an education, took him to Rome, and tried to make a lawyer of him. He preferred letters, however, and his first book of poems gained him admission to Mæcenas' circle. Little is known of his later history, though he probably had a family, and certainly lived till after B.C. 16. He was a thin, sickly man, very careful in dress, morbidly sensitive and impressionable, and much given to melancholy. His poems are very difficult in matter and language, but of high rank in originality, strength, and imaginative power.]

TO MÆCENAS.

(Translated by Thomas Gray, — first published in Edmund Gosse's edition.)

You ask why thus my loves I still rehearse,
 Whence the soft strain and ever melting verse?
 From Cynthia all that in my numbers shines;
 She is my genius, she inspires the lines;
 No Phœbus else, no other Muse I know,
 She tunes my easy rhyme, and gives the lay to flow.
 If the loose curls around her forehead stray,
 Or, lawless, o'er their ivory margin stray:
 If the thin Coan web her shape reveal,
 And half disclose those limbs it should conceal;
 Of those loose curls, that ivory front I write;
 Of the dear web whole volumes I indite:
 Or if to music she the lyre awake,
 That the soft subject of my song I make,
 And sing with what a careless grace she flings
 Her artful hand across the sounding strings.
 If sinking into sleep she seems to close
 Her languid lids, I favor her repose
 With lulling notes, and thousand beauties see
 That slumber brings to aid my poetry.
 When, less averse, and yielding to desires,
 She half accepts and half rejects my fires,
 While to retain the envious lawn she tries,
 And struggles to elude my longing eyes,
 The fruitful muse from that auspicious night
 Dates the long Iliad of the amorous fight.
 In brief, whate'er she do, or say, or look,
 'Tis ample matter for a lover's book;

And many a copious narrative you'll see
Big with the important Nothing's history.

Yet would the tyrant Love permit me raise
My feeble voice, to sound the victor's praise,
To paint the hero's toil, the ranks of war,
The laureled triumph and the sculptured car;
No giant race, no tumult of the skies,
No mountain structures in my verse should rise,
Nor tale of Thebes nor Ilium there should be,
Nor how the Persian trod the indignant sea;
Not Marius' Cimbrian wreaths would I relate,
Nor lofty Carthage struggling with her fate.
Here should Augustus great in arms appear,
And thou, Mæcenas, be my second care;
Here Mutina from flames and famine free,
And there the ensanguined wave of Sicily,
And sceptered Alexandria's captive shore,
And sad Philippi, red with Roman gore:
Then, while the vaulted skies loud Ios rend,
In golden chains should loaded monarchs bend,
And hoary Nile with pensive aspect seem
To mourn the glories of his sevenfold stream,
While prows, that late in fierce encounter met,
Move through the sacred way and vainly threat.
Thee, too, the Muse should consecrate to fame,
And with her garlands weave thy ever-faithful name.

But nor Callimachus' enervate strain
May tell of Jove, and Phlegra's blasted plain;
Nor I with unaccustomed vigor trace
Back to its source divine the Julian race.
Sailors to tell of winds and seas delight,
The shepherd of his flocks, the soldier of the fight,
A milder warfare I in verse display;
Each in his proper art should waste the day:
Nor thou my gentle calling disapprove,—
To die is glorious in the bed of love.

Happy the youth, and not unknown to fame,
Whose heart has never felt a second flame.
Oh, might that envied happiness be mine!
To Cynthia all my wishes I confine;
Or if, alas! it be my fate to try
Another love, the quicker let me die:
But she, the mistress of my faithful breast,
Has oft the charms of constancy confest,

Condemns her fickle sex's fond mistake,
 And hates the tale of Troy for Helen's sake.
 Me from myself the soft enchantress stole;
 Ah! let her ever my desires control,
 Or if I fall the victim of her scorn,
 From her loved door may my pale corse be born
 The power of herbs can other harms remove,
 And find a cure for every ill but love.
 The Melian's hurt Machaon could repair,
 Heal the slow chief, and send again to war;
 To Chiron Phœnix owed his long-lost sight,
 And Phœbus' son recalled Androgeon to the Light.
 Here arts are vain, e'en magic here must fail,
 The powerful mixture and the midnight spell;
 The hand that can my captive heart release,
 And to this bosom give its wonted peace,
 May the long thirst of Tantalus allay,
 Or drive the infernal vulture from his prey.
 For ills unseen what remedy is found?
 Or who can probe the undiscovered wound?
 The bed avails not, nor the leech's care,
 Nor changing skies can hurt, nor sultry air.
 'Tis hard th' elusive symptoms to explore:
 To-day the lover walks, to-morrow is no more;
 A train of mourning friends attend his pall,
 And wonder at the sudden funeral.

When then my Fates that breath they gave shall claim,
 And the short marble but preserve a name,
 A little verse my all that shall remain;
 Thy passing courser's slackened speed restrain;
 (Thou envied honor of thy poet's days,
 Of all our youth the ambition and the praise!)
 Then to my quiet urn awhile draw near;
 And say, while o'er the place you drop the tear, —
 Love and the fair were of his life the pride;
 He lived, while she was kind; and when she frowned, he died

THE EFFIGY OF LOVE.

(Translation of Sir Charles Elton.)

Had he not hands of rare device, whoe'er
 First painted Love in figure of a boy?
 He saw what thoughtless beings lovers were,
 Who blessings lose, whilst lightest cares employ.

Nor added he those airy wings in vain,
 And bade through human hearts the godhead fly;
 For we are tost upon a wavering main;
 Our gale, inconstant, veers around the sky.

Nor, without cause, he grasps those barbed dart.
 The Cretan quiver o'er his shoulder cast;
 Ere we suspect a foe, he strikes our hearts;
 And those inflicted wounds forever last.

In me are fixed those arrows, in my breast;
 But sure his wings are shorn, the boy remains;
 For never takes he flight, nor knows he rest;
 Still, still I feel him warring through my veins.

In these scorched vitals dost thou joy to dwell?
 Oh shame! to others let thy arrows flee;
 Let veins untouched with all thy venom swell;
 Not me thou torturest, but the shade of me.

Destroy me — who shall then describe the fair?
 This my light Muse to thee high glory brings:
 When the nymph's tapering fingers, flowing hair,
 And eyes of jet, and gliding feet she sings.

PREDICTION OF POETIC IMMORTALITY.

(Translation of Sir Charles Elton.)

Sprite of Callimachus! and thou blest shade,
 Coan Philetas! I your grove would tread:
 Me, Love's vowed priest, have Grecia's choirs obeyed,
 From their pure fount in Latian's orgies led.

Say, Spirits! what inspiring grotto gave
 Alike to both that subtly tender strain?
 Which foot auspicious entered first the cave,
 Or from what spring ye drank your flowing vein?

Who lists, may din with arms Apollo's ear:
 Smooth let the numbers glide, whose fame on high
 Lifts me from earth: behold my Muse appear!
 And on wreathed coursers pass in triumph by!

With me the little Loves the car ascend;
 My chariot-wheels a throng of bards pursues;

Why, with loose reins, in idle strife contend ?
Narrow the course which Heaven assigns the Muse.

Full many, Rome, shall bid thy annals shine,
And Asian Bactra rise thy empire's bound:
Mine are the lays of peace, and flowers are mine
Gather'd on Helicon's untrodden ground.

Maids of the sacred fount! with no harsh crown,
But with soft garland wreath your poet's head!
Those honors, which th' invidious crowd disown,
While yet I live, shall doubly grace me dead.

Whate'er the silent tomb has veiled in shade
Shines more august through venerable fame;
Time has the merits of the dead displayed,
And rescued from the dust a glorious name.

Who, else, would know, that e'er Troy-towers had bowed
To the pine-steed? that e'er Achilles strove
With grappling rivers? that round Ida flowed
The stream of Simois, cradling infant Jove?

If Hector's blood dyed thrice the wheel-tracked plain?
Polydamas, Deiphobus, once fell,
Or Helenus was numbered with the slain?
Scarce his own soil could of her Paris tell.

Shrunk were thy record, Troy! whose captured wall
Felt twice th' Ætæan god's resistless rage:
Nor he, the bard that registered thy fall,
Had left his growing song to every age.

Me too shall Rome, among her last, revere;
But that far day shall on my ashes rise;
No stone a worthless sepulchre shall rear,
The mean memorial where a poet lies.

So may the Lycian god my vows approve!
Now let my verse its wonted sphere regain;
That, touched with sympathies of joy and love,
The melting nymph may listen to my strain.

'Tis sung that Orpheus, with his Thracian tones,
Stayed the wild herd, and stayed the troubled flood;
Moved by Amphion's lute Cythæron's stones
Leaped into form, and Thebes aspiring stood.

Beneath rude Ætna's crag, O Polypheme!
 On the smooth deep did Galatea rein
 Her horses, dropping with the briny stream,
 And wind their course to catch the floating strain.

Then, if the god of verse, the god of wine,
 Look down propitious, and with smiles approve;
 What wonder, if the fair's applause be mine,
 If thronging virgins list the lays of love?

Though no green marble, from Tænarian mines,
 Swells in the columns that my roof uphold;
 No ceiling's arch with burnished ivory shines,
 And intersecting beams that blaze with gold;

My orchards vie not with Phæacian groves,
 Through my carved grot no Marcian fountains play;
 With me the Muse in breathless dances roves;
 Nymphs haunt my dwelling; readers love my lay.

Oh, fortunate, fair maid! whoe'er thou art,
 That, in my gentle song, shalt honored be!
 This to each charm shall lasting bloom impart;
 Each tender verse a monument of thee!

The sumptuous pyramids, that stately rise
 Among the stars, the Mausolean tomb,
 Th' Olympic fane, expanded like the skies—
 Not these can scape th' irrevocable doom.

The force of rushing rains, or wasting flame,
 The weight of years may bow their glories down;
 But Genius wins an undecaying name,
 Through ages strong, and deathless in renown.

PRAISE OF A LIFE OF EASE.

(Translation of Sir Charles Elton.)

Love is the god of peace: we lovers know
 But love's hard combats, and a mistress-foe:
 Not gold's devouring want my soul has curst;
 Not from a jeweled cup I slake my thirst;
 I plow not wide Campania's mellowed soil,
 Nor for thy brass in ships, O Corinth! toil.
 Ah! hapless clay that erst Prometheus pressed,
 Molding a rash and unforeseeing breast:

The skill, that knit the frame, o'erlooked the heart;
An upright reasoning soul escaped his art.
Now tost by winds we roam the troubled flood,
Link foe to foe, and restless pant for blood.
Fool! not on Acheron thy wealth shall float,
All naked drifting in th' infernal boat.
The conqueror with the captive skims the tide,
And chained Jugurtha sits at Marius' side:
Robed Cræsus shares the tattered Irus' doom,
And owns that death the best, which soon shall come.
Me in youth's flower could Helicon entrance,
My hands with Muses linked in mazy dance:
Me has it charmed to bathe my soul in wine;
And vernal roses round my temples twine:
When irksome age hath stolen on love's delight,
And strewn my sable locks with sprinkled white;
Then may it please to search in Nature's ways,
And learn what god the world's vast fabric sways;
How dawns the rising east and fades again;
How the round moon repairs her crescent wane;
How winds the salt sea sweep, and th' eastern blast
The billows warps, and clouds their ceaseless waste.
Whether a day shall come, when headlong hurled
Shall fall the tottering pillars of the world;
Why drinks the purpling bow the rainy cloud;
Why Pindus' summits reel, in earthquake bowed;
Why shines the sun's wheeled orb with unnumbered light,
His golden coursers palled in mourning night;
Why turns Boötes slow his starry wain,
Why sparkling throng the Pleiads' clustered train;
Why bounded roll the deepening ocean's tides;
Why the full year in parted seasons glides;
If under earth gods judge, and giants rave;
Tisiphone's fierce ringlets snaky wave;
Furies Alemæon scourge, and Phineas hungering crave;
Thirst burn in streams, wheels whirl, rocks backward leap,
Or Hell's dark mouth three-headed Cerberus keep:
If Tityus' straitened limbs nine acres press;
Or fables mock man's credulous wretchedness
Through long tradition's age: nor terror's strife
Survive the pyre:—be such my close of life.
Go ye who list, the Parthian overcome,
Bring Crassus' wrested standards back to Rome.

THE PLEA OF CORNELIA.

(Translation of Professor E. D. A. Morshead.)

Cease, Paullus, cease! thy fruitless tears withhold;
 Unto no prayer will Hell's dark gates unfold!
 From Death's dark bourne none cometh forth again;
 Grief beats th' impenetrable bars in vain.
 Tho' Dis should harken, in his gloomy hall,
 The deaf shores drink whatever teardrops fall.
 Prayers may to Heaven and heavenly gods aspire,
 But, when Hell's ferryman hath ta'en his hire,
 The dark gate seals the legacy of fire.
 That truth sad trumpets pealed, when kindling flame
 Dropped through the bier the ashes of my frame —
 Mine — Scipio's child and Paullus' consort hailed,
 Mother of noble children — what availed?
 Found I, for all my fame, the Fates less stern?
 Light dust am I, a handful in an urn!

Ye nights of Hell! ye fens and marshes gray,
 And snakelike streams that wind about my way!
 Untimely have I come, yet guiltless all —
 Lord of the Dead, soft let thy sentence fall!
 If Æacus, if judgment here there be,
 Let urn and scroll speak justice' doom on me;
 Judge sit by judge — let Minos' throne be nigh,
 And the stern court, and Furies' company.
 Rest, Sisyphus! forego thy stone and hill;
 Ixion, let thy whizzing wheel be still!
 The cheating wave let Tantalus recall;
 Let Cerberus no passing ghost appal;
 Hell's bolt be silent, and its chain let fall!

Lo, mine own cause I plead! If false my plea,
 Hard weigh the Danaides' urn of doom on me!
 If trophied spoils bring heritage of fame,
 Speak, Spain and Afric, of my grandsires' name!
 Well matched with them may stand my mother's line,
 And Scipio's stock with Libo's race combine.
 Then, when I passed from maiden unto bride,
 And wedlock's snood my virgin tresses tied,
 Till death should part, to Paullus' side I came —
 Wife to one only be my funeral fame!
 Dead sires! whose threshold carven busts adorn
 And conquered Afric's figure, slavelike shorn —

Bear witness from your ashes to your home —
Those ashes, worthy of thy worship, Rome!
Bear witness, Perses! — all thy breast on fire
To match Achilles' self, thy godlike sire —
Thou too, whose valor shattered from its base
That home of Perses' and Achilles' race —
That ne'er, for sin of mine, was law made tame,
Nor blushed our household for Cornelia's shame.
Thro' me no stain on our renown could come —
Me, crown and model of our glorious home!
I walked unswerving, held a stainless fame,
From wedding torch to funeral, the same.
For Nature wrought for me a law within —
Thou shalt not shun the judgment, but the sin.
What urn soever shall my doom decide,
No woman e'er shall blush to seek my side:
Not thou, O Claudia, who with spotless hand
Didst hale the ling'ring galley from the strand,
Cybele's bark — thou matron of renown,
Servant of her who wears the turret-crown!
Not she who erst, when angered Vesta came,
From stainless robe relit th' entrusted flame.
Thou too, dear heart, Scribonia, mother mine!
Ne'er have I grieved thee. If thy soul repine,
Say this — no more. Too short a date was thine.
Tears, true as thine, the weeping city gave,
And Cæsar sighed detraction from my grave.
The mother of my Julia was thine,
He said; thy life was worthy of my line —
Farewell! and tears fell from his eyes divine.
Mine too it was, the honored stole to gain;
Nor from a barren wedlock was I ta'en.
Ah sons, my twofold solace after death —
Propped on your bosoms I resigned my breath!
Brother, twice throned in power! the selfsame day
Saw thee made consul and me rapt away.
Child, pride of Paullus' censorship begun,
Live thou like me, love one and only one.
Loyal to one, keep thou thy bed unstained,
And by thine offspring be our line maintained!
My race shall glorify my name — and now
Loosed be the death-boat — I am lief to go!
Of woman's fame, this is the highest crown,
When praised, and freed, and dead, we hold Renown.

Guard, Paullus, guard the pledges of our love —
My very dust that ingrained wish can move!
Father thou art, and mother must thou be,
Unto those little ones bereft of me.
Weep they, give twofold kisses, thine and mine,
Solace their hearts, and both our loves combine;
And if thou needst must weep, go, weep apart —
Let not our children, folded to thine heart,
Between thy kisses feel thy teardrops start.
Enough, for love, be nightlong thoughts of me,
And phantom forms that murmur I am she.
Or, if thou speakest to mine effigy,
Speak soft, and pause, and dream of a reply.

Yet — if a presence new our halls behold,
And a new bride my wonted place shall hold —
My children, speak her fair, who pleased your sire,
And let your gentleness disarm her ire;
Nor speak in praise of me — your loyal part
Will turn to gall and wormwood in her heart.
But, if your father hold my worth so high,
That lifelong love can people vacancy,
And solitude seem only love gone by,
Tend ye his loneliness, his thoughts engage,
And bar the avenues of pain to age.
I died before my time — add my lost years
Unto your youth, be to his heart compeers;
So shall he face, content, life's slow decline,
Glad in my children's love, as once in mine.

Lo, all is well! I ne'er wore garb of woe
For child or husband: I was first to go.
Lo, I have said! Rise, ye who weep; I stand
In high desert, worthy the Spirit Land.
Worth hath stormed Heaven ere now; this, this I claim —
To rise, in death, upon the waves of Fame.

ROMAN LIFE UNDER AUGUSTUS.

BY W. A. BECKER.

[WILHELM ADOLF BECKER, a noted German classical antiquary, was born at Dresden, 1796; died at Meissen, 1846. Designed for trade, he left it for scholarship; studied at Leipsic, and the last four years of his life was professor there. His still familiar works are "Charicles" and "Gallus," novels embodying the social life of the Greeks in Alexander's time and the Romans in Augustus'. His "Handbook of Roman Antiquities" (1843-1846) is his chief monument as a scholar.

This historical novel of Becker's is based on the real fate of Cornelius Gallus.]

STUDIES AND LETTERS.

GALLUS had for some time past kept as much as possible aloof from the disquieting labors of public life, and had been accustomed to divide his time between the pleasures of the table and of love, the society of friends, and the pursuit of his studies, serious as well as cheerful. On the present occasion also, after his friends had departed, he withdrew into the chamber, where he used daily to spend the later hours of the morning, in converse with the great spirits of ancient Greece—a pursuit animating and refreshing alike to heart and soul—or to yield himself up to the sport of his own muse. . . .

Immediately adjoining this apartment was the library, full of the most precious treasures acquired by Gallus, chiefly in Alexandria. There, in presses of cedar wood, placed round the walls, lay the rolls, partly of parchment, and partly of the finest Egyptian papyrus, each supplied with a label, on which was seen, in bright red letters, the name of the author and title of the book. Above these again were ranged the busts, in bronze or marble, of the most renowned writers, an entirely novel ornament for libraries, first introduced into Rome by Asinius Pollio, who perhaps had only copied it from the libraries of Pergamus and Alexandria. True, only the chief representatives of each separate branch of literature were to be found in the narrow space available for them; but to compensate for this, there were several rolls which contained the portraits of seven hundred remarkable men. These were the hebdomades or peplegraphy of Varro, who, by means of a new and much-valued invention, was enabled in an easy manner to multiply the collection of his portraits, and so to spread copies of them, with short biographical notices of the men, through the whole learned world.

On the other side of the library was a larger room in which a number of learned slaves were occupied in transcribing, with nimble hand, the works of illustrious Greek and the more ancient Roman authors, both for the supply of the library, and for the use of those friends to whom Gallus obligingly communicated his literary treasures. Others were engaged in giving the rolls the most agreeable exterior, in gluing the separate strips of papyrus together, drawing the red lines which divided the different columns, and writing the title in the same color; in smoothing with pumice-stone and blackening the edges; fastening ivory tops on the sticks round which the rolls were wrapped, and dyeing bright red or yellow the parchment which was to serve as a wrapper.

Gallus, with Chresimus, entered the study, where the freedman, of whom he was used to avail himself in his studies, to make remarks on what was read, to note down particular passages, or to commit to paper his own poetical effusions, as they escaped him, was already awaiting him. After giving Chresimus further instructions to make the necessary preparations for an immediate journey, he reclined, in his accustomed manner, on his studying couch, supported on his left arm, his right knee being drawn up somewhat higher than the other, in order to place on it his books or tablets.

"Give me that roll of poetry of mine, Phædrus," said he to the freedman; "I will not set out till I have sent the book finished to the bookseller. I certainly do not much desire to be sold in the Argiletan taverns for five denarii, and find my name hung up on the doors, and not always in the best company; but Secundus worries me for it, and therefore be it so."

"He understands his advantage," said Phædrus, as he drew forth the roll from the cedar-wood chest. "I wager that his scribes will have nothing else to do for months, but to copy off your Elegies and Epigrams, and that you will be rewarded with the applause poured upon them not by Rome only, nor by Italy, but by the world."

"Who knows?" said Gallus. "It is always hazardous to give to the opinion of the public that which was only written for a narrow circle of tried friends: and besides, our public is so very capricious. For one I am too cold, for another I speak too much of Lycoris; my Epigrams are too long for a third; and then there are those grammarians, who impute to me the blunders which the copyist in his hurry has committed. But look!" continued he, as he unfolded the roll, "there is just room left before we get to the umbilicus, for a small poem on which I meditated this morning when walking to and fro in the peristyle. It is somewhat hurriedly thrown off, I grant, and its jocular tone is not exactly in keeping with the last elegy. Perhaps they will say I had done better to leave it out, but its contents are the best proof of its unassumingness: why, therefore, should I not let the joke stand? Listen, then, and write."

Phædrus here was about taking the roll. "No," said Gallus, "the time before our departure is too brief. Take style and tablet, write with abbreviations, and insert it afterwards whilst I am dictating a few letters." . . .

Phædrus departed to copy the poem more intelligibly on the roll, and to send thither Philodamus, whom his master generally employed to write his letters; equally acquainted with both languages, he used, in most instances, to discharge the duties of the Greek and Latin correspondent, and particularly when the contents of the letters made a confidential scribe necessary. To-day, however, this was not the case; for Gallus only wished some short friendly letters, which contained no secrets, to be written. Philodamus brought the style, the wooden tablets coated over with wax, and what was requisite for sealing the letters; took the seat of Phædrus, and set down with expert hand the short sentences which Gallus dictated. Notifications of his departure to his friends; invitations to them to visit him at his villa; approval of a purchase of some statues and pictures, which a friend in Athens had made for him; recommendations of one friend to another in Alexandria; such were the quickly dispatched subjects of the day's correspondence. . . .

He read over once more the letters which Philodamus had written; the slave then fastened the tablets together with crossed thread, and where the ends were knotted, placed a round piece of wax; while Gallus drew from his finger a beautiful beryl, on which was engraved by the hand of Dioscorides, a lion driven by four amoretts, breathed on it, to prevent the tenacious wax from adhering to it, and then impressed it deeply into the pliant mass. Meanwhile Philodamus had summoned the tabellarii, or slaves used for conveying letters. Each of them received a letter; but that destined for Athens was about to be intrusted to a friend journeying thither.

THE DRINKERS.

The lamps had been long shining on the marble panels of the walls in the triclinium, where Earinos, with his assistants, was making preparations, under the direction of the tricliniarch, for the nocturnal comissatio. Upon the polished table between the tapestried couches stood an elegant bronze candelabrum, in the form of a stem of a tree, from the winterly and almost leafless branches of which four two-flamed lamps, emulating each other in beauty of shape, were suspended. Other lamps hung by chains from the ceiling, which was richly gilt and ingeniously inlaid with ivory, in order to expel the darkness of night from all parts of the saloon. A number of costly goblets and larger vessels were arranged on two silver sideboards. On one of these a slave was just placing another vessel filled with snow, together with its colum, whilst on the other was the steaming caldarium, containing water kept constantly boiling by the coals in its inner cylinder, in case any of the guests should prefer the calda, the drink of winter, to the snow-drink, for which he might think the season was not sufficiently advanced.

By degrees the guests assembled from the bath and the peristylum, and took their places in the same order as before on the triclinium. Gallus and Calpurnius were still wanting. They had been seen walking to and fro along the cryptoporticus in earnest discourse. At length they arrived, and the gloom seemed dissipated from the brow of Gallus; his eyes sparkled more brightly, and his whole being seemed to have become more animated.

"I hope, my friends, you have not waited for us," said he to Pomponius and Crecilianus, who reproached him for his long absence. "How could we do otherwise," responded Pomponius, "as it is necessary first to choose the king who shall reign supreme over the mixing bowl and cyathus? Quick, Lentulus, let us have the dice directly, or the snow will be turned to calda before we are able to drink it."

On a signal from Lentulus, a slave placed upon the table the dice-board, of terebinthus wood, the four dice made from the knuckles of gazelles, and the ivory turret-shaped dice-box.

"But first bring chaplets and the nardum," cried the host; "roses or ivy, I leave the choice to each of you."

Slaves immediately brought chaplets, both of dark green ivy and of blooming roses.

"Honor to the spring," said Gallus, at the same time encircling his temples with a fragrant wreath; "ivy belongs to winter; it is the gloomy ornament with which nature decks her own bier."

"Not so," said Calpurnius, "the more somber garland becomes men. I leave roses to the women, who know nothing but pleasure and trifling."

"No reflection on the women," cried Faustinus, from the lectus summus; "for they, after all, give the spice to life, and I should not be at all grieved if some gracious fair one were now at my side. Listen, Gallus: you know that I sometimes attempt a little poetry; what think you of an epigram I have lately made?"

"Let women come and share our festal joy,
For Bacchus loves to sit with Venus' boy!
But fair her form and witty be her tongue,
Such as the nymph's whom Philolaches sung.
Just sip her wine, with jocund glee o'erflow,
To-morrow hold her tongue — if she know how."

"Very good," said Gallus; "but the last doctrine will apply as well to men; I will continue your epigram: —

"And you, O men! who larger goblets drain,
Nor draining blush, — this golden rule maintain.
While foams the cup, drink, rattle, joke away,
All unrestrained your boisterous mirth display.
But with the wreath be memory laid aside,
And let the morn night's dangerous secrets hide."

"Exactly so," cried Pomponius, whilst a loud σοφῶς resounded from the lips of the others: "let the word of which the nocturnal triens was witness, be banished from our memory, as if it had never been spoken. But now to business. Bassus, you throw first, and he who first throws the Venus is king for the night."

Bassus collected the dice in the box, and shook it. "Cytheris for me," cried he, as he threw; it was an indifferent cast.

"Who would think of making so free with the name of his beloved!" said Faustinus, as he prepared for his chance. "To the beautiful one of whom I am thinking; take care, it will be the Venus." He threw; loud laughter succeeded; it was the dog.

The dice passed in this manner from hand to hand till they came to Pomponius. "Ah!" exclaimed Lentulus, as Pomponius seized the box, "now I am anxious to know which, out of the number of his loves, he will invoke, — Chione or Galla, Lyde or Næra?"

"Neither of them," answered Pomponius. "Ah! one, three, four, six; here's the Venus! but as all have not yet thrown, another may be equally fortunate." He handed the dice to Gallus, who, however, as well as the Perusians, having declined the dignity, Pomponius was hailed as lord over the crater and cyathus.

"Do not let us have too much water in the mixture," said Cæcilianus; "for Lentulus, you know, would not be sulky even should we drink the wine neat."

"No, no," replied Pomponius; "we have had a long pause, and may now well indulge a little. Three parts of water and two of wine is a fair proportion, that shall be the mixture to-night. Do you, Earinos, measure out five cyathi for each of us."

The goblets were filled and emptied amidst jokes and merriment, which gradually grew louder, for Pomponius took care that the cyathi should not have much repose. "I propose," said he at length, when, from the increased animation of the conversation, the power of the Falernian became evident, "that we try the dice a little. Let us play for low stakes, merely for amusement; let each of us stake five denarii, and put in another for every ace or six that may be thrown. Whoever throws the Venus first, gains the whole sum staked."

The proposal was acceded to, and the play began.

"How shall it be, Bassus?" said Pomponius, "a hundred denarii that I make the lucky throw before you."

"Agreed," replied the other.

"I will also bet the same with you," said Gallus: "a hundred denarii on each side."

"And I bet you the same sum," said Lentulus to Gallus; "and if either of us should throw the dog, he must pay double."

The dice went round the table, and first Cæcilianus and then one of the Perusians won the pool. The bets remained still undecided. When Pomponius had again thrown, he cried, "Won! look here, each dice exhibits a different number."

Gallus took the box and threw. Four unlucky aces were the result. The Perusians laughed loudly; for which Gallus darted a fierce glance at them. The money was paid.

"Shall we bet again?" inquired Lentulus.

"Of course," replied Gallus; "two thousand sesterces, and let him who throws sixes also lose."

Lentulus threw; again the Venus appeared, and loud laughter arose from the lectus imus. By degrees the game became warmer, the bet higher, and Gallus more desperate. In the meantime Pomponius had, unnoticed, altered the proportions of the mixture. "I am now in favor of a short pause," said he, "that we may not entirely forget the cups. Bring larger goblets, Earinos, that we may drink according to the custom of the Greeks."

Larger crystal glasses were placed before him. "Pour out for me six cyathi," cried he. "This cup I drink to you, Gallus. Hail to you!"

Gallus replied to the greeting, and then desired the cyathus to be emptied seven times into his goblet. "Let us not forget the absent," said he. "Lycoris, this goblet I dedicate to you."

"Well done," said Bassus, as his cup was being filled. "Now my turn has come. Eight letters form the name of my love. Cytheris!" said he, as he drained the glass. Thus the toast passed from mouth to mouth, and finally came to the turn of the Perusians.

"I have no love," said the one on the middle seat, "but I will give you a better name, to which let each one empty his glass; Cæsar Octavianus! hail to him."

"Hail to him," responded the other Perusian. "Six cyathi to each, or ten? What, Gallus and Calpurnius! does not the name sound pleasant to you that you refuse the goblet?"

"I have no reason for drinking to his welfare," rejoined Gallus, scarcely suppressing his emotion.

"Reason or no," said the Perusian, "it is to the father of our fatherland!"

"Father of our fatherland!" screamed Calpurnius, violently enraged. "Say rather to the tyrant, the bad citizen, the suppressor of liberty!"

"Be not so violent," said the stranger, with a malicious smile; "if you will not drink it, why, leave it undone. But yet I wager, Gallus, that you have often enough drunk to our lord before his house was closed upon you. It certainly is not pleasant, when a man thinks he has made the lucky throw, to find the dog suddenly before him."

"Scoundrel!" cried Gallus, springing up; "know that it is a matter of entire indifference to me whether the miserable, cowardly tyrant close his doors on me or no."

"No doubt he might have used stronger measures," quietly continued the stranger; "and if the lamentations of the Egyptians had made themselves heard, you would now be cooling yourself by a residence in Mœsia."

"Let him dare to send me there," called out Gallus, no longer master of himself.

"Dare!" said the Perusian, with a smile, "he dare, who could annihilate you with a single word!"

"Or I him," exclaimed Gallus, now enraged beyond all bounds: "Julius even met with his dagger."

"Ah! unheard-of treason!" cried the second stranger, starting up; "I call the assembled company to witness that I have taken no part in the highly treasonable speeches that have been uttered here. My sandals, slave: to remain here any longer would be a crime."

The guests had all risen, although a part of them reeled. Some endeavored to bring Gallus, who now did not seem to think so lightly of the words which had hastily escaped him, to moderation. Pomponius addressed the Perusians, but as they insisted on quitting the house, he promised Gallus that he would endeavor to pacify them on the way home.

The other guests also bethought them of departing; one full of vexation at the unpleasant breaking up of the feast, another blaming Pomponius for introducing such unpolished fellows; Gallus not without some anxiety, which he in vain endeavored to silence by bold resolutions for the future.

THE CATASTROPHE.

The day commenced very differently, on the present occasion, in the house of Gallus, from what it had done on the morning of his journey. His disgrace, by some foreseen, but to most both unexpected and looked upon as the harbinger of still more severe misfortunes, formed the principal topic of the day, and was discussed in the forum and the tabernæ with a thousand different comments. The intelligence of his return to Rome soon became diffused throughout the city; and the loud tidings of his presence should have collected the troop of clients who, at other times, were accustomed to flock in such great numbers to his house. On this day, however, the vestibulum remained empty; the obsequious crowd no longer thronged it. The selfish, who had promised themselves some advantage from the influence of their patron, became indifferent about a house which could no longer be considered, as it had lately been, the entrance-hall of the palace. The timid were deterred by fear of the cloud which hung threatening over Gallus, lest they themselves should be overtaken by the destroying flash. The swarm of parasites, prudently weighing their own interest, avoided a table of doubtful duration, in order that they might not forfeit their seats at ten others, where undisturbed enjoyment for the future appeared more secure. And even those few in whom feelings of duty or shame had overcome other considerations, seemed to be not at all dissatisfied when the ostarius announced to them that his master would receive no visitors that day.

In the house itself all was quiet. The majority of the slaves had not yet returned from the villa, and those who were present seemed to share the grief of the deeply affected dispensator.

Uneasiness and anxiety had long since banished sleep from the couch of Gallus. He could not conceal from himself to what a precipice a misuse of his incautious expressions would drive him, and that he could expect no forbearance or secrecy from the suspicious-looking strangers. Animated by the dreams of freedom with which Calpurnius had entertained him; half enlisted in the plans which the enthusiast, sincerely moved at the misfortune of his friend, had proposed to him; highly excited by the strength of the wine and the heat of the play; and stung to fury by the insolence of the strange guests, — he had suffered himself to be drawn into an indiscreet avowal which he was far from seriously meaning. On calmer reflections he perceived the folly of all those bold projects which, in the first moment of excitement, seemed to present the possibility of averting his own fate by the overthrow of the tyrant; and he now found himself without the hope of escape, in the power of two men whose whole behavior was calculated to inspire anything but confidence. His only consolation was that they had been introduced by Pomponius, through whose exertions he hoped possibly to obtain their silence; for Gallus still firmly believed in the sincerity of his friendship, and paid no attention even to a discovery which his slaves professed to have made on the way homeward. It was as follows: His road, in returning from the mansion of Lentulus, passed not far from that of Largus; and the slaves who preceded him with the lantern had seen three men, resembling very much Pomponius and the two Perusians, approach the house. One of them struck the door with the metal knocker, and they were all immediately admitted by the ostiarius. Gallus certainly thought so late a visit strange; but, as it was no uncommon thing for Largus to break far into the night with wine and play, he persuaded himself that it must be some acquaintances who had called upon him on their return from an earlier party.

At last the drowsy god had steeped him in a beneficial oblivion of these cares, and although the sun was by this time high in the heavens, yet Chresimus was carefully watching lest any noise in the vicinity of his bed-chamber should abridge the moments of his master's repose. The old man wandered about the house uneasily, and appeared to be impatiently waiting for something. In the atrium he was met by Leonidas, approaching from the door.

"Well, no messenger yet?" he hastily inquired of him.

"None," replied the vicarius.

"And no intelligence in the house?" Chresimus again asked.

"None since his departure," was the answer. He shook his head, and proceeded to the atrium, where a loud knocking at the door was heard. The ostiarius opened it. It was an express with a letter from Lycoris.

"At last," cried Chresimus, as he took the letter from the tabellarius.

"My lady," said the messenger, "enjoined me to make all possible haste, and bade me give the letter only to yourself or your lord. Present it to him directly."

"Your admonition is not wanted," replied Chresimus: "I have been long expecting your arrival."

The faithful servant had indeed anxiously expected the letter. Although Gallus had strictly forbidden him from letting the cause of his departure from the villa become known, yet Chresimus believed that he should be rendering him an important service by acquainting Lycoris with the unfortunate occurrence. She had at Baïæ only half broken to him the secret, which confirmed but too well his opinion of Pomponius. He had therefore urged her not to lose a moment in making Gallus acquainted, at whatever sacrifice to herself, with the danger that was threatening him, and immediately return herself, in order to render lasting the first impression caused by her avowal. He now hastened toward the apartment in which his master was still sleeping, cautiously fitted the three-toothed key into the opening of the door, and drew back the bolts by which it was fastened.

Gallus, awakened by the noise, sprang up from his couch. "What do you bring?" cried he to the domestic, who had pushed aside the tapestry and entered.

"A letter from Lycoris," said the old man, "just brought by a courier. He urged me to deliver it immediately, and so I was forced to disturb you."

Gallus hastily seized the tablets. They were not of the usual small and neat shape which afforded room for a few tender words only, but from their size they evidently inclosed a large epistle. "Doubtless," said he, as he cut the threads with a knife which Chresimus had presented to him, "doubtless the poor girl has been terrified by some unfavorable reports about me."

He read the contents, and turned pale. With the anxiety of a fond heart, she accused herself as the cause of what had befallen her lover, and disclosed to him the secret which must enlighten him on the danger that threatened him from Pomponius. Without sparing herself, she alluded to her former connection with the traitor, narrated the occurrences of that evening, his attempt to deceive her, and his villainous threats. She conjured Gallus to take, with prudence and resolution, such steps as were calculated to render harmless the intrigues of his most dangerous enemy. She would herself arrive, she added, soon after he received the letter, in order to beg pardon with her own mouth for what had taken place.

There stood the undeceived Gallus in deep emotion. "Read," said he, handing the letter to the faithful freedman, who shared all his secrets.

Chresimus took it, and read just what he had expected.

"I was not deceived," said he, "and thank Lycoris for clearly disclosing to you, although late, the net they would draw around you. Now hasten to Cæsar with such proofs of treachery in your hand, and expose to him the plot which they have formed against you. Haply the gods may grant that the storm which threatens to wreck the ship of your prosperity may yet subside."

"I fear it is too late," replied his master, "but I will speak with Pomponius. He must know that I see through him; perchance he will not then venture to divulge what, once published, must be succeeded by inevitable ruin. Dispatch some slaves immediately to his house, to the forum, and to the tabernæ, where he is generally to be met with at this hour. He must have no idea that I have heard from Lycoris. They need only say that I particularly beg he will call upon me as soon as possible."

Chresimus hastened to fulfill the commands of his lord. The slaves went and returned without having found Pomponius. The porter at his lodgings had answered that his master had set out early in the morning on a journey; but one of the slaves fancied that he had caught a glimpse of him in the carinæ, although he withdrew so speedily that he had not time to overtake him. At last, Leonidas returned from the forum; he had been equally unsuccessful in his search, but brought other important intelligence, communicated to him by a friend of his master. "An obscure report," said this man, "is going about the forum, that Largus had, in the assembled senate, accused Gallus of high treason, and of plotting the murder of the emperor; that two strangers had been brought into the curia as witnesses, and that Augustus had committed to the senate the punishment of the outrage."

The intelligence was but too well founded. In order to anticipate any steps that Gallus might take for his security, Pomponius had announced to Largus, on the very night of the supper with Lentulus, that his artifice had met with complete success. At daybreak Largus repaired to the imperial palace, and portrayed in glaring colors the treasonable designs which Gallus, when in his cups, had divulged. Undecided as to how he should act, yet solicitous for his own safety, Augustus had referred the matter to the decision of the senate, most of the members of which were far from displeased at the charge. It is true that many voices were raised, demanding that the accused should not at least be condemned unheard : but they availed nothing against the louder clamor of those who declared that there were already previous charges sufficient to justify extreme severity ; and that they themselves should be guilty of high treason did they, by delay or forbearance, expose the life of Caesar and the welfare of the republic to danger. The result of the debate was a decree, by which Gallus was banished to an inhospitable country on the Pontus Euxinus, and his property confiscated to the emperor. He was also ordered to leave Rome on the following morning, and Italy within ten days.

At the seventh hour Calpurnius rushed into the house of Gallus bringing confirmation of the dread decree, and was soon followed by others from all quarters. Gallus received the news, which cleared up the last doubts concerning his fate, with visible grief but manly composure. He thanked his friend for his sympathy, warning him at the same time to be more cautious on his own account for the future. He then requested him to withdraw, ordered Chresimus to bring his double tablets, and delivered to him money and jewels to be saved for Lycoris and himself. Having pressed the hand of the veteran, who wept aloud, he demanded to be left alone. The domestic loitered for a while, and then retired full of the worst forebodings.

Gallus fastened the door, and for greater security placed the wooden bar across it. He then wrote a few words to Augustus, begging him to give their freedom to the faithful servants who had been in most direct attendance upon him. Words of farewell to Lycoris filled the other tablets. After this, he reached from the wall the sword, to the victories achieved by which he owed his fatal greatness, struck it deep into his breast, and as he fell upon the couch, dyed yet more strongly the purple coverlet with the streams of his blood.

The licitor, sent to announce to him the sentence of banishment, arrived too late. Chresimus had already, with faithful hand, closed the eyes of his beloved master, and round the couch stood a troop of weeping slaves, uncertain of their future lot, and testifying by the loudness of their grief that a man of worth was dead.

LATIN POETIC RHYTHMS.

BY F. W. H. MYERS.

[FREDERICK W. H. MYERS: English essayist and poet; born February 6, 1843. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow. He published his charming poem "St. Paul" in 1867, "Renewal of Youth and Other Poems" in 1882. His "Essays Modern and Classical" came out in 1885; his "Science and a Future Life" in 1893. He has been greatly interested in the speculations regarding spiritualism, and is one of the honorable secretaries of the Society of Psychical Research. He is an inspector of schools, and resides in Cambridge. Died in 1901.]

No words that men can any more set side by side can ever affect the mind again like some of the great passages of Homer. For in them it seems as if all that makes life precious were in the act of being created at once and together — language itself, and the first emotions, and the inconceivable charm of song. When we hear one single sentence of Anticleia's answer, as she begins —

out' emeg' en megaroisin euskopos iocheaira —

what words can express the sense which we receive of an effortless and absolute sublimity, the feeling of morning freshness and elemental power, the delight which is to all other intellectual delights what youth is to all other joys? And what a language! which has written, as it were, of itself those last two words for the poet, which offers them as the fruit of its inmost structure and the bloom of its early day! Beside speech like this Virgil's seems elaborate, and Dante's crabbed, and Shakespeare's barbarous.

There never has been, there never will be, a language like the dead Greek. For Greek had all the merits of other tongues without their accompanying defects. It had the monumental weight and brevity of the Latin without its rigid unmanageability; the copiousness and flexibility of the German without its heavy commonness and guttural superfluity; the pellucidity of the French without its jejuneness; the force and reality of the English without its structureless comminution. But it was an instrument beyond the control of any but its creators. When the great days of Greece were past, it was the language which made speeches and wrote books, and not the men. Its French brilliancy taught Isocrates to polish platitude into epigram; its German profundity enabled Lycophron to pass off nonsense as oracles; its Italian flow encouraged Apollonius Rhodius to shroud in long-drawn sweetness the languor of his inventive soul. There was nothing except the language left. Like the golden brocade in a queen's sepulchre, its imperishable splendor was stretched stiffly across the skeleton of a life and thought which inhabited there no more.

The history of the Latin tongue was widely different. We do not meet it full-grown at the dawn of history; we see it take shape and strength beneath our eyes. We can watch, as it were, each stage in the forging of the thunderbolt; from the day when Ennius, Nævius, Pacuvius, inweave their "three shafts of twisted storm,"¹ till Lucretius adds "the sound and terror," and Catullus "the west wind and the fire." It grows with the growth of the Roman people; it wins its words at the sword's point; and the "conquered nations in long array" pay tribute of their thought and speech as surely as of their blood and gold.

In the region of poetry this union of strenuous effort with eager receptivity is conspicuously seen. The barbarous Saturnian lines, hovering between an accentual and a quantitative system, which were the only indigenous poetical product of Latium, rudely indicated the natural tendency of the Latin tongue towards a trochaic rhythm. Contact with Greece introduced Greek meters, and gradually established a definite quantitative system. Quantity and accent are equally congenial to the Latin language, and the trochaic and iambic meters of Greece bore transplantation with little injury. The adaptations of these rhythms by early Roman authors, however uncouth, are at least quite easy and unconstrained; and so soon as the prestige of the Augustan era had passed away, we find both Pagans and Christians expressing in accentual iambic, and especially in accentual trochaic meters, the thoughts and feelings of the new age. Adam of S. Victor is metrically nearer to Livius Andronicus than to Virgil or Ovid; and the Litany of the Arval Brethren finds its true succession, not in the Secular Ode of Horace, but in the Dies Iræ or the Veni Creator.

¹ Tris imbris torti radios, tris nubis aquosæ
Addiderant, rutili tris ignis et alitis Austri. Æneid viii. 429.
VOL. V. — 22

For Latin poetry suffered a violent breach of continuity in the introduction from Greece of the hexameter and the elegiac couplet. The quantitative hexameter is in Latin a difficult and unnatural meter. Its prosodial structure excludes a very large proportion of Latin words from being employed at all. It narrowly limits the possible grammatical constructions, the modes of emphasis, the usages of curtailment, the forms of narration. On the other hand, when successfully managed, its advantages are great. All the strength and pregnancy of Latin expression are brought out by the stately march of a meter perhaps the most compact and majestic which has ever been invented. The words take their place like the organs in a living structure—close packed, but delicately adjusted and mutually supporting. And the very sense of difficulty overcome gives an additional charm to the sonorous beauty of the dactylic movement, its self-retarding pauses, its onward and overwhelming flow.

To the Greek the most elaborate poetical effects were as easy as the simplest. In his poetic, as in the glyptic art, he found all materials ready to his hand; he had but to choose between the marble and the sardonix, between the ivory and the gold. The Roman hewed his conceptions out of the granite rock; oftenest its craggy forms were rudely piled together, yet dignified and strong; but there were hands which could give it finish too, which could commit to the centuries a work splendid as well as imperishable, polished into the basalt's shimmer and fervent with the porphyry's glow.

It must not, however, be supposed that even the "Æneid" has wholly overcome the difficulties inseparable from the Latin poetry of the classical age, that it is entirely free either from the frigidities of an imitation or from the constraints of a tour de force. In the first place, Virgil has not escaped the injury which has been done to subsequent poets by the example of the length and the subject-matter of Homer. An artificial dignity has been attached to poems in twelve or twenty-four books, and authors have been incited to tell needlessly long stories in order to take rank as epic poets. And because Homer is full of tales of personal combat—in his day an exciting and all-important thing—later poets have thought it necessary to introduce a large element of this kind of description, which, so soon as it loses reality, becomes not only frigid but disgusting. It is as if the first novel had been written by a schoolboy of genius, and all succeeding novelists had felt bound to construct their plots mainly of matches at football. It is the later books of the "Æneid" that are most marred by this mistake. In the earlier books there are, no doubt, some ill-judged adaptations of Homeric incident, some labored reproductions of Homeric formulæ, but for the most part the events are really noble and pathetic,—are such as possess permanent interest for civilized men. The three last books, on the other hand, which have come down to us in a crude and unpruned condition, contain large tracts immediately imitated from Homer, and almost devoid of independent value.

Besides these defects in matter, the latter part of the poem illustrates the metrical dangers to which Latin hexameters succumbed almost as soon as Virgil was gone. The types on which they could be composed were limited in number and were becoming exhausted. Many of the lines in the later books are modeled upon lines in the earlier ones. Many passages show that peculiar form of bald artificiality into which this difficult meter so readily sinks; nay, some of the tibicines, or stop-gaps, suggest a grotesque resemblance to the well-known style of the fourth-form boy. Other more ambitious passages give the painful impression of just missing the effect at which they aim.

ODES OF HORACE.

TRANSLATED BY CHARLES STUART CALVERLEY.

[QUINTUS HORATIUS FLACCUS, the most popular of Roman poets, was born B.C. 65; superbly educated; at eighteen joined Brutus' army, and fought at Philippi; had his estate confiscated, but through Virgil's intercession with Mæcenas received it again, and gained Augustus' friendship as well as that of Mæcenas, who presented him with the immortal "Sabine Farm." He died B.C. 8. His odes are enduringly valued for their charm of style and genial Epicureanism of philosophy.]

BOOK I., ODE 9.

To Thaliarchus.

One dazzling mass of solid snow
 Soracte stands; the bent woods fret
 Beneath their load; and, sharpest-set
 With frost, the streams have ceased to flow.

Pile on great fagots and break up
 The ice: let influence more benign
 Enter with four-years-treasured wine,
 Fetched in the ponderous Sabine cup:

 Leave to the gods all else. When they Have once bid rest the winds that war
 Over the passionate seas, no more
 Gray ash and cypress rock and sway.

 Ask not what future suns shall bring.
 Count to-day gain, whate'er it chance
 To be: nor, young man, scorn the dance,
 Nor deem sweet Love an idle thing,

 Ere time thy April youth hath changed
 To sourness. Park and public walk
 Attract thee now, and whispered talk
 At twilight meetings prearranged;

 Hear now the pretty laugh that tells
 In what dim corner lurks thy love;
 And snatch a bracelet or a glove
 From wrist or hand that scarce rebels.

ODE 11.

To Leuconœ.

Seek not, for thou shalt not find it, what my end, what thine shall be;
 Ask not of Chaldæa's science what God wills, Leuconœ:
 Better far, what comes, to bear it. Haply many a wintry blast
 Waits thee still; and this, it may be, Jove ordains to be thy last,
 Which flings now the flagging sea wave on the obstinate sandstone reef.
 Be thou wise: fill up the wine cup; shortening, since the time is brief,
 Hopes that reach into the future. While I speak, hath stolen away
 Jealous Time. Mistrust To-morrow, catch the blossom of To-day.

BOOK III., ODE 1.

I scorn and shun the rabble's noise.
 Abstain from idle talk. A thing
 That ear hath not yet heard, I sing,
 The Muses' priest, to maids and boys.

To Jove the flocks which great kings sway,
 To Jove great kings allegiance owe.
 Praise him: he laid the giants low:
 All things that are, his nod obey.

This man may plant in broader lines
 His fruit trees: that, the pride of race
 Enlists a candidate for place:
 In worth, in fame, a third outshines

His mates; or, thronged with clients, claims
 Precedence. Even-handed Fate
 Hath but one law for small and great:
 That ample urn holds all men's names.

He o'er whose doomed neck hangs the sword
 Unsheathed, the dainties of the South
 Shall lack their sweetness in his mouth:
 No note of bird or harpsichord

Shall bring him Sleep. Yet Sleep is kind,
 Nor scorns the huts of laboring men;
 The bank where shadows play, the glen
 Of Tempe dancing in the wind.

He, who but asks "Enough," defies
 Wild waves to rob him of his ease;
 He fears no rude shocks, when he sees
 Arcturus set or Hædus rise:

When hailstones lash his vines, or fails
 His farm its promise, now of rains
 And now of stars that parch the plains
 Complaining, or unkindly gales.

— In straitened seas the fish are pent;
 For dams are sunk into the deep:
 Pile upon pile the builders heap,
 And he, whom earth could not content,

The Master. Yet shall Fear and Hate
 Climb where the Master climbs: nor e'er
 From the armed trireme parts black Care;
 He sits behind, the horseman's mate.

And if red marble shall not ease
 The heartache; nor the shell that shines
 Star-bright; nor all Falernum's vines,
 All scents that charmed Achæmenes:

Why should I rear me halls of rare
 Design, on proud shafts mounting high?
 Why bid my Sabine vale good-by
 For doubled wealth and doubled care?

ODE 2.

Friend! with a poor man's straits to fight
 Let warfare teach thy stalwart boy:
 Let him the Parthian's front annoy
 With lance in rest, a dreaded knight:

Live in the field, inure his eye
 To danger. From the foeman's wall
 May the armed tyrant's dame, with all
 Her damsels, gaze on him, and sigh,

"Dare not, in war unschooled, to rouse
 Yon Lion — whom to touch is death,
 To whom red Anger ever saith,
 'Slay and slay on' — O prince, my spouse!"

— Honored and blest the patriot dies.
 From death the recreant may not flee:
 Death shall not spare the faltering knee
 And coward back of him that flies.

Valor — unbeat, unsullied still —
 Shines with pure luster: all too great
 To seize or drop the sword of state,
 Swayed by a people's veering will.

Valor — to souls too great for death
 Heaven opening — treads the untrodden way:
 And this dull world, this damp cold clay,
 On wings of scorn, abandoneth.

— Let too the sealed lip honored be.
 The babbler, who'd the secrets tell
 Of holy Ceres, shall not dwell
 Where I dwell; shall not launch with me

A shallop. Heaven full many a time
 Hath with the unclean slain the just:
 And halting-footed Vengeance must
 O'ertake at last the steps of crime.

BOOK III., ODE 3.

The just man's single-purposed mind
 Not furious mobs that prompt to ill
 May move, nor kings' frowns shake his will
 Which is as rock; not warrior winds

That keep the seas in wild unrest;
 Nor bolt by Jove's own finger hurled:
 The fragments of a shivered world
 Would crash round him still self-possessed.

Jove's wandering son reached, thus endowed,
 The fiery bastions of the skies;
 Thus Pollux; with them Cæsar lies
 Beside his nectar, radiant-browed.

Honored for this, by tigers drawn
 Rode Bacchus, reining necks before
 Untamed; for this War's horses bore
 Quirinus up from Acheron.

To the pleased gods had Juno said
 In conclave: "Troy is in the dust;
 Troy, by a judge accursed, unjust,
 And that strange woman prostrated.

"The day Laomedon ignored
 His god-pledged word, resigned to me
 And Pallas ever pure, was she,
 Her people, and their traitor lord.

"Now the Greek woman's guilty guest
 Dazzles no more: Priam's perjured sons
 Find not against the mighty ones
 Of Greece a shield in Hector's breast:

"And, long drawn out by private jars,
 The war sleeps. Lo! my wrath is o'er:
 And him the Trojan vestal bore
 (Sprung of that hated line) to Mars,

"To Mars restore I. His be rest
 In halls of light: by him be drained
 The nectar bowl, his place obtained
 In the calm companies of the blest.

"While betwixt Rome and Ilion raves
A length of ocean, where they will Rise empires for the exiles still :
While Paris's and Priam's graves

"Are trod by kine, and she-wolves breed
Securely there, unharmed shall stand
Rome's lustrous Capitol, her hand
Curb with proud laws the trampled Mede.

"Wide-feared, to far-off climes be borne
Her story ; where the central main
Europe and Libya parts in twain,
Where full Nile laves a land of corn :

"The buried secret of the mine,
(Best left there) let her dare to spurn,
Nor unto man's base uses turn
Profane hands laying on things divine.

"Earth's utmost end, where'er it be,
Let her hosts reach ; careering proud
O'er lands where watery rain and cloud,
Or where wild suns hold revelry.

"But, to the warriors of Rome,
Tied by this law, such fates are willed ;
That they seek never to rebuild,
Too fond, too bold, their grandsires' home.

"With darkest omens, deadliest strife,
Shall Troy, raised up again, repeat
Her history ; I the victor fleet
Shall lead, Jove's sister and his wife.

"Thrice let Apollo rear the wall
Of brass ; and thrice my Greeks shall hew
The fabric down : thrice matrons rue
In chains their sons', their husbands' fall."

Ill my light lyre such notes beseem.
Stay, Muse ; nor, wayward still, rehearse
Sayings of Gods in meager verse
That may but mar a mighty theme.

BOOK III., ODE 5.

Jove we call King, whose bolts rive heaven;
 Then a god's presence shall be felt
 In Cæsar, with whose power the Celt
 And Parthian stout in vain have striven.

Could Crassus' men wed alien wives,
 And greet, as sons-in-law, the foe?
 In the foes' land (oh Romans, oh
 Lost honor!) end, in shame, their lives,

'Neath the Mede's sway? They, Marsians and Apulians — shields and rank and name
 Forgot, and that undying flame —
 And Jove still reign, and Rome still stand?

This thing wise Regulus could presage:
 He brooked not base conditions; he Set not a precedent to be
 The ruin of a coming age:

"No," cried he, "let the captives die,
 Spare not. I saw Rome's ensigns hung
 In Punic shrines; with sabers, flung Down by Rome's sons ere blood shed. I

"Saw our free citizens with hands
 Fast pinioned; and, through portals now
 Flung wide, our soldiers troop to plow,
 As once they trooped to waste, the lands.

"'Bought by our gold, our men will fight
 But keener.' What? To shame would you
 Add loss? As wool, its natural hue
 Once gone, may not be painted white;

"True Valor, from her seat once thrust,
 Is not replaced by meaner wares.
 Do stags, delivered from the snares,
 Fight? Then shall he fight, who did trust

"His life to foes who spoke a lie:
 And his sword shatter Carthage yet,
 Around whose arms the cords have met,
 A sluggard soul, that feared to die!

“ Life, howe’er bought, he treasured : he Deemed war a thing of trade. Ah fie! —
 Great art thou, Carthage — towerest high
 O’er shamed and ruined Italy ! ”

As one uncitizenized — men said —
 He put his wife’s pure kiss away.
 His little children ; and did lay
 Stern in the dust his manly head :

Till those unequalled words had lent
 Strength to the faltering sires of Rome ;
 Then from his sorrow-stricken home
 Went forth to glorious banishment.

Yet knew he, what wild tortures lay
 Before him : knowing, put aside
 His kin, his countrymen — who tried
 To bar his path, and bade him stay :

He might be hastening on his way, —
 A lawyer freed from business — down
 To green Venafrum, or a town
 Of Sparta, for a holiday.

EPODE 2.

Alphius.

TRANSLATED BY SIR THEODORE MARTIN.

Happy the man, in busy schemes unskilled,
 Who, living simply, like our sires of old,
 Tills the few acres which his father tilled,
 Vexed by no thoughts of usury or gold ;

The shrilling clarion ne’er his slumber mars,
 Nor quails he at the howl of angry seas ;
 He shuns the forum, with its wordy jars,
 Nor at a great man’s door consents to freeze.

The tender vine-shoots, budding into life,
 He with the stately poplar tree doth wed,
 Lopping the fruitless branches with his knife,
 And grafting shoots of promise in their stead ;

Or in some valley, up among the hills,
 Watches his wandering herds of lowing kine,
Or fragrant jars with liquid honey fills,
 Or shears his silly sheep in sunny shine ;

Or when Autumnus o'er the smiling land
 Lifts up his head with rosy apples crowned,
Joyful he plucks the pears, which erst his hand
 Grafted on the stem they're weighing to the ground ;

Plucks grapes in noble clusters purple-dyed,
 A gift for thee, Priapus, and for thee,
Father Sylvanus, where thou dost preside,
 Warding his bounds beneath thy sacred tree.

Now he may stretch his careless limbs to rest,
 Where some old ilex spreads its sacred roof ;
Now in the sunshine lie, as likes him best,
 On grassy turf of close elastic woof.

And streams the while glide on with murmurs low,
 And birds are singing 'mong the thickets deep,
And fountains babble, sparkling as they flow,
 And with their noise invite to gentle sleep.

But when grim winter comes, and o'er his grounds
 Scatters its biting snows with angry roar,
He takes the field, and with a cry of hounds
 Hunts down into the toils the foaming boar ;

Or seeks the thrush, poor starveling, to ensnare,
 In filmy net with bait delusive stored,
Entraps the traveled crane, and timorous hare,
 Rare dainties these to glad his frugal board.

Who amid joys like these would not forget
 The pangs which love to all its victims bears,
The fever of the brain, the ceaseless fret,
 And all the heart's lamentings and despairs ?

But if a chaste and blooming wife, beside,
 The cheerful home with sweet young blossoms fills,
Like some stout Sabine, or the sunburnt bride
 Of the lithe peasant of the Apulian hills

Who piles the hearth with logs well dried and old
 Against the coming of her wearied lord,
 And, when at eve the cattle seek the fold,
 Drains their full udders of the milky hoard ;

And bringing forth from her well-tended store
 A jar of wine, the vintage of the year,
 Spreads an unpurchased feast, — oh then, not more
 Could choicest Lucrine oysters give me cheer,

Or the rich turbot, or the dainty char,
 If ever to our bays the winter's blast
 Should drive them in its fury from afar;
 Nor were to me a welcomer repast

The Afric hen or the Ionic snipe,
 Than olives newly gathered from the tree,
 That hangs abroad its clusters rich and ripe,
 Or sorrel, that doth love the pleasant lea,

Or mallows wholesome for the body's need,
 Or lamb foredoomed upon some festal day
 In offering to the guardian gods to bleed,
 Or kidling which the wolf hath marked for prey.

What joy, amidst such feasts, to see the sheep,
 Full of the pasture, hurrying homewards come;
 To see the wearied oxen, as they creep,
 Dragging the upturned plowshare slowly home!

Or, ranged around the bright and blazing hearth,
 To see the hinds, a house's surest wealth,
 Beguile the evening with their simple mirth,
 And all the cheerfulness of rosy health!

Thus spake the miser Alphius; and, bent
 Upon a country life, called in amain
 The money he at usury had lent; —
 But ere the month was out, 'twas lent again.

BOOK III., ODE 29.

To Mæcenæ.

TRANSLATED BY TALLMADGE A. LAMBERT.

O thou, Mæcenæ, who canst trace
Descent from 'Truria's royal race,
My humble store I pray thee grace
 Of unbroached wine,
And at my board resume the place
 Forever thine !

Make no delay, but once again
Forsake wet Tibur's moistened plain,
And Æsula, whose fields attain
 The hill's steep side,
And Telegon, red with the stain
 Of parricide.

Thy cloying wealth and honors proud,
Thy palace rearing to the cloud,
And all the sycophantic crowd,
 Leave for a time ;
Avoid the din, the smoky shroud
 Of Rome sublime.

The wealthy oft-times welcome change ;
And oft the farmer's humble grange,
Where cleanliness and health arrange
 The plain repast,
Restores the brow which cares derange
 And overcast.

Bright Cepheus rises in the sky,
And Procyon fiercely burns on high,
While Leo's star, of lurid dye,
 Portends the drouth,
And glowing Phœbus, drawing nigh,
 Deserts the south.

The shepherd, now, and panting sheep
Close to the thicket's shading keep,
And in the cooling streamlet steep
 Their languid limbs ;
The sluggish waters onward creep
 Uncurled by winds.

But thou, engaged in state affairs,
 And pressed by weight of civic cares,
 Must needs inquire what best appears
 For thine own Rome,
 How China, Bactria, Tanais fares,
 The Parthian's home.

An all-wise Power conceals from sight
 Our after fortunes, dark or bright,
 And o'er them sets a rayless night
 Of Stygian shade,
 And laughs whenever mortal might
 Would fain invade.

Enjoy to-day: as yonder stream
 Whose waters, smooth-revolving, seem
 To bear within their depths a gleam
 Of Tuscan sea,
 So life 'neath fortune's favoring beam
 Flows happily.

But like those waters when they sweep,
 A swollen torrent, broad and deep,
 And headlong every stay o'erleap
 In mad career,
 So life a turbid course will keep,
 Impelled by care.

He nobly o'er himself holds sway,
 And truly lives, who thus can say,
 As evening seals each well-spent day:
 "I've lived my life!
 The Father may arouse the sea
 And winds to strife —

"But lo, he cannot render vain
 What fleeting Time hath backward ta'en,
 Nor yet avoid nor change again
 That which is past.
 Thus, Memory's joys must e'en remain
 Unto the last!"

Fair Fortune, pleasing but to grieve,
 Exciting hope but to deceive,
 Exulting when she may bereave
 With keenest pain,

The transient honors I receive
Will take again.

I praise her — with me — when I see
Her, fluttering, rise, about to flee;
I give up all and tranquilly
Behold her go,
And seek undowered poverty
Whence virtues flow.

'Tis not for me, when Afric's blast
Bends low the sailless, creaking mast. —
'Tis not for me, with eyes upcast,
To supplicate
That through the storm my ship hold fast
Its precious freight.

Not mine to strive, with bargaining vows,
The heavenly deities to rouse,
Lest my rich Cyprian, Tyrian prow
Sink on the deep;
For griefless poverty allows
Unbroken sleep.

The Twins my trusting course shall guide
As o'er the fickle waves I glide,
Assisted by the winds and tide,
In my swift bark;
And every storm I'll safely ride,
A scathless mark!

BOOK III., ODE 28.

Neptune and the Sea Goddesses.

How shall I honor Neptune best
On his holiday? Lyde mine,
Bring the hoarded Cæcuban out with zest,
Break Wisdom's guarded line.
You feel the noontide sun decline,
Yet as if the fleet day stood still,
You leave the lingering cask of wine
With Consul Bibulus' vintage sign,
Asleep in the cellar's chill.
We will sing by turns of the ocean sire
And the Nereids' tresses green;

You first recite to the arching lyre
 Latona's love, and the arrows dire
 Of Cynthia, fleet-foot queen ;
 The carol done, of her be the tale
 Whom Cnidus' charms can please,
 Who swan-borne visits her Paphian vale
 And the sun-bright Cyclades ;
 And the song of Night in a minor wail
 Shall fitly follow these.

HORACE ON CHARITABLE JUDGMENTS.

(From the "Satires," I. 3.)

TRANSLATED BY SIR THEODORE MARTIN.

TRUE love, we know, is blind: defects that blight
 The loved one's charms escape the lover's sight, —
 Nay, pass for beauties; as Balbinus shows
 A passion for the wen on Agna's nose.
 Oh, with our friendships that we did the same,
 And screened our blindness under virtue's name!
 For we are bound to treat a friend's defect
 With touch most tender, and a fond respect:
 Even as a father treats a child's, who hints
 The urchin's eyes are roguish, if he squints:
 Or if he be as stunted, short, and thick
 As Sisyphus the dwarf, will call him "chick!"
 If crooked all ways, in back, in legs, and thighs,
 With softening phrases will the flaw disguise.
 So, if one friend too close a fist betrays,
 Let us ascribe it to his frugal ways;
 Or is another — such we often find —
 To flippant jest and braggart talk inclined,
 'Tis only from a kindly wish to try
 To make the time 'mongst friends go lightly by;
 Another's tongue is rough and overfree,
 Let's call it bluntness and sincerity;
 Another's choleric — him we must screen,
 As cursed with feelings for his peace too keen.
 This is the course, methinks, that makes a friend,
 And having made, secures him to the end.

POEMS OF OVID.

[PUBLIUS OVIDIUS NASO, the youngest of the great Augustan poets, was born B.C. 43, the year after Cæsar's murder, and died A.D. 17, three years after Augustus. He was of Sulmo in the Apennines, a landholder like Tibullus and Propertius, and, unlike them, kept his estate. He settled at Rome and filled some minor offices, but led an easy, pleasure-seeking life. But he became involved, seemingly, in the dreadful family scandal which clouded Augustus' later years and ruined his political family plans; his "Art of Love" was regarded as one of the influences which had made Roman society so rotten; and he was banished to Tomi on the Danube, a barbarous village of Grecized Goths, where he lived the ten remaining years of his life. His "Metamorphoses" have been translated, adapted, and used as subjects, in every European language; his "Fasti" poetized the Roman religious rites; his Elegies ranked him as one of the great quartet (see Tibullus); his Epistles have been brilliantly and repeatedly translated. He wrote also "Remedia Amoris," a sort of apology for the "Ars Amatoria"; a tragedy, "Medea"; the "Heroides," on the old myths; and others.]

SAPPHO TO PHAON.

(From the "Epistles": Pope's translation).

SAY, lovely youth, that doth my heart command,
 Can Phaon's eyes forget his Sappho's hand?
 Must then her name the wretched writer prove,
 To thy remembrance lost, as to thy love?
 Ask not the cause that I new members choose,
 The lute neglected, and the Lyric Muse.
 Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow,
 And tuned my heart to elegies of woe.
 I burn, I burn, as when through ripened corn
 By driving winds the spreading flames are borne.
 Phaon to Etna's scorching fields retires,
 While I consume with more than Etna's fires!
 No more my soul a charm in music finds,
 Music has charms alone for peaceful minds:
 Soft scenes of solitude no more can please,
 Love enters there, and I'm my own disease.
 No more the Lesbian dames my passion move,
 Once the dear objects of my guilty love;
 All other loves are lost in only thine,
 Ah, youth ungrateful to a flame like mine!
 Whom would not all those blooming charms surprise,
 Those heavenly looks, and dear deluding eyes?
 The harp and bow would you like Phœbus bear,
 A brighter Phœbus Phaon might appear;

Would you with ivy wreathe your flowing hair,
 Not Bacchus' self with Phaon could compare:
 Yet Phœbus loved, and Bacchus felt the flame,
 One Daphne warmed, and one the Cretan dame;
 Nymphs that in verse no more could rival me,
 Than e'en those gods contend in charms with thee. . . .
 Brown as I am, an Ethiopian dame
 Inspired young Perseus with a generous flame;
 Turtles and doves of different hues unite,
 And glossy jet is paired with shining white.
 If to no charms thou wilt thy heart resign,
 But such as merit, such as equal thine,
 By none, alas! by none thou canst be moved:
 Phaon alone by Phaon must be loved!
 Yet once thy Sappho could thy cares employ;
 Once in her arms you centered all your joy:
 No time the dear remembrance can remove,
 For, oh! how vast a memory has love!
 My music, then you could not ever hear,
 And all my words were music to your ear.
 You stopped with kisses my enchanting tongue,
 And found my kisses sweeter than my song.
 In all I pleased, but most in what was best;
 And the last joy was dearer than the rest.
 Then with each word, each glance, each motion fired,
 You still enjoyed, and yet you still desired,
 Till all dissolving in the trance we lay,
 And in tumultuous raptures died away. . . .

O scarce a youth, yet scarce a tender boy!
 O useful time for lovers to employ!
 Pride of thy age and glory of thy race,
 Come to these arms, and melt in this embrace!
 The vows you never will return, receive;
 And take at least the love you will not give.
 See, while I write, my words are lost in tears!
 The less my sense, the more my love appears.
 Sure 'twas not much to bid one kind adieu;
 (At least to feign was never hard to you!)
 "Farewell, my Lesbian love," you might have said;
 Or coldly thus, "Farewell, oh Lesbian maid!"
 No tear did you, no parting kiss receive,
 Nor knew I then how much I was to grieve.
 No lover's gift your Sappho could confer,
 And wrongs and woes were all you left with her.

No charge I gave you, and no charge could give,
 But this, "Be mindful of your loves, and live."
 Now by the Nine, those powers adored by me,
 And Love, the god that ever waits on thee,
 When first I heard (from whom I hardly knew)
 That you were fled, and all my joys with you,
 Like some sad statue, speechless, pale I stood,
 Grief chilled my breast, and stopped my freezing blood;
 No sigh to rise, no tear had power to flow,
 Fixed in a stupid lethargy of woe:
 But when its way the impetuous passion found,
 I rend my tresses, and my breast I wound;
 I rave, then weep; I curse, and then complain;
 Now swell to rage, now melt in tears again;
 Not fiercer pangs distract the mournful dame
 Whose firstborn infant feeds the funeral flame. . . .
 Stung with my love, and furious with despair,
 All torn my garments, and my bosom bare,
 My woes, thy crimes, I to the world proclaim:
 Such inconsistent things are love and shame!
 'Tis thou art all my care and my delight,
 My daily longing, and my dream by night.
 O night, more pleasing than the brightest day,
 When fancy gives what absence takes away,
 And dressed in all its visionary charms,
 Restores my fair deserter to my arms! . . .
 But when with day, the sweet delusions fly,
 And all things wake to life and joy, but I;
 As if once more forsaken, I complain,
 And close my eyes to dream of you again.

LAODAMIA TO PROTESILAUS

(Translated by Miss E. Garland.)

Ah! Trojan women (happier far than we),
 Fain in your lot would I partaker be!
 If ye must mourn o'er some dead hero's bier,
 And all the dangers of the war are near,
 With you at least the fair and youthful bride
 May arm her husband, in becoming pride;
 Lift the fierce helmet to his gallant brow,
 And, with a trembling hand, his sword bestow:
 With fingers all unused the weapon brace,
 And gaze with fondest love upon his face!

How sweet to both this office she will make —
 How many a kiss receive — how many take!
 When all equipped she leads him from the door,
 Her fond commands how oft repeating o'er: —
 "Return victorious, and thine arms enshrine —
 Return, beloved, to these arms of mine!"
 Nor shall these fond commands be all in vain,
 Her hero-husband will return again.
 Amid the battle's din and clashing swords
 He still will listen to her parting words;
 And, if more prudent, still, ah! not less brave,
 One thought for her and for his home will save.

THE RING.

(Translated by A. A. Brodribb.)

Sign of my too presumptuous flame,
 To fairest Celia haste, nor linger,
 And may she gladly breathe my name,
 And gayly put thee on her finger!

Suit her as I myself, that she
 May fondle thee with murmured blessing;
 Caressed by Celia! Who could be
 Unenvious of such sweet caressing?

Had I Medea's magic art,
 Or Proteus' power of transformation,
 Then would I blithely play thy part,
 The happiest trinket in creation!

Oh! on her bosom I would fall,
 Her finger guiding all too lightly;
 Or else be magically small,
 Fearing to be discarded nightly.

And I her ruby lips would kiss
 (What mortal's fortune could be better?)
 As oft allowed to seal my bliss
 As she desires to seal a letter.

Now go, these are delusions bright
 Of idle Fancy's idlest scheming;
 Tell her to read the token right —
 Tell her how sweet is true love's dreaming.

ELEGY ON TIBULLUS.

(Translated by Professor J. P. Nichol.)

If bright Aurora mourned for Memnon's fate,
 Or the fair Thetis wept Achilles slain,
 And the sad sorrows that on mortals wait
 Can ever move celestial hearts with pain —

Come, doleful Elegy! too just a name!
 Unbind thy tresses fair, in loose attire,
 For he, thy bard, the herald of thy fame,
 TIBULLUS, burns upon the funeral pyre.

Ah, lifeless corse! Lo! Venus' boy draws near
 With upturned quiver and with shattered bow;
 His torch extinguished, see him toward the bier
 With drooping wings disconsolately go.

He smites his heaving breast with cruel blow,
 Those straggling locks, his neck all streaming round,
 Receive the tears that fastly trickling flow,
 While sobs convulsive from his lips resound.

In guise like this, Iulus, when of yore
 His dear Æneas died, he sorrowing went;
 Now Venus wails as when the raging boar
 The tender thigh of her Adonis rent.

We bards are named the gods' peculiar care;
 Nay, some declare that poets are divine;
 Yet forward death no holy thing can spare,
 'Round all his dismal arms he dares entwine.

Did Orpheus' mother aid, or Linus' sire?
 That one subdued fierce lions by his song
 Availed not; and, they say, with plaintive lyre
 The god mourned Linus, woods and glades among.

Mæonides, from whose perennial lay
 Flow the rich fonts of the Pierian wave
 To wet the lips of bards, one dismal day
 Sent down to Orcus and the gloomy grave —

Him, too, Avernus holds in drear empiey;
 Only his songs escape the greedy pile;

His work remains — the mighty wars of Troy,
And the slow web, unwove by nightly guile.

Live a pure life; — yet death remains thy doom:
Be pious; — ere from sacred shrines you rise,
Death drags you heedless to the hollow tomb!
Confide in song — lo! there Tibullus lies.

Scarce of so great a soul, thus lowly laid,
Enough remains to fill this little urn;
O holy bard! were not the flames afraid
That hallowed corse thus ruthlessly to burn?

These might devour the heavenly halls that shine
With gold — they dare a villany so deep:
SHE turned who holds the Erycinian shrine,
And there are some who say she turned to weep.

Yet did the base soil of a stranger land
Not hold him nameless; as the spirit fled
His mother closed his eyes with gentle hand,
And paid the last sad tribute to the dead.

Here, with thy wretched mother's woe to wait,
Thy sister came with loose dishevelled hair;
Nemesis kisses thee, and thy earlier mate —
They watched the pyre when all had left it bare.

Departing, Delia faltered, "Thou wert true,
The Fates were cheerful then, when I was thine:"
The other, "Say, what hast thou here to do?"
Dying, he clasped his failing hand in mine.

Ah, yet, if any part of us remains
But name and shadow, Albius is not dead;
And thou, Catullus, in Elysian plains,
With Calvus see the ivy crown his head.

Thou, Gallus, prodigal of life and blood,
If false the charge of amity betrayed,
And aught remains across the Stygian flood,
Shalt meet him yonder with thy happy shade.

Refined Tibullus! thou art joined to those Living in calm communion with the blest;
In peaceful urn thy quiet bones repose —
May earth lie lightly where thy ashes rest

ACIS AND GALATEA.

(From the "Metamorphoses": Dryden's translation.)

ACIS, the lovely youth, whose loss I mourn,
 From Faunus and the nymph Symethis born,
 Was both his parents' pleasure; but to me
 Was all that love could make a lover be.
 The gods our minds in mutual bands did join:
 I was his only joy, and he was mine.
 Now sixteen summers the sweet youth had seen;
 And doubtful down began to shade his chin:
 When Polyphemus first disturbed our joy,
 And loved me fiercely as I loved the boy.
 Ask not which passion in my soul was higher,
 My last aversion, or my first desire:
 Nor this the greater was, nor that the less;
 Both were alike, for both were in excess.
 Thee, Venus, thee both heaven and earth obey;
 Immense thy power, and boundless is thy sway.
 The Cyclops, who defied th' ethereal throne,
 And thought no thunder louder than his own,
 The terror of the woods, and wilder far
 Than wolves in plains, or bears in forests are,
 Th' inhuman host, who made his bloody feasts
 On mangled members of his butchered guests,
 Yet felt the force of love, and fierce desire,
 And burned for me with unrelenting fire:
 Forgot his caverns, and his woolly care,
 Assumed the softness of a lover's air:
 And combed, with teeth of rakes, his rugged hair.
 Now with a crooked scythe his beard he sleeks,
 And mows the stubborn stubble of his cheeks:
 Now in the crystal stream he looks, to try
 His simagres, and rolls his glaring eye.
 His cruelty and thirst of blood are lost,
 And ships securely sail along the coast.

The prophet Telemus (arrived by chance
 Where Ætna's summits to the seas advance,
 Who marked the tracks of every bird that flew,
 And sure presages from their flying drew)
 Foretold the Cyclops, that Ulysses' hand
 In his broad eye should thrust a flaming brand.
 The giant, with a scornful grin, replied,
 "Vain augur, thou hast falsely prophesied;
 Already Love his flaming brand has tossed;
 Looking on two fair eyes, my sight I lost."

Thus, warned in vain, with stalking pace he strode,
 And stamped the margin of the briny flood
 With heavy steps; and, weary, sought again
 The cool retirement of his gloomy den.

A promontory, sharpening by degrees,
 Ends in a wedge, and overlooks the seas:
 On either side, below, the water flows:
 This airy walk the giant lover chose;
 Here on the midst he sat; his flocks, unled,
 Their shepherd followed, and securely fed.
 A pine so burly, and of length so vast,
 That sailing ships required it for a mast,
 He wielded for a staff, his steps to guide:
 But laid it by, his whistle while he tried.
 A hundred reeds, of a prodigious growth,
 Scarce made a pipe proportioned to his mouth:
 Which when he gave it wind, the rocks around,
 And watery plains, the dreadful hiss resound.
 I heard the ruffian shepherd rudely blow,
 Where, in a hollow cave, I sat below;
 On Acis' bosom I my head reclined:
 And still preserve the poem in my mind.

"O lovely Galatea, whiter far
 Than falling snows, and rising lilies are;
 More flowery than the meads; as crystal bright:
 Erect as alders, and of equal height:
 More wanton than a kid; more sleek thy skin
 Than orient shells, that on the shores are seen:
 Than apples fairer, when the boughs they lade;
 Pleasing as winter suns, or summer shade:
 More grateful to the sight than goodly plains;
 And softer to the touch than down of swans,
 Or curds new turned; and sweeter to the taste
 Than swelling grapes, that to the vintage haste:
 More clear than ice, or running streams, that stray
 Through garden plots, but, ah! more swift than they.

"Yet, Galatea, harder to be broke
 Than bullocks, unreclaimed to bear the yoke:
 And far more stubborn than the knotted oak:
 Like sliding streams, impossible to hold;
 Like them fallacious; like their fountains, cold:
 More warping than the willow, to decline
 My warm embrace; more brittle than the vine;
 Immovable, and fixed in thy disdain;
 Rough as these rocks, and of a harder grain:

More violent than is the rising flood;
 And the praised peacock is not half so proud:
 Fierce as the fire, and sharp as thistles are;
 And more outrageous than a mother bear:
 Deaf as the billows to the vows I make;
 And more revengeful than a trodden snake:
 In swiftness fleetier than the flying hind,
 Or driven tempests, or the driving wind.
 All other faults with patience I can bear;
 But swiftness is the vice I only fear.

“Yet, if you knew me well, you would not shun
 My love, but to my wished embraces run:
 Would languish in your turn, and court my stay;
 And much repent of your unwise delay.

“My palace, in the living rock, is made
 By nature’s hand; a spacious pleasing shade;
 Which neither heat can pierce, nor cold invade.
 My garden filled with fruits you may behold,
 And grapes in clusters, imitating gold;
 Some blushing bunches of a purple hue:
 And these, and those, are all reserved for you.
 Red strawberries in shades expecting stand
 Proud to be gathered by so white a hand;
 Autumnal cornels latter fruit provide,
 And plums, to tempt you, turn their glossy side:
 Not those of common kinds; but such alone,
 As in Phæacian orchards might have grown:
 Nor chestnuts shall be wanting to your food,
 Nor garden fruits, nor wildings of the wood;
 The laden boughs for you alone shall bear;
 And yours shall be the product of the year.

“The flocks, you see, are all my own; beside
 The rest that woods and winding valleys hide;
 And those that folded in the caves abide.
 Ask not the numbers of my growing store;
 Who knows how many, knows he has no more.
 Nor will I praise my cattle; trust not me,
 But judge yourself, and pass your own decree:
 Behold their swelling dugs; the sweepy weight
 Of ewes, that sink beneath the milky freight;
 In the warm folds their tender lambkins lie;
 Apart from kids, that call with human cry.
 New milk in nut-brown bowls is duly served
 For daily drink; the rest for cheese reserved.
 Nor are these household dainties all my store:

The fields and forests will afford us more;
 The deer, the hare, the goat, the savage boar:
 All sorts of venison; and of birds the best;
 A pair of turtles taken from the nest.
 I walked the mountains, and two cubs I found,
 Whose dam had left 'em on the naked ground;
 So like, that no distinction could be seen;
 So pretty, they were presents for a queen;
 And so they shall; I took them both away;
 And keep, to be companions of your play.

“Oh raise, fair nymph, your beauteous face above
 The waves; nor scorn my presents, and my love.
 Come, Galatea, come, and view my face;
 I late beheld it in the watery glass,
 And found it lovelier than I feared it was.
 Survey my towering stature, and my size;
 Not Jove, the Jove you dream, that rules the skies,
 Bears such a bulk, or is so largely spread:
 My locks (the plenteous harvest of my head)
 Hang o'er my manly face; and dangling down,
 As with a shady grove, my shoulders crown.
 Nor think, because my limbs and body bear
 A thick-set underwood of bristling hair,
 My shape deformed: what fouler sight can be
 Than the bald branches of a leafless tree?
 Foul is the steed without a flowing mane,
 And birds, without their feathers, and their train.
 Wool decks the sheep; and man receives a grace
 From bushy limbs, and from a bearded face.
 My forehead with a single eye is filled,
 Round as a ball, and ample as a shield.
 The glorious lamp of heaven, the radiant sun,
 Is nature's eye; and she's content with one.
 Add, that my father sways your seas, and I,
 Like you, am of the watery family.
 I make you his, in making you my own;
 You I adore, and kneel to you alone:
 Jove, with his fabled thunder, I despise,
 And only fear the lightning of your eyes.
 Frown not, fair nymph; yet I could bear to be Disdained, if others were disdained with me.
 But to repulse the Cyclops, and prefer
 The love of Acis, heavens! I cannot bear.
 But let the stripling please himself; nay more,
 Please you, though that's the thing I most abhor;

The boy shall find, if e'er we cope in fight,
 These giant limbs endued with giant might.
 His living bowels from his belly torn,
 And scattered limbs, shall on the flood be borne,
 Thy flood, ungrateful nymph; and fate shall find
 That way for thee and Acis to be joined,
 For, oh! I burn with love, and thy disdain
 Augments at once my passion and my pain.
 Translated Ætna flames within my heart,
 And thou, inhuman, wilt not ease my smart."

Lamenting thus in vain, he rose, and strode
 With furious paces to the neighboring wood:
 Restless his feet, distracted was his walk;
 Mad were his motions, and confused his talk.
 Mad as the vanquished bull, when forced to yield
 His lovely mistress, and forsake the field.

Thus far unseen I saw: when, fatal chance
 His looks directing, with a sudden glance,
 Acis and I were to his sight betrayed;
 Where, naught suspecting, we securely played.
 From his wide mouth a bellowing cry he cast;
 "I see, I see! but this shall be your last."
 A roar so loud made Ætna to rebound;
 And all the Cyclops labored in the sound.
 Affrighted with his monstrous voice, I fled,
 And in the neighboring ocean plunged my head.
 Poor Acis turned his back, and, "Help," he said,
 "Help, Galatea! help, my parent gods,
 And take me dying to your deep abodes!"
 The Cyclops followed; but he sent before
 A rib, which from the living rock he tore:
 Though but an angle reached him of the stone,
 The mighty fragment was enough alone
 To crush all Acis; 'twas too late to save,
 But what the Fates allowed to give, I gave:
 That Acis to his lineage should return,
 And roll, among the river gods, his urn.
 Straight issued from the stone a stream of blood;
 Which lost the purple, mingling with the flood.
 Then like a troubled torrent it appeared;
 The torrent too, in little space, was cleared.
 The stone was cleft, and through the yawning chink
 New reeds arose, on the new river's brink.
 The rock, from out its hollow womb, disclosed
 A sound like water in its course opposed:

When (wondrous to behold) full in the flood
Up starts a youth, and navel-high he stood.
Horns from his temples: and either horn
Thick wreaths of reeds (his native growth) adorn.
Were not his stature taller than before,
His bulk augmented, and his beauty more,
His color blue, for Acis he might pass:
And Acis changed into a stream he was.
But mine no more, he rolls along the plains
With rapid motion, and his name retains.

ÆNEAS' JOURNEY TO HADES.

By VIRGIL.

(Translated by Sir Charles Bowen.)

[PUBLIUS VIRGILIUS MARO, the great Roman epic poet, was born near Mantua, B.C. 70, and finely educated. Stripped of his estate in Augustus' confiscations, he regained it, like Horace, through Mæcenas' influence; became the friend of both, and also of Augustus, with whom he was traveling when he died, B.C. 19. His works are the "Eclogues" or "Bucolics" (only part of them pastorals, however), modeled on Theocritus' idyls; the "Georgics," a poetical treatise on practical agriculture which made farming the fashionable "fad" for a time; and the "Æneid," an epic on the adventures of Æneas, the mythical founder of Rome,—imitative of Homer's form and style.]

[SIR CHARLES SYNGE CHRISTOPHER BOWEN: An English judge and translator; born at Gloucestershire, England, in 1835; died April 9, 1894. He was educated at Rugby, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took three of the great university prizes. Called to the bar in 1861, he became judge of the Queen's Bench in 1879, and lord justice in the Court of Appeal in 1882. His literary reputation rests upon a translation into English verse of Virgil's "Eclogues" and the first six books of the "Æneid."]

WEeping he spake, then gave to his flying vessels the rein,
Gliding at last on the wind to Eubœan Cumæ's plain.
Seaward the bows are pointed; an anchor's hook to the land
Fastens the ships, and the sterns in a long line border the strand.
Troy's young warriors leap with exultant hearts from the bark
Forth upon Italy's soil. Some look for the fiery spark
Hid in the secret veins of the flint; some scour the profound
Forest, and wild beast's cover, and show where waters abound.
While the devout Æneas a temple seeks on the height,
Phœbus's mountain throne, and a cavern vast as the night,
Where in mysterious darkness the terrible Sibyl lies,
Maiden upon whose spirit the Delian seer of the skies
Breathes his immortal thought, and the knowledge of doom untold.
Soon they arrive at Diana's grove and her palace of gold.

Flying, as legends tell, from the thralldom of Minos the king;
 Dædalus, trusting the heavens, set forth on adventurous wing,
 Sailed for the ice-bound north by a way unimagined and strange;
 Airily poising at last upon this Chalcidian range,
 Here first touching the land, to Apollo hallowed his light
 Oarage of wings; and a temple colossal built on the site.
 Graved on the doors is the death of Androgeos; yonder in turn
 Attica's land, condemned each year in atonement to yield
 Seven of her children; the lots are drawn, still standing the urn;
 Rising from midmost ocean beyond them, Crete is revealed.
 Here is the gloomy romance of the bull, and Pasiphaë's blind
 Fantasy. Here the twiformed Minotaur, two bodies combined,
 Record of lawless love; there, marvelous labor, were shaped
 Palace and winding mazes, from whence no feet had escaped,
 Had not Dædalus pitied the lorn princess and her love,
 And of himself unentangled the woven trick of the grove,
 Guiding her savior's steps with a thread. Thee, too, he had wrought,
 Icarus, into the picture, had grief not baffled the thought.
 Twice he essayed upon gold to engrave thine agony, twice
 Faltered the hands of the father, and fell. Each noble device
 Long their eyes had perused, but Achates now is in sight;
 With him the priestess comes, dread servant of Phœbus and Night,
 Daughter of Glaucus the seer. To the Trojan monarch she cries:
 "Tis not an hour, Æneas, for feasting yonder thine eyes.
 Better to slaughter from herds unyoked seven oxen and seven Ewes of the yester year, as a choice oblation to Heaven."
 Then, as the ministers hasten the rites ordained to prepare,
 Into the depth of the temple she bids Troy's children repair.

There is a cavern hewn in the mountain's enormous side,
 Reached by a hundred gates, and a hundred passages wide.
 Thence roll voices a hundred, the seer's revelations divine.
 When by the doors they stood: "'Tis the hour to inquire of the shrine,"
 Cried the illumined maiden: "The God! lo, here is the God!"
 Even as she spake, while still on the threshold only she trod,
 Sudden her countenance altered, her cheek grew pale as in death,
 Loose and disordered her fair hair flew, heart panted for breath,
 Bosom with madness heaved. More lofty than woman's her frame,
 More than mortal her voice, as the presence of Deity came Nearer upon her. "And art thou slow to petition the shrine,
 Troy's Æneas a laggard at prayer? — naught else will incline
 This charmed temple," she cries, "its colossal doors to unclose."
 Then stands silent. The veteran bones of the Teucrians froze,
 Chilled with terror, and prayer from the heart of the monarch arose:
 "Phœbus! compassionate ever to Troy in the hour of her woe,

Who against haughty Achilles of old didst prosper the bow
 Bent by the Dardan Paris, beneath thine auspices led Many a sea I have traveled around great continents spread,
 Far as Massylian tribes and the quicksands lining their plain.
 Italy's vanishing regions, behold, thy people attain!
 Here may the evil fate of the Trojans leave us at last!
 Spare, for 'tis mercy's hour, this remnant of Pergama's race,
 Gods and goddesses all, whose jealous eyes in the past
 Looked upon Ilion's glories! From thee I implore one grace, Prophet of Heaven, dark seer of the future. Grant us the debt,
 Long by the destinies owed us — a kingdom promised of yore —
 Foot upon Latium's borders at length may Teucrians set,
 Bearing their household gods by the tempests tossed evermore!
 I, their votary grateful, in Phœbus' and Trivia's praise
 Hewn from the solid marble a glorious fane will raise,
 Call by Apollo's name his festival. Also for thee
 Shall in our future kingdom a shrine imperial be.
 There shall thine own dark sayings, the mystic fates of our line,
 Gracious seer, be installed, and a priesthood chosen be thine.
 Only intrust not to leaves thy prophecy, maiden divine,
 Lest in disorder, the light winds' sport, they be driven on the air;
 Chant thyself the prediction." His lips here ended from prayer.

Still untamed of Apollo, to stature terrible grown,
 Raves the prophetic maid in her cavern, fain to dethrone
 This great God who inspires her — the more with bit doth he school
 Fiery mouth and rebellious bosom and mold her to rule.
 Wide on a sudden the hundred enormous mouths of her lair
 Fly, of themselves unclosing, and answer floats on the air:
 "Thou who hast ended at last with the dangers dread of the sea,
 Greater on land still wait thee. Lavinium's kingdom afar
 Teucra's children shall find — of that ancient terror be free —
 Yet shall repent to have found it. I see grim visions of war,
 Tiber foaming with blood. Once more shall a Simois flow,
 Xanthus be there once more, and the tents of a Dorian foe.
 Wonder in Latium rises a second Achilles, and born,
 Even as the first, of a goddess; and neither at night nor at morn
 Ever shall Juno leave thee, the Trojans' enemy sworn,
 While thou pleadest for succor, besieging in misery sore
 Each far people and city around Ausonia's shore!
 So shall a bride from the stranger again thy nation destroy,
 Once more foreign espousals a great woe bring upon Troy.
 Yield not thou to disasters, confront them boldly, and more
 Boldly — as destiny lets thee — and first from a town of the Greek, Marvel to say, shall be shown thee the way salvation to seek."

So from her awful shrine the Cumæan Sibyl intones
Fate's revelation dread, till the cavern echoes her groans,
Robing her truths in gloom. So shakes, as she fumes in unrest,
Phœbus his bridle reins, while plunging the spur in her breast.
After her madness ceased and her lips of frenzy were still,
Thus Æneas replied: "No vision, lady, of ill
Comes unimagined now to the exile here at thy door;
Each has he counted and traversed already in spirit before.
One sole grace I entreat — since these be the gates, it is said,
Sacred to Death and the twilight lake by the Acheron fed —
Leave to revisit the face of the sire I have loved so well;
Teach me the way thyself, and unlock yon portals of hell.
This was the sire I bore on my shoulders forth from the flame,
Brought through a thousand arrows, that vexed our flight as we came,
Safe from the ranks of the foeman. He shared my journey with me;
Weak as he was, braved ocean, the threats of sky and of sea;
More than the common strength or the common fate of the old.
'Tis at his bidding, his earnest prayer long since, I am fain
Thus in petition to seek thy gate. With compassion behold
Father and son, blest maid, for untold thy power, nor in vain
Over the groves of Avernus hath Hecate set thee to reign.
Grace was to Orpheus granted, his bride from the shadows to bring
Strong in the power of his lyre and its sounding Thracian string.
Still in his turn dies Pollux, a brother's life to redeem,
Travels and ever retravels the journey. Why of the great Theseus tell thee, or why of Alcides mighty relate?
My race, even as theirs, is descended from Jove the supreme."
So evermore he repeated, and still to the altar he clung.
She in reply: "Great Hero, of heaven's high lineage sprung,
Son of Anchises of Troy, the descent to Avernus is light;
Death's dark gates stand open, alike through the day and the night.
But to retrace thy steps and emerge to the sunlight above,
This is the toil and the trouble. A few, whom Jupiter's love
Favors, or whose bright valor has raised them thence to the skies,
Born of the gods, have succeeded. On this side wilderness lies,
Black Cocytus around it his twilight waters entwines.
Still, if such thy desire, and if thus thy spirit inclines
Twice to adventure the Stygian lake, twice look on the dark
Tartarus, and it delights thee on quest so wild to embark,
Learn what first to perform. On a tree no sun that receives
Hides one branch all golden — its yielding stem and its leaves —
Sacred esteemed to the queen of the shadows. Forests of night
Cover it, sloping valleys inclose it around from the light.
Subterranean gloom and its mysteries only may be Reached by the mortal who gathers the golden growth of the tree.

This for her tribute chosen the lovely Proserpina needs
 Aye to be brought her. The one bough broken, another succeeds,
 Also of gold, and the spray bears leaf of a metal as bright.
 Deep in the forest explore, and if once thou find it aright,
 Pluck it; the branch will follow, of its own grace and design,
 Should thy destiny call thee; or else no labor of thine
 Ever will move it, nor ever thy hatchet conquer its might.
 Yea, and the corpse of a friend, although thou know'st not," she saith.
 "Lies upon shore unburied, and taints thy vessels with death,
 While thou tarriest here at the gate thy future to know.
 Carry him home to his rest, in the grave his body bestow;
 Death's black cattle provide for the altar; give to the shades
 This first lustral oblation, and so on the Stygian glades,
 Even on realms where never the feet of the living come,
 Thou shalt finally look." Then, closing her lips, she was dumb.

Sadly, with downcast eyes, Æneas turns to depart,
 Leaving the cave; on the issues dark foretold by her words
 Pondering much in his bosom. Achates, trusty of heart,
 Paces beside him, plunged in a musing deep as his lord's.
 Many the troubled thoughts that in ranging talk they pursue —
 Who is the dead companion the priestess spake of, and who Yonder unburied lies? And advancing thither, they find
 High on the beach Misenus, to death untimely consigned,
 Æolus-born Misenus, than whom no trumpeter bright
 Blew more bravely for battle, or fired with music the fight;
 Comrade of Hector great, who at Hector's side to the war
 Marched, by his soldier's spear and his trumpet known from afar.
 After triumphant Achilles his master slew with the sword,
 Troy's Æneas he followed, a no less glorious lord.
 Now while over the deep he was sounding his clarion sweet,
 In wild folly defying the Ocean Gods to compete,
 Envious Triton, lo! — if the legend merit belief —
 Drowned him, before he was ware, in the foaming waves of a reef
 All now, gathered around him, uplift their voices in grief,
 Foremost the faithful chieftain. Anon to their tasks they lie;
 Speed, though weeping sorely, the Sibyl's mission, and vie
 Building the funeral altar with giant trees to the sky.

Into the forest primeval, the beasts' dark cover, they go;
 Pine trees fall with a crash and the holm oaks ring to the blow.
 Ash-hewn timbers and fissile oaks with the wedges are rent;
 Massive ash trees roll from the mountains down the descent.
 Foremost strides Æneas, as ever, guiding the way,
 Cheering his men, and equipped with a forester's ax as they.

Long in his own sad thoughts he is plunged — then raising his eyes
 Over the measureless forest, uplifts his prayer to the skies.
 “O that in this great thicket the golden branch of the tree
 Might be revealed! For in all she related yonder of thee
 Ever, alas! Misenus, the prophetess spake too true.”
 Lo! at the words twain doves came down through the heavenly blue,
 And at his side on the green turf lighted. The hero of Troy
 Knows the celestial birds of his mother, and cries with joy:
 “Guide us, if ever a way be, and cleaving swiftly the skies,
 Wing for the grove where in shadow a golden branch overlies
 One all-favored spot. Nor do thou in an hour that is dark,
 Mother, desert thy son!” So saying, he pauses to mark
 What be the omens, and whither the birds go. They in their flight,
 Soaring, and lighting to feed, keep still in the Teucrians’ sight.
 When they have come to the valley of baleful Avernus, the pair,
 Shooting aloft, float up through a bright and radiant air;
 Both on a tree they have chosen at length their pinions fold
 Through whose branches of green is a wavering glimmer of gold.
 As in the winter forest a mistletoe often ye see
 Bearing a foliage young, no growth of its own oak tree,
 Circling the rounded boles with a leafage of yellowing bloom;
 Such was the branching gold, as it shone through the holm oak’s gloom,
 So in the light wind rustled the foil. Æneas with bold
 Ardor assails it, breaks from the tree the reluctant gold;
 Then to the Sibyl’s palace in triumph carries it home.

Weeping for dead Misenus the Trojan host on the shore
 Now to his thankless ashes the funeral offerings bore.
 Rich with the resinous pine and in oak-hewn timbers cased
 Rises a giant pyre, in its sides dark foliage laced;
 Planted in front stand branches of cypress, gifts to the grave;
 Over it hang for adornment the gleaming arms of the brave.
 Some heat fountain water, the bubbling caldron prepare;
 Clay-cold limbs then wash and anoint. Wails sound on the air.
 Dirge at an end, the departed is placed on the funeral bed;
 O’er him they fling bright raiment, the wonted attire of the dead.
 Others shoulder the ponderous bier, sad service of death;
 Some in ancestral fashion the lighted torches beneath
 Hold with averted eyes. High blaze on the burning pyre
 Incense, funeral viands, and oil outpoured on the fire.
 After the ashes have fallen and flames are leaping no more,
 Wine on the smouldering relics and cinders thirsty they pour
 Next in a vessel of brass Corynæus gathers the bones,
 Thrice bears pure spring water around Troy’s sorrowing sons,

Sprinkles it o'er them in dew, from the bough of an olive in bloom,
 Gives lustration to all, then bids farewell to the tomb.
 But the devout Æneas a vast grave builds on the shore,
 Places upon it the warrior's arms, his trumpet and oar,
 Close to the sky-capped hill that from hence Misenus is hight,
 Keeping through endless ages his glorious memory bright.

Finished the task, to accomplish the Sibyl's behest they sped.
 There was a cavern deep, — with a yawning throat and a dread, —
 Shingly and rough, by a somber lake and a forest of night
 Sheltered from all approach. No bird wings safely her flight
 Over its face, — from the gorges exhales such poisonous breath,
 Rising aloft to the skies in a vapor laden with death.
 Here four sable oxen the priestess ranges in line;
 Empties on every forehead a brimming beaker of wine;
 Casts on the altar fire, as the first fruits due to the dead,
 Hair from between both horns of the victim, plucked from its head.
 Loudly on Hecate calls, o'er heaven and the shadows supreme.
 Others handle the knife, and receive, as it trickles, the stream
 Warm from the throat in a bowl. Æneas with falchion bright
 Slays himself one lamb of a sable fleece to the fell
 Mother and queen of the Furies, and great Earth, sister of Night,
 Killing a barren heifer to thee, thou mistress of Hell.
 Next for the Stygian monarch a twilight altar he lays;
 Flings on the flames whole bodies of bulls unquartered to blaze,
 Pours rich oil from above upon entrails burning and bright.
 When, at the earliest beam of the sun, and the dawn of the light,
 Under his feet earth mutters, the mountain forests around
 Seem to be trembling, and hell dogs bay from the shadow profound,
 Night's dark goddess approaching.

“Avaunt, ye unhallowed, avaunt!”

Thunders the priestess. “Away from a grove that is Hecate's haunt.
 Make for the pathway, thou, and unsheath thy sword; thou hast
 need,

Now, Æneas, of all thy spirit and valor indeed!”

When she had spoken, she plunged in her madness into the cave;
 Not less swiftly he follows, with feet unswerving and brave.

Gods! whose realm is the spirit world, mute shadows of night,
 Chaos, and Phlegethon thou, broad kingdoms of silence and night,
 Leave vouchsafe me to tell the tradition, grace to exhume
 Things in the deep earth hidden and drowned in the hollows of gloom.

So unseen in the darkness they went by night on the road
 Down the unpeopled kingdom of Death, and his ghostly abode,

As men journey in woods when a doubtful moon has bestowed
Little of light, when Jove has concealed in shadow the heaven,
When from the world by somber Night Day's colors are driven.

Facing the porch itself, in the jaws of the gate of the dead,
Grief, and Remorse the Avenger, have built their terrible bed.
There dwells pale-cheeked Sickness, and Old Age sorrowful-eyed,
Fear, and the temptress Famine, and Hideous Want at her side,
Grim and tremendous shapes. There Death with Labor is joined,
Sleep, half-brother of Death, and the Joys unclean of the mind.
Murderous Battle is camped on the threshold. Fronting the door
The iron cells of the Furies, and frenzied Strife, evermore
Wreathing her serpent tresses with garlands dabbled in gore.

Thick with gloom, an enormous elm in the midst of the way
Spreads its time-worn branches and limbs: false Dreams, we are told,
Make their abode thereunder, and nestle to every spray.
Many and various monsters, withal, wild things to behold,
Lie in the gateway stabled — the awful Centaurs of old;
Scyllas with forms half-human; and there with his hundred hands
Dwells Briareus; and the shapeless Hydra of Lerna's lands,
Horribly yelling; in flaming mail the Chimæra arrayed;
Gorgons and Harpies, and one three-bodied and terrible Shade.

Clasping his sword, Æneas in sudden panic of fear
Points its blade at the legion; and had not the Heaven-taught seer
Warned him the phantoms are thin apparitions, clothed in a vain
Semblance of form, but in substance a fluttering bodiless train,
Idly his weapon had slashed the advancing shadows in twain.

Here is the path to the river of Acheron, ever by mud
Clouded, forever seething with wild, insatiate flood
Downward, and into Coeytus disgorging its endless sands.
Sentinel over its waters an awful ferryman stands,
Charon, grisly and rugged; a growth of centuries lies
Hoary and rough on his chin; as a flaming furnace his eyes.
Hung in a loop from his shoulders a foul scarf round him he ties;
Now with his pole impelling the boat, now trimming the sail,
Urging his steel-gray bark with its burden of corpses pale,
Aged in years, but a god's old age is unwithered and hale.

Down to the bank of the river the streaming shadows repair,
Mothers, and men, and the lifeless bodies of those who were Generous heroes, boys that are beardless, maidens unwed,
Youths to the death pile carried before their fathers were dead.

Many as forest leaves that in autumn's earliest frost
Flutter and fall, or as birds that in bevvies flock to the coast
Over the sea's deep hollows, when winter, chilly and froze,
Drives them across far waters to land on a sunnier shore.
Yonder they stood, each praying for earliest passage, and each
Eagerly straining his hands in desire of the opposite beach.
Such as he lists to the vessel the boatman gloomy receives,
Far from the sands of the river the rest he chases and leaves.

Moved at the wild uproar, Æneas, with riveted eyes:
"Why thus crowd to the water the shadows, priestess?" he cries;
"What do the spirits desire? And why go some from the shore Sadly away, while others are ferried the dark stream o'er?"

Briefly the aged priestess again made answer and spake:
"Son of Anchises, sprung most surely from gods upon high,
Yon is the deep Coeytus marsh, and the Stygian lake.
Even the Immortals fear to attest its presence and lie!
These are a multitude helpless, of spirits lacking a grave;
Charon the ferryman; yonder the buried, crossing the wave.
Over the awful banks and the hoarse-voiced torrents of doom
None may be taken before their bones find rest in a tomb.
Hundreds of years they wander, and flit round river and shore,
Then to the lake they long for are free to return once more."

Silent the hero gazed and his footstep halted, his mind
Filled with his own sad thoughts and compassion of doom unkind.
Yonder he notes, in affliction, deprived of the dues of the dead,
Near Leucaspis, Orontes who Lycia's vessels had led.
Over the wind-tossed waters from Troy as together they drave,
One wild storm overtook them, engulfing vessels and brave.
Yonder, behold, Palinurus the pilot gloomily went,
Who, while sailing from Libya's shores, on the planets intent,
Fell but of late from the stern, and was lost in a watery waste.
Hardly he knows him at first, as in shadow sadly he paced;
Then at the last breaks silence and cries: "What God can it be Robbed us of thee, Palinurus, and drowned thee deep in the sea?
Answer me thou! For Apollo I ne'er found false till to-day;
Only in this one thing hath his prophecy led us astray.
Safe with life from the deep to Italian shores, we were told,
Thou shouldst come at the last! Is it thus that his promises hold?"

"Son of Anchises," he answers, "Apollo's tripod and shrine
Have not lied; no god overwhelmed me thus in the brine.
True to my trust I was holding the helm, stood ruling the course,

When by sad misadventure I wrenched it loose, and perforce
 Trailed it behind in my fall. By the cruel waters I swear
 Fear of mine own life truly I knew not, felt but a care
 Lest thy bark, of her rudder bereft, and her helmsman lost,
 Might be unequal to combat the wild seas round her that tossed.
 Three long nights of the winter, across great waters and wide,
 Violent south winds swept me; at fourth day's dawn I descried
 Italy's coast, as I rose on the crest of a wave of the sea.
 Stroke by stroke I was swimming ashore, seemed nearly to be Safe from the billows; and weighted by dripping garments I clave,
 Clutching my hands, to the face of a cliff that towered on the wave,
 When wild people assailed me, a treasure-trove to their mind.
 Now are the waves my masters; I toss on the beach in the wind.
 O! by the pleasant sun, by the joyous light of the skies,
 By thy sire, and Iulus, the rising hope of thine eyes,
 Save me from these great sorrows, my hero! Over me pour
 Earth, as in truth thou canst, and return to the Velian shore.
 Else, if a heavenly mother hath shown thee yonder a way, —
 Since some god's own presence, methinks, doth guide thee, who here
 Seekest to cross these streams and the Stygian marshes drear, —
 Give thy hand to thy servant, and take him with thee to-day,
 So that in quiet places his wearied head he may lay!"

Thus, sad phantom, he cried; thus answered the seer of the shrine:
 "Whence, Palinurus, comes this ill-omened longing of thine?
 Thou cast eyes, unburied, on Stygian waves, the severe Stream of the Furies, approach unbidden the banks of the mere!
 Cease thy dream that the Fates by prayer may be ever appeased,
 Yet keep this in remembrance, that so thy lot may be eased: —
 Many a neighboring people from cities far and unknown,
 Taught by prodigies dire of the skies, thy bones shall atone,
 Building thy tomb, and remitting their gifts each year to thy ghost;
 So Palinurus' name shall forever cleave to the coast."

Thus his affliction she soothes. For a little season his sad
 Spirit has comfort; he thinks on his namesake land and is glad.
 Thence they advance on the journey and now draw near to the flood.
 Soon as the boatman saw them, from where on the water he stood,
 Move through the silent forest and bend their steps to the beach,
 Ere they arrive he accosts them, and first breaks silence in speech:
 "Stranger, approaching in arms our river, whoever thou art,
 Speak on the spot thine errand, and hold thee further apart.
 This is the kingdom of shadows, of sleep and the slumberous dark;
 Bodies of living men are forbidden the Stygian bark.
 Not of mine own good will was Alcides over the wave
 Yonder, or Theseus taken, nor yet Pirithous brave,

Though from gods they descended, and matchless warriors were;
 One from the monarch's presence to chains sought boldly to bear
 Hell's unslumbering warder, and trailed him trembling away.
 Two from her bridal chamber conspired Death's queen to convey."

Briefly again makes answer the great Amphrysian seer:
 "Here no cunning awaits thee as theirs was, far be the fear.
 Violence none our weapons prepare; Hell's warder may still Bay in his cavern forever, affrighting the phantoms chill;
 Hell's chaste mistress keep to her kinsman's halls if she will.
 Troy's Æneas, a son most loving, a warrior brave,
 Goes in the quest of his sire to the deepest gloom of the grave.
 If thou art all unmoved at the sight of a love so true" —
 Here she displays him the bough in her garment hidden from view —
 "Know this branch." In his bosom the tempest of anger abates.
 Further he saith not. Feasting his eyes on the wand of the Fates,
 Mighty oblation, unseen for unnumbered summers before,
 Charon advances his dark-blue bows, and approaches the shore;
 Summons the rest of the spirits in row on the benches who sate
 Place to resign for the comers, his gangway clears, and on board
 Takes Æneas. The cobbled boat groans under his weight.
 Water in streams from the marshes through every fissure is poured.
 Priestess and hero safely across Death's river are passed,
 Land upon mud unsightly, and pale marsh sedges, at last.

Here huge Cerberus bays with his triple jaws through the land,
 Crouched at enormous length in his cavern facing the strand.
 Soon as the Sibyl noted his hair now bristling with snakes,
 Morsels she flings him of meal, and of honeyed opiate cakes.
 Maddened with fury of famine his three great throats uncloze;
 Fiercely he snatches the viand, his monstrous limbs in repose
 Loosens, and, prostrate laid, sprawls measureless over his den.
 While the custodian sleeps, Æneas the entrance takes,
 Speeds from the bank of a stream no traveler crosses again.

Voices they heard, and an infinite wailing, as onward they bore,
 Spirits of infants sobbing at Death's immediate door,
 Whom, at a mother's bosom, and strangers to life's sweet breath,
 Fate's dark day took from us, and drowned in untimeliest death.
 Near them are those who, falsely accused, died guiltless, although
 Not without trial, or verdict given, do they enter below;
 Here, with his urn, sits Minos the judge, convenes from within Silent ghosts to the council, and learns each life and its sin.
 Near them inhabit the sorrowing souls, whose innocent hands Wrought on themselves their ruin, and strewed their lives on the sands,

Hating the glorious sunlight. Alas! how willingly they
Now would endure keen want, hard toil, in the regions of day!
Fate forbids it; the loveless lake with its waters of woe
Holds them, and nine times round them entwined, Styx bars them
below.

Further faring, they see that beyond and about them are spread
Fields of the Mourners, for so they are called in worlds of the dead
Here dwell those whom Love, with his cruel sickness, hath slain.
Lost in secluded walks, amid myrtle groves overhead,
Hiding they go, nor in death itself are they eased of the pain.
Phædra, and Procris, here, Eriphyle here they behold,
Sadly displaying the wounds that her wild son wrought her of old

Yonder Pasiphae stood and Evadne; close to them clung Laodamia, and Cænis, a man once, woman at last,
Now by the wheel of the Fates in her former figure recast.
Fresh from her death wound still, here Dido, the others among,
Roamed in a spacious wood. Through shadow the chieftain soon
Dimly discerned her face, as a man, when the month is but young,
Sees, or believes he has seen, amid cloudlets shining, the moon.

Tears in his eyes, he addressed her with tender love as of old:
"True, then, sorrowful Dido, the messenger fires that told
Thy said death, and the doom thou soughtest of choice by thy hand!
Was it, alas! to a grave that I did thee? Now by the bright Stars, by the Gods, and the faith that abides in realms of the Night,

'Twas unwillingly, lady, I bade farewell to thy land.
Yet, the behest of Immortals—the same which bids me to go Through these shadows, the wilderness mire and the darkness
below—

Drove me imperiously thence, nor possessed I power to believe
I at departing had left thee in grief thus bitter to grieve.
Tarry, and turn not away from a face that on thine would dwell;
'Tis thy lover thou fleest, and this is our last farewell!"

So, with a burning heart and with glowering eyes as she went,
Melting vainly in tears, he essayed her wrath to relent;
She with averted gaze upon earth her countenance cast,
Nothing touched in her look by her lover's words to the last,
Set as a marble rock of Marpessus, cold as a stone.
After a little she fled, in the forest hurried to hide,
Ever his foe; Sychæus, her first lord, there at her side,
Answers sorrow with sorrow, and love not less than her own.

Thence on the path appointed they go, and the uttermost plain
 Reach ere long, where rest in seclusion the glorious slain.
 Tydeus here he discerns, here Parthenopæus of old,
 Famous in arms, and the ghost of Adrastus, pallid and cold.
 Wailed in the world of the sunlight long, laid low in the fray,
 Here dwell Ilion's chiefs. As his eyes on the gallant array Lighted, he groaned. Three sons of Antenor yonder they see,
 Glaucus and Medon and young Thersilochus, brethren three;
 Here Polyphætès, servant of Heaven from his earliest breath;
 There Idæus, the shield and the reins still holding in death.
 Thickly about him gather the spectral children of Troy:
 'Tis not enough to have seen him, to linger round him is joy,
 Pace at his side, and inquire why thus he descends to the dead.
 But the Achæan chiefs, Agamemnon's legions arrayed,
 When on the hero they looked, and his armor gleaming in shade,
 Shook with an infinite terror; and some turned from him and fled,
 As to the Danaan vessels in days gone by they had sped.
 Some on the air raise thinnest of voices; the shout of the fray
 Seems, upon lips wide parted, begun, then passing away.

Noble Deiphobus here he beholds, all mangled and marred,
 Son of the royal Priam; — his visage cruelly scarred,
 Visage and hands; from his ravaged temples bloodily shorn
 Each of his ears, and his nostrils with wounds inglorious torn.
 Hardly he knew him in sooth, for he trembled, seeking to hide
 These great wrongs; but at last, in a voice most loving, he cried:
 "Gallant Deiphobus, born of the Teucrian lineage bright,
 Who had the heart to revenge him in this dire fashion and dread?
 Who dared thus to abuse thee? On Troy's last funeral night,
 Weary of endless slaughter and Danaan blood, it was said
 Thou hadst laid thee to die on a heap of the nameless dead.
 Yea! and a vacant mound upon far Rhoetæum's coast
 I there built thee, and thrice bade loud farewell to thy ghost.
 Hallowed the spot by thine armor and name. Ere crossing the wave,
 Never, friend, could I find thee, nor give thee an Ilian grave."

"Nothing was left undone, O friend!" he replies. "Thou hast paid
 All that Deiphobus claims, all debt that was due to his shade.
 'Twas my destiny sad, and the crime accursed of the Greek
 Woman, in woe that plunged me, and wrote this tale on my cheek.
 Well thou knowest — for ah! too long will the memory last —
 How Troy's funeral night amid treacherous pleasures we passed;
 When Fate's terrible steed overcame our walls at a leap,
 Carrying mailed men in its womb towards Pergama's steep;
 How, a procession feigning, the Phrygian mothers she led

Round our city in orgy, with lighted torch at their head
 Waving herself the Achæans to Ilion's citadel keep.
 I, that night, overburdened with troubles, buried in sleep,
 Lay in the fatal chamber, delicious slumber and deep
 Folding mine eyelids, like the unbroken rest of the slain.
 She, meanwhile, my glorious spouse, from the palace has ta'en
 Every weapon, and drawn from the pillow the falchion I bore,
 Then Menelaus summons, and straightway loosens the door,
 Hoping in sooth that her lover with this great boon might be won,
 Deeming the fame of her guilt in the past might so be undone.
 Why on the memory linger? The foe streamed in at the gate
 Led by Ulysses, the plotter. May judgment, Immortals, wait
 Yet on the Greeks, if of vengeance a reverent heart may be fain!
 Tell me in turn what sorrow has brought thee alive and unslain
 Hither?" he cries; "art come as a mariner lost on the main,
 Or by the counsel of Heaven? What fortune drives thee in quest,
 Hither, of sunless places and sad, the abodes of unrest?"
 Morn already with roseate steeds, while talk they exchange,
 Now in her journey has traversed the half of the heavenly range,
 And peradventure thus the allotted time had been passed,
 Had not the faithful Sibyl rebuked him briefly at last.
 "Night draws nigh, Æneas. In tears we are spending the hours.
 Here is the place where the path is divided. This to the right,
 Under the walls of the terrible Dis--to Elysium--ours.
 Yonder, the left, brings doom to the guilty, and drives them in flight
 Down to the sinful region where awful Tartarus lowers."

"Terrible priestess, frown not," Deiphobus cries; "I depart,
 Join our shadowy legion, restore me to darkness anon.
 Go, thou joy of the race; may the Fates vouchsafe thee a part Brighter than mine!" And behold, as he uttered the word, he was gone.

Turning his eyes, Æneas sees broad battlements placed
 Under the cliffs on his left, by a triple rampart incased;
 Round them in torrents of ambient fire runs Phlegethon swift,
 River of Hell, and the thundering rocks sends ever adrift.
 One huge portal in front upon pillars of adamant stands;
 Neither can mortal might, nor the heavens' own warrior bands,
 Rend it asunder. An iron tower rears over the door,
 Where Tisiphone seated in garments dripping with gore
 Watches the porch, unsleeping, by day and by night evermore.
 Hence come groans on the breezes, the sound of a pitiless hail,
 Rattle of iron bands, and the clanking of fetters that trail.

Silent the hero stands, and in terror rivets his eyes.

“What dire shapes of impiety these? Speak, priestess!” he cries.

“What dread torment racks them, and what shrieks yonder arise?”

She in return: “Great chief of the Teucrian hosts, as is meet

Over the threshold of sinners may pass no innocent feet.

Hecate's self, who set me to rule the Avernian glade,

Taught me of Heaven's great torments, and all their terrors displayed.

Here reigns dread Rhadamanthus, a king no mercy that knows,

Hastens and judges the guilty, compels each soul to disclose

Crimes of the upper air that he kept concealed from the eye,

Proud of his idle cunning, till Death brought punishment nigh.

Straightway then the Avenger Tisiphone over them stands,

Scourges the trembling sinners, her fierce lash arming her hands;

Holds in her left uplifted her serpents grim, and from far

Summons the awful troop of her sisters gathered for war!

Then at the last with a grating of hideous hinges unclose

Hell's infernal doors. Dost see what warders are those Crouched in the porch? What presence is yonder keeping the gate?

Know that a Hydra beyond it, a foe still fiercer in hate,

Lurks with a thousand ravening throats. See! Tartarus great

Yawning to utter abysses, and deepening into the night,

Twice as profound as the space of the starry Olympian height.

“Here the enormous Titans, the Earth's old progeny, hurled

Low by the lightning, are under the bottomless waters whirled.

Here I beheld thy children, Aloeus, giants of might,

Brethren bold who endeavored to pluck down heaven from its height.

Fain to displace great Jove from his throne in the kingdom of light

Saw Salmoneus too, overtaken with agony dire

While the Olympian thunder he mimicked and Jove's own fire.

Borne on his four-horse chariot, and waving torches that glowed,

Over the Danaan land, through the city of Elis, he rode,

Marching in triumph, and claiming the honors due to a god.

Madman, thinking with trumpets and tramp of the steeds that he drove

He might rival the storms, and the matchless thunders of Jove!

But the omnipotent Father a bolt from his cloudy abyss

Launched—no brand from the pine, no smoke of the torchlight this—

And with an awful whirlwind blast hurled Pride to its fall.

Tityos also, the nursling of Earth, great mother of all,

Here was to see, whose body a long league covers of plain;

One huge vulture with hooked beak evermore at his side

Shears his liver that dies not, his bowel fruitful of pain,

Searches his heart for a banquet, beneath his breast doth abide,
Grants no peace to the vitals that ever renew them again.

“Why of Pirithous tell, and Ixion, Lapithæ tall,
O'er whose brows is suspended a dark crag, ready to fall,
Ever in act to descend? Proud couches raised upon bright
Golden feet are shining, a festal table in sight
Laden with royal splendor. The Furies' Queen on her throne
Sits at the banquet by — forbids them to taste it — has flown
Now to prevent them with torch uplifted, and thundering tone.

“All who have hated a brother in lifetime, all who have laid
Violent hands on a parent, the faith of a client betrayed;
Those who finding a treasure have o'er it brooded alone,
Setting aside no portion for kinsmen, a numerous band;
Those in adultery slain, all those who have raised in the land
Treason's banner, or broken their oath to a master's hand,
Prisoned within are awaiting an awful doom of their own.

“Ask me not, what their doom, — what form of requital or ill
Whelms them below. Some roll huge stones to the crest of the hill,
Some on the spokes of a whirling wheel hang spread to the wind.
Theseus sits, the unblest, and will ever seated remain;
Phlegyas here in his torments a warning voice to mankind
Raises, loudly proclaiming throughout Hell's gloomy abodes:
'Learn hereby to be just, and to think no scorn of the Gods!'
This is the sinner his country who sold, forged tyranny's chain,
Made for a bribe her laws, for a bribe unmade them again.
Yon wretch dared on a daughter with eyes unholy to look.
All some infamy ventured, of infamy's gains partook.
Had I a thousand tongues, and a thousand lips, and a speech
Fashioned of steel, sin's varying types I hardly could teach,
Could not read thee the roll of the torments suffered of each!”

Soon as the aged seer of Apollo her story had done, “Forward,” she cries, “on the path, and complete thy mission begun.
Hasten the march! I behold in the distance battlements great,
Built by the Cyclops' forge, and the vaulted dome at the gate
Where the divine revelation ordains our gifts to be laid.”
Side by side at her bidding they traverse the region of shade,
Over the distance hasten, and now draw nigh to the doors.
Fronting the gates Æneas stands, fresh water he pours
Over his limbs, and the branch on the portal hangs as she bade.

After the rite is completed, the gift to the goddess addressed,
Now at the last they come to the realms where Joy has her throne;

Sweet green glades in the Fortunate Forests, abodes of the blest,
 Fields in an ampler ether, a light more glorious dressed,
 Lit evermore with their own bright stars and a sun of their own.
 Some are training their limbs on the wrestling green, and compete
 Gayly in sport on the yellow arenas, some with their feet
 Treading their choral measures, or singing the hymns of the god :
 While some Thracian priest, in a sacred garment that trails,
 Chants them the air with the seven sweet notes of his musical scales.
 Now with his fingers striking, and now with his ivory rod.
 Here are the ancient children of Teucer, fair to behold,
 Generous heroes, born in the happier summers of old, —
 Ilus, Assaracus by him, and Dardan, founder of Troy.
 Far in the distance yonder are visible armor and ear
 Unsubstantial, in earth their lances are planted, and far
 Over the meadows are ranging the chargers freed from employ.
 All the delight they took when alive in the chariot and sword,
 All of the loving care that to shining coursers was paid,
 Follows them now that in quiet below Earth's breast they are laid.
 Banqueting here he beholds them to right and to left on the sward,
 Chanting in chorus the Pæan, beneath sweet forests of bay,
 Whence, amid wild wood covers, the river Eridanus, poured,
 Rolls his majestic torrents to upper earth and the day.
 Braves for the land of their sires in the battle wounded of yore,
 Priests whose purity lasted until sweet life was no more,
 Faithful prophets who spake as beseemed their god and his shrine,
 All who by arts invented to life have added a grace,
 All whose services earned the remembrance deep of the race,
 Round their shadowy foreheads the snow-white garland entwine.

Then, as about them the phantoms stream, breaks silence the seer.
 Turning first to Musæus, — for round him the shadows appear
 Thickest to crowd, as he towers with his shoulders over the throng, —
 “Tell me, ye joyous spirits, and thou, bright master of song,
 Where is the home and the haunt of the great Anchises, for whom Hither we come, and have traversed the awful rivers of gloom ? ”
 Briefly in turn makes answer the hero : “None has a home
 In fixed haunts. We inhabit the dark thick glades, on the brink Ever of moss-banked rivers, and water meadows that drink
 Living streams. But if onward your heart thus wills ye to go, Climb this ridge. I will set ye in pathways easy to know.”
 Forward he marches, leading the way ; from the heights at the end
 Shows them a shining plain, and the mountain slopes they descend.

There withdrawn to a valley of green in a fold of the plain
 Stood Anchises the father, his eyes intent on a train —

Prisoned spirits, soon to ascend to the sunlight again ; —
 Numbering over his children dear, their myriad bands,
 All their destinies bright, their ways, and the work of their hands.
 When he beheld Æneas across these flowery lands
 Moving to meet him, fondly he strained both arms to his boy,
 Tears on his cheek fell fast, and his voice found slowly employ.

“Here thou comest at last, and the love I counted upon
 Over the rugged path has prevailed. Once more, O my son,
 I may behold thee, and answer with mine thy voice as of yore.
 Long I pondered the chances, believed this day was in store,
 Reckoning the years and the seasons. Nor was my longing belied.
 O'er how many a land, past what far waters and wide, Hast thou come to mine arms! What dangers have tossed thee, my child!

Ah! how I feared lest harm should await thee in Libya wild!”

“Thine own shade, my sire, thine own disconsolate shade,
 Visiting oft my chamber, has made me seek thee,” he said.
 “Safe upon Tuscan waters the fleet lies. Grant me to grasp Thy right hand, sweet father, withdraw thee not from its clasp.”

So he replied; and a river of tears flowed over his face.
 Thrice with his arms he essayed the beloved one's neck to embrace;
 Thrice clasped vainly, the phantom eluded his hands in flight,
 Thin as the idle breezes, and like some dream of the night.

There Æneas beholds in a valley withdrawn from the rest
 Far-off glades, and a forest of boughs that sing in the breeze;
 Near them the Lethe river that glides by abodes of the blest.
 Round it numberless races and peoples floating he sees.
 So on the flowery meadows in calm, clear summer, the bees
 Settle on bright-hued blossoms, or stream in companies round
 Fair white lilies, till every plain seems ringing with sound.

Strange to the scene Æneas, with terror suddenly pale,
 Asks of its meaning, and what be the streams in the distant vale,
 Who those warrior crowds that about yon river await.
 Answer returns Anchises: “The spirits promised by Fate
 Life in the body again. Upon Lethe's watery brink
 These of the fountain of rest and of long oblivion drink.
 Ever I yearn to relate thee the tale, display to thine eyes,
 Count thee over the children that from my loins shall arise,
 So that our joy may be deeper on finding Italy's skies.”

“O my father! and are there, and must we believe it,” he said,
 “Spirits that fly once more to the sunlight back from the dead?”

Souls that anew to the body return and the fetters of clay ?
Can there be any who long for the light thus blindly as they ?”

“Listen, and I will resolve thee the doubt,” Anchises replies.
Then unfolds him in order the tale of the earth and the skies.

“In the beginning, the earth, and the sky, and the spaces of night,
Also the shining moon, and the sun Titanic and bright
Feed on an inward life, and with all things mingled, a mind
Moves universal matter, with Nature’s frame is combined.
Thence man’s race, and the beast, and the feathered creature that flies,
All wild shapes that are hidden the gleaming waters beneath.
Each elemental seed has a fiery force from the skies,
Each, its heavenly being, that no dull clay can disguise,
Bodies of earth ne’er deaden, nor limbs long destined to death.
Hence, their fears and desires; their sorrows and joys; for their sight,
Blind with the gloom of a prison, discerns not the heavenly light.

“Nor when at last life leaves them, do all sad ills, that belong
Unto the sinful body, depart; still many survive
Lingering within them, alas! for it needs must be that the long
Growth should in wondrous fashion at full completion arrive.
So, due vengeance racks them, for deeds of an earlier day
Suffering penance, and some to the winds hang viewless and thin
Searched by the breezes; from others, the deep infection of sin
Swirling water washes, or bright fire purges, away.
Each in his own sad ghost we endure; then, chastened aright,
Into Elysium pass. Few reach to the fields of delight,
Till great Time, when the cycles have run their courses on high,
Takes the inbred pollution, and leaves to us only the bright
Sense of the heaven’s own ether, and fire from the springs of the sky.
When for a thousand years they have rolled their wheels through the night,
God to the Lethe river recalls this myriad train,
That with remembrance lost once more they may visit the light,
And, at the last, have desire for a life in the body again.”

When he had ended, his son and the Sibyl maiden he drew
Into the vast assembly — the crowd with its endless hum;
There on a hillock plants them, that hence they better may view
All the procession advancing, and learn their looks as they come.

“What bright fame hereafter the Trojan line shall adorn,
What far children be theirs, from the blood of Italians born,
Splendid souls, that inherit the name and the glory of Troy,
Now will I tell thee, and teach thee the fates thy race shall enjoy.

Yon fair hero who leans on a lance unpointed and bright,
 Granted the earliest place in the world of the day and the light,
 Half of Italian birth, from the shadows first shall ascend,
 Silvius, Alban of name, thy child though born at the end,
 Son of thy later years by Lavinia, consort of thine,
 Reared in the woods as a monarch and sire of a royal line.
 Next to him Procas, the pride of the race; then Capys, and far
 Numitor; after him one who again thy name shall revive,
 Silvius, hight Æneas, in pious service and war
 Noble alike, if to Alba's throne he shall ever arrive.
 Heroes fair! how grandly, behold! their manhood is shown,
 While their brows are shaded by leaves of the citizen crown!
 These on the mountain ranges shall set Nomentum the steep,
 Gabii's towers, Fidenæ's town, Collatia's keep;
 Here plant Inuus' camp, there Cora and Bola enthrone,
 Glorious names erelong, now a nameless land and unknown.
 Romulus, scion of Mars, at the side of his grandsire see —
 Ilia fair his mother, the blood of Assaracus he!
 See on his helmet the doubled crest, how his sire has begun
 Marking the boy with his own bright plumes for the world of the sun
 Under his auspices Rome, our glorious Rome, shall arise,
 Earth with her empire ruling, her great soul touching the skies.
 Lo! seven mountains enwalling, a single city, she lies,
 Blest in her warrior brood! So crowned with towers ye have seen
 Ride through Phrygia's cities the great Berecynthian queen,
 Proud of the gods her children, a hundred sons at her knee,
 All of them mighty immortals, and lords of a heavenly fee!
 Turn thy glance now hither, behold this glorious clan,
 Romans of thine. See Cæsar, and each generation of man
 Yet to be born of Iulus beneath heaven's infinite dome.
 Yonder behold thy hero, the promised prince, upon whom Often thy hopes have dwelt, Augustus Cæsar, by birth
 Kin to the godlike dead, who a golden age upon earth
 Yet shall restore where Saturn in Latium's plains was lord,
 Ruling remote Garamantes and India's tribes with his sword.
 Far beyond all our planets the land lies, far beyond high
 Heaven, and the sun's own orbit, where Atlas, lifting the sky,
 Whirls on his shoulders the sphere, inwrought with its fiery suns!
 Ere his arrival, lo! through shivering Caspia runs
 Fear, at her oracle's answers. The vast Mæotian plain,
 Sevenfold Nile and his mouths, are fluttered and tremble again;
 Ranges of earth more wide than Alcides ever surveyed,
 Though he pursued deer brazen of limb, tamed Erymanth's glade,
 Lerna with arrows scared, or the Vine God, when from the war
 Homeward with ivied reins he conducts his conquering car,

Driving his team of tigers from Nysa's summits afar. —
 Art thou loath any longer with deeds our sway to expand?
 Can it be fear forbids thee to hold Ausonia's land?

"Who comes yonder the while with the olive branch on his brow,
 Bearing the sacred vessels? I know yon tresses, I know
 Yon gray beard, Rome's monarch, the first with law to sustain
 Rome yet young; from the lordship of Cures' little domain
 Sent to an empire's throne. At his side goes one who shall break
 Slumberous peace, to the battle her easeful warriors wake,
 Rouse once more her battalions disused to the triumph so long,
 Tullus the king! Next, Ancus the boastful marches along,
 See, overjoyed already by praises breathed from a crowd!
 Yonder the royal Tarquins are visible; yonder the proud
 Soul of avenging Brutus, with Rome's great fasces again
 Made Rome's own; who first to her consul's throne shall attain,
 Hold her terrible axes; his sons, the rebellious pair,
 Doom to a rebel's death for the sake of Liberty fair.
 Ill-starred sire! let the ages relate as please them the tale,
 Yet shall his patriot passion and thirst of glory prevail.
 Look on the Decii there, and the Drusi; hatchet in hand
 See Torquatus the stern, and Camillus home to his land
 Marching with rescued banners. But yonder spirits who stand
 Dressed in the shining armor alike, harmonious now
 While in the world of shadows with dark night over their brow —
 Ah! what battles the twain must wage, what legions array,
 What fell carnage kindle, if e'er they reach to the day!
 Father descending from Alpine snows and Monceus's height,
 Husband ranging against him an Eastern host for the fight!
 Teach not your hearts, my children, to learn these lessons of strife;
 Turn not a country's valor against her veriest life.
 Thou be the first to forgive, great child of a heavenly birth,
 Fling down, son of my loins, thy weapons and sword to the earth!

"See, who rides from a vanquished Corinth in conqueror's car
 Home to the Capitol, decked with Achaean spoils from the war!
 Argos and proud Mycenæ a second comes to dethrone,
 Ay, and the Æacus-born, whose race of Achilles is sown,
 Venging his Trojan sires and Minerva's outraged fane!
 Who would leave thee, Cato, untold? thee, Cossus, unknown?
 Gracchus' clan, or the Scipio pair, war's thunderbolts twain,
 Libya's ruin; — forget Fabricius, prince in his need;
 Pass unsung Serranus, his furrows sowing with seed?
 Give me but breath, ye Fabians, to follow! Yonder the great
 Fabius thou, whose timely delays gave strength to the state.

Others will mold their bronzes to breathe with a tenderer grace,
 Draw, I doubt not, from marble a vivid life to the face,
 Plead at the bar more deftly, with sapient wands of the wise
 Trace heaven's courses and changes, predict us stars to arise.
 Thine, O Roman, remember, to reign over every race!
 These be thine arts, thy glories, the ways of peace to proclaim,
 Mercy to show to the fallen, the proud with battle to tame!"

Thus Anchises, and then — as they marveled — further anon:
 "Lo, where decked in a conqueror's spoils Marcellus, my son,
 Strides from the war! How he towers o'er all of the warrior train!
 When Rome reels with the shock of the wild invaders' alarm,
 He shall sustain her state. From his war steed's saddle, his arm
 Carthage and rebel Gaul shall destroy, and the arms of the slain
 Victor a third time hang in his father Quirinus' fane."

Then Æneas, — for near him a youth seemed ever to pace,
 Fair, of an aspect princely, with armor of glittering grace,
 Yet was his forehead joyless, his eye cast down as in grief —
 "Who can it be, my father, that walks at the side of the chief?
 Is it his son, or perchance some child of his glorious race
 Born from remote generations? And hark, how ringing a cheer Breaks from his comrades round! What a noble presence is here!
 Though dark night with her shadow of woe floats over his face!"

Answer again Anchises began with a gathering tear:
 "Ask me not, O my son, of thy children's infinite pain!
 Fate one glimpse of the boy to the world will grant, and again
 Take him from life. Too puissant methinks to immortals on high
 Rome's great children had seemed, if a gift like this from the sky Longer had been vouchsafed! What wailing of warriors bold
 Shall from the funeral plain to the War God's city be rolled!
 What sad pomp thine eyes will discern, what pageant of woe,
 When by his new-made tomb thy waters, Tiber, shall flow!
 Never again such hopes shall a youth of the lineage of Troy
 Rouse in his great forefathers of Latium! Never a boy
 Nobler pride shall inspire in the ancient Romulus land!
 Ah, for his filial love! for his old-world faith! for his hand
 Matchless in battle! Unharm'd what foeman had offered to stand
 Forth in his path, when charging on foot for the enemy's ranks,
 Or when plunging the spur in his foam-flecked courser's flanks!
 Child of a nation's sorrow! if thou canst baffle the Fates'
 Bitter decrees, and break for a while their barrier gates,
 Thine to become Marcellus! I pray thee, bring me anon
 Handfuls of lilies, that I bright flowers may strew on my son,

Heap on the shade of the boy unborn these gifts at the least,
Doing the dead, though vainly, the last sad service."

He ceased.

So from region to region they roam with curious eyes,
Traverse the spacious plains where shadowy darkness lies.
One by one Anchises unfolds each scene to his son,
Kindling his soul with a passion for glories yet to be won.
Speaks of the wars that await him beneath the Italian skies,
Rude Laurentian clans and the haughty Latinus' walls,
How to avoid each peril, or bear its brunt, as befalls.

Sleep has his portals twain: one fashioned of horn, it is said,
Whence come true apparitions by exit smooth from the dead;
One with the polished splendor of shining ivory bright —
False are the only visions that issue thence from the night.
Thither Anchises leads them, exchanging talk by the way,
There speed Sibyl and son by the ivory gate to the day.
Straight to his vessels and mates Æneas journeyed, and bore
Thence for Caieta's harbor along the Italian shore.

ÆNEAS AND THE CYCLOPS.

BY VIRGIL.

(Translation of John Conington.)

THE port is sheltered from the blast,
Its compass unconfined and vast:
But Ætna with her voice of fear
In weltering chaos thunders near.
Now pitchy clouds she belches forth
Of cinders red and vapor swarth,
And from her caverns lifts on high
Live balls of flame that lick the sky:
Now with more dire convulsion flings
Disploded rocks, her heart's rent strings,
And lava torrents hurls to day,
A burning gulf of fiery spray.
'Tis said Enceladus' huge frame,
Heart-stricken by the avenging flame,
Is prisoned here, and underneath
Gasps through each vent his sulphurous breath:
And still as his tired side shifts round
Trinacria echoes to the sound

Through all its length, while clouds of smoke
 The living soul of ether choke.
 All night, by forest branches screened,
 We writhe as 'neath some torturing fiend,
 Nor know the horror's cause:
 For stars were none, nor welkin bright
 With heavenly fires, but blank black night
 The stormy noon withdraws.

And now the day-star, tricked anew,
 Had drawn from heaven the veil of dew:
 When from the wood, all ghastly wan,
 A stranger form, resembling man,
 Comes running forth, and takes its way
 With suppliant gesture to the bay.
 We turn, and look on limbs besmeared
 With direst filth, a length of beard,
 A dress with thorns held tight:
 In all beside, a Greek his style,
 Who in his country's arms erewhile
 Had sailed at Troy to fight.
 Soon as our Dardan arms he saw,
 Brief space he stood in wildering awe
 And checked his speed: then toward the shore
 With cries and weeping onward bore:
 "By heaven and heaven's blest powers, I pray,
 And life's pure breath, this light of day,
 Receive me, Trojans: o'er the seas
 Transport me wheresoe'er you please.
 I ask no further. Ay, 'tis true,
 I once was of the Danaan crew,
 And levied war on Troy:
 If all too deep that crime's red stain,
 Then fling me piecemeal to the main
 And 'mid the waves destroy.
 If death is certain, let me die
 By hands that share humanity."
 He ended, and before us flung
 About our knees in supppliance clung.
 His name, his race he bid him show,
 And what the story of his woe:
 Anchises' self his hand extends
 And bids the trembler count us friends.
 Then by degrees he laid aside
 His fear, and presently replied;

"From Ithaca, my home, I came,
 And Achemenides my name,
 The comrade of Ulysses' woes:
 For Troy I left my father's door,
 Poor Adamastus; both were poor;
 Ah! would these fates had been as those!
 Me, in their eager haste to fly
 The scene of hideous butchery,
 My unreflecting countrymen
 Left in the Cyclops' savage den.
 All foul with gore that banquet room
 Immense and dreadful in its gloom.
 He, lofty towering, strikes the skies
 (Snatch him, ye Gods, from mortal eyes!):
 No kindly look e'er crossed his face,
 Ne'er oped his lips in courteous grace:
 The limbs of wretches are his food:
 He champs their flesh, and quaffs their blood.
 I saw, when his enormous hand
 Plucked forth two victims from our band,
 Swung round, and on the threshold dashed,
 While all the floor with blood was splashed:
 I saw him grind them, bleeding fresh,
 And close his teeth on quivering flesh:
 Not unrequited: such a wrong
 My wily chieftain brooked not long:
 E'en in that dire extreme of ill
 Ulysses was Ulysses still.
 For when o'ercome with sleep and wine
 Along the cave he lay supine,
 Ejecting from his monstrous maw
 Wine mixed with gore and gobbets raw,
 We pray to Heaven, our parts dispose,
 And in a circle round him close.
 With sharpened point that eyeball pierce
 Which 'neath his brow glared lone and fierce,
 Like Argive shield or sun's broad light,
 And thus our comrades' death requite.
 But fly, unhappy, fly, and tear
 Your anchors from the shore:
 For vast as Polyphemus there
 Guards, feeds, and milks his fleecy care,
 On the sea's margin make their home
 And o'er the lofty mountains roam
 A hundred Cyclops more.

Three moons their circuit nigh have made,
 Since in wild den or woodland shade
 My wretched life I trail,
 See Cyclops stalk from rock to rock,
 And tremble at their footsteps' shock,
 And at their voices quail.
 Hard cornel fruits that life sustain,
 And grasses gathered from the plain.
 Long looking round, at last I scanned
 Your vessels bearing to the strand.
 Whate'er you proved, I vowed me yours:
 Enough, to 'scape these bloody shores.
 Become yourselves my slayers, and kill
 This destined wretch which way you will."²

E'en as he spoke, or e'er we deem,
 Down from the lofty rock
 We see the monster Polypheme
 Advancing 'mid his flock,
 In quest the well-known shore to find,
 Huge, awful, hideous, ghastly, blind.
 A pine tree, plucked from earth, makes strong
 His tread, and guides his steps along.
 His sheep upon their master wait,
 Sole joy, sole solace of his fate.
 Soon as he touched the ocean waves
 And reached the level flood,
 Groaning and gnashing fierce, he laves
 His socket from the blood,
 And through the deepening water strides,
 While scarce the billows bathe his sides.
 With wildered haste we speed our flight,
 Admit the suppliant, as of right,
 And noiseless loose the ropes;
 Our quick oars sweep the blue profound:
 The giant hears, and towards the sound
 With outstretched hands he gropes.
 But when he grasps and grasps in vain,
 Still headed by the Ionian main,
 To heaven he lifts a monstrous roar.
 Which sends a shudder through the waves,
 Shakes to its base the Italian shore,
 And echoing runs through Ætna's caves.
 From rocks and woods the Cyclop host
 Rush startled forth, and crowd the coast.

There glaring fierce we see them stand
 In idle rage, a hideous band,
 The sons of Ætna, carrying high
 Their towering summits to the sky:
 So on a height stand clustering trees,
 Tall oaks, or cone-clad cypresses,
 The stately forestry of Jove,
 Or Dian's venerable grove.

Fierce panic bids us set our sail,
 And stand to catch the first fair gale.
 But stronger e'en than present fear
 The thought of Helenus the seer,
 Who counseled still those seas to fly
 Where Scylla and Charybdis lie:
 That path of double death we shun,
 And think a backward course to run.
 When lo! from out Pelorus' strait
 The northern breezes blow:
 We pass Pantagia's rocky gate,
 And Megara, where vessels wait,
 And Thapsus, pillowed low.
 So, measuring back familiar seas,
 Land after land before us shows
 The rescued Achemenides,
 The comrade of Ulysses' woes.

THE RETURN OF THE GOLDEN AGE.

(THE MESSIANIC ECLOGUE.)

By VIRGIL.

(Translated by Sir Charles Bowen.)

COME is the last of the ages, in song Cumæan foretold.
 Now is the world's grand cycle begun once more from of old.
 Justice the Virgin comes, and the Saturn kingdom again;
 Now from the skies is descending a new generation of men
 Thou to the boy in his birth, — upon whose first opening eyes
 The iron age shall close, and a race that is golden arise, —

Chaste Lucina be kindly! He reigns — thy Phœbus — to-day!
Thine to be Consul, thine, at a world's bright ushering in,
Pollio, when the procession of nobler months shall begin;
Under thy rule all lingering traces of Italy's sin,
Fading to naught, shall free us from fear's perpetual sway;
Life of the gods shall be his, to behold with the gods in their might Heroes immortal mingled, appear himself in their sight,
Rule with his Father's virtues a world at peace from the sword.
Boy, for thine infant presents the earth unlabored shall bring Ivies wild with foxglove around thee wreathing, and fling
Mixed with the laughing acanthus the lotus leaf on the sward;
Homeward at eve untended the goat shall come from the mead
Swelling with milk; flocks fearless of monstrous lions shall feed,
Even thy cradle blossom with tender flowers, and be gay;
Every snake shall perish; the treacherous poison weed
Die and Assyrian spices arise unsown by the way.

When thou art able to read of the heroes' glories, the bright
Deeds of thy sire, and to know what is manhood's valor and might,
Plains will be turning golden, and wave with ripening corn;
Purple grapes shall blush on the tangled wilderness thorn;
Honey from hard-grained oaks be distilling pure as the dew;
Though of our ancient folly as yet shall linger a few
Traces, to bid us venture the deep, with walls to surround
Cities, and, restless ever, to cleave with furrows the ground.
Then shall another Tiphys, a later Argo to sea
Sail, with her heroes chosen; again great battles shall be;
Once more the mighty Achilles be sent to a second Troy.
Soon when strengthening years shall have made thee man from a boy,
Trader himself shall abandon the deep; no trafficking hull
Barter her wares; all regions of all things fair shall be full.
Glebe shall be free from the harrow, the vine no pruner fear;
Soon will the stalwart plowman release unneeded the steer.
Varied hues no longer the wool shall falsely assume.
Now to a blushing purple and now to the saffron's bloom,
Cropping the meadow, the ram shall change his fleece at his need;
Crimsoning grasses color the lambs themselves as they feed.

"Ages blest, roll onward!" the Sisters of Destiny cried
Each to her spindle, agreeing by Fate's firm will to abide.
Come to thy godlike honors; the time well-nigh is begun;
Offspring loved of immortals, of Jove great scion and son!
Lo, how the universe totters beneath heaven's dome and its weight,
Land and the wide waste waters, the depths of the firmament great!
Lo, all nature rejoices to see this glorious day!

Ah, may the closing years of my life enduring be found, —
 Breath sufficient be mine thy deeds of valor to sound; —
 Orpheus neither nor Linus shall ever surpass my lay;
 One with mother immortal, and one with sire, at his side,
 To Orpheus Calliopeia, to Linus Apollo allied.
 Pan, were he here competing, did all Arcadia see,
 Pan, by Arcadia's voice, should allow him vanquished of me.

Baby, begin thy mother to know, and to meet with a smile;
 Ten long moons she has waited, and borne her burden the while.
 Smile, my babe; to his feast no god has admitted the child,
 Goddess none to his kisses, on whom no parent has smiled.

A SACRED ECLOGUE IN IMITATION OF VIRGIL'S "POLLIO."

ALEXANDER POPE.

[ALEXANDER POPE: An English poet; born May 22, 1688. His whole career was one of purely poetic work and the personal relations it brought him into. He published the "Essay on Criticism" in 1710, the "Rape of the Lock" in 1711, the "Messiah" in 1712, his translation of the Iliad in 1718-1720, and of the Odyssey in 1725. His "Essay on Man," whose thoughts were mainly suggested by Bolingbroke, appeared in 1733. His "Satires," modeled on Horace's manner, but not at all in his spirit, are among his best-known works. He died May 30, 1744.]

YE Nymphs of Solyma! begin the song:
 To heav'nly themes sublimer strains belong.
 The mossy fountains, and the sylvan shades,
 The dreams of Pindus and th' Aonian maids,
 Delight no more — O thou my voice inspire
 Who touched Isaiah's hallowed lips with fire!

Rapt into future times, the Bard begun:
 A Virgin shall conceive, a Virgin bear a Son!
 From Jesse's root behold a branch arise,
 Whose sacred flow'r with fragrance fills the skies:
 Th' Æthereal spirit o'er its leaves shall move,
 And on its top descends the mystic Dove.
 Ye Heav'ns! from high the dewy nectar pour,
 And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r!
 The sick and weak the healing plant shall aid,
 From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade.
 All crimes shall cease, and ancient fraud shall fail;
 Returning Justice lift aloft her scale;

Peace o'er the World her olive wand extend,
 And white-robed Innocence from heav'n descend.
 Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!
 Oh spring to light, auspicious Babe, be born!
 See Nature hastes her earliest wreaths to bring
 With all the incense of the breathing spring:
 See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
 See nodding forests on the mountains dance:
 See spicy clouds from lowly Saron rise,
 And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies!
 Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers;
 Prepare the way! a God, a God appears:
 A God, a God! the vocal hills reply,
 The rocks proclaim th' approaching Deity.
 Lo, earth receives him from the bending skies!
 Sink down ye mountains, and ye valleys rise,
 With heads declined, ye cedars homage pay;
 Be smooth ye rocks, ye rapid floods give way!
 The Savior comes! by ancient bards foretold:
 Hear him, ye deaf, and all ye blind, behold!
 He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
 And on the sightless eyeball pour the day:
 'Tis he th' obstructed paths of sound shall clear,
 And bid new music charm th' unfolding ear:
 The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
 And leap exulting like the bounding roe.
 No sigh, no murmur the wide world shall hear,
 From ev'ry face he wipes off ev'ry tear.
 In adamant chains shall Death be bound,
 And Hell's grim Tyrant feel th' eternal wound.
 As the good shepherd tends his fleecy care,
 Seeks freshest pasture and the purest air,
 Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs,
 By day o'ersees them, and by night protects,
 The tender lambs he raises in his arms,
 Feeds from his hand, and in his bosom warms;
 Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
 The promised father of the future age.
 No more shall nation against nation rise,
 Nor ardent warriors meet with hateful eyes,
 Nor fields with gleaming steel be covered o'er
 The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
 But useless lances into scythes shall bend,
 And the broad falchion in a plowshare end
 Then palaces shall rise; the joyful Son

Shall finish what his short-lived Sire begun;
 Their vines a shadow to their race shall yield,
 And the same hand that sowed, shall reap the field.
 The swain in barren deserts with surprise
 See lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
 And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds to hear
 New falls of water murm'ring in his ear.
 On rifted rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
 The green reed trembles, and the bulrush nods.
 Waste sandy valleys, once perplexed with thorn,
 The spiry fir and shapely box adorn:
 To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
 And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed.
 The lambs with wolves shall graze the verdant mead,
 And boys in flow'ry bands the tiger lead;
 The steer and lion at one crib shall meet,
 And harmless serpents lick the pilgrim's feet.
 The smiling infant in his hand shall take
 The crested basilisk and speckled snake,
 Pleased the green luster of the scales survey,
 And with their forky tongues shall innocently play.
 Rise, crowned with light, imperial Salem, rise!
 Exalt thy tow'ry head, and lift thy eyes!
 See, a long race thy spacious courts adorn;
 See future sons, and daughters yet unborn,
 In crowding ranks on ev'ry side arise,
 Demanding life, impatient for the skies!
 See barb'rous nations at thy gates attend,
 Walk in thy light, and in thy temple bend;
 See thy bright altars thronged with prostrate kings,
 And heaped with products of Sabæan springs!
 For thee Idume's spicy forests blow,
 And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow.
 See heav'n its sparkling portals wide display,
 And break upon thee in a flood of day!
 No more the rising Sun shall gild the morn,
 Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn;
 But lost, dissolved in thy superior rays,
 One tide of glory, one unclouded blaze
 O'erflow thy courts: the light himself shall shine
 Revealed, and God's eternal day be thine!
 The seas shall waste, the skies in smoke decay,
 Rocks fall to dust, and mountains melt away;
 But fixed his word, his saving pow'r remains;—
 Thy realm forever lasts, thy own MESSIAH reigns†

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY AT THE CHRISTIAN ERA.

By STRABO.

[STRABO, the leading geographer of antiquity whose work is extant, was a Greek of Pontus; born about B.C. 62, and died after A.D. 21. He was great-grandson of a leading general of the father of Mithridates the Great, and grand-nephew of a governor of Coichis under that king himself. His grandfather was also an important satrap. He went early to Rome, and was highly educated; became a considerable traveler, and was long at Alexandria, studying the works of previous geographers, and astronomy and mathematics; later returned to Rome. He wrote a long continuation of Polybius, and "Historical Memoirs," but his great work was the one here excerpted: the first all-round treatise in the world covering at once mathematical, physical, political, and historical geography. The mathematical part is chiefly copied from Eratosthenes and others.]

THE EARTH AN ISLAND.

PERCEPTION and experience alike inform us that the earth we inhabit is an island; since wherever men have approached the termination of the land, the sea, which we designate ocean, has been met with; and reason assures us of the similarity of those places which our senses have not been permitted to survey. For in the east the land occupied by the Indians, and in the west by the Iberians and Maurusians, is wholly encompassed (by water), and so is the greater part on the south and north. And as to what remains as yet unexplored by us, because navigators sailing from opposite points have not hitherto fallen in with each other, it is not much, as any one may see who will compare the distances between those places with which we are already acquainted. Nor is it likely that the Atlantic Ocean is divided into two seas by narrow isthmuses so placed as to prevent circumnavigation; how much more probable that it is confluent and uninterrupted! Those who have returned from an attempt to circumnavigate the earth do not say they have been prevented from continuing their voyage by any opposing continent, for the sea remained perfectly open, but through want of resolution and the scarcity of provision. This theory, too, accords better with the ebb and flow of the ocean, for the phenomenon, both in the increase and diminution, is everywhere identical, or at all events has but little difference, as if produced by the agitation of one sea and resulting from one cause.

PROOF OF THE EARTH'S SPHERICITY.

As the size of the earth has been demonstrated by other writers, we shall here take for granted and receive as accurate what they have advanced. We shall also assume that the earth is spheroidal, that its surface is likewise spheroidal, and, above all, that bodies have a tendency toward its center, which latter point is clear to the perception of the most average understanding. However, we may show summarily that the earth is spheroidal from the consideration that all things, however distant, tend to its center, and that everybody is attracted toward its center of gravity; this is more distinctly proved from observations of the sea and sky, for here the evidence of the senses—common observation—is alone requisite. The convexity of the sea is a further proof of this to those who have sailed; for they cannot perceive lights at a distance when placed at the same level as their eyes, but if raised on high they at once become perceptible to vision, though at the same time farther removed. So when the eye is raised it sees what before was utterly imperceptible. Homer speaks of this when he says,—

“Lifted up on the vast wave, he quickly beheld afar.”

Sailors, as they approach their destination, behold the shore continually raising itself to their view, and objects which had at first seemed low begin to elevate themselves. Our gnomons also are, among other things, evidence of the revolution of the heavenly bodies; and common sense at once shows us that if the depth of the earth were infinite, such a revolution could not take place.

CHANGES IN ELEVATION, TIDES, ETC.

Eratosthenes proceeds to tell us that the earth is spheroidal; not, however, perfectly so, inasmuch as it has certain irregularities. He then enlarges on the successive changes of its form, occasioned by water, fire, earthquakes, eruptions, and the like; all of which is entirely out of place, for the spheroidal form of the whole earth is the result of the system of the universe, and the phenomena which he mentions do not in the least change its general form, such little matters being entirely lost in the great mass of the earth. Still they cause various peculiarities in different parts of our globe, and result from a variety of causes.

He points out as a most interesting subject for disquisition the fact of our finding, often quite inland, two or three thousand stadia from the sea, vast numbers of muscle, oyster, and scallop shells, and salt-water lakes. He gives as an instance that about the temple of Ammon, and along the road to it for the space of three thousand stadia, there are yet found a vast amount of oyster shells, many salt beds, and salt springs bubbling up, besides which are pointed out numerous fragments of wreck which they say have been cast up through some opening, and dolphins placed on pedestals, with the inscription, "Of the Delegates from Cyrene."

Herein he agrees with the opinion of Strato the natural philosopher, and Xanthus of Lydia. Xanthus mentioned that in the reign of Artaxerxes, there was so great a drought that every river, lake, and well was dried up: and that in many places he had seen, a long way from the sea, fossil shells, some like cockles, others resembling scallop shells, also salt lakes in Armenio, Matiana, and Lower Phrygia, which induced him to believe that sea had formerly been where land now was. Strato, who went more deeply into the causes of these phenomena, was of opinion that formerly there was no exit to the Euxine as now at Byzantium, but that the rivers running into it had forced a way through, and thus let the waters escape into the Propontis, and thence to the Hellespont. And that a like change had occurred in the Mediterranean. For the sea being overflowed by the rivers, had opened for itself a passage by the Pillars of Hercules, and thus much that was formerly covered by water had been left dry. He gives as the cause of this, that anciently the levels of the Mediterranean and Atlantic were not the same, and states that a bank of earth, the remains of the ancient separation of the two seas, is still stretched under water from Europe to Africa. He adds that the Euxine is the most shallow, and the seas of Crete, Sicily, and Sardinia much deeper, which is occasioned by the number of large rivers flowing into the Euxine both from the north and east, and so filling it up with mud, whilst the others preserve their depth. This is the cause of the remarkable sweetness of the Euxine Sea, and of the currents which regularly set toward the deepest part. He gives it as his opinion, that should the rivers continue to flow in the same direction, the Euxine will in time be filled up; since already the left side of the sea is little else than shallows, as also Salmydessus (Midjeh in Roumelia), and the shoals at the mouth of the Ister (Danube), and the desert of Scythia (Dobrudscha), which the sailors call the Breasts.

Probably, too, the temple of Ammon was originally close to the sea, though now, by the continual deposit of the waters, it is quite inland; and he conjectures that it was owing to its being so near the sea that it became so celebrated and illustrious, and that it never would have enjoyed the credit it now possesses had it always been equally remote from the sea. Egypt, too, he says, was formerly covered by sea as far as the marshes near Pelusium, Mount Casius, and the Lake Sirbonis. Even at the present time, when salt is being dug in Egypt, the beds are found under layers of sand, and mingled with fossil shells, as if this district had formerly been under water, and as if the whole region about Casium and Gerrha had been shallows reaching to the Arabian Gulf. The sea afterward receding left the land uncovered, and the Lake Sirbonis remained, which having afterward forced itself a passage, became a marsh. In like manner the borders of the Lake Moeris resemble a sea beach rather than the banks of a river. Every one will admit that formerly at various periods a great portion of the mainland has been covered and again left bare by the sea. Likewise that the land now covered by the sea is not all on the same level, any more than that whereon we dwell; which is now uncovered and has experienced so many changes, as Eratosthenes has observed. Consequently in the reasoning of Xanthus there does not appear to be anything out of place.

In regard to Strato, however, we must remark that, leaving out of the question the many arguments he has properly stated, some of those which he has brought forward are quite inadmissible. For first he is inaccurate in stating that the beds of the interior and the exterior seas have not the same level, and that the depth of those two seas is different: whereas the cause why the sea is at one time raised, at another depressed, that it inundates certain places and again retreats, is not that the beds have different levels, some higher and some lower, but simply this, that the same beds are at one time raised, at another depressed, causing the sea to rise or subside with them; for having risen they cause an inundation, and when they subside the waters return to their former places.

The immediate cause of these phenomena is not the fact of one part of the bed of the ocean being higher or lower than another, but the upheaval or depression of the strata on which the waters rest. Strato's hypothesis evidently originated in the belief that what occurs in rivers is also the case in regard to the sea; viz., that there is a flow of water from the higher places. Otherwise he would not have attempted to account for the current he observed at the strait of Byzantium in the manner he does, attributing it to the bed of the Euxine being higher than that of the Propontis (Marmora) and adjoining ocean (Ægæan), and even attempting to explain the cause thereof; viz., that the bed of the Euxine is filled up and choked by the deposit of the rivers which flow into it, and its waters in consequence driven out into the neighboring sea. The same theory he would apply in respect to the Mediterranean and Atlantic, alleging that the bed of the former is higher than that of the latter, in consequence of the number of rivers which flow into it and the alluvium they carry along with them. In that case there ought to be a like influx at the Pillars and the Calpe, as there is at Byzantium. But I waive this objection, as it might be asserted that the influx was the same in both places, but owing to the interference of the ebb and flow of the sea became imperceptible.

I make this inquiry rather: If there were any reason why, before the outlet was opened at Byzantium, the bed of the Euxine (being deeper than either that of the Propontis or of the adjoining sea) should not gradually have become more shallow by the deposit of the rivers which flow into it, allowing it formerly either to have been a sea, or merely a vast lake greater than the Palus Mæotis? This proposition being conceded, I would next ask, whether before this the bed of the Euxine would not have been brought to the same level as the Propontis, and in that case, the pressure being counterpoised, the overflowing of the water have been thus avoided: and if after the Euxine had been filled up, the superfluous waters would not naturally have forced a passage and flowed off, and by their commingling and power have caused the Euxine and Propontis to flow into each other, and thus become one sea? no matter, as I said above, whether formerly it were a sea or a lake, though latterly certainly a sea. This also being conceded, they must allow that the present efflux depends neither upon the elevation nor the inclination of the bed, as Strato's theory would have us consider it.

River deposits are prevented from advancing further into the sea by the regularity of the ebb and flow, which continually drive them back. For after the manner of living creatures, which go on inhaling and exhaling their breath continually, so the sea in a like way keeps up a constant motion in and out of itself. Any one may observe, who stands on the seashore when the waves are in motion, the regularity with which they cover, then leave bare, and then again cover up his feet. This agitation of the sea produces a continual movement on its surface, which even when it is most tranquil has considerable force, and so throws all extraneous matters on to the land, and “Flings forth the salt weed on the shore.”

This effect is certainly most considerable when the wind is on the water; but it continues when all is hushed, and even when it blows from land the swell is still carried to the shore against the wind, as if by a peculiar motion of the sea itself. To this the verses refer:—

“O’er the rocks that breast the flood Borne turgid, scatter far the showery spray,”

and

“Loud sounds the roar of waves ejected wide.”

The wave, as it advances, possesses a kind of power which some call the purging of the sea, to eject all foreign substances. It is by this force that dead bodies and wrecks are cast on shore. But on retiring it does not possess sufficient power to carry back into the sea either dead bodies, wood, or even the lightest substances, such as cork, which may have been cast out by the waves. And by this means, when places next the sea fall down, being undermined by the wave, the earth and the water charged with it are cast back again; and the weight working at the same time in conjunction with the force of the advancing tide, it is the sooner brought to settle at the bottom, instead of being carried out far into the sea. The force of the river current ceases at a very little distance beyond its mouth. Otherwise, supposing the rivers had an uninterrupted flow, by degrees the whole ocean would be filled in, from the beach onward by the alluvial deposits. And this would be inevitable even were the Euxine deeper than the sea of Sardinia, than which a deeper sea has never been sounded, measuring, as it does, according to Posidonius, about 1000 fathoms.

Some, however, may be disinclined to admit this explanation, and would rather have proof from things more manifest to the senses, and which seem to meet us at every turn. Now deluges earthquakes, eruptions of wind, and risings in the bed of the sea cause the rising of the ocean, as sinking of the bottom causes it to become lower. It is not the case that small volcanic or other islands can be raised up from the sea, and not large ones, nor that all islands can, but not continents, since extensive sinkings of the land no less than small ones have been known; witness the yawning of those chasms which have engulfed whole districts no less than their cities, as is said to have happened to Bura, Bizone, and many other towns at the time of earthquakes: and there is no more reason why one should rather think Sicily to have been disjoined from the mainland of Italy than cast up from the bottom of the sea by the fires of Ætna, as the Lipari and Pithecussan (Ischia) Isles have been.

However, so nice a fellow is Eratosthenes, that though he professes himself a mathematician, he rejects entirely the dictum of Archimedes, who, in his work "On Bodies in Suspension," says that all liquids when left at rest assume a spherical form, having a center of gravity similar to that of the earth: a dictum which is acknowledged by all who have the slightest pretensions to mathematical sagacity. He says that the Mediterranean, which according to his own description is one entire sea, has not the same level even at points quite close to each other; and offers us the authority of engineers for this piece of folly, notwithstanding the affirmation of mathematicians that engineering is itself only one division of the mathematics. He tells us that Demetrius intended to cut through the Isthmus of Corinth, to open a passage for his fleet, but was prevented by his engineers, who having taken measurements reported that the level of the sea at the Gulf of Corinth was higher than at Cenchrea, so that if he cut through the isthmus, not only the coasts near Ægina, but even Ægina itself, with the neighboring islands, would be laid completely under water, while the passage would prove of little value.

According to Eratosthenes, it is this which occasions the currents in straits, especially the current in the Strait of Sicily, where effects similar to the flow and ebb of the tide are remarked. The current there changes twice in the course of the day and night, like as in that period the tides of the sea flow and ebb twice. In the Tyrrhenian Sea the current which is called descendent, and which runs toward the sea of Sicily, as if it followed an inclined plane, corresponds to the flow of the tide in the ocean. We may remark that this current corresponds to the flow both in the time of its commencement and cessation. For it commences at the rising and the setting of the moon, and recedes when that satellite attains its meridian, whether above or below the earth. In the same way occurs the opposite or ascending current, as it is called. It corresponds to the ebb of the ocean, and commences as soon as the moon has reached either zenith or nadir, and ceases the moment she reaches the point of her rising or setting.

SIZE OF THE INHABITED EARTH.

After this Eratosthenes proceeds to determine the breadth of the habitable earth: he tells us that, measuring from the meridian of Meroe (Gherri in Sennaar) to Alexandria, there are 10,000 stadia. From thence to the Hellespont about 8100. Again, from thence to the Dnieper, 5000; and thence to the parallel of Thule (Iceland) which Pytheas says is six days' sail north from Britain, and near the Frozen Sea, other 11,500. To which if we add 3400 stadia above Meroe in order to include the Island of the Egyptians (unknown), the Cinnamon country, and Taprobane (Ceylon), there will be in all 38,000 stadia.

We will let pass the rest of his distances, since they are something near; but that the Dnieper is under the same parallel as Thule, what man in his senses could ever agree to this? Pytheas, who has given us the history of Thule, is known to be a man upon whom no reliance can be placed, and other writers who have seen Britain and Ierne, although they tell us of many small islands round Britain, make no mention whatever of Thule. The length of Britain itself is nearly the same as that of Keltica (France and Belgium), opposite to which it extends. Altogether it is not more than 5000 stadia in length, its outermost points corresponding to those of the opposite continent. In fact the extreme points of the two countries lie opposite to each other, the eastern extremity to the eastern, and the western to the western: the eastern points are situated so close as to be within sight of each other, both at Kent and at the mouths of the Rhine. But Pytheas tells us that the island (of Britain) is more than 20,000 stadia in length, and Kent is some days' sail from Keltica. With regard to the locality of the Ostimii, and the countries beyond the Rhine as far as Seythia, he is altogether mistaken. The veracity of a writer who has been thus false in describing countries with which we are well acquainted should not be too much trusted in regard to places that are unknown.

Further, Hipparchus and many others are of opinion that the parallel of latitude of the Dneiper does not differ from that of Britain; since that of Byzantium and Marseilles are the same. The degree of shadow from the gnomon which Pytheas states he observed at Marseilles being exactly equal to that which Hipparchus says he found at Byzantium; the periods of observation being in both cases similar. Now from Marseilles to the center of Britain is not more than 5000 stadia; and if from the center of Britain we advance north not more than 4000 stadia, we arrive at a temperature in which it is scarcely possible to exist. Such indeed is that of Ierne. Consequently the far region in which Eratosthenes places Thule must be totally uninhabitable. By what guesswork he arrived at the conclusion that between the latitude of Thule and the Dnieper there was a distance of 11,500 stadia, I am unable to divine.

Eratosthenes being mistaken as to the breadth, is necessarily wrong as to the length. The most accurate observers, both ancient and modern, agree that the known length of the habitable earth is more than twice its breadth. Its length I take to be from the (eastern) extremity of India to the (westernmost) point of Spain; and its breadth from (the south of) Ethiopia to the latitude of Ierne. Eratosthenes, as we have said, reckoning its breadth from the extremity of Ethiopia to Thule, was forced to extend its length beyond the true limits, that he might make it more than twice as long as the breadth he had assigned to it. He says that India, measured where it is narrowest, is 16,000 stadia to the river Indus. If measured from its most prominent capes, it extends 3000 more; thence to the Caspian Gates, 14,000; from the Caspian Gates to the Euphrates, 10,000; from the Euphrates to the Nile, 5000; thence to the Canopic mouth, 1300; from the Canopic mouth to Carthage, 13,500; from thence to the Pillars, at least 8000; which makes in all 70,800 stadia. To these, he says, should be added the curvature of Europe beyond the Pillars of Hercules, fronting the Iberians, and inclining west, not less than 3000 stadia, and the headlands, including that of the Ostimii, named Cabæum (Cape S. Mahé), and the adjoining islands, the last of which, named Uxisama (Ushant), is distant, according to Pytheas, a three days' sail. But he added nothing to its length by enumerating these last, — viz. the headlands, including that of the Ostimii, the island of Uxisama, and the rest; they are not situated so as to affect the length of the earth, for they all lie to the north, and belong to Keltica, not to Iberia; indeed, it seems but an invention of Pytheas. Lastly, to fall in with the general opinion that the breadth ought not to exceed half the length, he adds to the stated measure of its length 2000 stadia west, and as many east.

Further, endeavoring to support the opinion that it is in accordance with natural philosophy to reckon the greatest dimension of the habitable earth from east to west, he says that according to the laws of natural philosophy, the habitable earth ought to occupy a greater length from east to west than its breadth from north to south. The temperate zone, which we have already designated as the longest zone, is that which the mathematicians denominate a continuous circle returning upon itself. So that if the extent of the Atlantic Ocean were not an obstacle, we might easily pass by sea from Iberia to India,¹ still keeping in the same parallel; the remaining portion of which parallel, measured as above in stadia, occupies more than a third of the whole circle; since the parallel drawn through Athens, on which we have taken the distances from India to Iberia, does not contain in the whole 200,000 stadia.

Here, too, his reasoning is incorrect. For this speculation respecting the temperate zone which we inhabit, and whereof the habitable earth is a part, develops properly on those who make mathematics their study. But it is not equally the province of one treating of the habitable earth. For by this term we mean only that portion of the temperate zone where we dwell, and with which we are acquainted. But it is quite possible that in the temperate zone there may be two or even more habitable earths, especially near the circle of latitude which is drawn through Athens and the Atlantic Ocean.²

¹ Columbus followed out this idea.

² This is a striking forecast. The parallel of Athens is near 38° N. L.; this would fall between Pekin and Tokio in the Orient, between Washington and Richmond in the United States.

Alois Brandl

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

VOLUME VI.

	PAGE
The Main Currents of German Literature : Introduction by ALOIS BRANDL	13
The Autobiography of Augustus	23
Tiberius and the Senate Tacitus	33
Tiberius and Sejanus Velleius Paterculus	42
The Chariot Race at Antioch Lew Wallace	52
Mary Magdalen at the House of Simon the Pharisee :
I Dante Gabriel Rossetti	64
II Laura E. Richards	64
The Last Journey to Jerusalem Ernest Renan	67
Pilate and the Crucifixion Dean Farrar	76
The Ballad of Judas Iscariot Robert Buchanan	79
Caligula Suetonius	84
The Fate of a Persecutor of the Jews Philo Judæus	102
The Days of Nero Henryk Sienkiewicz	116
Satires Persius	144
To Plotius Macrinus (The Second Satire)	144
To Cæsius Bassus (The Sixth Satire)	147
A Self-made Man Petronius Arbiter	151
The Battle of Pharsalia Lucan	168
On Anger Seneca	176
Deaths and Characters of Galba, Otho, and
Vitellius Tacitus	189
Otho's Conspiracy and Galba's Death	189
Battle of Bedriacum and Otho's Death	195
The Close of Vitellius's Reign	198
The Last Days of Vitellius Whyte-Melville	202
Josephus on the Jewish War Josephus	223
The Glories of Domitian's Reign (The Fourth
Satire) Juvenal	235
The Libyan Dragon Silius Italicus	240
Epigrams Martial	245
Passages from Statius :
The Wandering of Polynices	267
The Palace of Sleep	269
To Lucan	270
Atalanta's Presage	270
Parthenopæus' Farewell Message	270

	PAGE
Maxims	Epictetus 271
Natural Philosophy at the Christian Era	Pliny the Elder 282
Thunder and Lightning 282
The Goose in War, Love, Gourmandism, Sybaritism, and Sickness 283
The Chenalopex, the Cheneros, the Tetrao, and the Otis 285
Cranes 285
Storks 286
Swans 287
The Hyæna in Magic and Medicine 287
Other Magical Charms 290
Correspondence of Pliny the Younger :
Pliny to Junius Mauricus — Match-making 291
To Suetonius Tranquillus — on Dreams 292
To Arrianus — on a State Trial 293
To the Same — in Continuation 297
To Cornelius Nepos — Story of Arria 298
To Sura — Ghost Stories 300
To Tacitus — asking to be Immortalized 303
To the Emperor Trajan — asking Leave of Absence 305
Trajan to Pliny — in Reply 305
Pliny to Trajan — on the Prosecution of Christians 306
Trajan to Pliny — in Reply 308
On the Great Eruption of Vesuvius 308
Pompeii and Herculaneum	Schiller 311
The Destruction of Pompeii	Bulwer-Lytton 313
The Emperor and the Pope	Plumptre 345
The Emperor Hadrian to his Soul (Several Versions) 352
Jocular Oratory	Quintilian 354
From Juvenal's Tenth Satire (Dryden)	Juvenal 359
Cupid and Psyche	Apuleius 367
The Psyche Legend	J. T. Bunce 382
Wonders of the Animal World	Ælian 401
Cure for a Sick Lion 401
Mice Abandon a Decaying House 401
Patriotic Origin of Cock-Fights 401
Serpents generated from Marrow 402
Fire-Born Birds 402
Concerning Dragons 402
The Song of the Dying Swan 403
Vultures 403
The Weasel's Protection against Serpents 403
Of the Loves and Hates of Animals 404
The Hyæna 404

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

VOLUME 6.

ALOIS BRANDL	Frontispiece
	PAGE
CHRIST HEALING THE SICK	66
A SUMMER NIGHT IN OLD POMPEII	312

THE MAIN CURRENTS OF GERMAN LITERATURE

BY PROF. ALOIS BRANDL
Of the Imperial University of Berlin

IN ushering in to Anglo-Saxon readers a selection of German literature, I may be expected to sketch briefly the main characteristics of German literature, its differences from English literature, what its merits and demerits.

At the bottom of the German heart there is a good deal of sentimentality. This feeling, which makes us so fond of singing and music, of snug family life, and cheerful conviviality, has given to our literature a peculiar flavour, a popular turn, an inclination to what moves the soul of the peasant and the labourer, not rarely, indeed, at the cost of realistic incident, or refined form. But out of this level of literary cottage life there rises from time to time a bold spire of thought, pointing to the mystic and the metaphysic. In the act of rearing such a structure the German mind used to exert all its original power, and then to abandon itself for a while to rest or distraction. In consequence we have had, in the course of centuries, several striking "Blütheperioden," but not that unbroken continuity of fine literature that England has enjoyed, chiefly from the time of Chaucer, to the present day.

A popular epic poetry, with which, in beauty and in grandeur, not even "Beowulf" stands comparison, marks our mediæval period of flourishing:—the lays of the Nibelungen Gudrun. A popular lyrical singer was Walter von der Vogelweide, the classical minstrel of his day; though he was a courtier, his love-lays bear the stamp of the village; his deeper poems express feelings and ideas that touch every hearer or reader most directly, his verse has a spontaneity that must have proved a source of pleasure both to the educated and uneducated. Few and artificial, in comparison, are the English love-songs of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; while of the more thoughtful English poets of that time, Walter Map wrote Latin, and William Langland a long, very long didactic poem. And by the side of these productions, enjoyable for every ear and every understanding, stood Wolfram's mystic romaunt of the Graal, with its intricate symbolism and reflection, without doubt the profoundest Teutonic poem of the Middle Ages. On the other hand, there was no Chaucer in Germany. Chaucer's lighter tales may, as far as flow and ease are concerned, be compared with Hartmann's and Gottfried's adaptations of Chrestien de Troyes; but the art of his rime royal, and the judicious realism of his merry pilgrims to Canterbury are unmatched. It was not the fault of the German courts that courtly poetry did not succeed better with us in the fourteenth century; there had been many more princes in Thuringia, by the Danube and the Rhine, that gave liberal reward to the singer in the vernacular tongue, than in England and Scotland; the daughter of a German emperor, Anna of Bohemia, extended her protection even to Chaucer and procured him leisure to write his greatest works; yet the German poetry developed in the popular direction. Nothing is more characteristic of this fact than the ebbing away of the "minnesang" into the "meistersang," the production of the guilds—at the same time that in England Chaucer and his school developed that finished style that was to become Shakespeare's best inheritance.

In the century of Sidney and Shakespeare, the translations that were exchanged between the two nations tell the same tale. From Germany to England, popular preaching was exported on a tremendous scale. Luther's masterly version of the Bible, probably more truly popular than any other translation of the Holy Scriptures, was to no mean extent the model of Tyndale; versions of our popular hymns were sung in London and Edinburgh churches, chap-books like Eulenspiegel and Grobrianus found their way to the Thames and the Forth; and the mystic saga of Dr. Faustus, perhaps the chef-d'œuvre of German imagination during the Renaissance, became the source of Marlowe's drama. But, as to refinement, Hans Sachs is a veritable cobbler compared to chivalrous Sidney; the good dramatists in Holland and Strasburg wrote in Latin, and our vernacular adaptations of Shakespearian dramas, brought over by the English comedians, were coarse and contemptible; we lacked refinement and could not even relish it if it was imported.

The seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries was the period when Germany, misguided by a host of princelings, aped France. The neat elegance and witty dexterity of Parisian authors have always had a strong fascination for the German mind, attracting our admiration, bewitching our senses, and stifling our originality of production, just because they are utterly un-German. Our literature became pedantic as it had never been before; until Haller in Switzerland, and Hagedorn in Hamburg, followed by Klopstock, Lessing, and the Göttingen School, held up English models, making the German true to his own kin again. Then Milton awakened a new epic poetry, which culminated in Hermann und Dorothea—the evolutionary song of paradise, inspiring the song of a village during the great revolution. Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, presenting popular and artistic specimens promiscuously, worked only in the popular direction, inducing Bürger to write Lenore, and Herder to gather, with young Goethe, ballads from the mouths of Alsatian peasants. Shakespeare, Royalist though he was to the backbone, is visible in every scene of Goethe's Gotz von Berlichingen and Schiller's Räuber—plays full of opposition against the courts, and of sympathy with the ill-treated people. Young Goethe and Schiller would not have become the classics they are if they had not thus fallen in with our popular taste. No poem of their great English contemporaries, neither of Wordsworth and Coleridge, nor of Byron and Shelley, has ever been chanted by children in London streets, by peasants in English hamlets, remoulded in their mouths, as several of Goethe's and Schiller's are. This is the outcome of German feeling; and at the same time we find the mystic symbolism of Faust, the complicated reflection of Schiller's Ideale: the same mixture as in the time of the Nibelungenlied of Walter and Wolfram.

That our poetry was fashioned to such an extent, not by the taste of the nobility or of the schools, but by the instinct of the common people, naturally had its advantages and its disadvantages. When our nation declined in culture, in unity, wealth, and self-respect, as during the Thirty Years' War and the following decades, poetry sank too, much more than the literature of Italy, under the yoke of native and foreign tyrants, ever did; because there the poet was quite willing to obey the courts, to feed on splendour, to flourish by princely favours. On the other side, during the latter part of the eighteenth century, our literature, recalled to life by the electric contact with her English sister, effected what no other literature has ever done for her nation: she resuscitated our whole people—which she was only capable of doing because she was not the child of luxury, of the court, or of traditionary learning, but the voice of our race, the embodied spirit of our ancestors. Schiller's Räuber excited a sensation which neither Byron's Childe Harold, nor Walter Scott's Waverley equalled; there was not only a rush to the booksellers, but a revolution in the minds of the people, who became aware that freedom and justice were banished from the towns into the woods, and who resolved to fight for them, like Karl Moor, the idealistic robber. When they read in Cabale und Liebe of the departure of the unhappy soldiers whom their wretched monarch had sold to England, to be sent against the Americans, they began to curse the patriarchal system of their little states. With Marquis Posa in Don Carlos, the cry was echoed in the breasts of thousands: Sire, give us freedom of speech! It was in those times that the new empire was founded in the German heart, by the German poets, though in politics two Napoleons had still to do their worst, and their best, to remove the débris of the old Holy Roman Empire, until the dreamy desire could be realised. English literature, with all its refined form and sound realism, had never been able to do the like; all the Elizabethans, with Shakespeare and Spenser in the van, were royalists, but the next generation erected the Commonwealth;

the Puritans commanded Milton's pen, but what ensued was the Restoration; even in our time the Greater-Britain movement was long spread by political speeches and periodicals, until it found its poetic exponent in Kipling. Similarly, France was saved in the time of her sorest need, not by dramas and ballads, but by an illiterate maid, and when the United States won their independence, American literature was but in its infancy. Only the German war of liberation, first from Napoleonic, afterwards from home tyranny, cannot be understood and explained, but by the influence of the poetic word on the masses. It presents the grandest example of what popular literature can do for a nation.

Since the appearance of Schiller's juvenile dramas, things have altered somewhat. As we approach the nineteenth century, we find a higher standard of refined form in German literature, never again, we hope, to be abandoned. The most perfect specimen of it is Goethe's Iphigenie; written in blank verse of easy flow and gentle music, with a rhetoric of Sophoclean nobility, with a heroine of love, not of passionate, but of pure, quieting, and healing love; with a plot of grandeur melting into tenderness. This drama, which could not have been written but for Weimar and Frau von Stein, was the best fruit of Goethe's removal from busy Frankfort and Leipzig to the quiet ducal residence by the Ilm. Iphigenie was soon followed by Tasso, a tragic picture of passion intruding on gentleness: a warning. And not only did Goethe exchange the "storm and stress" of his youth with Hellenic beauty and aristocratic dignity; Schiller, too, developed in the same direction, and became his neighbour and friend, his fellow-dramatist and brother-artist. A. W. von Schlegel settled in their shade to translate Shakespeare into a German classic of the same style; Grillparzer established the neo-classical drama in Vienna; everywhere the majority of the educated grew Weimarised. What Chaucer gave to England—a poetic form capable of expressing the highest thoughts—was now given to Germany as a permanent model, just as Spenser and Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, Wordsworth and Tennyson kept on Chaucer's road and did not fall back to alliteration or loose ballad riming.

It was not quite easy for foreigners to see what Iphigenie meant for Germany. The drama was soon translated into English, but made little impression. Far more attention had been roused by the juvenile works of Goethe and Schiller, being more racy and original than cosmopolitan. Götz and the Räuber were praised, translated and imitated in Scotland in the younger days of Walter Scott. Werther caused a sensation across the Channel; Lord Byron complained it had poisoned him. Stella came in to share the success of sentimental Kotzebue during the last years of the eighteenth century, when Sheridan adapted Pizarro; and Faust, essentially a work of young Goethe, impressed a few of the highest minds: Coleridge, Byron, Shelley, Carlyle. Only the masterpieces of the ripe Goethe, on which he himself would base his fame, did not strike the Anglo-Saxon taste; as their refinement was not new to the countrymen of Chaucer. On such a point the æsthetic judgment of two nations may well differ, according to the law that people admire rather what they do not possess than what is best in itself.

Soon after the appearance of Iphigenie, our poetry was influenced in the same direction by that group of authors that, in opposition to classical Goethe and Schiller, called themselves "Romantiker." They drove out a good deal of our cruder popular leanings by overdoing them. They carried simplicity so far that it often became puerility; they exaggerated enthusiasm and bold imagination as though it were the chief task of literature to rove in fairy tales. People grew weary of "Phantasus" and "Der gestiefelte Kater," and "Gickel, Gockel und Gockelein," and demanded a manlier tone. Experiences such as these have, perhaps, made us too indifferent to the better productions of our "Romantiker," English critics say, we are unjust to Novalis and Fouqué; certainly Eichendorf has been allowed to drop too much in the rear. But who will return to the shoes of his boyhood? The Romantiker at times found their own style too high-flown, and tried to balance it by what they called self-irony—not aware of the fact that it might rather make the impression of insincerity on the reader. Nobody was fonder of thus ironising himself and his readers than Heine. German opinion has been unusually severe on him, and foreigners have not always understood or explained it correctly. It is wrong to say that Germany doubts his genius; he is unanimously considered a master of song, a lyric of the first order; every educated person knows his Buch der Lieder, and many critics place it only second to Goethe's Lieder. We admire the artist, but object to the character. His poems charm you at first with heavenly music and excellent wit, but on a sudden he dismisses you with a mock. You bow to the poet, when, at once, he turns gamin. Even so it is with his life: you pity him because he lived in a miserable time, and in a weak body; yet for all your sympathy, he sneers at you, because you are not a Frenchman. How could American citizens honour an American poet that despised Washington, and cursed at the stars and stripes? Still, I think, our nation is too harsh upon him. He has mocked us, to a great extent, out of our old sentimentality. For this he deserves our thanks; but disillusion, though it may prove wholesome, hardly ever earns gratitude; people do not like a physician that rids them of a crippled child, however miserable it may have been.

To make German literature manlier, not a little, too, was done by a later group of authors, called "die Jungdeutschen." They preached realistic investigation; a muscular poetry; drama of stirring characters and drastic incidents. At a time when two-thirds of our periodicals were exclusively devoted to belles lettres and fine arts, it must have been a relief to hear Gutzkow's hero "Uriel Acosta" thunder and fight for freedom of creed. After legions of love-songs came the sound advice of Gervinus, to devote ourselves for a while to politics, like the recipe of a good doctor.

The result of all these various movements has been, that during the last half century every poet endeavoured to reflect the character of his part of the country with as much grace and truth as possible. The unwritten programme of modern German literature is a fusion of the popular with the artistic of the author's provincialism with the traditions of Weimar, together with a sharper and more realistic observation. The popular element is purified ; it bears quite different colours in the ballads of the Suabian Umland and in those of the Rheinländer Scheffel, in the dramas of the Viennese Anzengruber and in those of his Silesian contemporary Freytag, in the sketches of the Pomeranian Fritz Reuter and in those of the Styrian Rosegger, in the tales of the Swiss Gottfried Keller and in those of the Tirolese Adolf Pichler. In England the realism of London is much more apt to absorb that of the province. The historical division into a number of smaller national units, that has generally proved so fatal to our politics, is a source of inexhaustible variety and individuality to our literature.

Astonishment has sometimes been expressed that the refoundation of the German Empire did not inaugurate a new epoch in poetry. Because the victories of Marathon and Thermopylae were followed by a great rise of the Grecian drama, and the destruction of the Armada by the appearance of Shakespeare, a number of new geniuses were expected with us after 1871. The expectation rested on a theory which does not bear closer inspection. Æschylus had struck out his path before the overthrow of Xerxes, and he was decidedly of more influence on Sophocles than any question of Athenian politics, excepting the question of independence alone. As to old England, Marlowe was out before 1588 ; and if no Armada had ever been sent against Elizabeth, there would be fewer Shakespearean histories, but hardly a different Hamlet or Lear. Slavery or despair can stifle the literary production of a people ; many a bird will not sing in the cage ; but sorrow and affliction, with a nation that is conscious of its strength, have frequently served to kindle poetic enthusiasm, while the feeling of triumph is only a poor motive. The protest of Germany against French invasion had been sung long ago, by Körner and Arndt ; after 1871 we were glad to keep the peace, and did our best to reconcile our highly gifted western neighbours, instead of provoking them in Indian fashion.

Not the patriotic satisfaction, but the social difficulties arising from the rapid growth of our industry and population, have lately given a new impulse to our literature. The cry of the poor, the insulted, the outcast, after the right not only of existence, but of respectability and joy, has proved a powerful impetus for our poets. In Berlin are the headquarters of our socialist party, and also of the group of young dramatists that deal with the war of the classes and the sufferings of the proletariat at the hands of a society that professes to be Christian. Sudermann in "Ehre" and "Heimat" has depicted such conflicts in striking scenes; Hauptmann has given a loud voice to the poor "Weavers," and has painted a sweet vision of paradise to dying "Hannele," the drunkard's daughter, who had never known what happiness was on this earth. Not a few less famous dramatists work in the same line. It is a poetry of pity and accusation; in theatrical workmanship evidently influenced by Paris and Ibsen, but in its aim and scope a characteristic outcome of the German heart; a drama for the people, or, at least, in favour of the people, indulging not in sentimentality, after the fashion of old Kotzebue, but in problems of reform. At the same time, the second old element of German poetry, the mystic vein, is not missing. Hauptmann has puzzled his admirers by the autobiographic symbolism of his "Versunkene Glocke," and Sudermann by the interwoven thread of thought in his "Drei Reiherfedern." At bottom, German literature has still the same character as in the period of the "Nibelungenlied" and Wolfram: more homely than courtly, and sometimes rather supernatural; only her clothes have become finer, her gait more dignified, her hands more dexterous, her mind riper, and her working power more persevering.

A. Frank.

BERLIN.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AUGUSTUS.

(Translated for this work.)

[AUGUSTUS, born B.C. 63, was the son of Julius Cæsar's sister's daughter, and his name was originally Caius Octavius; adopted by Cæsar, his name was changed to Caius Julius Cæsar Octavianus. After Cæsar's murder, B.C. 44, he formed a triumvirate with Antony and Lepidus in 43, vanquished Brutus and Cassius at Philippi in 42, and Antony and Cleopatra at Actium in 31, which made him supreme. He was given the title of "The August" in 27. He was never elected sole ruler nor made himself nominally such, but merely had himself chosen to each of the great republican offices — chief of the Senate, consul, tribune, prætor, supreme pontiff, head of the various colleges of priests, etc. — by the forms of an election for a year or term of years, and subsequent reëlection. He died A.D. 14.

The year before his death he caused to be engraved on brass pillars, and placed in Rome and elsewhere, a record of such actions as he thought best entitled him to the gratitude of the Roman people, and the public honors conferred on him which showed the general acceptance and welcome of his rule; in fact, a vindication of his public career, ignoring the worse parts, and dwelling on what he had done for the good of the state and the happiness of the citizens. The only surviving copy of the inscription is in front of a temple at Ancyra (now Angora) in Asia Minor, in parallel bodies of Latin and Greek; both are badly mutilated, but each helps out some parts of the other. It has never before been rendered into English. The following translation is from the Latin, as far as conjecturally (but with substantial certainty) restored by Professor Mommsen.]

OF THE DEEDS OF HOLY AUGUSTUS, BY WHICH HE SUB-JECTED THE ENTIRE WORLD TO THE EMPIRE OF THE ROMAN PEOPLE, AND OF THE OUTLAYS MADE ON THE ROMAN REPUBLIC AND PEOPLE, A TRANSCRIPT IS SUB-JOINED.

AT NINETEEN years of age I equipped an army, on my private judgment and at my private expense, by which I restored to liberty the public oppressed by the domination of faction.

For this the Senate elected me one of their order by honorific decrees in the consulship of C. Pansa and A. Hirtius, assigning me consular rank. At the same time it gave me the imperium [chief military command]. The republic, lest something might befall, was intrusted to my guardianship as prætor conjointly with the consuls. But in the same year the people, as both consuls had perished in war, created me consul, and a five-year triumvirate as the constitution of the republic.

Those who had slain my father I drove into exile, avenging their crime by legal decisions; and afterwards I conquered them twice in battle when they were making war upon the republic.

I sustained a civil and foreign war by land and sea in every quarter of the world, and as victor I spared all the remaining citizens. Foreign tribes which I could safely spare, I chose to preserve rather than cut off. Five hundred thousand Roman citizens took the enlistment oath to me; from these I settled in colonies, or sent back to their boroughs with discharge pay, considerably over 200,000, and gave them all lands or money for farms purchased by me.

I have captured six hundred ships, besides those smaller than triremes. Twice I have triumphed with an ovation, thrice I have led triumphs as a curule magistrate, and I have been named Imperator twenty-one times. Afterwards, when the Senate decreed me further triumphs, I refrained, and merely deposited the laurel crowns in the Capitol, in fulfillment of the vows I had solemnly made in each war. For the prosperous achievements either of myself, or of my legates under my auspices, during fifty-five campaigns by land and sea, the Senate decreed a season of religious observances to the immortal gods; the days during which these observances were carried on were 890. Nine kings or the children of kings have been led in triumph before my car. I had been consul thirteen times when I wrote this, and held the tribunitian power for the thirty-seventh year.

The dictatorship, both absent and present, given to me by the Senate and people, in the consulship of M. Marcellus and L. Arruntius, I did not accept. I have not in the greatest scarcity of corn refused the care of the yearly doles; and by managing this without neglect at my own expense, I have freed the whole people in a few days from fear and imminent peril. Then I would not accept the consulate given to me both for the year and in perpetuity.

[Gap in the record.]

I was for ten years one of the triumvirate to administer the republic ; chief of the Senate, up to the day when I wrote this, forty years ; pontiff, augur, one of the fifteen for the making of sacrifices, one of the seven epulones [priests for sacred festivals], Arval Brother [for field-fruits], of the Titian Brotherhood [Sabine memorial worship], Treaty Priest.

In my fifth consulate I increased the number of the patri-cians by order of the people and the Senate. I picked a Senate three times. And in my sixth consulate I made a census of the people with M. Agrippa as colleague ; I made a lustrum [purifying sacrifice after the census] after forty-two years [from the census of B.C. 70]. At that lustrum the census of the Romans was 4,063,000 heads. Again, holding the consular imperium alone, I made a lustrum in the consulship of C. Censorinus and C. Asinius ; in this lustrum there were 4,233,000 heads of Roman citizens. A third time, holding the consular imperium with Tiberius Cæsar my son as colleague, Sextus Pompeius and Sextus Appuleius consuls, I made a lustrum ; in this lustrum there were enumerated 4,937,000 heads of Roman citizens. With new detailed laws I also restored many ancient practices now dying from out our city, and myself imposed practices to be imitated by our posterity in many things.

The Senate decreed also that vows should be made for my health every fifth year by consuls and priests ; from which vows they often held games in my lifetime, sometimes in the beginning by four great colleges of priests, sometimes by the consuls. Both individually and as municipal bodies, the citizens all sacrificed regularly for my health before all the couches of the gods.

By Senate decree my name was included in the Salian song and held sacrosanct ; and a sacred ordinance was made that the tribunitian power should be mine as long as I should live. I refused to be supreme pontiff in place of the one then living — the people conferring on me the priesthood my father held before me. I accepted that priesthood some years later, the one who had occupied it through the civil dissensions being dead, and the people thronging from all Italy to my election in such a multitude as it is said there had never been in Rome before; P. Sulpicius and C. Valgius were consuls.

The Senate consecrated an altar of Fortune the Preserver, next to the Temple of Honor and Virtue at the Capenian Gate, for my return, at which it ordered the priests and Vestal Virgins to make an anniversary sacrifice, on the day I returned from Syria in the consulship of Q. Lucretius and M. Vinucius, and called that day Augustal, from my name.

By Senate decree at that time, a part of the prætors and tribunes, with the Consul Q. Lucretius and the chief men, were sent to meet me in Campania, which honor it at that time had decreed to no one but me. When I returned to Rome from Spain and Gaul, in the consulship of Tiberius Nero and P. Quintilius, affairs in those provinces being brought to a prosperous issue, the Senate ordered an altar of the Peace of Augustus consecrated in the Campus Martius for my return, on which altar the magistrates, priests, and Vestal Virgins were to make an anniversary sacrifice.

The Gate of Quirinus, which our fathers wished shut when over the entire dominion of the Roman people there was peace by land and sea, while before my birth from the foundation of the city it is handed down in memory that it had been closed thrice altogether, was ordered closed three times while I was chief of the Senate.

My sons, Gaius and Lucius Cæsar, whom fortune tore from me while young, the Roman Senate and people to do me honor designated for [future] consuls at their fifteenth year, that they might enter on that magistracy after five years. And the Senate decreed that they might take part in the public debates from the day they were led into the Forum. The knights on their part hailed them as chiefs of the whole Roman youth, giving them a silver shield and spear.

To the Roman populace I paid three hundred sesterces¹ apiece from my father's legacy; in my name gave four hundred from the spoils of war in my fifth consulate; again in my tenth consulate I paid out a largess of four hundred apiece from my patrimony; in my eleventh consulate I bestowed twelve individual distributions of corn which I had purchased; and in my twelfth tribunitian term I gave for the third time four hundred nummi apiece. These largesses of mine never reached less than 250,000 men. In my eighteenth tribunitian term, twelfth consulate, I gave to 330,000 of the urban populace sixty denarii apiece. To the colonies of my soldiers I gave from the spoils in my fifth consulate a thousand nummi each; about 120,000 men in those colonies received that triumphal largess. In my thirteenth consulate I gave sixty denarii [each] to the populace which then received public corn; there were a little over 200,000 men.

¹ A sesterce = about 4½ cents; a denarius = four sesterces, or a franc. A nummus is a sesterce.

The money for the farms which in my fourth consulate, and afterward when M. Crassus and Cn. Lentulus Augur were consuls, I assigned to the soldiers, I paid to the boroughs. That sum was about 600,000,000 sesterces which I disbursed for the contributed farms, and 260,000,000 for the provincial lands. I was the first and only one who did that, of all who within the memory of my era had settled colonies of soldiers in Italy or in the provinces. And afterwards, in the consulships of Tib. Nero and Cn. Piso, of C. Antistius and D. Lælius, of C. Calvisius and L. Pasienus, of L. Lentulus and M. Messalla, and L. Caninius and Q. Fabricius, I sent back the veterans with discharge pay to their boroughs, and paid their bounties in cash, expending . . . millions for that purpose.

Four times I aided the treasury with my money, so that I transferred 150,000,000 sesterces to those who had charge of the treasury. And in the consulships of M. Lepidus and L. Arruntius, to assist the exchequer which had been established by my counsel for the payment of bounties to the soldiers who had earned their twenty-year discharge pay, I transferred 170,000,000 in the name of Ti. Cæsar and myself.

. . . in the year when Cn. and P. Lentulus were consuls, when . . . failed, I bought corn for a hundred thousand men out of my property . . . I gave . . .

I built a Senate-house, and near it a Chalcædium [temple of Minerva], a temple of Apollo on the Palatine with colonnades, a temple of holy Julius, one of Lupercus, a portico to the Flaminian circus, which I have allowed to be called the Octavia from the name of him who first built on that spot, a sacred couch at the Circus Maximus, temples of Jupiter the Vanquisher and of Jupiter the Thundering on the Capitol, a temple of Quirinus, temples of Minerva and Juno the Queen and Jupiter of Liberty on the Aventine, a temple of the Lares on the summit of the Sacred Way, a temple of the gods' Penates on the Velian, a temple of Youth, a temple of the Mighty Mother on the Palatine.

The Capitol and Pompey's Theater, each work I rebuilt at great expense, with no inscription of my name. I rebuilt in many places the water conduits breaking down from age; and the stream called the Marcian I have enlarged by turning a new fountain into its conduit. The Julian Forum, and the basilica which was between the temple of Castor and the temple of Saturn, begun and well advanced by my father, I completed; and the same basilica when consumed by fire I began to rebuild on an enlarged plan in the same place under the name of my sons, and ordered that if I had not completed it while living, it should be completed by my heirs. Eighty-two temples of the gods in the city I rebuilt by Senate decree in my sixth consulship, none being passed over which at that time needed rebuilding. In my seventh consulship I made the Flaminian way as far as Ariminum out of spoils of war, and rebuilt all the bridges on it except the Mulvian and Minucian.

In the private grounds of Mars the Avenger, I built a temple and forum of Augustus from the spoils. The theater at the temple of Apollo I built on ground in great part bought with my own funds, as it was to go under the name of M. Marcellus, my son-in-law. I consecrated gifts from the spoils in the Capitol and in the temple of holy Julius and in the temple of Apollo and in the temple of Vesta and in the temple of Mars the Avenger, which cost me about 100,000,000 sesterces. A golden crown of 35,000 pounds' weight, contributed by the boroughs and colonies of Italy to the triumphs of my fifth consulship, I sent back; and afterward, as often as I was named Emperor, I declined to accept a golden crown from the boroughs and colonies, decreed by them with the same zeal as they had before shown.

Three times I have given gladiatorial exhibitions in my name, and five times in the name of my sons or nephews; at which exhibitions there fought about 10,000 men. Twice I have furnished the people in my own name a spectacle of athletes, summoned from all quarters, and a third time in the name of my grandson. I have held public games four times in my own name, but twenty-three times in those of other magistrates. For the college of fifteen men, the leader of the college being my colleague M. Agrippa, I held the century games in the consulship of C. Furnius and C. Silanus. In my thirteenth consulship I held the games of Mars the Avenger, which after that time successively . . . consuls made. I gave the people in my name, or those of my sons and grandsons, twenty-six hunts of the African beasts, either in the circus or in the forum or in the amphitheaters, in which about 3500 beasts were brought together.

I gave the people the spectacle of a naval battle across the Tiber, in the place where now is Cæsar's Grove, a place having been excavated 1800 feet long, 220 wide; in which thirty beaked ships of two and three banks of oars, and a larger number of smaller ones, fought with each other. On these fleets there fought, besides the rowers, about 3000 men.

In the temples of all the cities of the province of Asia, after my victory, I replaced the ornaments which the enemy with whom I carried on war had plundered the temples of and kept as private possessions. Of my statues in silver—pedestrian, equestrian, and on chariots—there stood about eighty in the city; which I removed, and out of the money placed golden offerings in the temple of Apollo, in my name and that of those who had honored me with the statues.

I have freed the ocean from pirates. In the slaves' war, where they fled from their masters and took arms against the republic, I returned about 30,000 to their masters as captives to receive punishment. In the war in which I conquered at Actium, all Italy voluntarily swore allegiance to me and demanded me for their leader. The provinces of Gaul, Spain, Africa, Sicily, and Sardinia took the same oath to me. Of those who then took that oath, there were more than seven hundred senators; among them about one hundred and seventy men who were afterwards made consuls and prætors up to the day when these things were written.

I have enlarged the bounds of all the provinces which had neighboring tribes that did not yet obey our empire. I have pacified the provinces of the Gauls and Spains from the part where the ocean washes them, from Gades [Cadiz] to the mouth of the Albis [Elbe]. The Alps, from the region next the Adriatic Sea to the Tuscan Sea, I have added to the empire, without unjustly making war on any tribe. The commander of the fleet under my order navigated from the mouth of the Rhine to the region of the rising sun, as far as . . . where no Roman before that time had gone either by land or sea. The Cimbri and Charydes and Semnones, and the other German peoples of the same tract, sought by ambassadors my friendship and that of the Roman people. By my order and under my auspices, two armies were led at almost the same time into Ethiopia and into Arabia called Eudæmon [Felix]; the greater part of the forces of each country were slain in battle and many men captured. Ethiopia was penetrated as far as the town of Nabata, which is next to Meroë. The army advanced into Arabia as far as the boundaries of the Sabæans, at the town of Mariba.

I added Egypt to the empire of the Roman people. Greater Armenia, when I could have made it a province on the murder of King Artaxias, I chose rather — after the example of our forefathers — to transfer as a kingdom to Tigranes, son of King Artavasdes, and grandson of King Tigranes, through Ti. Nero, who was then my stepson. And after the same nation, revolting and rebelling, had been conquered by my son Gaius, I transferred its rule to King Ariobarzanes, son of Artabazus, King of the Medes, and after his death to his son Artavasdes. On his murder, I set Tigranes, who was sprung from the royal stock of the Armenians, over that kingdom. All the provinces which across the Adriatic Sea lie toward the east, and Cyrene, I have now in great part recovered from the kings who possessed them, and who previously occupied Sicily and Sardinia in the servile war.

I have planted colonies of soldiers in Africa, Sicily, Macedonia, both Spains, Achaia, Asia, Syria, Narbonese Gaul, and Pisidia. But Italy has twenty-eight colonies planted by me, which in my lifetime were very famous and were thickly populated.

I have recovered many military standards lost by other commanders, from conquered enemies in Gaul and Spain and Dalmatia. I have forced the Parthians to restore to me the spoils and standards of three Roman armies, and seek as suppliants the friendship of the Roman people. I have replaced these standards, however, in the sanctuary of the temple of Mars the Avenger.

The Pannonian tribes, which, before my being chief of the Roman people, no army had ever attacked, being conquered by Ti. Nero, who was then my lieutenant and stepson, I have subjected to the empire of the Roman people, and have carried forward the bounds of Illyricum to the banks of the river Danube. The army of the Dacians, having crossed over the latter, was overthrown and conquered under my auspices; and my army later on, crossing the Danube, forced the Dacian tribes to endure the empire of the Roman people.

Embassies of kings were often sent to me from India, never till then seen before any Roman chief. The Bastarnians and Scythians, and the kings of the Sarmatians, both on this side and beyond the river Tanais [Don], the king of the Albanians and Iberians [in the Caucasus] and Medes, sought our friendship by embassies.

There fled to me as suppliants, the kings Tiridates of the Parthians, and afterward Phrates son of King Phrates, Artavasdes of the Medes, Artaxares of the Albanians, Dumnobellannus and Tim . . . of the Britons, Mælo of the Sugambrians, and many of the Marcomanni and Sueves. Phrates king of the Parthians, son of Orodes, sent all his sons and grandsons to me in Italy, not because overthrown in war, but seeking our friendship by the pledge of his children. Many other tribes made trial of the Roman people's good faith with me as its chief, between whom and the Roman people before had existed no interchange of friendship and embassies.

From me the nations of the Parthians and Medes, having requested it by embassies of their chief men, received kings: the Parthians Vonones, son of King Phrates, grandson of King Orodes; the Medes Ariobarzanes, son of King Artavasdes, grandson of King Ariobárzanes.

In my sixth and seventh consulate, after I had extinguished the civil wars, being by universal consent possessed of everything, I transferred the republic from my power to the control of the Roman Senate and people. To reward me for which, I was by Senate decree styled "The August," and the pillars of my temples were publicly bound with laurel, and a civic crown of oak leaves (for preserving the citizens) was fixed above my own door, and a golden shield was placed in the Julian

Senate-house, by the inscription on which shield it was testified that the Roman Senate and people gave it to me because of my virtue, clemency, justice, and piety. After that time I surpassed all in dignity, but had no greater authority in anything than those who were colleagues with me in the magistracy.

When I held my thirteenth consulate, the Senate and the order of knights and the entire Roman people called me Father of the Country; and ordained that it should be inscribed on the Senate-house and forum of Augustus, under the four-horse chariots which were placed there by Senate decree in my honor. When I wrote this, I had attained my seventy-seventh year.

The amount of money which I gave to the treasury or to the Roman populace or to the discharged soldiers was 600,000,000 denarii.

Of new works, I built the temple of Mars, of Jupiter the Thundering and the Vanquisher, of Apollo, of holy Augustus, of Quirinus, of Minerva, of Queen Juno, of Jupiter of Liberty, of the Lares, of the gods' Penates, of Youth, of the Mother of the Gods, the Lupercal, the gods' couch at the Circus, the Senate-house with the Chalcidicum, the forum of Augustus, the basilica of Julius, the theater of Marcellus, . . . the grove of the Cæsars across the Tiber.

I rebuilt the Capitol and eighty-two sacred temples, the Theater of Pompey, aqueducts, the Flaminian way.

Of expenses for circus spectacles and gladiatorial shows and athletes and huntings and sea-fight; . . . gifts . . . to colony towns in Italy, to towns in the provinces destroyed by earthquake and fire, or individually to friends and senators whose census rating I have helped out — innumerable.

TIBERIUS AND THE SENATE.

BY TACITUS.

(From the "Annals.")

[CAIUS CORNELIUS TACITUS, the greatest of Roman historians, was born about A.D. 54. He was a lawyer by profession, and stood high in public life, becoming consul under Nerva, A.D. 97; and in Trajan's time was the foremost man of letters in the empire. He wrote a history of Rome from the death of Nero to that of Domitian, part of which is lost; the "Annals," from the accession of Tiberius to the death of Nero; the life of his father-in-law Agricola; "The Manners of the Germans," and a "Dialogue on Oratory."]

CEPIO CRISPINUS began a vocation which through the miseries of the time and the audacity of men became afterwards notorious. For, needy, obscure, restless, while with secret informations he crept into the good graces of the cruel prince, and thus imperiled the life of all the most distinguished citizens, he acquired influence with one, but the hatred of all; and thus exhibited an example by following which men from being poor became rich, from being contemptible became formidable, and after bringing destruction upon others, at last perished by their own arts. . . .

About this time, Libo Drusus, of the Scribonian family, was charged with attempts against the state; and, because then first were devised those arts which for so many years preyed upon the commonweal, I will lay open with the more exactness, the beginning, progress, and issue of this affair. Firmius Catus, the senator, availing himself of an intimate friendship with Libo, induced that youth, unwary as he was, and open to impositions, to try the predictions of the Chaldeans, the mysteries of magicians, and even the interpreters of dreams; perpetually suggesting to him that "Pompey was his great-grandfather, Scribonia, once the wife of Augustus, his aunt, the Cæsars his kinsmen, and his house crowded with images:" tempting him to luxury and debt; sharing in his excesses and his obligations, in order to insure his conviction by multiplying the evidences of his guilt.

When he found he had witnesses enough, and some slaves who were also privy to Libo's conduct, he sought access to the emperor, having first by Flaccus Vescularius, a Roman knight, more intimate with Tiberius, represented to him the person he accused and the charge. Tiberius slighted not his information, but denied him access, "For that communications," he said,

"might be still interchanged through the medium of Flaccus." In the mean time he preferred Libo to the pretorship, entertained him at his table, showed no signs of aversion in his countenance, no resentment in his words (so deeply had he smothered his vengeance), and when he might have restrained all the speeches and practices of Libo, he preferred to know them; till one Junius, who was solicited to raise ghosts, gave information to Fulcinius Trio, who was distinguished for his talents as an accuser above others of that fraternity, and had an appetite for infamous notoriety. Instantly Trio seized upon the accused, went before the consuls, and demanded that the senate should take cognizance of the charge; and the fathers were summoned, with special intimation that "they were to deliberate on an affair of magnitude and the most serious importance."

Libo meanwhile putting on mourning, went from house to house, accompanied by ladies of the highest rank, supplicated his kindred, and solicited their voices to avert the dangers which threatened him. But every one of them declined his suit, each upon a different pretense, but, in reality, all from the same fear. The day the senate sat, worn out with fear and disease, or, as some relate, feigning it, he was borne in a litter to the doors of the court, and, leaning upon his brother, with suppliant hands and words he addressed himself to Tiberius, who received him with unmoved countenance. The emperor next recited the articles against him, and named the accusers, so restraining himself as to appear neither to extenuate nor aggravate the force of the charges.

To Trio and Catus, two other accusers, Fonteius Agrippa and Caius Vibius joined themselves, and strove who should have the right to implead the accused; at last, when no one would yield to the other, and Libo was come unprovided with a pleader, Vibius undertook to state the several heads of the charge, and produced articles so extravagant that they represented Libo as having consulted the fortune tellers, "Whether he should ever have wealth enough to cover the Appian road with money as far as Brundisium." There were others of the same kind, foolish, chimerical, or (to apply a milder term to them) pitiful; but in one document the accuser urged that to the names of the Cæsars or senators were appended characters of deadly or mysterious import, written in the hand of Libo. Libo denied it, and hence it was resolved to examine by torture his conscious slaves ; but seeing it was prohibited by an ancient decree of the senate, to put servants to the question in a trial touching the life of their master, the crafty Tiberius invented a new law to elude the old, and ordered these slaves to be severally sold to the public steward, that by this expedient evidence against Libo might be obtained from his servants, without violating the decree. Upon this, Libo prayed an adjournment till the next day, and returning to his own house, transmitted, by his kinsman, Publius Quirinius, his prayers to the emperor, his last resort ; but he replied, that "he must make his request to the senate."

His house was in the mean time encompassed with a band of soldiers. They made a rout even in the vestibule on purpose to be seen and heard ; when Libo, thus tortured at the very banquet which he had prepared as the last gratification of his life, called for a minister of death, grasped the hands of his slaves and put a sword into them ; but they in their confusion and efforts to shun the task, overturned the lamp set on the table ; and in this darkness, now to him the shades of death, he gave himself two stabs in the bowels ; as he groaned and fell, his freedmen sprang in, and the soldiers, seeing that he was slain, retired. The charge against him, however, was gone through with in the senate, with the same formality ; and Tiberius vowed "that he would have interceded for his life, though convicted, if he had not thus hastily died by his own hands."

His estate was divided among his accusers ; and those of them who bore the rank of senators were, without the ceremony of an election, preferred to pretorships. Then Cotta Messalinus moved, "That the image of Libo might not accompany the funerals of his posterity ;" Cneius Lentulus, "That none of the Scribonii should assume the surname of Drusus." On the motion of Pomponius Flaccus, days of thanksgiving were appointed : "That gifts should be presented to Jupiter, to Mars, and to the goddess Concord ; and that the thirteenth of September, the day on which Libo slew himself, should be an established festival," were the votes of L. Publius and Asinius Gallus, of Papius Mutilus, and of Lucius Apronius. I have related the suggestions and sycophancy of these men, to show that this is an inveterate evil in the state. Decrees of the senate were likewise made for expelling astrologers and magicians out of Italy ; and one of them, Lucius Pituanus, was precipitated from the Tarpeian rock : on Publius Marcius, the consul, at the sound of trumpet, inflicted punishment without the Esquiline gate, according to the ancient form.

Next time the senate sat, much was said against the luxury of the city by Quintus Haterius, a man of consular rank, and by Octavius Fronto, formerly pretor ; and a law was passed, "Against using vessels of solid gold in serving up repasts, and against men disgracing themselves with silken garments." Fronto went beyond this proposition, and submitted "That the quantities of silver plate, the expense of furniture, and the number of domestics might be limited." For it was yet common for senators, instead of speaking to the question, to offer whatever they judged conducive to the interest of the commonweal. Against him it was argued by Asinius Gallus, "That with the growth of the empire private riches had also increased, and that it was no new thing, but agreeable to the most primitive usage ; that the measure of private wealth in the time of the Fabricii was different from that in the time of the Scipios, but both proportioned to the condition of the state. If the state was poor, the establishments of citizens were on a small scale ; but when the state rose to such a height of magnificence, individuals advanced in splendor ; that neither in domestics, plate, or necessary expense, was there any standard of excess or frugality, but from the means of the owner. A distinction was made between the fortunes of senators and of knights, not for any natural difference between them, but that they who excelled in place, rank, and honors might excel, too, in other things, such as conduced to the health of the body, or to the relaxation of the mind ; unless it were expected that the most illustrious citizens should sustain more than their share of cares, and expose themselves to greater dangers than others, but continue destitute of every solace of fatigue and danger." His veiling a confession of vices under spurious appellations, and the kindred spirit of his hearers, gained for Gallus a ready assent. Tiberius closed the discussion with the remark, "That that was not the time for correcting these matters ; but if there were any corruption of manners, there would not be wanting one to advise a reformation."

During these transactions, Lucius Piso, after inveighing against "the intrigues of the forum, the corruption of the tribunals, and the brutal proceedings of informers, who filled the city with alarm by threats of impeachment," declared "he would retire and abandon Rome, and live in some secluded and remote part of the country." With these words he left the senate. Tiberius was stung by these remarks; and, though he had soothed him with gentle words, he also urged Piso's relations, by their authority or entreaties, to prevent his departure. The same Piso gave, soon after, no less remarkable a proof of earnest independence, by prosecuting a suit against Urgulania — a lady whom the partial friendship of Livia had set above the laws. Urgulania was conveyed for shelter to the palace, and in defiance of Piso disobeyed the summons; but Piso persisted, although Augusta complained that she was herself insulted and degraded by this proceeding. Tiberius, who thought he might humor his mother thus far, without violating the laws of civil equality, promised to attend the trial, and assist Urgulania; and thus left the palace, ordering his guards to follow at a distance. As the people flocked about him, he appeared perfectly composed, walking leisurely along, and prolonging the time by conversations on incidental topics; till, at length, Piso's friends failing in their efforts to restrain him, the empress ordered the payment of the money claimed by him. This was the issue of the affair; by which Piso lost no renown, and the credit of Tiberius was increased. The power, however, of Urgulania was so much too great for a state of civil equality, that she disdained to appear a witness in a certain cause which depended before the senate, and a pretor was sent to examine her at her own house; whereas it had been always usual even for the vestal virgins to attend the forum and courts of justice, as oft as their evidence was required.

The postponement of public affairs which happened this year, I should not mention, but that the different opinions of Cneius Piso and Asinius Gallus about it are worth knowing. Piso declared his opinion, that although Tiberius had said "that he should be absent," "for that very reason the prosecution of public business was the rather to be continued; and that for the senate and equestrian order to be able to discharge their functions in the absence of the prince, would redound to the honor of the commonwealth." As Piso had anticipated him in this display of liberal principles, Gallus said, "That nothing truly great, nor suiting the dignity of the Roman people, could be transacted except under the immediate eye of the emperor; and therefore the mass of business which came to Rome from all parts of Italy, and the influx of affairs from the provinces, should be reserved for his presence." Tiberius heard and was silent, while the debate was managed on both sides with great vehemence; but the postponement was carried.

A debate, too, arose between Gallus and the emperor; for Gallus moved, "That the magistrates should be henceforth elected but once every five years; that the lieutenant generals of legions, who served in that capacity before they had been pretors, should be pretors elect; and that the prince should nominate twelve candidates every year." It was not doubted but this motion had a deeper aim: and that by it the secret resources of imperial power were invaded. But Tiberius, as if his power would be augmented by it, argued, "That it would be inconsistent with his moderation to choose and to postpone so many; that disgusts could scarcely be avoided even in yearly elections, where the hope of success on a speedily occurring occasion formed a solace for disappointment: how great must be the resentment of those whose pretensions were put off for five years! and whence could it be foreseen that, in so long a tract of time, the same men would continue to have the same sentiments, the same connections and fortune? Even an annual designation to power made men imperious: how much more so if they bore the honor for five years! The influence of magistrates would at once be multiplied fivefold; the laws which had prescribed a proper space for exercising the diligence of candidates, and for soliciting as well as enjoying honors, would be subverted."

By this speech, in appearance popular, he prevented encroachments on the imperial power. He likewise sustained by gratuities the dignity of certain senators; hence it was the more wondered, that he received somewhat superciliously the petition of Marcus Hortalus, a young man of high family and unquestionable poverty. He was the grandson of Hortensius the orator, and had been induced by the deified Augustus, who presented him with a thousand great sestertees, to marry and have children, to prevent the extinction of a family of the highest renown. The senate were sitting in the palace, and Hortalus, having set his four children before the door, fixed his eyes, now upon the statue of Hortensius, placed amongst the orators, then upon that of Augustus; and, instead of speaking to the question, began on this wise: "Conscript fathers, I have not incurred the expense of bringing up these children, whose number and tender years you perceive, by my own choice, but in compliance with the advice of the prince. At the same time, the achievements of my ancestors demanded that their line should be perpetuated. As for myself, since by the revolution of the times I could not raise wealth, nor engage popular favor, nor cultivate the hereditary fortune of our house, — the fortune of eloquence, — I deemed it sufficient if, in my slender circumstances, I lived no disgrace to myself, no burden to others. Commanded by the emperor, I took a wife : behold the offspring of so many consuls — behold the descendants of so many dictators ! Nor is this recital made invidiously, but to excite commiseration. If you, Cæsar, continue to flourish, they shall attain to such honors as you may bestow ; meanwhile, protect from want the great-grandsons of Hortensius, the foster children of Augustus.”

The inclination of the senate was favorable : an incitement this to Tiberius the more eagerly to thwart Hortalsus. These were in effect his words — “ If all that are poor come hither and ask for provision for their children, while it will be impossible to satisfy the cravings of individuals, the public funds must fail. Our ancestors did not permit an occasional departure from the question, and the proposal of something more important to the state, instead of speaking to the subject, that we might here transact domestic matters, and augment our private resources ; thus bringing odium both on the senate and the prince, whether they grant or deny the bounties petitioned. In truth it is not a petition, but an unreasonable and monstrous importunity, thus while you are assembled upon other affairs, to rise up and seek to move the senate from their propriety by the number and infancy of his children, to transfer the violent attack to me, and as it were break open the treasury, which, if we shall exhaust by largess, we must replenish by crime. The deified Augustus gave you money, Hortalsus, but without solicitation, and on no condition that it should always be given ; otherwise diligence will languish, sloth will prevail, if men have nothing to hope or fear for themselves ; and all will look securely for the assistance of others, useless to themselves, and a burden to us.” These and similar reflections of Tiberius, though they were heard with approbation by those whose practice it is to extol whatever proceeds from princes, worthy or unworthy, were received by the majority in silence, or with low murmurs. Tiberius perceived it ; and having paused a little, said — “ His answer was directed particularly to Hor-talus; but if the senate thought fit, he would give his sons two hundred great sesterces each." The others returned thanks; but Hortalus said nothing, either from perturbation, or that amidst the embarrassments of adversity he remembered the dignity of his noble ancestry: nor did Tiberius ever after show pity, though the house of Hortensius was fallen into shameful distress.

The same year, the boldness of a single slave had, but for early prevention, torn the state with discord and intestine war. A slave of Posthumus Agrippa, named Clemens, with a spirit that soared high above his condition, having learnt the death of Augustus, conceived a design of sailing to Phanasia, and seizing Agrippa, by art or force, to carry him to the armies in Germany; but the slowness of the laden vessel defeated his bold purpose, for Agrippa was already murdered. Hence he formed a purpose still more daring and perilous; he stole the funeral ashes, and sailing to Cosa, a promontory of Etruria, hid himself in secluded places till his hair and beard were grown long; for in age and person he was not unlike his master. Then a report, originated by chosen emissaries and the associates of his plot, "that Agrippa lived," began to spread; at first by secret communications, as usual in matters of a dangerous nature; but becoming soon a prevailing rumor, it filled the greedy ears of all the most credulous, or was encouraged by persons of a turbulent disposition, and therefore desirous of political convulsions. He himself, when he entered the neighboring towns, did it at shut of day; never to be seen publicly, nor long in the same place; but as truth is strengthened by observation and time, pretenses by haste and uncertainty, he either departed as soon as his arrival began to be rumored, or arrived before it.

It flew through Italy in the mean time,— "That by the bounty of the gods, Agrippa was preserved." It was already believed at Rome. On his arrival at Ostia he was greeted by an immense concourse, and in the city by clandestine meetings. Tiberius was bewildered with perplexing doubts, whether he should repress his slave by the power of the sword, or suffer the unfounded persuasion of the public to vanish by the unaided operation of time; now he thought that nothing was to be slighted; now, that not everything was to be dreaded; wavering between shame and fear: at last he committed the affair to Sallustius Crispus. Crispus chose two of his clients (some say two soldiers) and directed them to go directly to him, to feign conviction of his identity, to present him with money, to promise to be faithful to him and hazard everything for him. They executed these orders, and afterwards discovering that at night he was without guards, they took a band of men chosen for the purpose, and carried him to the palace, gagged and bound. To Tiberius, when he asked him — “How he was become Agrippa?” he is said to have answered — “Just as you became Cæsar.” He could not be induced to discover his accomplices; neither dared Tiberius venture to execute him publicly, but ordered him to be dispatched in a secret part of the palace, and his body to be carried away privately; and, though many of the prince’s household, many knights and senators, were said to have supported him with money, and assisted him with their counsels, no inquiry followed. . . .

The law of violated majesty, in the meantime, was advancing rapidly; and an informer charged Apuleia Varilia, grand-niece to Augustus and descending from his sister, with vilifying the deified Augustus, Tiberius, and his mother, in defamatory language; and though nearly allied to the Emperor, with having committed adultery. Concerning the adultery, sufficient provision was thought to be already made by the Julian law. In the charge of treason, Tiberius desired that a distinction should be made: “If she had spoken irreverently of Augustus, she must be condemned; but for invectives against himself he would not have her called to account. The Consul asked him, “What were his sentiments respecting the aspersions of his mother, which the accused was charged with uttering?” To this he made no answer; but at the next sitting of the Senate, he prayed too in her name “that no words in whatsoever manner spoken against her might be imputed to any one as a crime:” he thus caused Apuleia to be released from the charges of treason; of her punishment too for adultery he begged a mitigation, and prevailed that “according to the example of our ancestors, she should be removed by her kindred two hundred miles from Rome.” Manlius, her adulterer, was banished Italy and Africa.

TIBERIUS AND SEJANUS.

BY VELLEIUS PATERCULUS.

[CAIUS (OR MARCUS) VELLEIUS PATERCULUS was born in Capua about B.C. 19. His father was a cavalry officer, and he was a military tribune in the Eastern army, then cavalry prefect, and finally legate (vice-commander) under Tiberius, A.D. 4 and after. He was made questor in A.D. 7, and pretor in 15. He wrote a compendium of Roman history down to his own time, which of course gives only the favorable view of Tiberius and his great minister, but is perhaps a useful corrective to the dead black of Tacitus.]

YOU may now, Marcus Vinicius, conceive Cæsar as great in the character of a leader in war, as you see him in that of a prince in peace. When he had united his forces, those under his immediate command, and those who had joined him as auxiliaries, and had brought into one camp ten legions, more than seventy auxiliary cohorts, fourteen squadrons of horse, more than ten thousand veterans, a great number of volunteers, and the numerous cavalry of the king, (in short, so great an army, as had never been seen in one place since the civil wars,) every one was rejoiced at the sight, feeling the utmost confidence of success from their numbers. But the general, the best judge of his own proceedings, preferring the advantageous to the showy, and, as I always saw him act in every war, pursuing what was eligible in itself, not what was generally recommended, having allowed the army that had joined him to rest a few days, to recruit the strength of the men after their march, and having decided that it rendered his force too large to be kept in order, and too unwieldy to be properly managed, he resolved to send it away; and, after accompanying it through a long and most fatiguing march, the difficulty of which can hardly be described, (in order that as none would venture to attack the whole, so the whole, each nation from apprehension for its own territories, might abstain from attacking either of the parties on their separation,) he sent it back to the parts from which it came, and returning himself to Siscia, in the beginning of a very severe winter, appointed lieutenant-generals, of whom I was one, to command the several divisions in winter quarters.

His conduct was truly amazing, not ostentatious, but distinguished by real and solid virtue and usefulness, most delightful to experience, most exemplary in its humanity. During the whole time of the German and Pannonian wars, not one of us, or of those who preceded or followed our steps, was at any time sick, but his recovery and health were promoted by Cæsar with as much care as if his thoughts, which were obliged to attend to such an infinite variety of laborious business, had no employment but this alone. There was a carriage kept always in readiness for such as wanted it, and a litter for general use, of which I, as well as others, experienced the benefit. Physicians, too, proper kinds of food, and the warm bath, introduced for that sole purpose, contributed to the health of all. Houses and domestics, indeed, were wanting, but no accommodation that could either be afforded or desired in them. To this I shall add what every one, who was present on the occasions, will readily acknowledge to be true, as well as the other circumstances that I have mentioned. The general alone always traveled on horseback; he alone, with those whom he invited during the greater part of the summer campaigns, sat at meals. To such as forbore to follow this strict mode of living, he was very indulgent, provided they did no harm by their example; he frequently admonished and reproved, very rarely punished; acting a middle part, dissembling his knowledge of most faults, and preventing the commission of others. The winter contributed much to bring the war to a conclusion. In the following summer, all Pannonia begged for peace; so that the remains of war were confined to Dalmatia. So many thousands of brave men who had lately threatened Italy with slavery, surrendering their arms, (which they had employed at a river called Bathinus,) and prostrating themselves at the knees of Cæsar, together with Bato and Pines, leaders of high reputation, one captive, the other submitting, formed a scene which I hope to describe at large in my regular history. In autumn, the victorious army was led back into winter quarters; and the command in chief of all the troops was given by Cæsar to Marcus Lepidus, a man in fame and fortune nearest to the Cæsars; and every one, the longer and better he knows and becomes acquainted with him, the more he loves and admires him, and acknowledges him to be a credit to the great names from which he is descended.

Cæsar now turned his thoughts and arms to the remaining part of the war in Dalmatia; in which country, how useful an assistant and lieutenant-general he found in my brother, Magius Celer Velleianus, is testified by his own and his father's declaration; and the record of the high honors conferred on him by Cæsar at his triumph confirms it. In the beginning of the summer, Lepidus, having drawn out the army from winter quarters, and making his way to join his general Tiberius, through nations unimpaired in strength, still free from the calamities of war, and, in consequence, daring and ferocious, he succeeded, after struggling with the difficulty of the passes, and the force of the enemy, and making great havoc of those who opposed him, cutting down their corn, burning their houses, and slaughtering their men, in reaching the quarters of Cæsar, before whom he appeared exulting with victory and laden with spoil. In reward for these services, which, if performed on his own account, would have entitled him to a triumph, he was honored with triumphal decorations; the will of the Senate concurring with the judgment of the princes. That summer brought this important war to a conclusion, for the Perustæ and Desitiates of Dalmatia, notwithstanding that they were almost impregvably secured by their mountainous countries, by the fierceness of their temper, by their surprising military skill, and more especially by the narrow passes of their forests, were at length, after being brought to the utmost extremities, reduced to quiet, not by the orders, but by the arms and personal exertions, of Cæsar himself. In all this great war in Germany, I could observe nothing more noble, nothing more deserving of admiration, than that the general never thought any opportunity of success so attractive as to justify a squandering of the lives of his soldiers; he ever judged the safest means the most honorable, and preferred the approbation of his conscience to the acquisition of fame; nor were the counsels of the general ever swayed by the feelings of the army, but the army was always guided by the wisdom of the general.

The same courage and good fortune which had animated Tiberius at the beginning of his command, still continued to attend him. After he had broken down the force of the enemy in various expeditions by land and sea, and had settled important affairs in Gaul, and composed, by coercion more than by punishment, the most violent commotions of the populace at Vienne; and after the Senate and people of Rome, on a request being made by his father that he might be invested with authority equal to his own in all the provinces and armies, had passed a decree to that effect, (for it would indeed have been unreasonable, if what he had secured should not be under his command, and if he, who was the first to bring succor, should not be thought entitled to a share of honor,) he returned to Rome, and celebrated his triumph over Pannonia and Dalmatia, which had been long due to him, but had been deferred on account of the continuance of the wars. His triumph was magnificent, but who can be surprised at magnificence in a Cæsar? Who, however, will not admire the kindness of fortune in this, that fame did not tell us, as was usual, that all the greatest leaders of the enemy were slain, but that the triumph displayed them to us in chains? On this occasion my brother and I had the happiness of accompanying him, among the most eminent personages, and those honored with the principal distinctions.

Among other instances in which the singular moderation of Tiberius Cæsar shines forth conspicuously, this claims our admiration, that although, beyond all doubt, he merited seven triumphs, he was yet satisfied with three. For who can doubt that, for reducing Armenia, fixing a king on its throne, (on whose head he placed the diadem with his own hand,) and for regulating the affairs of the East, he ought to have enjoyed a triumph? Or that, for his victories over the Rhæti and Vindelici, he deserved to enter the city in a triumphal car? And when, after his adoption, he exhausted the strength of Germany in three years of continued war, the same honor ought to have been offered him, and accepted by him. Again, after the disaster of the army of Varus, the rapid subjugation of the same Germany ought to have furnished a triumph for the same consummate general. But with respect to him you can hardly determine whether you should admire more his extraordinary exertions amid toil and danger, or his moderation with regard to honors.

We have now arrived at a period in which very great apprehension prevailed. For Augustus Cæsar, having sent his grandson Germanicus to finish the remainder of the war in Germany, and intending to send his son Tiberius into Illyricum, to settle in peace what he had subdued in war, proceeded with the latter into Campania, with the design of escorting him, and at the same time to be present at the exhibition of athletic sports, which the Neapolitans had resolved to give in honor of him. Although he had before this felt symptoms of debility and declining health, yet, as the vigor of his mind witlstood them, he accompanied his son, and, parting from him at Beneventum, proceeded to Nola; where, finding that his health grew worse every day, and well knowing whose presence was requisite to the accomplishment of his wish to leave all things in safety after him, he hastily recalled his son, who hurried back to the father of his country, and arrived earlier than was expected. Augustus then declared that his mind was at ease; and being folded in the embrace of Tiberius, to whom he recommended the accomplishment of his father's views and his own, he resigned himself to die whenever the Fates should ordain. He was in some degree revived by the sight and conversation of the person most dear to him; but the destinies soon overpowering every effort for his recovery, and his body resolving itself into its first principles, he restored to heaven his celestial spirit, in the seventy-sixth year of his age, and in the consulate of Pompey and Apuleius.

The universal apprehensions excited by this event; the alarm of the Senate, the consternation of the people, the fears of the world, and the narrow line between safety and destruction on which we stood on that occasion, I have neither leisure to describe in this hasty narrative, nor can he who has leisure describe satisfactorily. One thing I can join with the voice of the public in declaring, that whereas we had dreaded the total ruin of the world, we did not perceive that it felt the slightest shock; and so powerful was the majesty of one man, that there was no occasion for arms, either to protect the good or restrain the bad. Yet there was one struggle, as it may be called, in the state, between the Senate and people of Rome on one side, insisting on Cæsar's assuming his father's station, and himself on the other, desiring leave to stand on a level with his countrymen, instead of acting in the exalted character of a prince. At length he was overcome by reason, not by the attractions of honor; because he saw that whatever he did not take under his care would be lost. His case was singular in this, that he refused the sovereignty almost as long as others fought to obtain it. After he had seen his father restored to heaven, and had paid respect to his body with human, and to his name with divine honors, the first act of his administration was the regulation of the elections, on a plan left by the deified Augustus in his own handwriting. At this time, my brother and I had the honor, as Cæsar's candidates, of being elected pretors, in the places next to men of the highest rank, and the priests; and we were remarkable in being the last recommended by Augustus, and the first by Tiberius Cæsar.

The Commonwealth quickly reaped the fruit of its determination and its wish; and we soon learned what we must have suffered if that wish had not been complied with, and how greatly we had gained by its being fulfilled. For the army which was serving in Germany under the command of Germanicus, and the legions which were in Illyricum, being both seized at the same time with a kind of outrageous fury, and a violent passion for spreading universal disorder, demanded a new leader, a new constitution, a new republic; they even had the confidence to threaten that they would give laws to the Senate, and to the prince; and they attempted to fix the amount of their pay, and the period of their service. They proceeded even to use their arms; the sword was drawn; and the impunity which was allowed them broke forth almost into the extremity of violence. They wanted, indeed, a head, to lead them against their country, but there were numbers ready to follow. However, the mature wisdom of the veteran emperor, who, refusing most of their demands, promised some indulgences without lowering his dignity, soon allayed and suppressed all these outrageous proceedings; severe vengeance being inflicted on the authors of the mutiny, and milder punishment on the rest. On this occasion, as Germanicus exerted his usual activity, so Drusus, who was sent by his father expressly to extinguish the flame of this military tumult, blazing, as it was, with enormous fury, enforced the ancient and primitive discipline, and by strong measures, though not without danger to himself, put a stop to those excesses, so pernicious both in the act and in the example; and reduced to obedience the soldiers that pressed around him, by the aid of the very swords with which he was beset. In these efforts he found an excellent assistant in Junius Blæsus, a man of whom it is difficult to decide whether his services were greater in the camp or in the city. A few years after, being proconsul in Africa, he gained triumphal decorations and the title of imperator. And being intrusted with the presidency of Spain, and the command of the army there, he was able, by his excellent abilities, and with the reputation which he had gained in the war in Illyricum, to keep the province in perfect peace and tranquillity; for while his fidelity to the emperor led him to adopt the most salutary measures, he had likewise ample authority to carry into execution what he planned. His care and fidelity were closely copied by Dolabella, a man of the noblest simplicity of character, when he commanded on the coast of Illyricum.

Of the transactions of the last sixteen years, which have passed in the view and are fresh in the memory of all, who shall presume to give a full account? Cæsar deified his parent, not by arbitrary authority, but by paying religious respect to his character. He did not call him a divinity, but made him one. In that time, credit has been restored to mercantile affairs, sedition has been banished from the forum, corruption from the Campus Martius, and discord from the senate house; justice, equity, and industry, which had long lain buried in neglect, have been revived in the state; authority has been given to the magistrates, majesty to the Senate, and solemnity to the courts of justice; the dissensions in the theater have been suppressed, and all men have had either a desire excited in them, or a necessity imposed on them, of acting with integrity. Virtuous acts are honored, wicked deeds are punished. The humble respects the powerful without dreading him; the powerful takes precedence of the humble without contemning him. When were provisions more moderate in price? When were the blessings of peace more abundant? Augustan peace, diffused over all the regions of the east and the west, and all that lies between the south and north, preserves every corner of the world free from all dread of predatory molestation. Fortuitous losses, not only of individuals, but of cities, the munificence of the prince is ready to relieve. The cities of Asia have been repaired; the provinces have been secured from the oppression of their governors. Honor promptly rewards the deserving, and the punishment of the guilty, if slow, is certain. Interest gives place to justice, solicitation to merit. For the best of princes teaches his countrymen to act rightly by his own practice; and while he is the greatest in power, is still greater in example.

It is seldom that men who have arrived at eminence have not had powerful coadjutors in steering the course of their fortunes; thus the two Scipios had the two Lælii, whom they set in every respect on a level with themselves; thus the Emperor Augustus had Marcus Agrippa, and after him Statilius Taurus. The newness of these men's families proved no obstruction to their attainment of many consulships and triumphs, and of sacerdotal offices in great numbers. For great affairs demand great coöperators; (in small matters the smallness of assistance does not mar the proceedings;) and it is for the interest of the public that what is necessary for business should be eminent in dignity, and that usefulness should be fortified with influence. In conformity with these examples, Tiberius Cæsar has had, and still has, Ælius Sejanus, a most excellent coadjutor in all the toils of government: a man whose father was chief of the equestrian order, and who, on his mother's side, is connected with some of the most illustrious and ancient families, ennobled by high preferments; who has brothers, cousins, and an uncle, of consular rank; who is remarkable for fidelity in the discharge of his duties, and for ability to endure fatigue, the constitution of his body corresponding with the vigor of his mind; a man of pleasing gravity, and of unaffected cheerfulness; appearing, in the despatch of business, like a man quite at ease; assuming nothing to himself, and hence receiving every honor; always deeming himself inferior to other men's estimation of him; calm in looks and conversation, but in mind indefatigably vigilant.

In esteem for Sejanus's virtues the judgment of the public has long vied with that of the prince. Nor is it at all new with the Senate and people of Rome to consider the most meritorious as the most noble. The men of old, before the First Punic War, three hundred years ago, exalted to the summit of dignity Titus Coruncanius, a man of no family, bestowing on him, besides other honors, the office of chief pontiff; they promoted Spurius Carvilius, a man of equestrian birth, and afterwards Marcus Cato, another new man, (not a native citizen, but born at Tusculum,) as well as Mummius Achaicus, to consulships, censorships, and triumphs. And they who considered Caius Marius, a man of the most obscure origin, as unquestionably the first in the Roman nation, before his sixth consulship; who had so high an esteem for Marcus Tullius that he could obtain almost by his sole recommendation, the highest offices for whomsoever he chose; and who refused nothing to Asinius Pollio which men of the noblest birth had to obtain with infinite labor, were certainly of opinion that he who possessed the greatest virtues, was entitled to the greatest honors. The natural imitation of other men's examples led Cæsar to make trial of Sejanus, and occasioned Sejanus to bear a share of the burdens of the prince; and induced the Senate and people of Rome cheerfully to call to the guardianship of their safety him whom they saw best qualified for the charge.

Having exhibited a general view of the administration of Tiberius Cæsar, let us now enumerate a few particulars respecting it. With what wisdom did he bring to Rome Rhaseuporis, the murderer of Cotys, his own brother's son, and partner in the kingdom, employing in that affair the services of Pomponius Flaccus, a man of consular rank, naturally inclined to all that is honorable, and by pure virtue always meriting fame, but never eagerly pursuing it! With what solemnity as a senator and a judge, not as a prince, does he . . . hear causes in person! How speedily did he crush . . . when he became ungrateful, and attempted innovations! With what precepts did he form the mind of his Germanicus, and train him in the rudiments of war in his own camp, so that he afterwards hailed him the conqueror of Germany! What honors did he heap on him in his youth, the magnificence of his triumph corresponding to the grandeur of his exploits! How often has he honored the people with donations! How readily has he, when he could do it with the sanction of the Senate, supplied senators with property suitable to their rank, neither encouraging extravagance, nor suffering honorable poverty to be stripped of dignity! In what an honorable style did he send his Germanicus to the transmarine provinces! With what energy, employing Drusus as a minister and coadjutor in his plans, did he force Maroboduus, who was clinging to the soil of the kingdom which he had possessed, to come forth, like a serpent concealed in the earth, (let me speak without offense to his majesty,) by the salutary charms of his counsels! How honorably, yet how far from negligently, does he keep watch over him! How formidable a war, excited by the Gallic chief Sacrovir and Julius Florus, did he suppress, and with such amazing expedition and energy, that the Roman people learned that they were conquerors, before they knew that they were at war, and the news of victory outstripped the news of the danger! The African war too, perilous as it was, and daily increasing in strength, was quickly terminated under his auspices and direction.

What structures has he erected in his own name, and those of his family! With what dutiful munificence, even exceeding belief, is he building a temple to his father! With how laudable a generosity of disposition is he repairing even the buildings of Cnæus Pompey, that were consumed by fire! Whatever has been at any time conspicuously great, he regards as his own and under his protection. With what liberality has he at all times, and particularly at the recent fire on the Cælian Mount, repaired the losses of people of all conditions out of his own property! With what perfect ease to the public does he manage the raising of troops, a business of constant and extreme apprehension, without the consternation attendant on a levy!

If either nature allows us, or the humility of man may take upon itself, to make a modest complaint of such things to the gods, what has he deserved that, in the first place, Drusus Libo should form his execrable plots; and, in the next, that Silius and Piso should follow his example, one of whom he raised to dignity, the other he promoted? That I may pass to greater matters, (though he accounted even these very great,) what has he deserved, that he should lose his sons in their youth, or his grandson by Drusus? But we have only spoken of causes for sorrow, we must now come to occasions of shame. With what violent griefs, Marcus Vinicius, has he felt his mind tortured in the last three years! How long has his heart been consumed with affliction, and, what is most unhappy, such as he was obliged to conceal, while he was compelled to grieve, and to feel indignation and shame, at the conduct of his daughter-in-law and his grandson! And the sorrows of this period have been aggravated by the loss of his most excellent mother, a woman who resembled the gods more than human beings; and whose power no man ever felt but in the relief of distress or the conferring of honor.

Let our book be concluded with a prayer. O Jupiter Capitolinus, O Jupiter Stator! O Mars Gradivus, author of the Roman name! O Vesta, guardian of the eternal fire! O all ye deities who have exalted the present magnitude of the Roman empire to a position of supremacy over the world, guard, preserve, and protect, I entreat and conjure you, in the name of the Commonwealth, our present state, our present peace, [our present prince!] And when he shall have completed a long course on earth, grant him successors to the remotest ages, and such as shall have abilities to support the empire of the world as powerfully as we have seen him support it!

THE CHARIOT RACE AT ANTIOCH.¹

By LEW WALLACE.

(From "Ben-Hur : A Tale of the Christ.")

[LEWIS WALLACE: generally known as Lew Wallace, American general, lawyer, diplomatist, and novelist, was born at Brookville, Ind., April 10, 1827. He served as lieutenant in the Mexican War, attained the rank of major general of volunteers during the Civil War, and from 1881 to 1885 was United States minister to Turkey. When not engaged in public service he has practiced law and devoted himself to literature. He is chiefly celebrated as the author of the historical novel, "Ben-Hur" (1880), which has had a phenomenal sale. He has written two other historical novels, "The Fair God" and "The Prince of India"; "The Boyhood of Christ"; and a life of Benjamin Harrison. Died

At length the recess came to an end.

The trumpeters blew a call, at which the absentees rushed back to their places. At the same time some attendants appeared in the arena, and, climbing upon the division wall, went to an entablature near the second goal at the west end, and placed upon it seven wooden balls; then returning to the first goal, upon an entablature there they set up seven other pieces of wood hewn to represent dolphins.

"What shall they do with the balls and fishes, O sheik?" asked Balthasar.

"Hast thou never attended a race?"

"Never before; and hardly know I why I am here."

"Well, they are to keep the count. At the end of each round run thou shalt see one ball and one fish taken down."

The preparations were now complete, and presently a trumpeter in gaudy uniform arose by the editor, ready to blow the signal of commencement promptly at his order. Straightway the stir of the people and the hum of their conversation died away. Every face near by, and in the lessening perspective, turned to the east, as all eyes settled upon the gates of the six stalls which shut in the competitors.

The unusual flush upon his face gave proof that even Simonides had caught the universal excitement. Ilderim pulled his beard fast and furious.

"Look now for the Roman," said the fair Egyptian to Esther, who did not hear her, for, with close-drawn veil and beating heart, she sat watching for Ben-Hur.

¹ Copyright, 1880, by Harper and Brothers. Used by permission.

The structure containing the stalls, it should be observed, was in form of the segment of a circle, retired on the right so that its central point was projected forward, and midway the course, on the starting side of the first goal. Every stall consequently was equally distant from the starting line or chalked rope above mentioned.

The trumpet sounded short and sharp, whereupon the starters, one for each chariot, leaped down from behind the pillars of the goal, ready to give assistance if any of the four proved unmanageable. Again the trumpet blew, and simultaneously the gatekeepers threw the stalls open.

First appeared the mounted attendants of the charioteers, five in all, Ben-Hur having rejected the service. The chalked line was lowered to let them pass, then raised again.

They were beautifully mounted, yet scarcely observed as they rode forward; for all the time the tramping of eager horses, and the voices of drivers scarcely less eager, were heard behind in the stalls, so that one might not look away an instant from the gaping doors.

The chalked line up again, the gatekeepers called their men, instantly the ushers on the balcony waved their hands, and shouted with all their strength, "Down! down!"

As well have whistled to stay a storm.

Forth from each stall, like missiles in a volley from so many great guns, rushed the six fours; and up the vast assemblage arose, electrified and irrepressible, and, leaping upon the benches, filled the circus and the air above it with yells and screams. This was the time for which they had waited! this the moment of supreme interest treasured up in talk and dreams since the proclamation of the games!

"He is come — look!" cried Iras, pointing to Messala.

"I see him," answered Esther, looking at Ben-Hur.

The veil was withdrawn. For an instant the little Jewess was brave. An idea of the joy there is in doing an heroic deed under the eyes of a multitude came to her, and she understood ever after how, at such times, the souls of men, in frenzy of performance, laugh at death or forget it utterly.

The competitors were now under view from nearly every part of the circus, yet the race was not begun; they had first to make the chalked line successfully. The line was stretched for the purpose of equalizing the start. If it were dashed upon, discomfiture of man and horses might be apprehended; on the other hand, to approach it timidly was to incur the hazard of being thrown behind in the beginning of the race; and that was certain forfeit of the great advantage always striven for—the position next the division wall on the inner side of the course.

This trial, its perils and consequences, the spectators knew thoroughly; and if the opinion of old Nestor, uttered what time he handed the reins to his son, were true—

It is not strength but art obtained the prize,
And to be swift is less than to be wise—

all on the benches might well look for warning of the winner to be now given, justifying the interest with which they breathlessly watched for the result.

The arena swam in a dazzle of light; yet each driver looked first thing for the rope, then for the coveted inner line. So, all six aiming at the same point and speeding furiously, a collision seemed inevitable; nor that merely. What if the editor, at the last moment, dissatisfied with the start, should withhold the signal to drop the rope? Or if he should not give it in time?

The crossing was about two hundred and fifty feet in width. Quick the eye, steady the hand, unerring the judgment required. If now one look away! or his mind wander! or a rein slip! And what attraction in the ensemble of the thousands over the spreading balcony! Calculating upon the natural impulse to give one glance,—just one,—in sooth of curiosity or vanity, malice might be there with an artifice; while friendship and love, did they serve the late result, might be as deadly as malice.

The divine last touch in perfecting the beautiful is animation. Can we accept the saying, then these latter days, so tame in pastime and dull in sports, have scarcely anything to compare to the spectacle offered by the six contestants. Let the reader try to fancy it; let him first look down upon the arena, and see it glistening in its frame of dull gray granite walls; let him then, in this perfect field, see the chariots, tight of wheel, very graceful, and ornate as paint and burnishing can make them, Messala's rich with ivory and gold; let him see the drivers, erect and statuesque, undisturbed by the motion of the cars, their limbs naked, and fresh and ruddy with the healthful polish of the baths—in their right hands goads, suggestive of torture dreadful to the thought—in their left hands, held in careful separation, and high, that they may not interfere with view of the steeds, the reins passing taut from the fore ends of the carriage poles; let him see the fours, chosen for beauty as well as speed; let him see them in magnificent action, their masters not more conscious of the situation and all that is asked or hoped from them—their heads tossing, nostrils in play, now distent, now contracted—limbs too dainty for the sand which they touch but to spurn—limbs slender, yet with impact crushing as hammers, every muscle of the rounded bodies instinct with glorious life, swelling, diminishing, justifying the world in taking from them its ultimate measure of force; finally, along with chariots, drivers, horses, let the reader see the accompanying shadows fly, and with such distinctness as the picture comes he may share the satisfaction and deeper pleasure of those to whom it was a thrilling fact, not a feeble fancy. Every age has its plenty of sorrows; Heaven help where there are no pleasures!

The competitors having started each on the shortest line for the position next the wall, yielding would be like giving up the race; and who dared yield? It is not in common nature to change a purpose in mid career; and the cries of encouragement from the balcony were indistinguishable: a roar which had the same effect upon all the drivers.

The fours neared the rope together. Then the trumpeter by the editor's side blew a signal vigorously. Twenty feet away it was not heard. Seeing the action, however, the judges dropped the rope, and not an instant too soon, for the hoof of one of Messala's horses struck it as it fell. Nothing daunted, the Roman shook out his long lash, loosed the reins, leaned forward, and, with a triumphant shout, took the wall.

"Jove with us! Jove with us!" yelled all the Roman faction, in a frenzy of delight.

As Messala turned in, the bronze lion's head at the end of his axle caught the fore leg of the Athenian's right-hand trace-mate, flinging the brute over against its yokefellow. Both staggered, struggled, and lost their headway. The ushers had their will, at least in part. The thousand held their breath with horror; only up where the consul sat was there shouting.

"Jove with us!" screamed Drusus, frantically.

"He wins! Jove with us!" answered his associates, seeing Messala speed on.

Tablet in hand, Sanballat turned to them; a crash from the course below stopped his speech, and he could not but look that way.

Messala having passed, the Corinthian was the only contestant on the Athenian's right, and to that side the latter tried to turn his broken four; and then, as ill fortune would have it, the wheel of the Byzantine, who was next on the left, struck the tailpiece of his chariot, knocking his feet from under him. There was a crash, a scream of rage and fear, and the unfortunate Cleanthes fell under the hoofs of his own steeds; a terrible sight, against which Esther covered her eyes.

On swept the Corinthian, on the Byzantine, on the Sidonian.

Sanballat looked for Ben-Hur, and turned again to Drusus and his coterie.

"A hundred sestertii on the Jew!" he cried.

"Taken!" answered Drusus.

"Another hundred on the Jew!" shouted Sanballat.

Nobody appeared to hear him. He called again; the situation below was too absorbing, and they were too busy shouting. "Messala! Messala! Jove with us!"

When the Jewess ventured to look again, a party of workmen were removing the horses and broken car; another party were taking off the man himself; and every bench on which there was a Greek was vocal with execrations and prayers for vengeance. Suddenly she dropped her hands; Ben-Hur, unhurt, was to the front, coursing freely forward along with the Roman! Behind them, in a group, followed the Sidonian, the Corinthian, and the Byzantine.

The race was on, the souls of the racers were in it; over them bent the myriads.

* * * * *

When the dash for position began, Ben-Hur, as we have seen, was on the extreme left of the six. For a moment, like the others, he was half blinded by the light in the arena; yet he managed to catch sight of his antagonists and divine their purpose. At Messala, who was more than an antagonist to him, he gave one searching look. The air of passionless hauteur characteristic of the fine patrician face was there as of old, and so was the Italian beauty, which the helmet rather increased; but more—it may have been a jealous fancy, or the effect of the brassy shadow in which they were at the moment cast, still the Israelite thought he saw the soul of the man as through a glass darkly, cruel, cunning, desperate; not so excited as determined—a soul in a tension of watchfulness and fierce resolve. In a time not longer than was required to turn to his four again, Ben-Hur felt his own resolution harden to a like temper. At whatever costs, at all hazards, he would humble this enemy! Prize, friends, wagers, honor—everything that can be thought of as a possible interest in the race was lost in the one deliberate purpose. Regard for life even should not hold him back. Yet there was no passion on his part; no blinding rush of heated blood from heart to brain and back again; no impulse to fling himself upon fortune; he did not believe in fortune; far otherwise. He had his plan, and, confiding in himself, he settled to the task, never more observant, never more capable. The air about him seemed to glow with renewed transparency.

When not halfway across the arena, he saw that Messala's rush would, if there were no collision, and the rope fell, give him the wall; that the rope would fall, he ceased as soon to doubt; and, further, it came to him, a sudden flashlike insight, that Messala knew it was to be let drop at the last moment (prearrangement with the editor could safely reach that point in the contest); and it suggested, what more Roman-like than for the official to lend himself to a countryman who, besides being so popular, had also so much at stake? There could be no other accounting for the confidence with which Messala pushed his four forward the instant the competitors were prudentially checking their fours.

It is one thing to see a necessity and another to act upon it. Ben-Hur yielded the wall for the time. The rope fell, and all the fours but his sprang into the course under the urgency of voice and lash. He drew head to the right, and, with all the speed of his Arabs, darted across the trails of his opponents, the angle of movement being such as to lose the least time and gain the greatest possible advance. So, while the spectators were shivering at the Athenian's mishap, and the Sidonian, Byzantine, and Corinthian were striving, with such skill as they possessed, to avoid involvement in the ruin, Ben-Hur swept around and took the course neck and neck with Messala, though on the outside. The marvelous skill shown in making the change thus from the extreme left across to the right without appreciable loss did not fail the sharp eyes upon the benches; the circus seemed to rock and rock again with prolonged applause. Then Esther clasped her hands in glad surprise; then Sanballat, smiling, offered his hundred sesterii a second time without a taker; and then the Romans began to doubt, thinking Messala might have found an equal, if not a master, and that in an Israelite!

And now, racing together side by side, a narrow interval between them, the two neared the second goal.

The pedestal of the three pillars there, viewed from the west, was a stone wall in the form of a half-circle, around which the course and opposite balcony were bent in exact parallelism. Making this turn was considered in all respects the most telling test of a charioteer; it was, in fact, the very feat in which Orestes failed. As an involuntary admission on the part of the spectators, a hush fell over all the circus, so that for the first time in the race the rattle and clang of the cars plunging after the tugging steeds were distinctly heard. Then it would seem Messala observed Ben-Hur, and recognized him; and at once the audacity of the man flamed out in an astonishing manner.

"Down Eros, up Mars!" he shouted, whirling his lash with practiced hand. — "Down Eros, up Mars!" he repeated, and caught the well-doing Arabs of Ben-Hur a cut the like of which they had never known.

The blow was seen in every quarter, and the amazement was universal. The silence deepened; upon the benches behind the consul the boldest held his breath, waiting for the outcome. Only a moment thus: then, involuntarily, down from the balcony, as thunder falls, burst the indignant cry of the people.

The four sprang forward affrighted. No hand had ever been laid upon them except in love; they had been nurtured ever so tenderly; and as they grew, their confidence in man became a lesson to men beautiful to see. What should such dainty natures do under such indignity but leap as from death?

Forward they sprang as with one impulse, and forward leaped the car. Past question every experience is serviceable to us. Where got Ben-Hur the large hand and mighty grip which helped him now so well? Where but from the oar with which so long he fought the sea? And what was the spring of the floor under his feet to the dizzy eccentric lurch with which in the old time the trembling ship yielded to the beat of staggering billows, drunk with their power? So he kept his place, and gave the four free rein, and called to them in soothing voice, trying merely to guide them round the dangerous turn; and before the fever of the people began to abate, he had back the mastery. Nor that only: on approaching the first goal he was again side by side with Messala, bearing with him the sympathy and admiration of every one not a Roman. So clearly was the feeling shown, so vigorous its manifestation, that Messala, with all his boldness, felt it unsafe to trifle further.

As the cars whirled around the goal, Esther caught sight of Ben-Hur's face — a little pale, a little higher raised, otherwise calm, even placid.

Immediately a man climbed on the entablature at the west end of the division wall, and took down one of the conical wooden balls. A dolphin on the east entablature was taken down at the same time. In like manner, the second ball and second dolphin disappeared. And then the third ball and third dolphin.

Three rounds concluded: still Messala held the inside position; still Ben-Hur moved with him side by side; still the other competitors followed as before. The contest began to have the appearance of one of the double races which became so popular in Rome during the latter Cæsarean period — Messala and Ben-Hur in the first, the Corinthian, Sidonian, and Byzantine in the second. Meantime the ushers succeeded in returning the multitude to their seats, though the clamor continued to run the rounds, keeping, as it were, even pace with the rivals in the course below. In the fifth round the Sidonian succeeded in getting a place outside of Ben-Hur, but lost it directly.

The sixth round was entered upon without change of relative position. Gradually the speed had been quickened — gradually the blood of the competitors warmed with the work. Men and beasts seemed to know that the final crisis was near, bringing the time for the winner to assert himself.

The interest which from the beginning had centered chiefly in the struggle between the Roman and the Jew, with an intense and general sympathy for the latter, was fast changing to anxiety on his account. On all the benches the spectators bent forward motionless, except as their faces turned following the contestants. Ilderim quit combing his beard, and Esther forgot her fears.

"A hundred sestertii on the Jew!" cried Sanballat to the Romans under the consul's awning.

There was no reply.

"A talent—or five talents, or ten; choose ye!"

He shook his tablets at them defiantly.

"I will take thy sestertii," answered a Roman youth, preparing to write.

"Do not so," interposed a friend.

"Why?"

"Messala hath reached his utmost speed. See him lean over his chariot rim, the reins loose as flying ribbons. Look then at the Jew."

The first one looked.

"By Hercules!" he replied, his countenance falling. "The dog throws all his weight on the bits. I see, I see! If the gods help not our friend, he will be run away with by the Israelite. No, not yet. Look! Jove with us, Jove with us!"

The cry, swelled by every Latin tongue, shook the velaria over the consul's head.

If it were true that Messala had attained his utmost speed, the effort was with effect; slowly but certainly he was beginning to forge ahead. His horses were running with their heads low down; from the balcony their bodies appeared actually to skim the earth; their nostrils showed blood-red in expansion; their eyes seemed straining in their sockets. Certainly the good steeds were doing their best. How long could they keep the pace? It was but the commencement of the sixth round. On they dashed. As they neared the second goal, Ben-Hur turned in behind the Roman's car.

The joy of the Messala faction reached its bound: they screamed and howled and tossed their colors; and Sanballat filled his tablets with wagers of their tendering.

Malluch, in the lower gallery over the Gate of Triumph, found it hard to keep his cheer. He had cherished the vague hint dropped to him by Ben-Hur of something to happen in the turning of the western pillars. It was the fifth round, yet the something had not come; and he had said to himself the sixth will bring it; but, lo! Ben-Hur was hardly holding a place at the tail of his enemy's car.

Over in the east end Simonides' party held their peace. The merchant's head was bent low. Ilderim tugged at his beard and dropped his brows till there was nothing of his eyes but an occasional sparkle of light. Esther scarcely breathed. Iras alone appeared glad.

Along the home stretch --- sixth round --- Messala leading, and next him Ben-Hur, and so close it was the old story : ---

First flew Eumelus on Pheretian steeds;
With those of Tros bold Diomed succeeds;
Close on Eumelus' back they puff the wind,
And seem just mounting on his ear behind;
Full on his neck he feels the sultry breeze,
And hovering o'er, their stretching shadow sees.

Thus to the first goal and round it. Messala, fearful of losing his place, hugged the stony wall with perilous clasp; a foot to the left, and he had been dashed to pieces; yet, when the turn was finished, no man, looking at the wheel tracks of the two cars, could have said here went Messala, there the Jew. They left but one trace behind them. As they whirled by, Esther saw Ben-Hur's face again, and it was whiter than before.

Simonides, shrewder than Esther, said to Ilderim the moment the rivals turned into the course: "I am no judge, good sheik, if Ben-Hur be not about to execute some design. His face hath that look."

To which Ilderim answered: "Saw you how clean they were, and fresh? By the splendor of God, friend, they have not been running! But now watch!"

One ball and one dolphin remained on the entablatures, and all the people drew a long breath, for the beginning of the end was at hand.

First the Sidonian gave the scourge to his four, and, smarting with fear and pain, they dashed desperately forward, promising for a brief time to go to the front. The effort ended in promise. Next the Byzantine and Corinthian each made the trial with the like result, after which they were practically out of the race. Thereupon, with a readiness perfectly explicable, all the factions except the Romans joined hope in Ben-Hur and openly indulged their feeling.

"Ben-Hur! Ben-Hur!" they shouted, and the blent voices rolled overwhelmingly against the consular stand.

From the benches above him as he passed the favor descended in fierce injunctions.

"Speed thee, Jew!"

"Take the wall now!"

"On! Loose the Arabs! Give them rein and scourge!"

"Let him not have the turn on thee again! Now or never!"

Over the balustrade they stooped low, stretching their hands imploringly to him.

Either he did not hear, or could not do better, for halfway round the course, and he was still following; at the second goal even still no change.

And now, to make the turn, Messala began to draw in his left-hand steeds, an act which necessarily slackened their speed. His spirit was high; more than one altar was richer of his vows; the Roman genius was still president. On the three pillars only six hundred feet away were fame, increase of fortune, promotion, and a triumph ineffably sweetened by hate, all in store for him! That moment Malluch, in the gallery, saw Ben-Hur lean forward over his Arabs and give them the reins. Out flew the many-folded lash in his hand; over the backs of the startled steeds it writhed and hissed, and hissed and writhed again and again; and though it fell not, there were both sting and menace in its quick report; and as the man passed thus from quiet to resistless action, his face suffused, his eyes gleaming, along the reins he seemed to flash his will; and instantly not one, but the four as one, answered with a leap that landed them alongside the Roman's car. Messala, on the perilous edge of the goal, heard, but dared not look to see what the awakening portended. From the people he received no sign. Above the noises of the race there was but one voice, and that was Ben-Hur's. In the old Aramaic, as the sheik himself, he called to the Arabs.

"On, Atair! On, Rigel! What, Antares! dost thou linger now? Good horse—oh, Aldebaran! I hear them singing in the tents. I hear the children singing and the women—singing of the stars, of Atair, Antares, Rigel, Aldebaran, victory!—and the song will never end. Well done! Home to-morrow, under the black tent—home! On, Antares! The tribe is waiting for us, and the master is waiting! 'Tis done! 'tis done! Ha, ha! We have overthrown the proud. The hand that smote us is in the dust. Ours the glory! Ha, ha!—steady! The work is done—soho! Rest!"

There had never been anything of the kind more simple, seldom anything so instantaneous.

At the moment chosen for the dash, Messala was moving in a circle round the goal. To pass him Ben-Hur had to cross the track, and good strategy required the movement to be in a forward direction, that is on a like circle limited to the least possible increase. The thousands on the benches understood it all: they saw the signal given—the magnificent response; the four close outside Messala's outer wheel, Ben-Hur's inner wheel behind the other's car—all this they saw. Then they heard a crash loud enough to send a thrill through the circus, and, quicker than thought, out over the course a spray of shining white and yellow flinders flew. Down on its right side toppled the bed of the Roman's chariot. There was a rebound as of the axle hitting the hard earth; another and another; then the car went to pieces, and Messala, entangled in the reins, pitched forward headlong. To increase the horror of the sight by making death certain, the Sidonian, who had the wall next behind, could not stop or turn out. Into the wreck full speed he drove; then over the Roman, and into the latter's four, all mad with fear. Presently out of the turmoil, the fighting of horses, the resound of blows, the murky cloud of dust and sand, he crawled in time to see the Corinthian and Byzantine go on down the course after Ben-Hur, who had not been an instant delayed.

The people arose, and leaped upon the benches, and shouted, and screamed. Those who looked that way caught glimpses of Messala, now under the trampling of the fours, now under the abandoned cars. He was still; they thought him dead; but far the greater number followed Ben-Hur in his career. They had not seen the cunning touch of the reins by which, turning a little to the left, he caught Messala's wheel with the iron-shod point of his axle and crushed it; but they had seen the transformation of the man, and themselves felt the heat and glow of his spirit, the heroic resolution, the maddening energy of action with which by look, word, and gesture he so suddenly inspired his Arabs. And such running! It was rather the long leaping of lions in harness; but for the lumbering chariot it seemed the four were flying. When the Byzantine and the Corinthian were halfway down the course, Ben-Hur turned the first goal.

And the race was Won!

MARY MAGDALEN.

AT THE HOUSE OF SIMON THE PHARISEE.

I.

BY DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

[GABRIEL CHARLES DANTE ROSSETTI, usually known by the shortened form above, was an English poet and artist of Italian parentage; born 1828, died 1882. He was one of the leaders of the Preraphaelite movement.]

[For a drawing, in which Mary has left a fugal procession, and is ascending by a sudden impulse the steps of the house where she sees Christ. Her lover has followed her and is trying to turn her back.]

“WHY wilt thou cast the roses from thine hair?
 Nay, be thou all a rose, — wreath, lips, and cheek.
 Nay, not this house — that banquet house we seek;
 See how they kiss and enter: come thou there.
 This delicate day of love we two will share
 Till at our ear love’s whispering night shall speak.
 What, sweet one — hold’st thou still the foolish freak?
 Nay, when I kiss thy feet they’ll leave the stair.”

“Oh, loose me! Seest thou not my Bridegroom’s face,
 That draws me to him? For his feet my kiss,
 My hair, my tears he craves to-day; — and oh!
 What words can tell what other day and place
 Shall see me clasp those blood-stained feet of his?
 He needs me, calls me, loves me; — let me go!”

II.

BY LAURA E. RICHARDS.

[MRS. RICHARDS, daughter of Julia Ward and Samuel G. Howe, is one of the foremost writers of juveniles in America, and has done good work not juvenile.]

[Mary, called by them in Jerusalem the Queen of Love, cometh from her house with her lovers and many women. She speaketh merrily.]

NAY! but clasp me not close!
 Loose me, and let me breathe.
 Are there not jewels to string?
 Are there not roses to wreath?

Look where the Pageant of Love
 Comes tossing adown the street!
 And who is their queen but I?
 Who else for their queen is meet?

Strike, my girls, on your harps!
 Shake me your timbrels, and sing.
 Flutter your gold-yellow fringes,
 And round me circle and swing.

See how my tresses, unbound,
 Drop down from sheen into sheen,
 A robe and a cloak and a crown
 For the beauty of Mary the Queen.

Look! who is feasting to-day?
 There are garlands hung for a feast.
 Ah! it is Simon's house,
 And there may be sport at least.

Yonder he sits at the board-head,
 Portly and pious and fine.
 But how he would stare, if Mary the Queen
 Should come to pour him the wine!

To join in his feast unbidden,
 Nay! this were a spirit full rare!
 Bear back, you boys with the roses,
 And make me a way up the stair!

[She cometh laughing to the door of Simon's house. There seeth she the Lord Jesus, who, saying no word, looketh steadfastly upon her. Then is she silent for a long space, and after speaketh thus:]

Once I was young. And my father
 Laid his hand on my close-curved head:
 "Be thou pure and true, little Mary,
 E'en as thou art fair!" he said.

Once I was young. And my mother
 Looked motherly into mine eyes:
 "God's blessing be on my daughter,
 So fair, so pure, so wise!"

Once I was young. And my brother
 Took strongly my hand in his:

"Thy beauty bodes danger, my sister,
My arm be thy shield in this!"

Mother and father and brother,
All their glances in one
Burn on me now; and what power beside
More strong than the strength of the sun?

Turn now, I pray thee, thy glances!
For Mary the girl is dead;
And Mary the Queen of Sinners
Stands here to-day in her stead.

These are my lovers behind me,
They wonder and wait while I stay:
Loose now mine eyes from thy holding,
And let me go on my way.

Still thine eyes do not leave me,
Silent they speak to my soul;
And that which was dead like a cinder
Burns me, a living coal.

What! I may turn from my sinning?
What! there's a God above?
What! in him only is mercy,
Pity and patience and love?

What! and he is my Father,
He calls for his child to-day?
And thou wilt lead me to find him,
And no one shall say me nay?

Ah! these flowers are poisoned!
They cling and sting in my flesh.
Ah! but the jewels are serpents
That wreath in my hair's gold mesh.

Wait! let me tear off the roses,
And fling these chains from my neck;
Gold and jewels and roses
Cast in a glittering wreck.

Let me draw down my hair about me,
Shake it adown and abroad,
For a veil and mantle to hide me
At thy feet, at thy feet, O Lord!

Christ Healing the Sick

THE LAST JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM.

BY ERNEST RENAN.

(From "The Life of Jesus.")

[JOSEPH ERNEST RENAN: Noted French historian and essayist; born at Tréguier, Brittany, February 27, 1823; died at Paris, October 2, 1892. He was educated for the priesthood, but being beset by doubts concerning the accepted tenets of faith, he left the seminary of St. Sulpice and devoted himself to science and literature. He made a careful study of the Semitic languages and of religious history. Among his principal works are: "General History of the Semitic Languages" (1856), "Studies of Religious History" (1857), "Translation of the Book of Job" (1858), "The Origin of Language" (1858), "Essays, Moral and Critical" (1859), "The Life of Jesus" (1863), "The Apostles" (1866), "St. Paul" (1869), "Antichrist" (1873), "The Gospels" (1877), "The Christian Church" (1879), "Marcus Aurelius" (1881), "New Studies in Religious History" (1884), "Discourses and Conferences" (1884), and the dramas "Caliban" (1878), "Fountain of Youth" (1880), "The Priest of Nemi" (1885), and "The Abbess of Jouarre" (1886).]

THE result of these conflicts was a hatred which only death could allay. John the Baptist before him had brought on himself the same description of enmity. The aristocracy of Jerusalem, who despised him, had permitted the simpler sort to consider him a prophet; but in the present case it was war to the death. A new spirit had appeared on earth, which shattered all that had gone before. John the Baptist was a thorough Jew; Jesus was hardly one at all. Jesus always appeals to sensitive moral feeling. He is a disputant only when he argues with the Pharisees, opposition compelling him, as nearly always happens, to adopt its own style. His keen sarcasm, his stinging challenge, always struck to the heart. They remained in the wound, indelibly burned in. . . .

It was plain, however, that this mighty master of irony must pay for his triumph with his life. Even in Galilee the Pharisees sought to kill him, and used against him the strategy which was later to succeed at Jerusalem. They tried to engage in their quarrel the partisans of the new political order lately established. The facilities which Jesus found for escape in Galilee, and the weakness of Antipas' government, baffled these attempts, but he exposed himself to peril by his own will. He saw clearly that his field of action, if he remained shut up in Galilee, was necessarily cramped. Judæa drew him as by a spell; he longed to put forth one last effort to gain over the stubborn city, as if it were his most urgent duty to justify the proverb, "It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem."

For a long time Jesus had been aware of the dangers surrounding him. During a period of time which may be estimated at eighteen months he avoided going on pilgrimage to Jerusalem. At the feast of Tabernacles of the year 32 (according to the hypothesis we have adopted) his relatives, always malevolent and skeptical, pressed him to go there. The evangelist John seems to insinuate that in this invitation there was some hidden project to ruin Jesus. "Depart hence, and go into Judæa, that thy disciples also may behold thy works which thou doest. For no man doeth anything in secret, and himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou doest these things, manifest thyself to the world." Jesus, suspecting some treachery, at first refused; but when the caravan of pilgrims had started, he set out on the journey, unknown to every one, and almost alone. It was the last farewell that he bade to Galilee. The feast of Tabernacles fell at the autumnal equinox. Six months had still to elapse before the fatal consummation. But during this interval Jesus never again saw his beloved northern land. The days of pleasantness have passed away; step by step he must now traverse the path of sorrows that will only end in the anguish of death.

His disciples, and the pious women who followed him, met him again in Judæa. But how greatly was all changed for him here! In Jerusalem Jesus was a stranger. Here he felt a wall of resistance he could not penetrate. Hemmed in by snares and difficulties, he was unceasingly dogged by the enmity of the Pharisees. Instead of that illimitable faculty of belief, the happy gift of youthful natures, which he found in Galilee—instead of those good and gentle folk, amongst whom objections (which are always in part the fruit of evil thinking and indocility) had no existence, here at every step he met with an obstinate skepticism, upon which the means of action that had succeeded in the north so well had little effect. His disciples were despised as being Galileans. Nicodemus, who, on one of the former visits of Jesus, had had a nocturnal interview, almost compromised himself with the Sanhedrim by his desire to defend him. "Art thou also of Galilee?" they said to him. "Search and see that out of Galilee ariseth no prophet."

The city, as we have already remarked, displeased Jesus. Until now he had always avoided great centers, preferring rural districts and towns of small importance for his field of action. Many of the precepts which he gave to his apostles were absolutely inapplicable, except in a simple community of humble folk. Since he had no conception of the world, and was accustomed only to the kindly communism of Galilee, remarks constantly escaped him, the simplicity of which might well appear odd at Jerusalem. His imagination and his love of nature felt constraint within its walls. It is not the destiny of true religion to emerge from the tumult of towns, but from the tranquil quietude of the fields.

The arrogance of the priests made the courts of the Temple disagreeable to him. One day some of his disciples, who knew Jerusalem better than he, wished him to notice the beauty of the Temple buildings, the admirable choice of materials, and the richness of the votive offerings which covered the walls. "See ye not all these things," said he; "verily I say unto you there shall not be left here one stone upon another." He refused to admire anything, unless it was a poor widow who passed at that moment and threw a small coin into the box. "This poor widow cast in more than they all," said he; "for all these did of their superfluity cast in unto their gifts: but she of her want did cast in all the living that she had." This habit of criticising all that was going on at Jerusalem, of exalting the poor who gave little, of slighting the rich who gave much, and of rebuking the wealthy priests who did nothing for the good of the people, naturally exasperated the sacerdotal caste. As the seat of a conservative aristocracy, the Temple, like the Mussulman Haram which has succeeded it, was the last place in the world in which revolutions could triumph. Imagine a reformer going in our own time to preach the overthrow of Islamism round the Mosque of Omar! The Temple, however, was the center of Jewish life, the point at which victory or death was essential. On this Calvary, where Jesus assuredly suffered more than at Golgotha, his days were passed in disputation and bitterness, in the midst of tedious controversies about canonical law and exegesis, for which his great moral grandeur, far from giving him any advantage, positively unfitted him.

In his troubled life at this period, the sensitive and kindly heart of Jesus was able to find a refuge, where he enjoyed much tranquillity. After having passed the day disputing in the Temple, Jesus used to descend at evening into the valley of Kedron, and rest awhile in the orchard of a kind of farm (probably a place where oil was made) called Gethsemane, which served as a pleasure garden to the inhabitants. Thence he would proceed to pass the night upon the Mount of Olives, which shuts in the horizon of the city on the east. This district is the only one, in the neighborhood of Jerusalem, presenting an aspect that is in any way pleasing and verdant. Groves of olives, figs, and palms were numerous there, and gave their names to the villages, farms, or inclosures of Bethphage, Gethsemane, and Bethany. Upon the Mount of Olives were two great cedars, the memory of which was long cherished amongst the dispersed Jews; their branches served as a refuge for bevvies of doves, and under their shade were established small bazaars. The whole precinct was in a manner the abode of Jesus and his disciples; they evidently knew it field by field and house by house.

In particular the village of Bethany, situated at the summit of the hill, upon the slope which commands the Dead Sea and the Jordan, at a journey of an hour and a half from Jerusalem, was the place especially loved by Jesus. There he made the acquaintance of a family of three persons, two sisters and a third member, whose friendship had a great charm for him. Of the two sisters, the one called Martha was an obliging, kind woman, assiduous in her attentions; while the other, Mary, on the contrary, pleased Jesus by a kind of languor, and by her highly developed speculative tendencies. Seated at the feet of Jesus, she often forgot, in listening to his words, the duties of everyday life. Her sister, upon whom all these duties devolved at such times, gently complained. "Martha, Martha," said Jesus to her, "thou art anxious and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful. For Mary hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from her." A certain Simon the Leper, who was the owner of the house, was apparently the brother of Mary and Martha, or at least formed part of the family. It was there that, in the midst of pious friendship, Jesus forgot the vexations of public life. In this quiet home he consoled himself for the wrangling which the Scribes and the Pharisees never ceased to raise around him. He often sat on the Mount of Olives, facing Mount Moriah, having under his eyes the splendid perspective of the terraces of the Temple, and its roofs covered with glittering plates of metal. This view used to strike strangers with admiration; at sunrise especially the holy mountain dazzled the eyes, and seemed as it were a mass of snow and gold. But a profound feeling of sadness poisoned for Jesus the spectacle that filled all other Israelites with joy and pride. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

It was not that many honest souls here, as in Galilee, were not touched; but such was the weight of the dominant orthodoxy, that very few dared to avow it. Men feared to discredit themselves in the eyes of the Hierosolymites by placing themselves in the school of a Galilean. They would have risked expulsion from the synagogue, which, in a mean and bigoted society, was the greatest degradation possible. Excommunication besides carried with it confiscation of all property. By ceasing to be a Jew, a man did not become a Roman; he remained defenseless under the power of a theocratic legislation of the most atrocious severity. One day the lower officers of the Temple, who had been present at one of the discourses of Jesus, and had been enchanted with it, came to confide their doubts to the priests: "Hath any of the rulers believed on him, or of the Pharisees?" was the reply to them; "but this multitude who knoweth not the Law are accursed." Jesus thus remained at Jerusalem, a provincial admired by provincials like himself, but rejected by all the aristocracy of the nation. Chiefs of schools and of sects were too numerous for any one to be stirred by seeing one more appear. His voice made little impression in Jerusalem. Racial and sectarian prejudices, the open enemies of the spirit of the Gospel, were too deeply rooted.

His teaching in this new world necessarily became greatly modified. His beautiful discourses, the effect of which was always marked upon hearers with youthful imaginations and consciences morally pure, here fell upon stone. He who was so much at ease on the shores of his charming little lake felt constrained and in a strange land when he confronted pedants. His perpetual self-assertion took a somewhat fastidious tone. He had to become controversialist, jurist, exegetist, and theologian. His conversations, generally so full of grace, were transformed into a rolling fire of disputes, an interminable series of scholastic battles. His harmonious genius was wasted away in insipid argumentations upon the Law and the Prophets, in which we should have preferred not to see him sometimes play the part of aggressor. With a regrettable condescension he lent himself to the captious criticisms to which tactless cavers subjected him. As a rule he extricated himself from difficulties with much skill. His reasonings, it is true, were often subtle (for simplicity of mind and subtlety are akin; when simplicity reasons, it is always a little sophistical); we find that he sometimes courted misconceptions, and intentionally prolonged them; his reasoning, judged by the rules of Aristotelian logic, was very weak. But when the unparalleled charm of his mind could be shown, he was triumphant. One day it was intended to embarrass him by presenting an adulteress to him, and asking him what should be done with her. We know the admirable response of Jesus. The fine raillery of a man of the world, tempered by a divine charity, could not be more exquisitely expressed. But the wit allied to moral grandeur is that which fools can least forgive. With his words so just and pure in their taste: "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her," Jesus pierced hypocrisy to the heart, and with the same stroke sealed his own death warrant.

It is probable indeed that, but for the exasperation caused by so many bitter shafts, Jesus might have long been able to remain unnoticed, and might have lost himself in the terrible storm which was soon to overwhelm the whole Jewish nation. The higher priesthood and the Sadducees rather disdained than hated him. The great sacerdotal families, the Boëthusim, the family of Hanan, were only fanatical when their peace was threatened. The Sadducees, like Jesus, rejected the "traditions" of the Pharisees. By a very strange singularity, it was these skeptics, denying the resurrection, the oral Law, and the existence of angels, who were the true Jews. Or rather, since the old Law in its simplicity no longer satisfied the religious wants of the time, those who held strictly to it and rejected modern inventions were regarded by devotees as impious, just as an evangelical Protestant of the present day is considered an unbeliever in Catholic countries. At all events, from a party such as this no very strong reaction against Jesus could proceed. The official priesthood, with its attention concentrated on political power and closely connected with the former party, did not understand enthusiastic movements of this kind. It was the middle-class Pharisees, the innumerable Soferim or Scribes making a living by the science of "traditions," who took the alarm; and it was their prejudices and interests that in reality were threatened by the doctrine of the new Master.

One of the most constant efforts of the Pharisees was to draw Jesus into the political arena, and to compromise him as being attached to the party of Judas the Gaulonite. Their tactics were clever; for all the deep wisdom of Jesus was required to avoid embroilment with the Roman authority, in his preaching of the kingdom of God. They desired to cut through his ambiguity, and force him to explain himself. One day a group of Pharisees, and of those politicians who were called "Herodians" (probably some of the Boëthusim), approached him and, under the pretense of pious zeal, said, "Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, and carest not for any one. . . . Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not?" They hoped for a response which would give them a pretext for delivering him up to Pilate. The answer of Jesus was admirable. He made them show him the image on a coin: "Render therefore," said he, "unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's." Such were the profound words which decided the future of Christianity! Words of the most perfect spirituality, and of marvelous justice, which established the separation of the spiritual from the temporal, and laid the foundation of true liberalism and true civilization!

His gentle and irresistible genius inspired him, when alone with his disciples, with accents full of tenderness. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door unto the fold of the sheep, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. . . . The sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. . . . He goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice. . . . The thief cometh not, but that he may steal, and kill, and destroy. . . . He that is an hireling and not a shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, beholdeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth. . . . I am the good shepherd and I know mine own, and mine own know me . . . and I lay down my life for the sheep." The idea that the crisis of humanity was close at hand frequently recurred to him: "Now," said he, "from the fig tree learn her parable: When her branch is now become tender, and putteth forth its leaves, ye know that the summer is nigh." "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest."

His powerful eloquence always burst forth when he had to contend with hypocrisy. "The Scribes and the Pharisees sit on Moses' seat; all things therefore whatsoever they bid you, these do and observe: but do not ye after their works; for they say, and do not. Yea, they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with their finger.

"But all their works do they for to be seen of men: for they make broad their phylacteries and enlarge the borders of their garments, and love the chief place at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and the salutation in the market places, and to be called of men, Rabbi. . . .

"But woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye shut the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye enter not in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering in to enter. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, even while for a pretense ye make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive greater condemnation. Woe unto you, for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is become so, ye make him twofold more a son of hell than yourselves!" "Woe unto you! for ye are as the tombs which appear not, and the men that walk over them know it not."

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye tithe mint and anise and cumin, and have left undone the weightier matters of the law, judgment, and mercy, and faith: but these ye ought to have done, and not to have left the other undone. Ye blind guides, which strain out the gnat and swallow the camel.

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye cleanse the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full from extortion and excess. Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first the inside of the cup and of the platter, that the outside thereof may become clean also.

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which outwardly appear beau tiful, but inwardly are full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but inwardly ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye build the sepulchers of the prophets, and garnish the tombs of the righteous, and say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we should not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets. Wherefore, ye witness to yourselves, that ye are sons of them that slew the prophets. Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. . . .

"Therefore, behold, I will send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: some of them shall ye kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city. That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed on the earth, from the blood of Abel the righteous unto the blood of Zachariah, son of Barachiah, whom ye slew between the sanctuary and the altar. Verily, I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation."

His terrible doctrine of the substitution of the Gentiles—the idea that the kingdom of God was about to be passed over to others, because those for whom it was destined would not receive it, used to recur as a fearful menace against the aristocracy. The title "Son of God," which he openly assumed in vivid parables, wherein his enemies were depicted as murderers of the heavenly messengers, was an open defiance to the Judaism of the Law. The bold appeal he addressed to the poor was yet more seditious. He declared that he had come, "that they which see not may see, and that they which see may become blind." One day, his dislike of the Temple evoked an imprudent speech from him: "I will destroy this Temple that is made with hands, and in three days I will build another made without hands." We do not know what meaning Jesus attached to this saying, in which his disciples sought for strained allegories; but, as only a pretext was wanted, it was quickly fastened upon. It reappeared in the preamble of his death warrant, and rang in his ears amid the last agonies of Golgotha. These irritating discussions always ended in tumult. The Pharisees cast stones at him; in doing which they only fulfilled an article in the Law, which commanded that every prophet, even a thaumaturgist, who should turn the people from the ancient worship, was to be stoned without a hearing. At other times they called him mad, possessed, a Samaritan, and even sought to slay him. His words were noted in order to draw down upon him the laws of an intolerant theocracy, which had not yet been abrogated by the Roman power.

PILATE AND THE CRUCIFIXION.

BY DEAN FARRAR.

(From "The Life of Christ.")

[FREDERICK WILLIAM FARRAR: Dean of Canterbury; born at Bombay, India, August 7, 1831. He was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, King's College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, taking several prizes during his university courses. He was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest in 1857; taught school at Marlborough and Harrow (1854-1876); was canon of Westminster Abbey and rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster (1876-1895), and archdeacon of Westminster (1883-1895). In 1895 he was made dean of Canterbury. His writings are very numerous, and include: "The Arctic Region" (1852), "Lyrics of Life" (1859), "The Life of Christ" (1874; 12th ed. in the same year), "In the Days of thy Youth" (1876), "The Life and Work of St. Paul" (1879), "The Early Days of Christianity" (1882), "The History of Interpretation" (1886), "The Minor Prophets" (1890), "Darkness and Dawn" (1891), "The Life of Christ as represented in Art" (1894), "Gathering Clouds" (1895), and "Westminster Abbey" (1897). Died in 1903.]

PILATE broke forth with that involuntary exclamation which has thrilled with emotion so many million hearts —

"BEHOLD THE MAN!"

But his appeal only woke a fierce outbreak of the scream. "Crucify! crucify!" The mere sight of Him, even in this His unspeakable shame and sorrow, seemed to add fresh fuel to their hate. In vain the heathen soldier appeals for humanity to the Jewish priest; no heart throbbed with responsive pity; no voice of compassion broke that monotonous yell of "Crucify!" — the howling refrain of their wild "liturgy of death." The Roman who had shed blood like water, on the field of battle, in open massacre, in secret assassination, might well be supposed to have an icy and a stony heart; but yet icier and stonier was the heart of those scrupulous hypocrites and worldly priests. "Take ye Him, and crucify Him," said Pilate in utter disgust, "for I find no fault in Him." What an admission from a Roman judge! "So far as I can see, He is wholly innocent; yet if you must crucify Him, take Him and crucify. I cannot approve of, but I will readily connive at, your violation of the law." But even this wretched guilty subterfuge is not permitted him. Satan will have from his servants the full tale of their crimes, and the sign manual of their own willing assent at last. What the Jews want — what the Jews will have — is not tacit connivance, but absolute sanction. They see their power. They see that this blood-stained Governor dares not hold out against them; they know that the Roman statecraft is tolerant of concessions to local superstition. Boldly, therefore, they fling to the winds all question of a political offense, and with all their hypocritical pretenses calcined by the heat of their passions they shout, “We have a law, and by our law He ought to die, because He made Himself a Son of God.”

A Son of God! The notion was far less strange and repulsive to a heathen than to a Jew; and this word, unheard before, startled Pilate with the third omen which made him tremble at the crime into which he was being dragged by guilt and fear. Once more, leaving the yelling multitude without, he takes Jesus with him into the quiet Judgment Hall, and — “jam pro sua conscientia Christianus.” as Tertullian so finely observes — asks him in awe-struck accents, “Whence art thou?” Alas! it was too late to answer now. Pilate was too deeply committed to his gross cruelty and injustice; for him Jesus had spoken enough already; for the wild beasts who raged without, He had no more to say. He did not answer. Then, almost angrily, Pilate broke out with the exclamation, “Dost Thou not speak even to me? Dost Thou not know that I have power to set Thee free, and have power to crucify Thee?” Power — how so? Was justice nothing, then? truth nothing? innocence nothing? conscience nothing? In the reality of things Pilate had no such power; even in the arbitrary sense of the tyrant it was an idle boast, for at this very moment he was letting “I dare not” wait upon “I would.” And Jesus pitied the hopeless bewilderment of this man, whom guilt had changed from a ruler into a slave. Not taunting, not confuting him — nay, even extenuating rather than aggravating his sin — Jesus gently answered, “Thou hast no power against Me whatever, had it not been given thee from above; therefore he that betrayed Me to thee hath the greater sin.” In the very depths of his inmost soul Pilate felt the truth of the words — silently acknowledged the superiority of his bound and lacerated victim. All that remained in him of human and of noble —

Felt how awful Goodness is, and Virtue,
In her shape how lovely; felt and mourned
His fall.

All of his soul that was not eaten away by pride and cruelty thrilled back an unwonted echo to these few calm words of the Son of God. Jesus had condemned his sin, and so far from being offended, the judgment only deepened his awe of this mysterious Being, whose utter impotence seemed grander and more awful than the loftiest power. From that time Pilate was even yet more anxious to save Him. With all his conscience in a tumult, for the third and last time he mounted his tribunal, and made one more desperate effort. He led Jesus forth, and looking at Him as He stood silent and in agony, but calm, on that shining Gabbatha, above the brutal agitation of the multitude, he said to those frantic rioters, as with a flash of genuine conviction, "BEHOLD YOUR KING!" But to the Jews it sounded like shameful scorn to call that beaten insulted Sufferer their King. A darker stream mingled with the passions of the raging, swaying crowd. Among the shouts of "Crucify," ominous threatenings began for the first time to be mingled. It was now nine o'clock, and for nearly three hours had they been raging and waiting there. The name of Cæsar began to be heard in wrathful murmurs. "Shall I crucify your king?" he had asked, venting the rage and soreness of his heart in taunts on them. "We have no king but Cæsar," answered the Sadducees and Priests, flinging to the winds every national impulse and every Messianic hope. "If thou let this man go," shouted the mob again and again, "thou art not Cæsar's friend. Every one who tries to make himself a king speaketh against Cæsar." And at that dark terrible name of Cæsar, Pilate trembled. It was a name to conjure with. It mastered him. He thought of that terrible implement of tyranny, the accusation of lesa majestas, into which all other charges merged, which had made confiscation and torture so common, and had caused blood to flow like water in the streets of Rome. He thought of Tiberius, the aged gloomy Emperor, then hiding at Capræe his ulcerous features, his poisonous suspicions, his sick infamies, his desperate revenge. At this very time he had been maddened into a yet more sanguinary and misanthropic ferocity by the detected falsity and treason of his only friend and minister, Sejanus, and it was to Sejanus himself that Pilate is said to have owed his position. There might be secret delators in that very mob. Panic-stricken, the unjust judge, in obedience to his own terrors, consciously betrayed the innocent victim to the anguish of death. He who had so often abused authority, was now rendered impotent to exercise it, for once, on the side of right. Truly for him, sin had become its own Erinnyes, and his pleasant vices had been converted into the instrument of his punishment !

THE BALLAD OF JUDAS ISCARIOT.

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

[ROBERT WILLIAMS BUCHANAN, English author, was born in Warwickshire, August 18, 1841 ; educated in Glasgow, and became a man of letters in London. Besides many short poems, he has written "Napoleon Fallen" and "The Drama of Kings" (1871), and "The City of Dreams" (1888) ; several successful plays ; and some novels, including "The Shadow of the Sword" (1876), "A Child of Nature" (1879), and "Foxglove Manor" (1884). Died in 1901.]

'Twas the body of Judas Iscariot
Lay in the Field of Blood ;
'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Beside the body stood.
Black was the earth by night,
And black was the sky ;
Black, black were the broken clouds,
Though the red moon went by.

'Twas the body of Judas Iscariot
Strangled and dead lay there ;
'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Looked on it in despair.
The breath of the World came and went
Like a sick man's in rest ;
Drop by drop on the World's eyes
The dews fell cool and blest.
Then the soul of Judas Iscariot
Did make a gentle moan :
"I will bury underneath the ground
My flesh and blood and bone.
I will bury deep beneath the soil,
Lest mortals look thereon,
And when the wolf and raven come
The body will be gone !
The stones of the field are sharp as steel,
And hard and cold, God wot ;
And I must bear my body hence
Until I find a spot."

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot,
So grim and gaunt and gray,
Raised the body of Judas Iscariot
And carried it away.
And as he bare it from the field
Its touch was cold as ice,
And the ivory teeth within the jaw
Rattled aloud like dice.
As the soul of Judas Iscariot
Carried its load with pain,
The Eye of Heaven, like a lanthorn's eye,
Opened and shut again.
Half he walked, and half he seemed
Lifted on the cold wind;
He did not turn, for chilly hands
Were pushing from behind.

The first place that he came unto
It was the open wold,
And underneath were prickly whins,
And a wind that blew so cold.
The next place that he came unto
It was a stagnant pool,
And when he threw the body in
It floated light as wool.
He drew the body on his back,
And it was dripping chill,
And the next place he came unto
Was a Cross upon a hill —
A Cross upon the windy hill,
And a cross on either side;
Three skeletons that swing thereon
Who had been crucified,
And on the middle crossbar sat
A white Dove slumbering;
Dim it sat in the dim light,
With its head beneath its wing.
And underneath the middle Cross
A grave yawned wide and vast,
But the soul of Judas Iscariot
Shivered and glided past.
The fourth place that he came unto
It was the Brig of Dread,
And the great torrents rushing down
Were deep and swift and red.

He dared not fling the body in
For fear of faces dim,
And arms were waved in the wild water
To thrust it back to him.

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Turned from the Brig of Dread,
And the dreadful foam of the wild water
Had splashed the body red.
For days and nights he wandered on
Upon an open plain,
And the days went by like blinding mist,
And the nights like rushing rain.
For days and nights he wandered on
All through the Wood of Woe,
And the nights went by like moaning wind,
And the days like drifting snow.

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Came with a weary face —
Alone, alone, and all alone,
Alone in a lonely place.
He wandered east, he wandered west,
And heard no human sound;
For months and years, in grief and tears,
He wandered round and round;
For months and years, in grief and tears,
He walked the silent night.
Then the soul of Judas Iscariot
Perceived a far-off light —
A far-off light across the waste
As dim as dim might be,
That came and went like the lighthouse gleam
On a black night at sea.

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Crawled to the distant gleam,
And the rain came down, and the rain was blown
Against him with a scream.
For days and nights he wandered on,
Pushed on by hands behind,
And the days went by like black, black rain,
And the nights like rushing wind.

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot,
Strange, and sad, and tall,

Stood all alone at dead of night
 Before a lighted hall;
 And the wold was white with snow,
 And his footmarks black and damp,
 And the ghost of the silvern moon arose
 Holding her yellow lamp;
 And the icicles were on the eaves,
 And the walls were deep with white,
 And the shadows of the guests within
 Passed on the window light.
 The shadows of the wedding guests
 Did strangely come and go,
 And the body of Judas Iscariot
 Lay stretched along the snow;

The body of Judas Iscariot
 Lay stretched along the snow.
 'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
 Ran swiftly to and fro;
 To and fro, and up and down,
 He ran so swiftly there,
 As round and round the frozen pole
 Glideth the lean white bear.

'Twas the Bridegroom sat at the table head,
 And the lights burnt bright and clear;
 "Oh, who is that," the Bridegroom said,
 "Whose weary feet I hear?"
 'Twas one looked from the lighted hall,
 And answered soft and low:
 "It is a wolf runs up and down,
 With a black track in the snow."
 The Bridegroom in his robe of white
 Sat at the table head:
 "Oh, who is that who moans without?"
 The blessed Bridegroom said.
 'Twas one looked from the lighted hall,
 And answered fierce and low:
 "'Tis the soul of Judas Iscariot Gliding to and fro."

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
 Did hush itself and stand,
 And saw the Bridegroom at the door
 With a light in his hand,

The Bridegroom stood in the open door,
And he was clad in white.
And far within the Lord's Supper
Was spread so broad and bright.
The Bridegroom shaded his eyes and looked,
And his face was bright to see :
"What dost thou here at the Lord's Supper
With thy body's sins ?" said he.

'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Stood black, and sad, and bare :
"I have wandered many nights and days ;
There is no light elsewhere."
'Twas the wedding guests cried out within,
And their eyes were fierce and bright :
"Scourge the soul of Judas Iscariot Away into the night !"
The Bridegroom stood in the open door,
And he waved hands still and slow,
And the third time that he waved his hands
The air was thick with snow ;
And of every flake of falling snow,
Before it touched the ground,
There came a dove, and a thousand doves
Made sweet sound.

'Twas the body of Judas Iscariot
Floated away full fleet,
And the wings of the doves that bare it of
Were like its winding sheet.
'Twas the Bridegroom stood at the open door,
And beckoned, smiling sweet ;
'Twas the soul of Judas Iscariot
Stole in, and fell at his feet.

"The Holy Supper is spread within,
And the many candles shine,
And I have waited long for thee
Before I poured the wine !"
The supper wine is poured at last,
The lights burn bright and fair,
Iscariot washes the Bridegroom's feet,
And dries them with his hair.

CALIGULA.

BY SÜETONIUS.

[CAIUS SÜETONIUS TRANQUILLUS was the son of a military tribune, and was born probably not far from A.D. 60-65. He began life as a lawyer, but seems to have devoted himself to historical research and authorship; but of many works credited to him the only one of certain genuineness is the "Lives of the First Twelve Cæsars," — a collection of chaotic and unsifted anecdotes, evidently fair of intent, but largely scandal and often untrue because popular gossip is so. It is, however, of cardinal value for its period, because we have practically nothing else dealing with it except Tacitus, and not even him over much of it. Suetonius in later life became Hadrian's private secretary. Pliny the Younger was his warm friend and helper, and speaks of him to Trajan as "a most upright, honorable, and learned man."]

[Caligula (Caius Cæsar) was the son of Germanicus the grandson of Augustus's sister, and Agrippina (the elder) granddaughter of Augustus; born A.D. 12, assassinated A.D. 41.]

IN the twentieth year of his age, being called by Tiberius to Capri, he in one and the same day assumed the manly habit and shaved his beard, but without receiving any of the honors which had been paid to his brothers on a similar occasion. While he remained in that island many insidious artifices were practiced to extort from him complaints against Tiberius, but by his circumspection he avoided falling into the snare. He affected to take no more notice of the ill treatment of his relations than if nothing had befallen them. With regard to his own sufferings, he seemed utterly insensible of them, and behaved with such obsequiousness to his grandfather and all about him that it was justly said of him, "There never was a better servant, nor a worse master."

But he could not even then conceal his natural disposition to cruelty and lewdness. He delighted in witnessing the infliction of punishments, and frequented taverns and bawdy-houses in the night time, disguised in a periwig and a long coat; and was passionately addicted to the theatrical arts of singing and dancing. All these levities Tiberius readily connived at, in hopes that they might perhaps correct the fierceness of his temper; which the sagacious old man so well understood that he often said, "That Caius was destined to be the ruin of himself and all mankind; and that he was rearing a hydra for the people of Rome, and a Phaeton for all the world."

Chosen augur in place of his brother Drusus, before he could be inaugurated he was advanced to the pontificate, with no small commendation of his dutiful behavior and great capacity. The situation of the court likewise was at this time favorable to his fortunes, as it was now left destitute of support, Sejanus being suspected, and soon afterwards taken off; and he was by degrees flattered with the hope of succeeding Tiberius in the empire. In order more effectually to secure this object, upon Junia's dying in childbed, he engaged in a criminal commerce with Ennia Nævia, the wife of Macro, at that time prefect of the pretorian cohorts; promising to marry her if he became emperor, to which he bound himself, not only by an oath, but by a written obligation under his hand. Having by her means insinuated himself into Macro's favor, some are of opinion that he attempted to poison Tiberius, and ordered his ring to be taken from him before the breath was out of his body; and that, because he seemed to hold it fast, he caused a pillow to be thrown upon him, squeezing him by the throat, at the same time, with his own hand. One of his freedmen crying out at this horrid barbarity, he was immediately crucified. These circumstances are far from being improbable, as some authors relate that afterwards, though he did not acknowledge his having a hand in the death of Tiberius, yet he frankly declared that he had formerly entertained such a design; and as a proof of his affection for his relations he would frequently boast, "That, to revenge the death of his mother and brothers, he had entered the chamber of Tiberius when he was asleep, with a poniard, but being seized with a fit of compassion, threw it away, and retired; and that Tiberius, though aware of his intention, durst not make any inquiries, or attempt revenge."

Having thus secured the imperial power, he fulfilled by his elevation the wish of the Roman people — I may venture to say of all mankind. . . .

He restored all those who had been condemned and banished, and granted an act of indemnity against all impeachments and past offenses. To relieve the informers and witnesses against his mother and brothers from all apprehension, he brought the records of their trials into the forum and there burnt them, calling loudly on the gods to witness that he had not read or handled them. A memorial which was offered him relative to his own security he would not receive, declaring, "that he had done nothing to make any one his enemy;" and said, at the same time, "he had no ears for informers." The Spintriæ, panderers to unnatural lusts, he banished from the city, being prevailed upon not to throw them into the sea, as he had intended. The writings of Titus Labienus, Cordus Cremutius, and Cassius Severus, which had been suppressed by an act of the Senate, he permitted to be drawn from obscurity and universally read; observing, "that it would be for his own advantage to have the transactions of former times delivered to posterity." He published accounts of the proceedings of the government—a practice which had been introduced by Augustus, but discontinued by Tiberius. He granted the magistrates a full and free jurisdiction, without any appeal to himself.

He made a very strict and exact review of the Roman knights, but conducted it with moderation; publicly depriving of his horse every knight who lay under the stigma of anything base and dishonorable, but passing over the names of those knights who were only guilty of venial faults, in calling over the list of the order. To lighten the labors of the judges, he added a fifth class to the former four. He attempted likewise to restore to the people their ancient right of voting in the choice of magistrates. He paid very honorably, and without any dispute, the legacies left by Tiberius in his will, though it had been set aside; as likewise those left by the will of Livia Augusta, which Tiberius had annulled. He remitted the hundredth penny, due to the government in all auctions throughout Italy. He made up to many their losses sustained by fire; and when he restored their kingdoms to any princes, he likewise allowed them all the arrears of the taxes and revenues which had accrued in the interval; as in the case of Antiochus of Comagene, where the confiscation would have amounted to a hundred million of sesterces. To prove to the world that he was ready to encourage good examples of every kind, he gave to a freedwoman eighty thousand sesterces, for not discovering a crime committed by her patron, though she had been put to exquisite torture for that purpose. . . .

He invented a new kind of spectacle, such as had never been heard of before. For he made a bridge, of about three miles and a half in length, from Baïæ to the mole of Puteoli, collecting trading vessels from all quarters, mooring them in two rows by their anchors, and spreading earth upon them to form a viaduct, after the fashion of the Appian Way. This bridge he crossed and recrossed for two days together; the first day mounted on a horse richly caparisoned, wearing on his head a crown of oak leaves, armed with a battle-ax, a Spanish buckler, and a sword, and in a cloak made of cloth of gold; the day following, in the habit of a charioteer, standing in a chariot, drawn by two high-bred horses, having with him a young boy, Darius by name, one of the Parthian hostages, with a cohort of the pretorian guards attending him, and a party of his friends in cars of Gaulish make. Most people, I know, are of opinion, that this bridge was designed by Caius, in imitation of Xerxes, who, to the astonishment of the world, laid a bridge over the Hellespont, which is somewhat narrower than the distance betwixt Baiæ and Puteoli. Others, however, thought that he did it to strike terror in Germany and Britain, which he was upon the point of invading, by the fame of some prodigious work. But for myself, when I was a boy, I heard my grandfather say, that the reason assigned by some courtiers who were in habits of the greatest intimacy with him, was this; when Tiberius was in some anxiety about the nomination of a successor, and rather inclined to pitch upon his grandson, Thrasyllus the astrologer had assured him, "That Caius would no more be emperor, than he would ride on horseback across the gulf of Baiæ."

He likewise exhibited public diversions in Sicily, Grecian games at Syracuse, and Attic plays at Lyons in Gaul: besides a contest for preëminence in the Grecian and Roman eloquence; in which we are told that such as were baffled bestowed rewards upon the best performers, and were obliged to compose speeches in their praise; but that those who performed the worst were forced to blot out what they had written with a sponge or their tongue, unless they preferred to be beaten with a rod or plunged over head and ears into the nearest river.

He completed the works which were left unfinished by Tiberius, namely, the temple of Augustus and the theater of Pompey. He began, likewise, the aqueduct from the neighborhood of Tibur, and an amphitheater near the Septa; of which works, one was completed by his successor, Claudius, and the other remained as he left it. The walls of Syracuse, which had fallen to decay by length of time, he repaired, as he likewise did the temples of the gods. He formed plans for rebuilding the palace of Polycrates at Samos, finishing the temple of the Didymæan Apollo at Miletus, and building a town on a ridge of the Alps; but, above all, for cutting through the isthmus in Achaia; and even sent a centurion to measure out the work. . . .

He was unwilling to be thought or called the grandson of Agrippa, because of the obscurity of his birth; and he was offended if any one, either in prose or verse, ranked him amongst the Caesars. He said that his mother was the fruit of an incestuous commerce maintained by Augustus with his daughter Julia. And not content with this vile reflection upon the memory of Augustus, he forbade his victories at Actium, and on the coast of Sicily, to be celebrated as usual, affirming that they had been most pernicious and fatal to the Roman people. He called his grandmother Livia Augusta "Ulysses in a woman's dress," and had the indecency to reflect upon her in a letter to the Senate, as of mean birth, and descended, by the mother's side, from a grandfather who was only one of the municipal magistrates of Fondi; whereas it is certain, from the public records, that Aufidius Lurco held high offices at Rome. His grandmother Antonia desiring a private conference with him, he refused to grant it unless Macro, the prefect of the pretorian guards, were present. Indignities of this kind, and ill usage, were the cause of her death; but some think he also gave her poison. Nor did he pay the smallest respect to her memory after her death, but witnessed the burning from his private apartment. His brother Tiberius, who had no expectation of any violence, was suddenly dispatched by a military tribune sent by his order for that purpose. He forced Silanus, his father-in-law, to kill himself by cutting his throat with a razor. The pretext he alleged for these murders was, that the latter had not followed him upon his putting to sea in stormy weather, but stayed behind with the view of seizing the city if he should perish. The other, he said, smelt of an antidote, which he had taken to prevent his being poisoned by him; whereas Silanus was only afraid of being seasick, and the disagreeableness of a voyage; and Tiberius had merely taken a medicine for an habitual cough, which was continually growing worse. As for his successor Claudius, he only saved him for a laughingstock. . . .

It would be of little importance, as well as disgusting, to add to all this an account of the manner in which he treated his relations and friends; as Ptolemy, king Juba's son, his cousin (for he was the grandson of Mark Antony by his daughter Selene), and especially Macro himself, and Ennia likewise, by whose assistance he had obtained the empire; all of whom, for their alliance and eminent services, he rewarded with violent deaths.

Nor was he more mild or respectful in his behavior towards the Senate. Some who had borne the highest offices in the government, he suffered to run by his litter in their togas for several miles together, and to attend him at supper, sometimes at the head of his couch, sometimes at his feet, with napkins. Others of them, after he had privately put them to death, he nevertheless continued to send for, as if they were still alive, and after a few days pretended that they had laid violent hands upon themselves. The consuls having forgotten to give public notice of his birthday, he displaced them; and the republic was three days without any one in that high office. A questor who was said to be concerned in a conspiracy against him, he scourged severely, having first stripped off his clothes, and spread them under the feet of the soldiers employed in the work, that they might stand the more firm. The other orders likewise he treated with the same insolence and violence. Being disturbed by the noise of people taking their places at midnight in the circus, as they were to have free admission, he drove them all away with clubs. In this tumult, above twenty Roman knights were squeezed to death, with as many matrons, with a great crowd besides. When stage plays were acted, to occasion disputes between the people and the knights he distributed the money tickets sooner than usual, that the seats assigned to the knights might be all occupied by the mob. In the spectacles of gladiators, sometimes, when the sun was violently hot, he would order the curtains, which covered the amphitheater, to be drawn aside, and forbade any person to be let out; withdrawing at the same time the usual apparatus for the entertainment, and presenting wild beasts almost pined to death, the most sorry gladiators, decrepit with age, and fit only to work the machinery, and decent housekeepers who were remarkable for some bodily infirmity. Sometimes shutting up the public granaries, he would oblige the people to starve for a while.

He evinced the savage barbarity of his temper chiefly by the following indications. When flesh was only to be had at a high price for feeding his wild beasts reserved for the spectacles, he ordered that criminals should be given them to be devoured; and upon inspecting them in a row, while he stood in the middle of the portico, without troubling himself to examine their cases, he ordered them to be dragged away, from "baldpate to baldpate." Of one person who had made a vow for his recovery to combat with a gladiator, he exacted its performance; nor would he allow him to desist until he came off conqueror, and after many entreaties. Another, who had vowed to give his life for the same cause, having shrunk from the sacrifice, he delivered, adorned as a victim, with garlands and fillets, to boys, who were to drive him through the streets, calling on him to fulfill his vow, until he was thrown headlong from the ramparts. After disfiguring many persons of honorable rank, by branding them in the face with hot irons, he condemned them to the mines, to work in repairing the highways, or to fight with wild beasts; or tying them by the neck and heels, in the manner of beasts carried to slaughter, would shut them up in cages, or saw them asunder. Nor were these severities merely inflicted for crimes of great enormity, but for making remarks on his public games, or for not having sworn by the Genius of the emperor. He compelled parents to be present at the execution of their sons; and to one who excused himself on account of indisposition, he sent his own litter. Another he invited to his table immediately after he had witnessed the spectacle, and coolly challenged him to jest and be merry. He ordered the overseer of the spectacles and wild beasts to be scourged in fetters, during several days successively, in his own presence, and did not put him to death until he was disgusted with the stench of his putrefied brain. He burned alive, in the center of the arena of the amphitheater, the writer of a farce, for some witty verse which had a double meaning. A Roman knight, who had been exposed to the wild beasts, crying out that he was innocent, he called him back, and having had his tongue cut out, remanded him to the arena.

Asking a certain person, whom he recalled after a long exile, how he used to spend his time, he replied, with flattery, "I was always praying the gods for what has happened, that Tiberius might die, and you be emperor." Concluding, therefore, that those he had himself banished also prayed for his death, he sent orders round the islands to have them all put to death. Being very desirous to have a senator torn to pieces, he employed some persons to call him a public enemy, fall upon him as he entered the Senate-house, stab him with their styles, and deliver him to the rest to tear asunder. Nor was he satisfied, until he saw the limbs and bowels of the man, after they had been dragged through the streets, piled up in a heap before him.

He aggravated his barbarous actions by language equally outrageous. "There is nothing in my nature," said he, "that I commend or approve so much, as my ἀδιατρεψία (inflexible rigor).” Upon his grandmother Antonia’s giving him some advice, as if it was a small matter to pay no regard to it, he said to her, “Remember that all things are lawful for me.” When about to murder his brother, whom he suspected of taking antidotes against poison, he said, “See then an antidote against Cæsar!” And when he banished his sisters, he told them in a menacing tone that he had not only islands at command, but likewise swords. One of pretorian rank having sent several times from Anticyra, whither he had gone for his health, to have his leave of absence prolonged, he ordered him to be put to death; adding these words: “Bleeding is necessary for one that has taken hellebore so long, and found no benefit.” It was his custom every tenth day to sign the lists of prisoners appointed for execution; and this he called “clearing his accounts.” And having condemned several Gauls and Greeks at one time, he exclaimed in triumph, “I have conquered Gallo-græcia.”

He generally prolonged the sufferings of his victims by causing them to be inflicted by slight and frequently repeated strokes; this being his well-known and constant order: “Strike so that he may feel himself die.” Having punished one person for another, by mistaking his name, he said, “He deserved it quite as much.” He had frequently in his mouth these words of the tragedian, “Oderint dum metuant” (Let them hate so long as they fear). He would often inveigh against all the senators without exception, as clients of Sejanus, and informers against his mother and brothers, producing the memorials which he had pretended to burn, and excusing the cruelty of Tiberius as necessary, since it was impossible to question the veracity of such a number of accusers. He continually reproached the whole equestrian order, as devoting themselves to nothing but acting on the stage, and fighting as gladiators. Being incensed at the people’s applauding a party at the Circensian games in opposition to him, he exclaimed, “I wish the Roman people had but one neck.” When Tetrinius, the highwayman, was denounced, he said his persecutors too were all Tetriniuses. Five Retiarii, in tunics, fighting in a company, yielded without a struggle to the same number of opponents; and being ordered to be slain, one of them taking up his lance again, killed all the conquerors. This he lamented in a proclamation as a most cruel butchery, and cursed all those who had borne the sight of it.

He used also to complain aloud of the state of the times, because it was not rendered remarkable by any public calamities; for, while the reign of Augustus had been made memorable to posterity by the disaster of Varus, and that of Tiberius by the fall of the theater at Fidenæ, his was likely to pass into oblivion, from an uninterrupted series of prosperity. And, at times, he wished for some terrible slaughter of his troops, a famine, a pestilence, conflagrations, or an earthquake.

Even in the midst of his diversions, while gaming or feasting, this savage ferocity, both in his language and actions, never forsook him. Persons were often put to the torture in his presence, whilst he was dining or carousing. A soldier, who was an adept in the art of beheading, used at such times to take off the heads of prisoners, who were brought in for that purpose. At Puteoli, at the dedication of the bridge which he planned, as already mentioned, he invited a number of people to come to him from the shore, and then suddenly threw them headlong into the sea; thrusting down with poles and oars those who, to save themselves, had got hold of the rudders of the ships. At Rome, in a public feast, a slave having stolen some thin plates of silver with which the couches were inlaid, he delivered him immediately to an executioner, with orders to cut off his hands, and lead him round the guests, with them hanging from his neck before his breast, and a label signifying the cause of his punishment. A gladiator who was practicing with him, and voluntarily threw himself at his feet, he stabbed with a poniard, and then ran about with a palm branch in his hand, after the manner of those who are victorious in the games. When a victim was to be offered upon an altar, he, clad in the habit of the L'opa, and holding the ax aloft for a while, at last, instead of the animal slaughtered an officer who attended to cut up the sacrifice. And at a sumptuous entertainment he fell suddenly into a violent fit of laughter, and upon the consuls, who reclined next to him, respectfully asking him the occasion. "Nothing," replied he, "but that, upon a single nod of mine, you might both have your throats cut."

Among many other jests, this was one: As he stood by the statue of Jupiter, he asked Apelles, the tragedian, which of them he thought was biggest? Upon his demurring about it, he lashed him most severely, now and then commending his voice, whilst he entreated for mercy, as being well modulated even when he was venting his grief. As often as he kissed the neck of his wife or mistress, he would say, "So beautiful a throat must be cut whenever I please;" and now and then he would threaten to put his dear Cæsonia to the torture, that he might discover why he loved her so passionately.

In his behavior towards men of almost all ages he discovered a degree of jealousy and malignity equal to that of his cruelty and pride. He so demolished and dispersed the statues of several illustrious persons, which had been removed by Augustus, for want of room, from the court of the Capitol into the Campus Martius, that it was impossible to set them up again with their inscriptions entire. And, for the future, he forbade any statue whatever to be erected without his knowledge and leave. He had thoughts, too, of suppressing Homer's poems: "For why," said he, "may not I do what Plato has done before me, who excluded him from his commonwealth?" He was likewise very near banishing the writings and the busts of Virgil and Livy from all libraries; censuring one of them as "a man of no genius and very little learning"; and the other as "a verbose and careless historian." He often talked of the lawyers as if he intended to abolish their profession. "By Hercules!" he would say, "I shall put it out of their power to answer any questions in law, otherwise than by referring to me!"

He took from the noblest persons in the city the ancient marks of distinction used by their families; as the collar from Torquatus, from Cincinnatus the curl of hair, and from Cneius Pompey the surname of Great, belonging to that ancient family. Ptolemy, mentioned before, whom he invited from his kingdom and received with great honors, he suddenly put to death, for no other reason but because he observed that upon entering the theater, at a public exhibition, he attracted the eyes of all the spectators by the splendor of his purple robe. As often as he met with handsome men, who had fine heads of hair, he would order the back of their heads to be shaved, to make them appear ridiculous. There was one Esius Proculus, the son of a centurion of the first rank, who, for his great stature and fine proportions, was called the Colossal. Him he ordered to be dragged from his seat in the arena, and matched with a gladiator in light armor, and afterwards with another completely armed; and upon his worsting them both, commanded him forthwith to be bound, to be led clothed in rags up and down the streets of the city, and, after being exhibited in that plight to the women, to be then butchered. There was no man of so abject or mean condition, whose excellency in any kind he did not envy. The Rex Nemorensis having many years enjoyed the honor of the priesthood, he procured a still stronger antagonist to oppose him. One Porius, who fought in a chariot, having been victorious in an exhibition, and in his joy given freedom to a slave, was applauded so vehemently that Caligula rose in such haste from his seat that, treading upon the hem of his toga, he tumbled down the steps, full of indignation, and crying out, "A people who are masters of the world pay greater respect to a gladiator for a trifle than to princes admitted amongst the gods, or to my own majesty here present amongst them."

In the devices of his profuse expenditure, he surpassed all the prodigals that ever lived; inventing a new kind of bath, with strange dishes and suppers, washing in precious unguents, both warm and cold, drinking pearls of immense value dissolved in vinegar, and serving up for his guests loaves and other victuals modeled in gold; often saying "that a man ought either to be a good economist or an emperor." Besides, he scattered money to a prodigious amount among the people, from the top of the Julian Basilica, during several days successively. He built two ships with ten banks of oars, after the Liburnian fashion, the poops of which blazed with jewels, and the sails were of various party-colors. They were fitted up with ample baths, galleries, and saloons, and supplied with a great variety of vines and other fruit trees. In these he would sail in the daytime along the coast of Campania, feasting amidst dancing and concerts of music. In building his palaces and villas, there was nothing he desired to effect so much, in defiance of all reason, as what was considered impossible. Accordingly, moles were formed in the deep and adverse sea, rocks of the hardest stone cut away, plains raised to the height of mountains with a vast mass of earth, and the tops of mountains leveled by digging; and all these were to be executed with incredible speed, for the least remissness was a capital offense. Not to mention particulars, he spent enormous sums, and the whole treasures which had been amassed by Tiberius Cæsar, amounting to two thousand seven hundred millions of sesterces, within less than a year.

Having therefore quite exhausted these funds, and being in want of money, he had recourse to plundering the people, by every mode of false accusation, confiscation, and taxation that could be invented. He declared that no one had any right to the freedom of Rome, although their ancestors had acquired it for themselves and their posterity, unless they were sons; for that none beyond that degree ought to be considered as posterity. When the grants of the Divine Julius and Augustus were produced to him, he only said that he was very sorry they were obsolete and out of date. He also charged all those with making false returns who, after the taking of the census, had by any means whatever increased their property. He annulled the wills of all who had been centurions of the first rank, as testimonies of their base ingratitude, if from the beginning of Tiberius's reign they had not left either that prince or himself their heir. He also set aside the wills of all others, if any person only pretended to say that they designed at death to leave Cæsar their heir. The public becoming terrified at this proceeding, he was now appointed joint heir with their friends, and in the case of parents with their children, by persons unknown to him. Those who lived any considerable time after making such a will he said were only making game of him; and accordingly he sent many of them poisoned cakes. He used to try such cases himself; fixing previously the sum he proposed to raise during the sitting, and, after he had secured it, quitting the tribunal. Impatient of the least delay, he condemned by a single sentence forty persons, against whom there were different charges; boasting to Cæsonia when she awoke, "how much business he had dispatched while she was taking her midday sleep." He exposed to sale by auction the remains of the apparatus used in the public spectacles; and exacted such biddings, and raised the prices so high, that some of the purchasers were ruined, and bled themselves to death. There is a well-known story told of Aponius Saturninus, who happening to fall asleep as he sat on a bench at the sale, Caius called out to the auctioneer not to overlook the pretorian personage who nodded to him so often; and accordingly the salesman went on, pretending to take the nods for tokens of assent, until thirteen gladiators were knocked down to him at the sum of nine millions of sesterces, he being in total ignorance of what was doing.

Having also sold in Gaul all the clothes, furniture, slaves, and even freedmen belonging to his sisters, at prodigious prices, after their condemnation, he was so much delighted with his gains, that he sent to Rome for all the furniture of the old palace; pressing for its conveyance all the carriages let to hire in the city, with the horses and mules belonging to the bakers, so that they often wanted bread at Rome; and many who had suits at law in progress, lost their causes, because they could not make their appearance in due time according to their recognizances. In the sale of this furniture, every artifice of fraud and imposition was employed. Sometimes he would rail at the bidders for being niggardly, and ask them "if they were not ashamed to be richer than he was?" at another, he would affect to be sorry that the property of princes should be passing into the hands of private persons. He had found out that a rich provincial had given two hundred thousand sesterces to his chamberlains for an underhand invitation to his table, and he was much pleased to find that honor valued at so high a rate. The day following, as the same person was sitting at the sale, he sent him some bauble, for which he told him he must pay two hundred thousand sesterces, and "that he should sup with Cæsar upon his own invitation."

He levied new taxes, and such as were never before known, at first by the publicans, but afterwards, because their profit was enormous, by centurions and tribunes of the pretorian guards; no description of property or persons being exempted from some kind of tax or other. For all eatables brought into the city, a certain excise was exacted; for all lawsuits or trials in whatever court, the fortieth part of the sum in dispute; and such as were convicted of compromising litigations were made liable to a penalty. Out of the daily wages of the porters he received an eighth, and from the gains of common prostitutes what they received for one favor granted. There was a clause in the law, that all bawds who kept women for prostitution or sale should be liable to pay, and that marriage itself should not be exempted.

These taxes being imposed, but the act by which they were levied never submitted to public inspection, great grievances were experienced from the want of sufficient knowledge of the law. At length, on the urgent demands of the Roman people, he published the law, but it was written in a very small hand, and posted up in a corner, so that no one could make a copy of it. To leave no sort of gain untried, he opened brothels in the Palatium. . . . He sent likewise his nomenclators about the forums and courts, to invite people of all ages, the old as well as the young, thither: and he was ready to lend his customers money upon interest, clerks attending to take down their names in public, as persons who contributed to the emperor's revenue. Another method of raising money, which he thought not below his notice, was gaming; which, by the help of lying and perjury, he turned to considerable account. Leaving once the management of his play to his partner in the game, he stepped into the court, and observing two rich Roman knights passing by, he ordered them immediately to be seized, and their estates confiscated. Then returning in great glee, he boasted that he had never made a better throw in his life.

After the birth of his daughter, complaining of his poverty and the burdens to which he was subjected, not only as an emperor but a father, he made a general collection for her maintenance and fortune. He likewise gave public notice that he would receive new-year's gifts on the calends of January following; and accordingly stood in the vestibule of his house to clutch the presents which people of all ranks threw down before him by handfuls and lapfuls. At last, being seized with an invincible desire of feeling money, taking off his slippers he repeatedly walked over great heaps of gold coin spread upon the spacious floor, and then laying himself down, rolled his whole body in gold over and over again.

Only once in his life did he take an active part in military affairs, and then not for any set purpose, but during his journey to Mevania to see the grove and river of Clitumnus. Being recommended to recruit a body of Batavians, who attended him, he resolved upon an expedition into Germany. Immediately he drew together several legions, and auxiliary forces from all quarters, and made everywhere new levies with the utmost rigor. Collecting supplies of all kinds, such as never had been assembled upon the like occasion, he set forward on his march, and pursued it sometimes with so much haste and precipitation, that the pretorian cohorts were obliged, contrary to custom, to pack their standards on horses or mules, and so follow him. At other times, he would march so slow and luxuriously, that he was carried in a litter by eight men; ordering the roads to be swept by the people of the neighboring towns, and sprinkled with water to lay the dust.

On arriving at the camp, in order to show himself an active general and severe disciplinarian, he cashiered the lieutenants who came up late with the auxiliary forces from different quarters. In reviewing the army, he deprived of their companies most of the centurions of the first rank, who had now served their legal time in the wars, and some whose time would have expired in a few days, alleging against them their age and infirmity; and railing at the covetous disposition of the rest of them, he reduced the bounty due to those who had served out their time to the sum of six thousand sesterces. Though he only received the submission of Adminius, the son of Cunobeline, a British king, who being driven from his native country by his father, came over to him with a small body of troops, yet, as if the whole island had been surrendered to him, he dispatched magnificent letters to Rome, ordering the bearers to proceed in their carriages directly up to the forum and the Senate-house, and not to deliver the letters but to the consuls in the temple of Mars, and in the presence of a full assembly of the senators.

Soon after this, there being no hostilities, he ordered a few Germans of his guard to be carried over and placed in concealment on the other side of the Rhine, and word to be brought him after dinner, that an enemy was advancing with great impetuosity. This being accordingly done, he immediately threw himself, with his friends, and a party of the pretorian knights, into the adjoining wood, where, lopping branches from the trees, and forming trophies of them, he returned by torchlight, upbraiding those who did not follow him, with timorousness and cowardice; but he presented the companions and sharers of his victory with crowns of a new form, and under a new name, having the sun, moon, and stars represented on them, and which he called Exploratoriae. Again, some hostages were by his order taken from the school, and privately sent off; upon notice of which he immediately rose from table, pursued them with the cavalry, as if they had run away, and coming up with them, brought them back in fetters; proceeding to an extravagant pitch of ostentation likewise in this military comedy. Upon his again sitting down to table, it being reported to him that the troops were all reassembled, he ordered them to sit down as they were, in their armor, animating them in the words of that well-known verse of Virgil:—

Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis. — Æn. 1.
(Bear up, and save yourselves for better days.)

In the meantime, he reprimanded the Senate and people of Rome in a very severe proclamation, “For reveling and frequenting the diversions of the circus and theater, and enjoying themselves at their villas, whilst their emperor was fighting, and exposing himself to the greatest dangers."

At last, as if resolved to make war in earnest, he drew up his army upon the shore of the ocean, with his balistæ and other engines of war, and while no one could imagine what he intended to do, on a sudden commanded them to gather up the sea-shells, and fill their helmets and the folds of their dress with them, calling them "the spoils of the ocean due to the Capitol and the Palatium." As a monument of his success, he raised a lofty tower, upon which, as at Pharos, he ordered lights to be burnt in the night-time, for the direction of ships at sea; and then promising the soldiers a donative of a hundred denarii a man, as if he had surpassed the most eminent examples of generosity, "Go your ways," said he, "and be merry; go, ye are rich."

In making preparations for his triumph, besides the prisoners and deserters from the barbarian armies, he picked out the men of greatest stature in all Gaul, such as he said were fittest to grace a triumph, with some of the chiefs, and reserved them to appear in the procession; obliging them not only to dye their hair yellow, and let it grow long, but to learn the German language, and assume the names commonly used in that country. He ordered likewise the galleys in which he had entered the ocean to be conveyed to Rome a great part of the way by land, and wrote to his controllers in the city, "to make proper preparations for a triumph against his arrival, at as small expense as possible; but on a scale such as had never been seen before, since they had full power over the property of every one."

Before he left the province, he formed a design of the most horrid cruelty—to massacre the legions which had mutinied upon the death of Augustus, for seizing and detaining by force his father, Germanicus, their commander, and himself, then an infant, in the camp. Though he was with great difficulty dissuaded from this rash attempt, yet neither the most urgent entreaties nor representations could prevent him from persisting in the design of decimating these legions. Accordingly, he ordered them to assemble unarmed, without so much as their swords; and then surrounded them with armed horse. But finding that many of them, suspecting that violence was intended, were making off, to arm in their own defense, he quitted the assembly as fast as he could, and immediately marched for Rome; bending now all his fury against the Senate, whom he publicly threatened, to divert the general attention from the clamor excited by his disgraceful conduct. Amongst other pretexts of offense, he complained that he was defrauded of a triumph, which was justly his due, though he had just before forbidden, upon pain of death, any honor to be decreed him.

In his march he was waited upon by deputies from the senatorian order, entreating him to hasten his return. He replied to them, "I will come, I will come, and this with me," striking at the same time the hilt of his sword. He issued likewise this proclamation: "I am coming, but for those only who wish for me, the equestrian order and the people; for I shall no longer treat the Senate as their fellow-citizen or prince." He forbade any of the senators to come to meet him; and either abandoning or deferring his triumph, he entered the city in ovation on his birthday. Within four months from this period he was slain, after he had perpetrated enormous crimes, and while he was meditating the execution, if possible, of still greater. He had entertained a design of removing to Antium, and afterwards to Alexandria; having first cut off the flower of the equestrian and senatorian orders. This is placed beyond all question, by two books which were found in his cabinet under different titles; one being called the sword, and the other, the dagger. They both contained private marks, and the names of those who were devoted to death. There was also found a large chest, filled with a variety of poisons, which being afterwards thrown into the sea by order of Claudius, are said to have so infected the waters that the fish were poisoned, and cast dead by the tide upon the neighboring shores.

He was tall, of a pale complexion, ill-shaped, his neck and legs very slender, his eyes and temples hollow, his brows broad and knit, his hair thin, and the crown of the head bald. The other parts of his body were much covered with hair. On this account, it was reckoned a capital crime for any person to look down from above, as he was passing by, or so much as to name a goat. His countenance, which was naturally hideous and frightful, he purposely rendered more so, forming it before a mirror into the most horrible contortions. He was crazy both in body and mind, being subject, when a boy, to the falling sickness. When he arrived at the age of manhood, he endured fatigue tolerably well; but still, occasionally, he was liable to a faintness, during which he remained incapable of any effort. He was not insensible of the disorder of his mind, and sometimes had thoughts of retiring to clear his brain. It is believed that his wife Cæsonia administered to him a love potion which threw him into a frenzy. What most of all disordered him was want of sleep, for he seldom had more than three or four hours' rest in a night; and even then his sleep was not sound, but disturbed by strange dreams; fancying, among other things, that a form representing the ocean spoke to him. Being therefore often weary with lying awake so long, sometimes he sat up in his bed, at others, walked in the longest porticoes about the house, and from time to time invoked and looked out for the approach of day. To this crazy constitution of his mind may, I think, very justly be ascribed two faults which he had, of a nature directly repugnant one to the other, namely, an excessive confidence and the most abject timidity. For he, who affected so much to despise the gods, was ready to shut his eyes and wrap up his head in his cloak at the slightest storm of thunder and lightning; and if it was violent he got up and hid himself under his bed. In his visit to Sicily, after ridiculing many strange objects which that country affords, he ran away suddenly in the night from Messini, terrified by the smoke and rumbling at the summit of Mount Etna. And though in words he was very valiant against the barbarians, yet upon passing a narrow defile in Germany in his light car, surrounded by a strong body of his troops, some one happening to say, "There would be no small consternation amongst us, if an enemy were to appear," he immediately mounted his horse and rode towards the bridges in great haste; but finding them blocked up with camp followers and baggage wagons, he was in such a hurry that he caused himself to be carried in men's hands over the heads of the crowd. Soon afterwards, upon hearing that the Germans were again in rebellion, he prepared to quit Rome, and equipped a fleet; comforting himself with this consideration, that if the enemy should prove victorious, and possess themselves of the heights of the Alps, as the Cimbri had done, or of the city, as the Senones formerly did, he would still have in reserve the transmarine provinces. Hence it was, I suppose, that it occurred to his assassins to invent the story intended to pacify the troops who mutinied at his death, that he had laid violent hands upon himself in a fit of terror occasioned by the news brought him of the defeat of his army.

THE FATE OF A PERSECUTOR OF THE JEWS.

By PHILO JUDÆUS.

[PHILO "the Jew" was probably born at Alexandria between B.C. 20 and 10, of a wealthy and influential family. Though a Jew by birth and feeling, he was a Greek in education and intellectual output. He devoted himself with immense learning and great original force to philosophy, and to the writing of books mainly designed to set Judaism on a foundation of metaphysics, according to an eclectic system drawn from the highest Greek philosophy, and to recommend it to the Greeks. In the year 40 he headed an embassy to Caligula, to induce him not to enforce his claim of divine honor from the Jews.]

FLACCUS AVILLIUS succeeded Sejanus in his hatred of and hostile designs against the Jewish nation. He was not, indeed, able to injure the whole people by open and direct means as Sejanus had been, inasmuch as he had less power for such a purpose, but he inflicted the most intolerable evils on all who came within his reach.

Moreover, though in appearance he only attacked a portion of the nation, in point of fact he directed his aims against all whom he could find anywhere, proceeding more by art than by force; for those men who, though of tyrannical natures and dispositions, have not strength enough to accomplish their designs openly, seek to compass them by maneuvers.

This Flaccus, being chosen by Tiberius Cæsar as one of his intimate companions, after the death of Severus, who had been lieutenant-governor in Egypt, was appointed viceroy of Alexandria and the country round about; being a man who at the beginning, as far as appearance went, had given innumerable instances of his excellence—for he was a man of prudence and diligence, and great acuteness of perception, very energetic in executing what he had determined on, very eloquent as a speaker, and skillful too at discerning what was suppressed as well as at understanding what was said. Accordingly in a short time he became perfectly acquainted with the affairs of Egypt; and they are of a very various and diversified character, so that they are not easily comprehended even by those who from their earliest infancy have made them their study.

The scribes were a superfluous body when he had made such advances towards the knowledge of all things, whether important or trivial, by his extended experience, that he not only surpassed them, but from his great accuracy was qualified, instead of a pupil, to become the instructor of those who had hitherto been the teachers of all other persons. However, all those things in which he displayed an admirable system and great wisdom concerning the accounts and the general arrangement of the revenues of the land, though they were serious matters and of the last importance, were nevertheless not such as gave any proofs of a soul fit for the task of governing; but those things which exhibited a more brilliant and royal disposition he also displayed with great freedom. For instance, he bore himself with considerable dignity, and pride and pomp are advantageous things for a ruler; and he decided all suits of importance in conjunction with the magistrates, he pulled down the over-proud, he forbade promiscuous mobs of men from all quarters to assemble together, and prohibited all associations and meetings which were continually feasting together under pretense of sacrifices, making a drunken mockery of public business, treating with great vigor and severity all who resisted his commands.

Then when he had filled the whole city and country with his wise legislation, he proceeded in turn to regulate the military affairs of the land, issuing commands, arranging matters, training the troops of every kind, infantry, cavalry, and light-armed, teaching the commanders not to deprive the soldiers of their pay, and so drive them to acts of piracy and rapine, and teaching each individual soldier not to proceed to any actions unauthorized by his military service, remembering that he was appointed with the especial object of preserving peace.

Perhaps some one may say here: "Do you, then, my good man, you who have determined to accuse this man, bring no accusation whatever against him, but, on the contrary, weave long panegyrics in his honor? Are you not doting and mad?"

"I am not mad, my friend, nor am I a downright fool, so as to be unable to see the consequences or connection of things. I praise Flaccus, not because it is right to praise an enemy, but in order to make his wickedness more conspicuous; for pardon is given to a man who does wrong from ignorance of what is right; but he who does wrong knowingly has no excuse, being already condemned by the tribunal of his own conscience."

For, having received a government which was intended to last six years, for the first five years, while Tiberius Cæsar was alive, he both preserved peace and also governed the country generally with such vigor and energy that he was superior to all the governors who had gone before him. But in the last year, after Tiberius was dead, and when Caius had succeeded him as emperor, he began to relax in and to be indifferent about everything, whether it was that he was overwhelmed with most heavy grief because of Tiberius (for it was evident to every one that he grieved exceedingly as if for a near relation, both by his continued depression of spirits and his incessant weeping, pouring forth tears without end as if from an inexhaustible fountain), or whether it was because he was disaffected to his successor, because he preferred devoting himself to the party of the real rather than to that of the adopted children, or whether it was because he had been one of those who had joined in the conspiracy against the mother of Caius, having joined against her at the time when the accusations were brought against her, on account of which she was put to death, and having escaped through fear of the consequence of proceeding against him.

However, for a time he still paid some attention to the affairs of the state, not wholly abandoning the administration of his government; but when he heard that the grandson of Tiberius and his partner in the government had been put to death at the command of Caius, he was smitten with intolerable anguish, and threw himself on the ground, and lay there speechless, being utterly deprived of his senses, for indeed his mind had long since been enervated by grief.

For as long as that child lived he did not despair of some sparks still remaining of his own safety, but now that he was dead, he considered that all his own hopes had likewise died within him, even if a slight breeze of assistance might still be left, such as his friendship with Macro, who had unbounded influence with Caius in his authority; and who, as it is said, had very greatly contributed to his obtaining the supreme power, and in a still higher degree to his personal safety, since Tiberius had frequently thought of putting Caius out of the way, as a wicked man and one who was in no respects calculated by nature for the exercise of authority, being influenced also partly by his apprehensions for his grandson; for he feared lest, when he himself was dead, his death too would be added to the funerals of his family.

But Macro had constantly bade him discard these apprehensions from his mind, and had praised Caius as a man of a simple, and honest, and sociable character; and as one who was very much attracted to his cousin, so that he would willingly yield the supreme authority to him alone, and the first rank in everything. And Tiberius, being deceived by all these representations, without being aware of what he was doing, left behind him a most irreconcilable enemy, to himself and his grandson and his whole family, and to Macro, who was his chief adviser and comforter, and to all mankind; for when Macro saw that Caius was forsaking the way of virtue and yielding to his unbridled passions, following them wherever they led him and against whatever objects they led him, he admonished and reproved him, looking upon him as the same Caius who, while Tiberius was alive, was mild-tempered and docile; but to his misery he suffered most terrible punishment for his exceeding ill-will, being put to death with his wife, and children, and all his family, as a grievous and troublesome object to his new sovereign. For whenever he saw him at a distance coming towards him, he used to speak in this manner to those who were with him: "Let us not smile; let us look sad: here comes the censor and monitor; the all-wise man, he who is beginning now to be the schoolmaster of a full-grown man and of an emperor, after time itself has separated him from and discarded the tutors of his earliest infancy."

When, therefore, Flaccus learnt that he too was put to death, he utterly abandoned all other hope for the future, and was no longer able to apply himself to public affairs as he had done before, being enervated and wholly broken down in spirit. But when a magistrate begins to despair of his power of exerting authority, it follows inevitably that his subjects must quickly become disobedient, especially those who are naturally, at every trivial or common occurrence, inclined to show insubordination, and, among people of such a disposition, the Egyptian nation is preëminent, being constantly in the habit of exciting great seditions from very small sparks.

And being placed in a situation of great and perplexing difficulty, he began to rage, and simultaneously, with the change of his disposition for the worse, beginning with his nearest friends and his most habitual customs; for he began to suspect and to drive from him those who were well affected to him, and who were most sincerely his friends, and he reconciled himself to those who were originally his declared enemies, and he used them as advisers under all circumstances; but they, for they persisted in their ill-will, being reconciled with him only in words and in appearance, but in their actions and in their hearts they bore him incurable enmity; and though only pretending a genuine friendship towards him, like actors in a theater, they drew him over wholly to their side; and so the governor became a subject, and the subjects became the governor, advancing the most unprofitable opinions, and immediately confirming and insisting upon them; for they became executors of all the plans which they had devised, treating him like a mute person on the stage, as one who was only, by way of making up the show, inscribed with the title of authority, being themselves a lot of Dionysiuses, demagogues, and of Lampos, a pack of cavillers and wood-splitters; and of Isidoruses, sowers of sedition, busybodies, devisers of evil, troublers of the state; for this is the name which has, at last, been given to them.

All these men, having devised a most grievous design against the Jews, proceeded to put it in execution, and coming privately to Flaccus, said to him, "All your hope from the child of Tiberius Nero has now perished, and that which was your second best prospect, your companion Macro, is gone too, and you have no chance of favor with the emperor; therefore we must find another advocate, by whom Caius may be made propitious to us, and that advocate is the city of Alexandria, which all the family of Augustus has honored from the very beginning, and our present master above all the rest; and it will be a sufficient mediator in our behalf if we can obtain one boon from you, and you cannot confer a greater benefit upon it than by abandoning and denouncing all the Jews."

Now, though upon this he ought to have rejected and driven away the speakers as workers of revolution and common enemies, he agreed on the contrary to what they say, and at first he made his designs against the Jews less evident, only abstaining from listening to causes brought before his tribunal with impartiality and equity, and inclining more to one side than to the other, and not allowing to both sides an equal freedom of speech; but whenever any Jew came before him he showed his aversion to him, and departed from his habitual affability in their case; but afterwards he exhibited his hostility to them in a more conspicuous manner. . . .

And the manner in which he was cut short in his tyranny was as follows: He imagined that Caius was already made favorable to him in respect of those matters, about which suspicion was sought to be raised against him, partly by his letters, which were full of flattery, and partly by the harangues which he was continually addressing to the people, in which he courted the emperor by stringing together flattering sentences and long series of cunningly imagined panegyrics, and partly too because he was very highly thought of by the greater part of the city. But he was deceiving himself without knowing it; for the hopes of wicked men are unstable, as they guess what is more favorable to them, while they suffer what is quite contrary to it, as in fact they deserve.

For Bassus, the centurion, was sent from Italy by the appointment of Caius with the company of soldiers which he commanded. And having embarked on board one of the fastest sailing vessels, he arrived in a few days at the harbor of Alexandria, off the island of Pharos, about evening; and he ordered the captain of the ship to keep out in the open sea till sunset, intending to enter the city unexpectedly, in order that Flaccus might not be aware of his coming beforehand, and so be led to adopt any violent measures, and render the service which he was commanded to perform fruitless.

And when the evening came, the ship entered the harbor, and Bassus, disembarking with his own soldiers, advanced, neither recognizing nor being recognized by any one; and on the road, finding a soldier who was one of the quaternions of the guard, he ordered him to show him his captain's house; for he wished to communicate his secret errand to him, that if he required additional force, he might have an assistant ready.

And when he heard that he was supping at some person's house in company with Flaccus, he did not relax in his speed, but hastened onward to the dwelling of his entertainer; for the man with whom they were feasting was Stephanion, one of the freedmen of Tiberius Cæsar; and withdrawing to a short distance, he sends forward one of his own followers to reconnoiter, disguising him like a servant in order that no one might notice him or perceive what was going forward. So he, entering into the banqueting hall, as if he were the servant of one of the guests, examined everything accurately, and then returned and gave information to Bassus. And he, when he had learnt the unguarded condition of the entrances, and the small number of the people who were with Flaccus (for he was attended by not more than ten or fifteen slaves to wait upon him), gave the signal to the soldiers whom he had with him, and hastened forward, and entered suddenly into the supper room, he and the soldiers with him, who stood by with their swords girded on, and surrounded Flaccus before he was aware of it, for at the moment of their entrance he was drinking health with some one, and making merry with those who were present.

But when Bassus had made his way into the midst, the moment that he saw him he became dumb with amazement and consternation, and wishing to rise up he saw the guards all round him, and then he perceived his fate, even before he heard what Caius wanted with him, and what commands had been given to those who had come, and what he was about to endure, for the mind of man is very prompt at perceiving at once all those particulars which take a long time to happen, and at hearing them all together. Accordingly, every one of those who were of this supper party rose up, being through fear unnerved, and shuddering lest some punishment might be affixed to the mere fact of having been supping with the culprit, for it was not safe to flee, nor indeed was it possible to do so, since all the entrances were already occupied. So Flaccus was led away by the soldiers at the command of Bassus, this being the manner in which he returned from the banquet; for it was fitting that justice should begin to visit him at a feast, because he had deprived the houses of innumerable innocent men of all festivity. . . .

I have related these events at some length, not for the sake of keeping old injuries in remembrance, but because I admire that power who presides over all freemen's affairs, namely, justice, seeing that those men who were so generally hostile to Flaccus, those by whom of all men he was most hated, were the men who now brought their accusations against him, to fill up the measure of his grief, for it is not so bitter merely to be accused as to be accused by one's confessed enemies; but this man was not merely accused, though a governor, by his subjects, and that by men who had always been his enemies, when he had only a short time before been the lord of the life of every individual among them, but he was also apprehended by force, being thus subjected to a twofold evil, namely, to be defeated and ridiculed by exulting enemies, which is worse than death to all right-minded and sensible people.

And then see what an abundance of disasters came upon him, for he was immediately stripped of all his possessions, both of those which he inherited from his parents and of all that he had acquired himself, having been a man who took especial delight in luxury and ornament; for he was not like some rich men, to whom wealth is an inactive material, but he was continually acquiring things of every useful kind in all imaginable abundance; cups, garments, couches, miniatures, and everything else which was any ornament to a house; and besides that, he collected a vast number of servants, carefully selected for their excellencies and accomplishments, and with reference to their beauty and health and vigor of body and to their unerring skill in all kinds of necessary and useful service; for every one of them was excellent in that employment to which he was appointed, so that he was looked upon as either the most excellent of all servants in that place, or, at all events, as inferior to no one.

And after he had been deprived of all his property, he was condemned to banishment, and was exiled from the whole continent, and that is the greatest and most excellent portion of the inhabited world, and from every island that has any character for fertility or richness; for he was commanded to be sent into that most miserable of all the islands in the Ægean Sea, called Gyara, and he would have been left there if he had not availed himself of the intercession of Lepidus, by whose means he obtained leave to exchange Gyara for Andros, which was very near it. Then he was sent back again on the road from Rome to Brundisium, a journey which he had taken a few years before, at the time when he was appointed governor of Egypt and the adjacent country of Libya, in order that the cities which had then seen him exulting and behaving with great insolence in the hour of his prosperity, might now again behold him full of dishonor.

And after he had crossed the Ionian Gulf he sailed up the sea which leads to Corinth, being a spectacle to all the cities in Peloponnesus which lie on the coast, when they heard of his sudden reverse of fortune; for when he disembarked from the vessel all the evil-disposed men who bore him ill will ran up to see him; and others also came to sympathize with him — men who are accustomed to learn moderation from the misfortunes of others. And at Lechæum, crossing over the isthmus into the opposite gulf, and having arrived at Cenchrea, the dockyard of the Corinthians, he was compelled by the guards, who would not permit him the slightest respite, to embark immediately on board a small transport and to set sail, and as a foul wind was blowing with great violence, after great sufferings he with difficulty arrived safe at the Piræus.

And when the storm had ceased, having coasted along Attica as far as the promontory of Sunium, he passed by all the islands in order, namely, Helena, and Cænus, and Cythnos, and all the rest which lie in a regular row one after another, until at last he came to the point of his ultimate destination, the island of Andros, which the miserable man beholding afar off, poured forth abundance of tears down his cheeks, as if from a regular fountain, and beating his breast and lamenting most bitterly, he said : " Men, ye who are my guards and attendants in this my journey, I now receive in exchange for the glorious Italy this beautiful country of Andros, which is an unfortunate island for me. I, Flaccus, who was born and brought up and educated in Rome, the heaven of the world, and who have been the schoolfellow and companion of the granddaughters of Augustus, and who was afterwards selected by Tiberius Cæsar as one of his most intimate friends, and who have had intrusted to me for six years the greatest of all his possessions, namely, Egypt ! What a change is this ! In the middle of the day, as if an eclipse had come upon me, night has overshadowed my life. What shall I say of this little islet ? Shall I call it my place of banishment, or my new country, or harbor and refuge of misery ? A tomb would be the most proper name for it ; for I, miserable that I am, am now in a manner conducted to my grave, attending my own funeral, for either I shall destroy my miserable life through my sorrow, or if I am able to cling to life among my miseries, I shall in that case find a distant death, which will be felt all the time of my life."

These, then, were the lamentations which he poured forth, and when the vessel came near the harbor he landed, stooping down to the very ground like men heavily oppressed, being weighed down by his calamities as if the heaviest of burdens was placed upon his neck, without being able to look up, or else not daring to do so because of the people whom he might meet, and of those who came out to see him and who stood on each side of the road. And those men who had conducted him hither, bringing the populace of the Adrians, exhibited him to them all, making them all witnesses of the arrival of the exile in their island.

And they, when they had discharged their office, departed ; and then the misery of Flaccus was renewed, as he no longer beheld any sight to which he was accustomed, but only saw sad misery presented to him by the most conspicuous evidence, while he looked around upon what to him was perfect desolation, in the middle of which he was placed ; so that it seemed to him that a violent execution in his native land would have been a lighter evil, or rather, by comparison with his present circumstances, a most desirable good ; and he gave himself up to such violence of grief, that he was in no respect different from a maniac, and leaped about, and ran to and fro, and clapped his hands, and smote his thighs, and threw himself upon the ground, and kept continually crying out, "I am Flaccus ! who but a little while ago was the governor of the mighty city, of the populous city of Alexandria ! the governor of that most fertile of all countries, Egypt ! I am he, on whom all those myriads of inhabitants turned their eyes ! who had countless forces of infantry, and cavalry, and ships, formidable, not merely by their number, but consisting of all the most eminent and illustrious of all my subjects ! I am he who was every day accompanied when I went out by countless companies of clients ! But now, was not all this a vision rather than reality ? and was I asleep, and was this prosperity which I then beheld a dream—phantoms marching through empty space, fictions of the soul, which perhaps registered non-existent things as though they had a being ? Doubtless I have been deceived. These things were but a shadow and no real things, imitations of reality and not a real truth, which makes falsehood evident ; for as after we have awakened we find none of those things which appeared to us in our dreams, but all such things have fled in a body and disappeared, so, too, all that brilliant prosperity which I formerly enjoyed has now been extinguished in the briefest moment of time."

With such discourses as these, he was continually being cast down, and in a manner, as I may say, prostrated ; and avoiding all places where he might be likely to meet with many persons on account of the shame which clung to him, he never went down to the harbor, nor could he endure to visit the market-place, but shut himself up in his house, where he kept himself close, never venturing to go beyond the outer court. But sometimes indeed, in the deepest twilight of the dawn, when every one else was still in bed, so that he could be seen by no one whatever, he would go forth out of the city and spend the entire day in the desolate part of the island, turning away if any one seemed likely to meet him; and being torn as to his soul with the memorials of his misfortunes which he saw about him in his house, and being devoured with anguish, he went back home in the darkness of the night, praying, by reason of his immoderate and never-ending misery, that the evening would become morning, dreading the darkness and the strange appearances which represented themselves to him when he went to sleep, and again in the morning he prayed that it might be evening; for the darkness which surrounded him was opposed to everything light or cheerful.

And a few months afterwards, having purchased a small piece of land, he spent a great deal of his time there living by himself, and bewailing and weeping over his fate. It is said, too, that often at midnight he became possessed like those who celebrate the rites of the Corybantes, and at such times he would go forth out of his farmhouse and raise his eyes to heaven and to the stars, and beholding all the beauty really existing in the world, he would cry out: "O King of gods and men! you are not, then, indifferent to the Jewish nation, nor are the assertions which they relate with respect to your providence false; but those men who say that that people has not you for their champion and defender, are far from a correct opinion. And I am an evident proof of this; for all the frantic designs which I conceived against the Jews, I now suffer myself. I consented when they were stripped of their possessions, giving immunity to those who were plundering them; and on this account I have myself been deprived of all my paternal and maternal inheritance and of all that I have ever acquired by gift or favor, and of everything else that ever became mine in any other manner. In times past I reproached them with ignominy as being foreigners, though they were in truth sojourners in the land entitled to full privileges, in order to give pleasure to their enemies who were a promiscuous and disorderly multitude, by whom I, miserable man that I was, was flattered and deceived; and for this I have been myself branded with infamy and have been driven as an exile from the whole of the habitable world, and am shut up in this place. Again, I led some of them into the theater, and commanded them to be shamelessly and unjustly insulted in the sight of their greatest enemies; and therefore I justly have been myself led, not into a theater or into one city, but into many cities, to endure the utmost extremity of insult, being ill treated in my miserable soul instead of my body; for I was led in procession through the whole of Italy as far as Brundisium, and through all Peloponnesus as far as Corinth, and through Attica, and all the islands as far as Andros, which is this prison of mine; and I am thoroughly assured that even this is not the limit of my misfortunes, but that others are still in store for me, to fill up the measure as a requital for all the evils which I have done. I put many persons to death, and when some of them were put to death by others, I did not chastise their murderers. Some were stoned; some were burnt alive; others were dragged through the middle of the market-place till the whole of their bodies were torn to pieces. And for all this I know now that retribution awaits me, and that the avengers are already standing, as it were, at the goal, and are pressing close to me, eager to slay me; and every day — rather every hour — I die before my time, enduring many deaths instead of one, the last of all."

And he was continually giving way to dread and to apprehension, and shaking with fear in every limb and every portion of his body, and his whole soul was trembling with terror and quivering with palpitation and agitation, as if nothing in the world could possibly be a comfort to the man now that he was deprived of all favorable hopes; no good omen ever appeared to him, everything bore an hostile appearance, every report was ill-omened, his waking was painful, his sleep fearful, his solitude resembling that of wild beasts; nevertheless the solitude of his herds was what was most pleasant to him, any dwelling in the city was his greatest affliction; his safe retreat was a solitary abiding in the fields, a dangerous and painful and unseemly way of life; every one who approached him, however justly, was an object of suspicion to him. "This man," he would say, "who is coming quickly hither, is planning something against me; he does not look as if he were hastening for any other object, but he is pursuing me; this pleasant-looking man is laying a snare for me; this free-spoken man is despising me; this man is giving me meat and drink as they feed cattle before killing them. How long shall I, hard-hearted that I am, bear up against such terrible calamities? I well know that I am afraid of death, since out of cruelty the Deity will not punish me violently, to cut short my miserable life, in order to load me to excess with irremediable miseries, which he treasures up against me, to do a pleasure to those whom I treacherously put to death."

While repeating these things over and over again and writhing with his agony, he awaited the end of his destiny, and his uninterrupted sorrow agitated, and disturbed, and overturned his soul. But Caius, being a man of an inhuman nature and insatiable in his revenge, did not, as some persons do, let go those who had been once punished, but raged against them without end, and was continually contriving some new and terrible suffering for them; and, above all men, he hated Placcus to such a degree that he suspected all who bore the same name, from his detestation of the very appellation; and he often repented that he had condemned him to banishment and not to death, and though he had a great respect for Lepidus who had interceded for him, he blamed him, so that he was kept in a state of great alarm from fear of punishment impending over him, for he feared lest, as was very likely, he, because he had been the cause of another person having been visited by a lighter punishment, might himself have a more severe one inflicted upon him.

Therefore, as no one any longer ventured to say a word by way of deprecating the anger of the emperor, he gave loose to his fury, which was now implacable and unrestrained, and which, though it ought to have been mitigated by time, was rather increased by it, just as recurring diseases are in the body when a relapse takes place, for all such relapses are more grievous than the original attacks.

They say that on one occasion Caius, being awake at night, began to turn his mind to the magistrates and officers who were in banishment, and who in name indeed were looked upon as unfortunate, but who in reality had now thus acquired a life free from trouble, and truly tranquil and free. And he gave a new name to this banishment, calling it an emigration, "For," said he, "it is only a kind of emigration the banishment of these men, inasmuch as they have all the necessities of life in abundance, and are able to live in tranquillity and stability and peace. But it is an absurdity for them to be living in luxury, enjoying peace, and indulging in all the pleasures of a philosophical life."

Then he commanded the most eminent of the men, and those who were of the highest rank and reputation, to be put to death, giving a regular list of their names, at the head of which list was Flaccus. And when the men arrived at Andros, who had been commanded to put him to death, Flaccus happened, just at that moment, to be coming from his farm into the city, and they, on their way up from the port, met him, and while yet at a distance they perceived and recognized one another; at which he, perceiving in a moment the object for which they were come (for every man's soul is very prophetic, especially of such as are in misfortune), turning out of the road, fled and ran away over the rough ground, forgetting, perhaps, that Andros was an island and not the continent. And what is the use of speed in an island which the sea washes all round? for one of two things must of necessity happen, either if the fugitive advances farther he must be carried into the sea, or else arrested when he has reached the farthest boundary. Therefore, in a comparison of evils, destruction by land must be preferable to destruction by sea, since nature has made the land more closely akin to man, and to all terrestrial animals, not only while they are alive, but even after they are dead, in order that the same element may receive both their primary generation and their last dissolution.

The officers therefore pursued him without stopping to take breath, and arrested him; and then immediately some of them dug a ditch, and the others dragged him on by force in spite of all his resistance and crying out and struggling, by which means his whole body was wounded like that of beasts that are dispatched with a number of wounds; for he, turning round them and clinging to his executioners, who were hindered in their aims which they took at him with their swords, and who thus struck him with oblique blows, was the cause of his own sufferings being more severe; for he was in consequence mutilated and cut about the hands, and feet, and head, and breast, and sides, so that he was mangled like a victim, and thus he fell, justice righteously inflicting on his own body wounds equal in number to the murders of the Jews whom he had unlawfully put to death.

And the whole place flowed with blood which was shed from his numerous veins, which were cut in every part of his body, and which poured forth blood as from a fountain. And when the corpse was dragged into the trench which had been dug, the greater part of the limbs separated from the body, the sinews by which the whole of the body is kept together being all cut through.

Such was the end of Flaccus, who suffered thus, being made the most manifest evidence that the nation of the Jews is not left destitute of the providential assistance of God.

THE DAYS OF NERO.

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ.

(From "Quo Vadis.")

[HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ, the foremost living Polish novelist, was born of Lithuanian parents at Vola Okrzejska in the Lukowschen, in 1846. After pursuing his studies at the University of Warsaw, he adopted a wandering existence, and in 1876 proceeded to America, where he spent considerable time in Southern California, and wrote for the Warsaw papers numerous stories and impressions of travel. He subsequently returned to Poland and took up literature as a profession. Nearly all of his works have been translated into English, and enjoy great popularity in the United States and England. The most important are: "Children of the Soil;" "With Fire and Sword;" "The Deluge," and "Pan Michael," forming a trilogy of historical novels; "Quo Vadis," a tale of the time of Nero; "Yanko the Musician;" "Without Dogma;" "Hania." Died in 1916.]

"ARE those verses of Nero's really so bad?" said Vinicius. "I am no judge in such matters."

"The verses are no worse than others," replied Petronius. "Lucan has more genius in one finger, but there is something in Bronzebeard, too. Above all, he has an immense love for poetry and music. In two days we are to be with him to hear the music of his hymn to Aphrodite, which he will finish to-day or to-morrow. We shall be in a small circle,—only I, you, Tullius Senecio, and young Nerva. But what I said concerning Nero's verses—that I use them after a meal, as Vitellius does flamingo feathers—is not true. At times they are eloquent. Hecuba's words are touching: she complains of the pangs of birth, and Nero was able to find felicitous expressions—perhaps because he gives birth to every verse in torments. Sometimes I am sorry for him. By Pollux, what a wonderful mixture! There was a screw loose in Caligula, but still he never did such curious things." . . .

Nero played and sang, in honor of the "Lady of Cyprus," a hymn the verses and music of which were composed by himself. That day he was in voice, and felt that his music really captivated those present. That feeling added such power to the sounds produced and roused his own soul so much that he seemed inspired. At last he grew pale from genuine emotion. This was surely the first time that he had no desire to hear praises from others. He sat for a time with his hands on the cithara and with bowed head: then, rising suddenly, he said, —

"I am tired and need air. Meanwhile ye will tune the citharæ."

He covered his throat then with a silk kerchief.

"Ye will go with me," said he, turning to Petronius and Vinicius, who were sitting in a corner of the hall. "Give me thy arm, Vinicius, for strength fails me ; Petronius will talk to me of music."

They went out on the terrace, which was paved with alabaster and sprinkled with saffron.

"Here one can breathe more freely," said Nero. "My soul is moved and sad, though I see that with what I have sung to thee on trial just now I may appear in public, and my triumph will be such as no Roman has ever achieved."

"Thou mayst appear here, in Rome, in Achæa. I admire thee with my whole heart and mind, divinity," answered Petronius.

"I know. Thou art too slothful to force thyself to flattery, and thou art as sincere as Tullius Senecio, but thou hast more knowledge than he. Tell me, what is thy judgment on music ?"

"When I listen to poetry, when I look at a quadriga directed by thee in the Circus, when I look at a beautiful statue, temple, or picture, I feel that I comprehend perfectly what I see, that my enthusiasm takes in all that these can give. But when I listen to music, especially thy music, new delights and beauties open before me every instant. I pursue them, I try to seize them ; but before I can take them to myself, new and newer ones flow in, just like waves of the sea, which roll on from infinity. Hence I tell thee that music is like the sea. We stand on one shore and gaze at remoteness, but we cannot see the other shore."

"Ah, what deep knowledge thou hast !" said Nero ; and they walked on for a moment, only the slight sound of the saffron leaves under their feet being heard.

"Thou hast expressed my idea," said Nero, at last ; "hence I say now, as ever, in all Rome thou art the only man able to understand me. Thus it is, my judgment of music is the same as thine. When I play and sing, I see things which I did not know as existing in my dominions or in the world. I am Cæsar, and the world is mine. I can do everything. But music opens new kingdoms to me, new mountains, new seas, new delights unknown before. Most frequently I cannot name them or grasp them ; I only feel them. I feel the gods, I see Olympus. Some kind of breeze from beyond the earth blows in on me ; I behold, as in a mist, certain immeasurable greatnesses, but calm and bright as sunshine. The whole Spheros plays around me ; and I declare to thee " (here Nero's voice quivered with genuine wonder) "that I, Cæsar and god, feel at such times as diminutive as dust. Wilt thou believe this ?"

"I will. Only great artists have power to feel small in the presence of art."

"This is a night of sincerity; hence I open my soul to thee as to a friend, and I will say more : dost thou consider that I am blind or deprived of reason ? Dost thou think that I am ignorant of this, that people in Rome write insults on the walls against me, call me a matricide, a wife murderer, hold me a monster and a tyrant, because Tigellinus obtained a few sentences of death against my enemies ? Yes, my dear, they hold me a monster, and I know it. They have talked cruelty on me to that degree that at times I put the question to myself, 'Am I not cruel ?' But they do not understand this, that a man's deeds may be cruel at times while he himself is not cruel. Ah, no one will believe, and perhaps even thou, my dear, wilt not believe, that at moments when music caresses my soul I feel as kind as a child in the cradle. I swear by those stars which shine above us, that I speak the pure truth to thee. People do not know how much goodness lies in this heart, and what treasures I see in it when music opens the door to them."

Petronius, who had not the least doubt that Nero was speaking sincerely at that moment, and that music might bring out various more noble inclinations of his soul, which were overwhelmed by mountains of egotism, profligacy, and crime, said :—

"Men should know thee as nearly as I do ; Rome has never been able to appreciate thee."

Cæsar leaned more heavily on Vinicius' arm, as if he were bending under the weight of injustice, and answered :—

"Tigellinus has told me that in the Senate they whisper into one another's ears that Diodorus and Terpnos play on the cithara better than I. They refuse me even that ! But tell me, thou who art truthful always, do they play better, or as well ?"

"By no means. Thy touch is finer, and has greater power. In thee the artist is evident, in them the expert. The man who hears their music first understands better what thou art."

"If that be true, let them live. They will never imagine what a service thou hast rendered them in this moment. For that matter, if I had condemned those two, I should have had to take others in place of them."

"And people would say, besides, that out of love for music thou destroyest music in thy dominions. Never kill art for art's sake, O divinity."

"How different thou art from Tigellinus!" answered Nero. "But seest thou, I am an artist in everything; and since music opens for me spaces the existence of which I had not divined, regions which I do not possess, delight and happiness which I do not know, I cannot live a common life. Music tells me that the uncommon exists, so I seek it with all the power of dominion which the gods have placed in my hands. At times it seems to me that to reach those Olympian worlds I must do something which no man has done hitherto,—I must surpass the stature of man in good or evil. I know that people declare me mad. But I am not mad, I am only seeking. And if I am going mad, it is out of disgust and impatience that I cannot find. I am seeking! Dost understand me? And therefore I wish to be greater than man, for only in that way can I be the greatest as an artist."

Here he lowered his voice so that Vinicius could not hear him, and, putting his mouth to the ear of Petronius, he whispered:—

"Dost know that I condemned my mother and wife to death mainly because I wished to lay at the gate of an unknown world the greatest sacrifice that man could put there? I thought that afterward something would happen, that doors would be opened beyond which I should see something unknown. Let it be wonderful or awful, surpassing human conception, if only great and uncommon. But that sacrifice was not sufficient. To open the empyrean doors it is evident that something greater is needed, and let it be given as the Fates desire."

"What dost thou intend to do?"

"Thou shalt see sooner than thou thinkest. Meanwhile be assured that there are two Neros,—one such as people know, the other an artist, whom thou alone knowest, and if he slays as does death, or is in frenzy like Bacchus, it is only because the flatness and misery of common life stifle him; and I should like to destroy them, though I had to use fire or iron. Oh, how flat this world will be when I am gone from it! No man has suspected yet, not thou even, what an artist I am. But precisely because of this I suffer, and sincerely do I tell thee that the soul in me is as gloomy as those cypresses which stand dark there in front of us. It is grievous for a man to bear at once the weight of supreme power and the highest talents."

"I sympathize with thee, O Caesar; and with me earth and sea, not counting Vinicius, who deifies thee in his soul."

"He, too, has always been dear to me," said Caesar, "though he serves Mars, not the Muses."

"He serves Aphrodite first of all," answered Petronius. And suddenly he determined to settle the affair of his nephew at a blow, and at the same time to eliminate every danger which might threaten him. "He is in love, as was Troilus with Cressida. Permit him, lord, to visit Rome, for he is dying on my hands. Dost thou know that that Lygian hostage whom thou gavest him has been found, and Vinicius, when leaving for Antium, left her in care of a certain Linus? I did not mention this to thee, for thou wert composing thy hymn, and that was more important than all besides. Vinicius wanted her as a mistress; but when she turned out to be as virtuous as Lucretia, he fell in love with her virtue, and now his desire is to marry her. She is a king's daughter, hence she will cause him no detriment; but he is a real soldier: he sighs and withers and groans, but he is waiting for the permission of his Imperator."

"The Imperator does not choose wives for his soldiers. What good is my permission to Vinicius?"

"I have told thee, O lord, that he deifies thee."

"All the more may he be certain of permission. That is a comely maiden, but too narrow in the hips. The Augusta Poppæa has complained to me that she enchanted our child in the gardens of the Palatine."

"But I told Tigellinus that the gods are not subject to evil charms. Thou rememberest, divinity, his confusion and thy exclamation, 'Habet!'"

"I remember."

Here he turned to Vinicius:—

"Dost thou love her, as Petronius says?"

"I love her, lord," replied Vinicius.

"Then I command thee to set out for Rome to-morrow, and marry her. Appear not again before my eyes without the marriage ring."

"Thanks to thee, lord, from my heart and soul."

"Oh, how pleasant it is to make people happy!" said Nero.
"Would that I might do nothing else all my life!"

"Grant us one favor more, O divinity," said Petronius:
"declare thy will in this matter before the Augusta. Vinicius would never venture to wed a woman displeasing to the Augusta; thou wilt dissipate her prejudice, O lord, with a word, by declaring that thou hast commanded this marriage."

"I am willing," said Cæsar.— "I could refuse nothing to thee or Vinicius."

He turned toward the villa, and they followed. Their hearts were filled with delight over the victory; and Vinicius had to use self-restraint to avoid throwing himself on the neck of Petronius, for it seemed now that all dangers and obstacles were removed.

In the atrium of the villa young Nerva and Tullius Senecio were entertaining the Augusta with conversation. Terpnos and Diodorus were tuning citharæ.

Nero entered, sat in an armchair inlaid with tortoise shell, whispered something in the ear of a Greek slave near his side, and waited.

The page returned soon with a golden casket. Nero opened it and took out a necklace of great opals.

"These are jewels worthy of this evening," said he.

"The light of Aurora is playing in them," answered Poppæa, convinced that the necklace was for her.

Cæsar, now raising, now lowering, the rosy stones, said at last:—

"Vinicius, thou wilt give, from me, this necklace to her whom I command thee to marry, the youthful daughter of the Lygian king."

Poppæa's glance, filled with anger and sudden amazement, passed from Cæsar to Vinicius. At last it rested on Petronius. But he, leaning carelessly over the arm of the chair, passed his hand along the back of the harp as if to fix its form firmly in his mind.

Vinicius gave thanks for the gift, approached Petronius, and asked:—

"How shall I thank thee for what thou hast done this day for me?"

"Sacrifice a pair of swans to Euterpe," replied Petronius, "praise Cæsar's songs, and laugh at omens. Henceforth the roaring of lions will not disturb thy sleep, I trust, nor that of thy Lygian lily."

"No," said Vinicius; "now I am perfectly at rest."

"May Fortune favor thee! But be careful, for Cæsar is taking his lute again. Hold thy breath, listen, and shed tears."

In fact Cæsar had taken the lute and raised his eyes. In the hall conversation had stopped, and people were as still as if petrified. Terpnos and Diodorus, who had to accompany Cæsar, were on the alert, looking now at each other and now at his lips, waiting for the first tones of the song.

Just then a movement and noise began in the entrance; and after a moment Cæsar's freedman, Phaon, appeared from beyond the curtain. Close behind him was the consul Lecanius.

Nero frowned.

"Pardon, divine Emperor," said Phaon, with panting voice, "there is a conflagration in Rome! The greater part of the city is in flames!"

At this news all sprang from their seats.

"O gods! I shall see a burning city and finish the Troyad," said Nero, setting aside his lute.

Then he turned to the consul:—

"If I go at once, shall I see the fire?"

"Lord," answered Lecanius, as pale as a wall, "the whole city is one sea of flame; smoke is suffocating the inhabitants, and people faint, or cast themselves into the fire from delirium. Rome is perishing, lord."

A moment of silence followed, which was broken by the cry of Vinicius:—

"Væ misero mihi!"

And the young man, casting his toga aside, rushed forth in his tunic.

Nero raised his hands and exclaimed:—

"Woe to thee, sacred city of Priam!"

Light from the burning city filled the sky as far as human eye could reach. The moon rose large and full from behind the mountains, and inflamed at once by the glare took on the color of heated brass. It seemed to look with amazement on the world-ruling city which was perishing. In the rose-colored abysses of heaven rose-colored stars were glittering; but in distinction from usual nights the earth was brighter than the heavens. Rome, like a giant pile, illuminated the whole Campania. In the bloody light were seen distant mountains, towns, villas, temples, monuments, and the aqueducts stretching toward the city from all the adjacent hills; on the aqueducts were swarms of people, who had gathered there for safety or to gaze at the burning.

Meanwhile the dreadful element was embracing new divisions of the city. It was impossible to doubt that criminal hands were spreading the fire, since new conflagrations were breaking out all the time in places remote from the principal fire. From the heights on which Rome was founded the flames flowed like waves of the sea into the valleys densely occupied by houses,—houses of five and six stories, full of shops, booths, movable wooden amphitheaters, built to accommodate various spectacles; and finally storehouses of wood, olives, grain, nuts, pine cones, the kernels of which nourished the more needy population, and clothing, which through Cæsar's favor was distributed from time to time among the rabble huddled into narrow alleys. In those places the fire, finding abundance of inflammable materials, became almost a series of explosions, and took possession of whole streets with unheard-of rapidity. People encamping outside the city, or standing on the aqueducts, knew from the color of the flame what was burning. The furious power of the wind carried forth from the fiery gulf thousands and millions of burning shells of walnuts and almonds, which, shooting suddenly into the sky, like countless flocks of bright butterflies, burst with a crackling, or, driven by the wind, fell in other parts of the city, on aqueducts, and fields beyond Rome. All thought of rescue seemed out of place; confusion increased every moment, for on one side the population of the city was fleeing through every gate to places outside; on the other the fire had lured in thousands of people from the neighborhood, such as dwellers in small towns, peasants, and half-wild shepherds of the Campania, brought in by hope of plunder. The shout, "Rome is perishing!" did not leave the lips of the crowd; the ruin of the city seemed at that time to end every rule, and loosen all bonds which hitherto had joined people in a single integrity. The mob, in which slaves were more numerous, cared nothing for the lordship of Rome. Destruction of the city could only free them; hence here and there they assumed a threatening attitude. Violence and robbery were extending. It seemed that only the spectacle of the perishing city arrested attention, and restrained for the moment an outburst of slaughter, which would begin as soon as the city was turned into ruins. Hundreds of thousands of slaves, forgetting that Rome, besides temples and walls, possessed some tens of legions in all parts of the world, appeared merely waiting for a watchword and a leader. People began to mention the name of Spartacus ; but Spartacus was not alive. Meanwhile citizens assembled, and armed themselves each with what he could. The most monstrous reports were current at all the gates. Some declared that Vulcan, commanded by Jupiter, was destroying the city with fire from beneath the earth ; others that Vesta was taking vengeance for Rubria. People with these convictions did not care to save anything, but, besieging the temples, implored mercy of the gods. It was repeated most generally, however, that Cæsar had given command to burn Rome, so as to free himself from odors which rose from the Subura, and build a new city under the name of Neronia. Rage seized the populace at thought of this ; and if, as Vinicius believed, a leader had taken advantage of that outburst of hatred, Nero's hour would have struck whole years before it did.

It was said also that Cæsar had gone mad, that he would command pretorians and gladiators to fall upon the people and make a general slaughter. Others swore by the gods that wild beasts had been let out of all the vivaria at Bronzebeard's command. Men had seen on the streets lions with burning manes, and mad elephants and bisons, trampling down people in crowds. There was even some truth in this ; for in certain places elephants, at sight of the approaching fire, had burst the vivaria, and, gaining their freedom, rushed away from the fire in wild fright, destroying everything before them like a tempest. Public report estimated at tens of thousands the number of persons who had perished in the conflagration. In truth a great number had perished. There were people who, losing all their property, or those dearest their hearts, threw themselves willingly into the flames, from despair. Others were suffocated by smoke. In the middle of the city, between the Capitol, on one side, and the Quirinal, the Viminal, and the Esquiline on the other, as also between the Palatine and the Cælian Hill, where the streets were most densely occupied, the fire began in so many places at once that whole crowds of people, while fleeing in one direction, struck unexpectedly on a new wall of fire in front of them, and died a dreadful death in a deluge of flame.

In terror, in distraction, and bewilderment, people knew not where to flee. The streets were obstructed with goods, and in many narrow places were simply closed. Those who took refuge in those markets and squares of the city, where the Flavian Amphitheater stood afterward, near the temple of the Earth, near the Portico of Silvia, and higher up, at the temples of Juno and Lucinia, between the Clivus Virbius and the old Esquiline Gate, perished from heat, surrounded by a sea of fire. In places not reached by the flames were found afterward hundreds of bodies burned to a crisp, though here and there unfortunates tore up flat stones and half buried themselves in defense against the heat. Hardly a family inhabiting the center of the city survived in full; hence along the walls, at the gates, on all roads, were heard howls of despairing women, calling on the dear names of those who had perished in the throng or the fire.

And so, while some were imploring the gods, others blasphemed them because of this awful catastrophe. Old men were seen coming from the temple of Jupiter Liberator, stretching forth their hands, and crying, "If thou be a liberator, save thy altars and the city!" But despair turned mainly against the old Roman gods, who, in the minds of the populace, were bound to watch over the city more carefully than others. They had proved themselves powerless; hence were insulted. On the other hand it happened on the Via Asinaria that when a company of Egyptian priests appeared conducting a statue of Isis, which they had saved from the temple near the Porta Cælimontana, a crowd of people rushed among the priests, attached themselves to the chariot, which they drew to the Appian Gate, and seizing the statue placed it in the temple of Mars, overwhelming the priests of that deity who dared to resist them. In other places people invoked Serapis, Baal, or Jehovah, whose adherents, swarming out of the alleys in the neighborhood of the Subura and the Trans-Tiber, filled with shouts and uproar the fields near the walls. In their cries were heard tones as if of triumph; when, therefore, some of the citizens joined the chorus and glorified "the Lord of the World," others, indignant at this glad shouting, strove to repress it by violence. Here and there hymns were heard, sung by men in the bloom of life, by old men, by women and children,—hymns wonderful and solemn, whose meaning they understood not, but in which were repeated from moment to moment the words, "Behold the Judge cometh in the day of wrath and disaster." Thus this deluge of restless and sleepless people encircled the burning city, like a tempest-driven sea.

But neither despair nor blasphemy nor hymn helped in any way. The destruction seemed as irresistible, perfect, and pitiless as Predestination itself. Around Pompey's Amphitheater stores of hemp caught fire, and ropes used in circuses, arenas, and every kind of machine at the games, and with them the adjoining buildings containing barrels of pitch with which ropes were smeared. In a few hours all that part of the city beyond which lay the Campus Martius was so lighted by bright yellow flames that for a time it seemed to the spectators, only half conscious from terror, that in the general ruin the order of night and day had been lost, and that they were looking at sunshine. But later a monstrous bloody gleam extinguished all other colors of flame. From the sea of fire shot up to the heated sky gigantic fountains, and pillars of flame spreading at their summits into fiery branches and feathers; then the wind bore them away, turned them into golden threads, into hair, into sparks, and swept them on over the Campania toward the Alban Hills. The night became brighter; the air itself seemed penetrated, not only with light, but with flame. The Tiber flowed on as living fire. The hapless city was turned into one pandemonium. The conflagration seized more and more space, took hills by storm, flooded level places, drowned valleys, raged, roared, and thundered.

The city burned on. The Circus Maximus had fallen in ruins. Entire streets and alleys in parts which began to burn first were falling in turn. After every fall pillars of flame rose for a time to the very sky. The wind had changed, and blew now with mighty force from the sea, bearing toward the Caelian, the Esquiline, and the Viminal rivers of flame, brands, and cinders. Still the authorities provided for rescue. At command of Tigellinus, who had hastened from Antium the third day before, houses on the Esquiline were torn down so that the fire, reaching empty spaces, died of itself. That was, however, undertaken solely to save a remnant of the city; to save that which was burning was not to be thought of. There was need also to guard against further results of the ruin. Incalculable wealth had perished in Rome; all the property of its citizens had vanished; hundreds of thousands of people were wandering in utter want outside the walls. Hunger had begun to pinch this through the second day, for the immense stores of provisions in the city had burned with it. In the universal disorder and in the destruction of authority no one had thought of furnishing new supplies. Only after the arrival of Tigellinus were proper orders sent to Ostia; but meanwhile the people had grown more threatening.

The house at Aqua Appia, in which Tigellinus lodged for the moment, was surrounded by crowds of women, who from morning till late at night cried, "Bread and a roof!" Vainly did pretorians, brought from the great camp between the Via Salaria and the Nomentana, strive to maintain order of some kind. Here and there they were met by open, armed resistance. In places weaponless crowds pointed to the burning city, and shouted, "Kill us in view of that fire!" They abused Cæsar, the Augustians, the pretorians; excitement rose every moment, so that Tigellinus, looking at night on the thousands of fires around the city, said to himself that those were fires in hostile camps.

Besides flour, as much baked bread as possible was brought at his command, not only from Ostia, but from all towns and neighboring villages. When the first installment came at night to the Emporium, the people broke the chief gate toward the Aventine, seized all supplies in the twinkling of an eye, and caused terrible disturbance. In the light of the conflagration they fought for loaves, and trampled many of them into the earth. Flour from torn bags whitened like snow the whole space from the granary to the arches of Drusus and Germanicus. The uproar continued till soldiers seized the building and dispersed the crowd with arrows and missiles.

Never since the invasion by the Gauls under Brennus had Rome beheld such disaster. People in despair compared the two conflagrations. But in the time of Brennus the Capitol remained. Now the Capitol was encircled by a dreadful wreath of flame. The marbles, it is true, were not blazing; but at night, when the wind swept the flames aside for a moment, rows of columns in the lofty sanctuary of Jove were visible, red as glowing coals. In the days of Brennus, moreover, Rome had a disciplined integral people, attached to the city and its altars; but now crowds of a many-tongued populace roamed nomad-like around the walls of burning Rome,—people composed for the greater part of slaves and freedmen, excited, disorderly, and ready, under the pressure of want, to turn against authority and the city.

But the very immensity of the fire, which terrified every heart, disarmed the crowd in a certain measure. After fire might come famine and disease ; and to complete the misfortune the terrible heat of July had appeared. It was impossible to breathe air inflamed both by fire and the sun. Night brought no relief, on the contrary it presented a hell. During daylight an awful and ominous spectacle met the eye. In the center a giant city on heights was turned into a roaring volcano ; round about as far as the Alban Hills was one boundless camp, formed of sheds, tents, huts, vehicles, bales, packs, stands, fires, all covered with smoke and dust, lighted by sun rays reddened by passing through smoke, — everything filled with roars, shouts, threats, hatred and terror, a monstrous swarm of men, women, and children. Mingled with Quirites were Greeks, shaggy men from the North with blue eyes, Africans, and Asiatics ; among citizens were slaves, freedmen, gladiators, merchants, mechanics, servants, and soldiers, — a real sea of people, flowing around the island of fire.

Various reports moved this sea as wind does a real one. These reports were favorable and unfavorable. People told of immense supplies of wheat and clothing to be brought to the Emporium and distributed gratis. It was said, too, that provinces in Asia and Africa would be stripped of their wealth at Caesar's command, and the treasures thus gained be given to the inhabitants of Rome, so that each man might build his own dwelling. But it was noised about also that water in the aqueducts had been poisoned ; that Nero intended to annihilate the city, destroy the inhabitants to the last person, then move to Greece or to Egypt, and rule the world from a new place. Each report ran with lightning speed, and each found belief among the rabble, causing outbursts of hope, anger, terror, or rage. Finally a kind of fever mastered those nomadic thousands. The belief of Christians that the end of the world by fire was at hand, spread even among adherents of the gods, and extended daily. People fell into terror or madness. In clouds lighted by the burning, gods were seen gazing down on the ruin ; hands were stretched toward those gods then to implore pity or send them curses.

Meanwhile soldiers, aided by a certain number of inhabitants, continued to tear down houses on the Esquiline and the Cælian, as also in the Trans-Tiber; these divisions were saved therefore in considerable part. But in the city itself were destroyed incalculable treasures accumulated through centuries of conquest; priceless works of art, splendid temples, the most precious monuments of Rome's past and Rome's glory. They foresaw that of all Rome there would remain barely a few parts on the edges, and that hundreds of thousands of people would be without a roof. Some spread reports that the soldiers were tearing down houses not to stop the fire, but to prevent any part of the city from being saved. Tigellinus sent courier after courier to Antium, imploring Cæsar in each letter to come and calm the despairing people with his presence. But Nero moved only when fire had seized the "domus transitoria," and he hurried so as not to miss the moment in which the conflagration should be at its highest.

Meanwhile fire had reached the Via Nomentana, but turned from it at once with a change of wind toward the Via Lata and the Tiber. It surrounded the Capitol, spread along the Forum Boarium, destroyed everything which it had spared before, and approached the Palatine a second time.

Tigellinus, assembling all the pretorian forces, dispatched courier after courier to Cæsar with an announcement that he would lose nothing of the grandeur of the spectacle, for the fire had increased.

But Nero, who was on the road, wished to come at night, so as to sate himself all the better with a view of the perishing capital. Therefore he halted, in the neighborhood of Aqua Albana, and, summoning to his tent the tragedian Aliturus, decided with his aid on posture, look, and expression; learned fitting gestures, disputing with the actor stubbornly whether at the words "O sacred city, which seemed more enduring than Ida," he was to raise both hands, or, holding in one the forminga, drop it by his side, and raise only the other. This question seemed to him then more important than all others. Starting at last about nightfall, he took counsel of Petronius also whether to the lines describing the catastrophe he might add a few magnificent blasphemies against the gods, and whether, considered from the standpoint of art, they would not have rushed spontaneously from the mouth of a man in such a position, a man who was losing his birthplace.

At length he approached the walls about midnight with his numerous court, composed of whole detachments of nobles, senators, knights, freedmen, slaves, women, and children. Sixteen thousand pretorians, arranged in line of battle along the road, guarded the peace and safety of his entrance, and held the excited populace at a proper distance. The people cursed, shouted, and hissed on seeing the retinue, but dared not attack it. In many places, however, applause was given by the rabble, which, owning nothing, had lost nothing in the fire, and which hoped for a more bountiful distribution than usual of wheat, olives, clothing, and money. Finally, shouts, hissing, and applause were drowned in the blare of horns and trumpets, which Tigellinus had caused to be sounded.

Nero, on arriving at the Ostian Gate, halted, and said, "Houseless ruler of a houseless people, where shall I lay my unfortunate head for the night?"

After he had passed the Clivus Delphini, he ascended the Appian aqueduct on steps prepared purposely. After him followed the Augustians and a choir of singers, bearing citharæ, lutes, and other musical instruments.

And all held the breath in their breasts, waiting to learn if he would say some great words, which for their own safety they ought to remember. But he stood solemn, silent, in a purple mantle and a wreath of golden laurels, gazing at the raging might of the flames. When Terpnos gave him a golden lute, he raised his eyes to the sky, filled with the conflagration, as if he were waiting for inspiration.

The people pointed at him from afar as he stood in the bloody gleam. In the distance fiery serpents were hissing. The ancient and most sacred edifices were in flames: the temple of Hercules, reared by Evander, was burning; the temple of Jupiter Stator was burning, the temple of Luna, built by Servius Tullius, the house of Numa Pompilius, the sanctuary of Vesta with the penates of the Roman people; through waving flames the Capitol appeared at intervals; the past and the spirit of Rome was burning. But he, Caesar, was there with a lute in his hand and a theatrical expression on his face, not thinking of his perishing country, but of his posture and the prophetic words with which he might describe best the greatness of the catastrophe, rouse most admiration, and receive the warmest plaudits. He detested that city, he detested its inhabitants, he loved only his own songs and verses; hence he rejoiced in heart that at last he saw a tragedy like that which he was writing. The verse maker was happy, the declaimer felt inspired, the seeker for emotions was delighted at the awful sight, and thought with rapture that even the destruction of Troy was as nothing if compared with the destruction of that giant city. What more could he desire? There was world-ruling Rome in flames, and he, standing on the arches of the aqueduct with a golden lute, conspicuous, purple, admired, magnificent, poetic. Down below, somewhere in the darkness, the people are muttering and storming. But let them mutter! Ages will pass, thousands of years will go by, but mankind will remember and glorify the poet, who in that night sang the fall and the burning of Troy. What was Homer compared with him? What Apollo himself with his hollowed-out lute?

Here he raised his hands, and, striking the strings, pronounced the words of Priam.

"O nest of my fathers, O dear cradle!" His voice in the open air, with the roar of the conflagration, and the distant murmur of crowding thousands, seemed marvelously weak, uncertain, and low, and the sound of the accompaniment like the buzzing of insects. But senators, dignitaries, and Augustians, assembled on the aqueduct, bowed their heads and listened in silent rapture. He sang long, and his motive was ever sadder. At moments, when he stopped to catch breath, the chorus of singers repeated the last verse; then Nero cast the tragic "syrma" from his shoulder with a gesture learned from Aliturus, struck the lute, and sang on. When at last he had finished the lines composed, he improvised, seeking grandiose comparisons in the spectacle unfolded before him. His face began to change. He was not moved, it is true, by the destruction of his country's capital; but he was delighted and moved with the pathos of his own words to such a degree that his eyes filled with tears on a sudden. At last he dropped the lute to his feet with a clatter, and, wrapping himself in the "syrma" stood as if petrified, like one of those statues of Niobe which ornamented the courtyard of the Palatine.

Soon a storm of applause broke the silence. But in the distance this was answered by the howling of multitudes. No one doubted then that Cæsar had given command to burn the city, so as to afford himself a spectacle and sing a song at it. Nero, when he heard that cry from hundreds of thousands, turned to the Augustians with the sad, resigned smile of a man who is suffering from injustice.

"See," said he, "how the Quirites value poetry and me."

"Scoundrels!" answered Vatinius. "Command the pretorians, lord, to fall on them."

Nero turned to Tigellinus:—

"Can I count on the loyalty of the soldiers?"

"Yes, divinity," answered the prefect.

But Petronius shrugged his shoulders, and said:—

"On their loyalty, yes, but not on their numbers. Remain meanwhile where thou art, for here it is safest; but there is need to pacify the people."

Seneca was of this opinion also, as was Licinus the consul. Meanwhile the excitement below was increasing. The people were arming with stones, tent poles, sticks from the wagons, planks, and various pieces of iron. After a while some of the pretorian leaders came, declaring that the cohorts, pressed by the multitude, kept the line of battle with extreme difficulty, and, being without orders to attack, they knew not what to do.

"O gods," said Nero, "what a night!" On one side a fire, on the other a raging sea of people. And he fell to seeking expressions the most splendid to describe the danger of the moment, but, seeing around him alarmed looks and pale faces, he was frightened, with the others.

"Give me my dark mantle with a hood!" cried he; "must it come really to battle?"

"Lord," said Tigellinus, in an uncertain voice, "I have done what I could, but danger is threatening. Speak, O lord, to the people, and make them promises."

"Shall Caesar speak to the rabble? Let another do that in my name. Who will undertake it?"

"I!" answered Petronius, calmly.

"Go, my friend; thou art most faithful to me in every necessity. Go, and spare no promises."

Petronius turned to the retinue with a careless, sarcastic expression:—

"Senators here present, also Piso, Nerva, and Senecio, follow me."

Then he descended the aqueduct slowly. Those whom he had summoned followed, not without hesitation, but with a certain confidence which his calmness had given them. Petronius, halting at the foot of the arches, gave command to bring him a white horse, and, mounting, rode on, at the head of the cavalcade, between the deep ranks of pretorians, to the black, howling multitude ; he was unarmed, having only a slender ivory cane which he carried habitually.

When he had ridden up, he pushed his horse into the throng. All around, visible in the light of the burning, were upraised hands, armed with every manner of weapon, inflamed eyes, sweating faces, bellowing and foaming lips. A mad sea of people surrounded him and his attendants ; round about was a sea of heads, moving, roaring, dreadful.

The outbursts increased and became an unearthly roar ; poles, forks, and even swords were brandished above Petronius ; grasping hands were stretched toward his horse's reins and toward him, but he rode farther, cool, indifferent, contemptuous. At moments he struck the most insolent heads with his cane, as if clearing a road for himself in an ordinary crowd ; and that confidence of his, that calmness, amazed the raging rabble. They recognized him at length, and numerous voices began to shout : —

"Petronius ! Arbiter Elegantiarum ! Petronius ! Petronius !" was heard on all sides. And as that name was repeated, the faces about became less terrible, the uproar less savage : for that exquisite patrician, though he had never striven for the favor of the populace, was still their favorite. He passed for a humane and magnanimous man ; and his popularity had increased, especially since the affair of Pedanius Secundus, when he spoke in favor of mitigating the cruel sentence condemning all the slaves of that prefect to death. The slaves more especially loved him thenceforward with that unbounded love which the oppressed or unfortunate are accustomed to give those who show them even small sympathy. Besides, in that moment was added curiosity as to what Cæsar's envoy would say, for no one doubted that Cæsar had sent him.

He removed his white toga, bordered with scarlet, raised it in the air, and waved it above his head, in sign that he wished to speak.

"Silence ! silence !" cried the people on all sides.

After a while there was silence. Then he straightened himself on the horse and said in a clear, firm voice : —

"Citizens, let those who hear me repeat my words to those who are more distant, and bear yourselves, all of you, like men, not like beasts in the arena."

"We will, we will !"

"Then listen. The city will be rebuilt. The gardens of Lucullus, Mæcenæ, Cæsar, and Agrippina will be opened to you. To-morrow will begin the distribution of wheat, wine, and olives, so that every man may be full to the throat. Then Cæsar will have games for you, such as the world has not seen yet; during these games banquets and gifts will be given you. Ye will be richer after the fire than before it."

A murmur answered him, which spread from the center in every direction, as a wave rises on water in which a stone has been cast. Those nearer repeated his words to those more distant. Afterward were heard here and there shouts of anger or applause, which turned at length into one universal call of "Panem et circenses!!!"

Petronius wrapped himself in his toga and listened for a time without moving, resembling in his white garment a marble statue. The uproar increased, drowned the roar of the fire, was answered from every side and from ever-increasing distances. But evidently the envoy had something to add, for he waited. Finally, commanding silence anew, he cried:—

"I promised you panem et circenses; and now give a shout in honor of Cæsar, who feeds and clothes you; then go to sleep, dear populace, for the dawn will begin before long."

He turned his horse then, and, tapping lightly with his cane the heads and faces of those who stood in his way, he rode slowly to the pretorian ranks. Soon he was under the aqueduct. He found almost a panic above, where they had not understood the shout "Panem et circenses," and supposed it to be a new outburst of rage. They had not even expected that Petronius would save himself; so Nero, when he saw him, ran to the steps, and with face pale from emotion, inquired:—

"Well, what are they doing? Is there a battle?"

Petronius drew air into his lungs, breathed deeply, and answered:—

"By Pollux! they are sweating! and such a stench! Will some one give me an epilimma?—for I am faint." Then he turned to Cæsar.

"I promised them," said he, "wheat, olives, the opening of the gardens, and games. They worship thee anew, and are howling in thy honor. Gods, what a foul odor those plebeians have!"

"I had pretorians ready," cried Tigellinus; "and hadst thou not quieted them, the shouters would have been silenced forever. It is a pity, Cæsar, that thou didst not let me use force."

Petronius looked at him, shrugged his shoulders, and added:—

"The chance is not lost. Thou mayst have to use it to-morrow."

"No, no!" cried Cæsar, "I will give command to open the gardens to them, and distribute wheat. Thanks to thee, Petronius, I will have games; and that song which I sang to-day, I will sing publicly."

Then he placed his hands on the arbiter's shoulder, was silent a moment, and starting up at last inquired:—

"Tell me sincerely, how did I seem to thee while I was singing?"

"Thou wert worthy of the spectacle, and the spectacle was worthy of thee," said Petronius.

"But let us look at it again," said he, turning to the fire, "and bid farewell to ancient Rome."

Evening exhibitions, rare up to that period and given only exceptionally, became common in Nero's time, both in the circus and amphitheater. The Augustians liked them, frequently because they were followed by feasts and drinking bouts which lasted till daylight. Though the people were sated already with blood spilling, still, when the news went forth that the end of the games was approaching, and that the last of the Christians were to die at an evening spectacle, a countless audience assembled in the amphitheater. The Augustians came to a man, for they understood that it would not be a common spectacle; they knew that Cæsar had determined to make for himself a tragedy out of the suffering of Vinicius. Tigellinus had kept secret the kind of punishment intended for the betrothed of the young tribune; but that merely roused general curiosity. Those who had seen Lygia at the house of Plautius told wonders of her beauty. Others were occupied above all with the question, would they see her really on the arena that day; for many of those who had heard the answer given Petronius and Nerva by Cæsar explained it in two ways: some supposed simply that Nero would give or perhaps had given the maiden to Vinicius; they remembered that she was a hostage, hence free to worship whatever divinities she liked, and that the law of nations did not permit her punishment.

Uncertainty, waiting, and curiosity had mastered all spectators. Cæsar arrived earlier than usual; and immediately at his coming people whispered that something uncommon would happen, for besides Tigellinus and Vatinius, Cæsar had with him Cassius, a centurion of enormous size and gigantic strength, whom he summoned only when he wished to have a defender at his side,—for example, when he desired night expeditions to the Subura, where he arranged the amusement called “sagatio,” which consisted in tossing on a soldier’s mantle maidens met on the way. It was noted also that certain precautions had been taken in the amphitheater itself. The pretorian guards were increased; command over them was held, not by a centurion, but by the tribune Subrius Flavius, known hitherto for blind attachment to Nero. It was understood, then, that Cæsar wished in every case to guard himself against an outburst of despair from Vinicius, and curiosity rose all the more.

Every eye was turned with strained gaze to the place where the unfortunate lover was sitting. He was exceedingly pale, and his forehead was covered with drops of sweat; he was in as much doubt as were other spectators, but alarmed to the lowest depth of his soul. Petronius knew not what would happen; he was silent, except that, while turning from Nerva, he asked Vinicius whether he was ready for everything, and next, whether he would remain at the spectacle. To both questions Vinicius answered “Yes,” but a shudder passed through his whole body; he divined that Petronius did not ask without reason. For some time he had lived with only half his life,—he had sunk in death, and reconciled himself to Lygia’s death, since for both it was to be liberation and marriage; but he learned now that it was one thing to think of the last moment when it was distant as of a quiet dropping asleep, and another to look at the torment of a person dearer to one than life. All sufferings endured formerly rose in him anew. Despair, which had been set at rest, began again to cry in his soul; the former desire to save Lygia at any price seized him anew. Beginning with the morning, he had tried to go to the cunicula to be sure that she was there; but the pretorians watched every entrance, and orders were so strict that the soldiers, even those whom he knew, would not be softened by prayers or gold. It seemed to the tribune that uncertainty would kill him before he should see the spectacle. Somewhere at the bottom of his heart the hope was still throbbing, that perhaps Lygia was not in the amphitheater, that his fears were groundless. At times he seized on this hope with all his strength. He said in his soul that Christ might take her to Himself out of the prison, but could not permit her torture in the Circus. Formerly he was resigned to the divine will in everything; now, when repulsed from the doors of the cunicula, he returned to his place in the amphitheater, and when he learned, from the curious glances turned on him, that the most dreadful suppositions might be true, he began to implore in his soul with passionateness almost approaching a threat. "Thou canst!" repeated he, clenching his fists convulsively, "Thou canst!" Hitherto he had not supposed that that moment when present would be so terrible. Now, without clear consciousness of what was happening in his mind, he had the feeling that if he should see Lygia tortured, his love for God would be turned to hatred, and his faith to despair. But he was amazed at the feeling, for he feared to offend Christ, whom he was imploring for mercy and miracles. He implored no longer for her life; he wished merely that she should die before they brought her to the arena, and from the abyss of his pain he repeated in spirit: "Do not refuse even this, and I will love Thee still more than hitherto." And then his thoughts raged as a sea torn by a whirlwind. A desire for blood and vengeance was roused in him. He was seized by a mad wish to rush at Nero and stifle him there in presence of all the spectators; but he felt that desire to be a new offense against Christ, and a breach of His command. To his head flew at times flashes of hope that everything before which his soul was trembling would be turned aside by an almighty and merciful hand; but they were quenched at once, as if in measureless sorrow that He who could destroy that Circus with one word and save Lygia had abandoned her, though she trusted in Him and loved Him with all the strength of her pure heart. And he thought, moreover, that she was lying there in that dark place, weak, defenseless, deserted, abandoned to the whim or disfavor of brutal guards, drawing her last breath, perhaps, while he had to wait, helpless, in that dreadful amphitheater, without knowing what torture was prepared for her, or what he would witness in a moment. Finally, as a man falling over a precipice grasps at everything which grows on the edge of it, so did he grasp with both hands at the thought that faith of itself could save her

That one method remained ! Peter had said that faith could move the earth to its foundation.

Hence he rallied ; he crushed doubt in himself, he compressed his whole being into the sentence, "I believe," and he looked for a miracle.

But as an overdrawn cord may break, so exertion broke him. The pallor of death covered his face, and his body relaxed. He thought then that his prayer had been heard, for he was dying. It seemed to him that Lygia must surely die too, and that Christ would take them to Himself in that way. The arena, the white togas, the countless spectators, the light of thousands of lamps and torches, all vanished from his vision.

But his weakness did not last long. After a while he roused himself, or rather the stamping of the impatient multitude roused him.

"Thou art ill," said Petronius ; "give command to bear thee home."

And without regard to what Caesar would say, he rose to support Vinicius and go out with him. His heart was filled with pity, and, moreover, he was irritated beyond endurance because Caesar was looking through the emerald at Vinicius, studying his pain with satisfaction, to describe it afterwards, perhaps, in pathetic strophes, and win the applause of hearers.

Vinicius shook his head. He might die in that amphitheater, but he could not go out of it. Moreover the spectacle might begin any moment.

In fact, at that very instant almost, the prefect of the city waved a red handkerchief, the hinges opposite Caesar's podium creaked, and out of the dark gully came Ursus into the brightly lighted arena.

The giant blinked, dazed evidently by the glitter of the arena ; then he pushed into the center, gazing around as if to see what he had to meet. It was known to all the Augustians and to most of the spectators that he was the man who had stifled Croton ; hence at sight of him a murmur passed along every bench. In Rome there was no lack of gladiators larger by far than the common measure of man, but Roman eyes had never seen the like of Ursus. Cassius, standing in Caesar's podium, seemed puny compared with that Lygian. Senators, vestals, Caesar, the Augustians, and the people gazed with the delight of experts at his mighty limbs as large as tree trunks, at his breast as large as two shields joined together, and his arms of a Hercules. The murmur rose every instant. For those multitudes there could be no higher pleasure than to look at those muscles in play in the exertion of a struggle. The murmur rose to shouts, and eager questions were put: "Where do the people live who can produce such a giant?" He stood there, in the middle of the amphitheater, naked, more like a stone colossus than a man, with a collected expression, and at the same time the sad look of a barbarian; and while surveying the empty arena, he gazed wonderingly with his blue childlike eyes, now at the spectators, now at Cæsar, now at the grating of the cunicula, whence, as he thought, his executioners would come.

At the moment when he stepped into the arena his simple heart was beating for the last time with the hope that perhaps a cross was waiting for him; but when he saw neither the cross nor the hole in which it might be put, he thought that he was unworthy of such favor,—that he would find death in another way, and surely from wild beasts. He was unarmed, and had determined to die as became a confessor of the "Lamb," peacefully and patiently. Meanwhile he wished to pray once more to the Savior; so he knelt on the arena, joined his hands, and raised his eyes toward the stars which were glittering in the lofty opening of the amphitheater.

That act displeased the crowds. They had had enough of those Christians who died like sheep. They understood that if the giant would not defend himself the spectacle would be a failure. Here and there hisses were heard. Some began to cry for scourgers, whose office it was to lash combatants unwilling to fight. But soon all had grown silent, for no one knew what was waiting for the giant, nor whether he would not be ready to struggle when he met death eye to eye.

In fact, they had not long to wait. Suddenly the shrill sound of brazen trumpets was heard, and at that signal a grating opposite Cæsar's podium was opened, and into the arena rushed, amid shouts of beast keepers, an enormous German aurochs, bearing on his head the naked body of a woman.

"Lygia! Lygia!" cried Vinicius.

Then he seized his hair near the temples, squirmed like a man who feels a sharp dart in his body, and began to repeat in hoarse accents:—

"I believe! I believe! O Christ, a miracle!"

And he did not even feel that Petronius covered his head that moment with the toga. It seemed to him that death or pain had closed his eyes. He did not look, he did not see. The feeling of some awful emptiness possessed him. In his head there remained not a thought ; his lips merely repeated, as if in madness : —

“I believe ! I believe ! I believe !”

This time the amphitheater was silent. The Augustians rose in their places, as one man, for in the arena something uncommon had happened. That Lygian, obedient and ready to die, when he saw his queen on the horns of the wild beast, sprang up, as if touched by living fire, and bending forward he ran at the raging animal.

From all breasts a sudden cry of amazement was heard, after which came deep silence.

The Lygian fell on the raging bull in a twinkling, and seized him by the horns.

“Look !” cried Petronius, snatching the toga from the head of Vinicius.

The latter rose and bent back his head ; his face was as pale as linen, and he looked into the arena with a glassy, vacant stare.

All breasts ceased to breathe. In the amphitheater a fly might be heard on the wing. People could not believe their own eyes. Since Rome was Rome, no one had seen such a spectacle.

The Lygian held the wild beast by the horns. The man's feet sank in the sand to his ankles, his back was bent like a drawn bow, his head was hidden between his shoulders, on his arms the muscles came out so that the skin almost burst from their pressure ; but he had stopped the bull in his tracks. And the man and the beast remained so still that the spectators thought themselves looking at a picture showing a deed of Hercules or Theseus, or a group hewn from stone. But in that apparent repose there was a tremendous exertion of two struggling forces. The bull sank his feet as well as did the man in the sand, and his dark, shaggy body was curved so that it seemed a gigantic ball. Which of the two would fail first, which would fall first, — that was the question for those spectators enamored of such struggles ; a question which at that moment meant more for them than their own fate, than all Rome and its lordship over the world. That Lygian was in their eyes then a demigod worthy of honor and statues. Cæsar himself stood up as well as others. He and Tigellinus, hearing of the man's strength, had arranged this spectacle purposely, and said to each other with a jeer, "Let that slayer of Croton kill the bull which we choose for him;" so they looked now with amazement at that picture, as if not believing that it could be real.

In the amphitheater were men who had raised their arms and remained in that posture. Sweat covered the faces of others, as if they themselves were struggling with the beast. In the Circus nothing was heard save the sound of flame in the lamps, and the crackle of bits of coal as they dropped from the torches. Their voices died on the lips of the spectators, but their hearts were beating in their breasts as if to split them. It seemed to all that the struggle was lasting for ages. But the man and the beast continued on in their monstrous exertion; one might have said that they were planted in the earth.

Meanwhile a dull roar resembling a groan was heard from the arena, after which a brief shout was wrested from every breast, and again there was silence. People thought themselves dreaming, till the enormous head of the bull began to turn in the iron hands of the barbarian. The face, neck, and arms of the Lygian grew purple; his back bent still more. It was clear that he was rallying the remnant of his superhuman strength, but that he could not last long.

Duller and duller, hoarser and hoarser, more and more painful grew the groan of the bull as it mingled with the whistling breath from the breast of the giant. The head of the beast turned more and more, and from his jaws crept forth a long, foaming tongue.

A moment more, and to the ears of spectators sitting nearer came as it were the crack of breaking bones; then the beast rolled on the earth with his neck twisted in death.

The giant removed in a twinkling the ropes from the horns of the bull and, raising the maiden, began to breathe hurriedly. His face became pale, his hair stuck together from sweat, his shoulders and arms seemed flooded with water. For a moment he stood as if only half conscious; then he raised his eyes and looked at the spectators.

The amphitheater had gone wild.

The walls of the building were trembling from the roar of tens of thousands of people. Since the beginning of spectacles there was no memory of such excitement. Those who were sitting on the highest rows came down, crowding in the passages between benches to look more nearly at the strong man. Everywhere were heard cries for mercy, passionate and persistent, which soon turned into one unbroken thunder. That giant had become dear to those people enamored of physical strength; he was the first personage in Rome.

He understood that the multitude were striving to grant him his life and restore him his freedom, but clearly his thought was not on himself alone. He looked around awhile; then approached Caesar's podium, and holding the body of the maiden on his outstretched arms, raised his eyes with entreaty, as if to say, "Have mercy on her! Save the maiden. I did that for her sake!"

The spectators understood perfectly what he wanted. At sight of the unconscious maiden, who near the enormous Lygian seemed a child, emotion seized the multitude of knights and senators. Her slender form, as white as if chiseled from alabaster, her fainting, the dreadful danger from which the giant had freed her, and finally her beauty and attachment, had moved every heart. Some thought the man a father begging mercy for his child. Pity burst forth suddenly, like a flame. They had had blood, death, and torture in sufficiency. Voices choked with tears began to entreat mercy for both.

Meanwhile Ursus, holding the girl in his arms, moved around the arena, and with his eyes and with motions begged her life for her. Now Vinicius started up from his seat, sprang over the barrier which separated the front places from the arena, and, running to Lygia, covered her naked body with his toga.

Then he tore apart the tunic on his breast, laid bare the scars left by wounds received in the Armenian war, and stretched out his hands to the audience.

At this the enthusiasm of the multitude passed everything seen in a circus before. The crowd stamped and howled. Voices calling for mercy grew simply terrible. People not only took the part of the athlete, but rose in defense of the soldier, the maiden, their love. Thousands of spectators turned to Caesar with flashes of anger in their eyes and with clinched fists.

But Caesar halted and hesitated. Against Vinicius he had no hatred, indeed, and the death of Lygia did not concern him; but he preferred to see the body of the maiden rent by the horns of the bull or torn by the claws of beasts. And now the people wanted to rob him. Hence anger appeared on his bloated face. Self-love also would not let him yield to the wish of the multitude, and still he did not dare to oppose it.

So he gazed around to see if among the Augustians, at least, he could not find fingers turned down in sign of death. But Petronius held up his hand, and looked into Nero's face almost challengingly. Vestinius, superstitious but inclined to enthusiasm, a man who feared ghosts but not the living, gave a sign for mercy also. So did Scevinus, the Senator; so did Nerva, so did Tullius Senecio, so did the famous leader Ostorius Scapula, and Antistius, and Piso, and Vetus, and Crispinus, and Minucius Thermus, and Pontius Telesinus, and the most important of all, one honored by the people, Thræsea.

In view of this, Cæsar took the emerald from his eye with an expression of contempt and offense; when Tigellinus, whose desire was to spite Petronius, turned to him and said:—

“Yield not, divinity; we have the pretorians.”

Then Nero turned to the place where command over the pretorians was held by the stern Subrius Flavius, hitherto devoted with whole soul to him, and saw something unusual. The face of the old tribune was stern, but covered with tears, and he was holding his hand up in sign of mercy.

Now rage began to possess the multitude. Dust rose from beneath the stamping feet, and filled the amphitheater. In the midst of shouts were heard cries: “Ahenobarbus! matricide! incendiary!”

Nero was alarmed. Romans were absolute lords in the Circus. Former Cæsars, and especially Caligula, had permitted themselves sometimes to act against the will of the people; this, however, called forth disturbance always, going sometimes to bloodshed. But Nero was in a different position. First, as a comedian and a singer he needed the people's favor; second, he wanted it on his side against the Senate and the patricians, and especially after the burning of Rome he strove by all means to win it, and to turn their anger against the Christians. He understood, besides, that to oppose longer was simply dangerous. A disturbance begun in the Circus might seize the whole city, and have results incalculable.

He looked once more at Subrius Flavius, at Scevinus the centurion, a relative of the Senator, at the soldiers; and seeing everywhere frowning brows, excited faces, and eyes fixed on him, he gave the sign for mercy.

SATIRES OF PERSIUS.

(Translation of William Gifford.)

[AULUS PERSIUS FLACCUS was born at Volaterræ, A.D. 34; at six he lost his father, and gaining a stepfather shortly, lost him also. At twelve he was taken to Rome, and superbly educated there; one of his teachers was the great Stoic Annæus Cornutus, and he was for ten years the close friend of the noble Thræsea Pætus—of whose still more famous wife Arria he was a relative—and of Helvidius Priscus. He died A.D. 62, at twenty-eight, having apparently lived quietly without public interests, in the family circle of his mother, sister, and aunt. His virtuous and modest life had a better foundation than delicate health: he inspired wide and warm affection for his mingled charm and rectitude. He left six satires as his literary products, which yet rank him high in Roman literature.—largely, it is true, on ethical grounds.]

SATIRE II.

To Plotius Macrinus ; on his Birthday.

HEALTH to my friend! and while my vows I pay,
O mark, Macrinus, this auspicious day,
Which, to your sum of years already flown,
Adds yet another — with a whiter stone.

Indulge your Genius, drench in wine your cares:—
It is not yours, with mercenary prayers
To ask of Heaven what you would die with shame,
Unless you drew the gods aside, to name;
While other great ones stand, with downcast eyes,
And with a silent censer tempt the skies!—

Hard, hard the task, from the low, muttered prayer,
To free the fanes; or find one suppliant there,
Who dares to ask but what his state requires,
And live to heaven and earth with known desires!

Sound sense, integrity, a conscience clear,
Are begged aloud, that all at hand may hear:
But prayers like these (half whispered, half suppress)
The tongue scarce hazards from the conscious breast:

*O that I could my rich old uncle see,
In funeral pomp! — O that some deity
To pots of buried gold would guide my share!
O that my ward, whom I succeed as heir,
Were once at rest! poor child, he lives in pain,
And death to him must be accounted gain. —
By wedlock, thrice has Nerius swelled his store,
And now — is he a widower once more!*

These blessings, with due sanctity, to crave,
Once, twice, and thrice in Tiber's eddying wave
He dips each morn, and bids the stream convey
The gathered evils of the night, away!

One question, friend: — an easy one, in fine —
What are thy thoughts of Jove? My thoughts! Yes, thine.
Wouldst thou prefer him to the herd of Rome?
To any individual? — But, to whom?
To Staius, for example. Heavens! a pause?
Which of the two would best dispense the laws?
Best shield the unfriended orphan? Good! Now move
The suit to Staius, late preferred to Jove: —
“O Jove, good Jove!” he cries, o'erwhelmed with shame,
And must not Jove himself, O Jove! exclaim?

Or dost thou think the impious wish forgiven,
Because, when thunder shakes the vault of heaven,
The bolt innoxious flies o'er thee and thine,
To rend the forest oak and mountain pine?
— Because, yet livid from the lightning's scath,
Thy smouldering corpse (a monument of wrath)
Lies in no blasted grove, for public care
To expiate with sacrifice and prayer;
Must, therefore, Jove, unsceptered and unfear'd,
Give to thy ruder mirth his foolish beard?
What bribe hast thou to win the Powers divine,
Thus, to thy nod? The lungs and lights of swine.

Lo! from his little crib, the grandam hoar,
Or aunt, well versed in superstitious lore,
Snatches the babe; in lustral spittle dips
Her middle finger, and anoints his lips
And forehead: — “Charms of potency,” she cries,
“To break the influence of evil eyes!”
The spell complete, she dandles high in air
Her starveling Hope; and breathes a humble prayer,
That heaven would only tender to his hands
All Crassus' houses, all Licinius' lands! —
“Let every gazer by his charms be won,
And kings and queens aspire to call him son:
Contending virgins fly his smiles to meet,
And roses spring where'er he sets his feet!”

Insane of soul — But I, O Jove, am free.
Thou knowest, I trust no nurse with prayers for me:
In mercy, then, reject each fond demand,
Though, robed in white, she at thy altar stand.

This begs for nerves to pain and sickness steeled,
 A frame of body that shall slowly yield
 To late old age: — 'Tis well, enjoy thy wish.
 But the huge platter, and high-seasoned dish,
 Day after day the willing gods withstand,
 And dash the blessing from their opening hand.

That sues for wealth: the laboring ox is slain,
 And frequent victims woo the "god of gain."
 "O crown my hearth with plenty and with peace,
 And give my flocks and herds a large increase!" —
 Madman! how can he, when, from day to day,
 Steer after steer in offerings melts away? —
 Still he persists; and still new hopes arise,
 With harslet and with tripe, to storm the skies.
 "Now swell my harvests! now my fields! now, now,
 It comes — it comes — auspicious to my vow!"
 While thus, poor wretch, he hangs 'twixt hope and fear,
 He starts, in dreadful certainty, to hear
 His chest reverberate the hollow groan
 Of his last piece, to find itself alone!

If from my sideboard I should bid you take Goblets of gold or silver, you would shake
 With eager rapture; drops of joy would start,
 And your left breast scarce hold your fluttering heart.
 Hence, you presume the gods are bought and sold;
 And overlay their busts with captured gold.
 For, of the brazen brotherhood, the Power
 Who sends you dreams, at morning's truer hour,
 Most purged from phlegm, enjoys your best regards,
 And a gold beard his prescient skill rewards!

Now, from the temples, GOLD has chased the plain
 And frugal ware of Numa's pious reign;
 The ritual pots of brass are seen no more,
 And Vesta's pitchers blaze in burnished ore.

O groveling souls! and void of things divine!
 Why bring our passions to the Immortals' shrine,
 And judge, from what this CARNAL SENSE delights,
 Of what is pleasing in their purer sights? —
 Thus, the Calabrian fleece with purple soils,
 And mingles cassia with our native oils;
 Tears from the rocky conch its pearly store,
 And strains the metal from the glowing ore.
 This, this, indeed, is vicious; yet it tends
 To gladden life, perhaps; and boasts its ends;

But you, ye priests, (for, sure, ye can,) unfold —
 In heavenly things, what boots that pomp of gold?
 No more, in truth, than dolls to Venus paid,
 (The toys of childhood,) by the riper maid!

No; let me bring the Immortals, what the race
 Of great Messala, now depraved and base,
 On their huge charger, cannot; — bring a mind,
 Where legal and where moral sense are joined
 With the pure essence; holy thoughts, that dwell
 In the soul's most retired and sacred cell;
 A bosom dyed in honor's noblest grain,
 Deep-dyed: — with these let me approach the fane,
 And Heaven will hear the humble prayer I make,
 Though all my offering be a barley cake.

SATIRE VI.

TO CÆSIUS BASSUS.

Say, have the wintry storms, which round us beat,
 Chased thee, my Bassus, to thy Sabine seat?
 Does music there thy sacred leisure fill,
 While the strings quicken to thy manly quill? —
 O skilled, in matchless numbers, to disclose
 How first from Night this fair creation rose;
 And kindling, as the lofty themes inspire,
 To smite, with daring hand, the Latian lyre!
 Anon, with youth and youth's delights to toy,
 And give the dancing chords to love and joy;
 Or wake, with moral touch, to accents sage,
 And hymn the heroes of a nobler age!

To me, while tempests howl and billows rise,
 Liguria's coast a warm retreat supplies,
 Where the huge cliffs an ample front display,
 And deep within, recedes the sheltering bay.

The Port of Luna, friends, is worth your note —
 So, in his sober moments, Ennius wrote,
 When, all his dreams of transmigration past,
 He found himself plain Quintus at the last!

Here to repose I give the cheerful day,
 Careless of what the vulgar think or say;
 Or what the South, from Afric's burning air,
 Unfriendly to the fold, may haply bear:

And careless still, though richer herbage crown
 My neighbors' fields, or heavier crops embrown.
 — Nor, Bassus, though capricious Fortune grace
 Thus with her smiles a lowbred, lowborn race,
 Will e'er thy friend, for that, let Envy plow
 One careful furrow on his open brow ;
 Give crooked age upon his youth to steal,
 Defraud his table of one generous meal ;
 Or, stooping o'er the dregs of mother wine,
 Touch, with suspicious nose, the sacred sign.

But inclinations vary : — and the Power
 That beams, ascendant, on the natal hour,
 Even Twins produces of discordant souls,
 And tempers wide asunder as the poles.

The one on birthdays, and on those alone,
 Prepares (but with a forecast all his own)
 On tunny-pickle, from the shops, to dine,
 And dips his withered pot-herbs in the brine ;
 Trembles the pepper from his hands to trust,
 And sprinkles, grain by grain, the sacred dust.
 The other, large of soul, exhausts his hoard,
 While yet a stripling, at the festive board.

To use my fortune, Bassus, I intend :
 Nor, therefore, deem me so profuse, my friend,
 So prodigally vain, as to afford
 The costly turbot for my freedmen's board ;
 Or so expert in flavors, as to show
 How, by the relish, thrush from thrush I know.

"Live to your means" — 'tis wisdom's voice you hear —
 And freely grind the produce of the year :
 What scruples check you ? Ply the hoe and spade,
 And lo ! another crop is in the blade.

True ; but the claims of duty caution crave.
 A friend, scarce rescued from the Ionian wave,
 Grasps a projecting rock, while in the deep
 His treasures, with his prayers, unheeded sleep :
 I see him stretched, desponding, on the ground,
 His tutelary gods all wrecked around,
 His bark dispersed in fragments o'er the tide,
 And sea-mews sporting on the ruins wide.

Sell, then, a pittance ('tis my prompt advice)
 Of this your land, and send your friend the price ;
 Lest, with a pictured storm, forlorn and poor,
 He ask cheap charity from door to door.

"But then, my angry heir, displeased to find
 His prospects lessened by an act so kind,
 May slight my obsequies; and, in return,
 Give my cold ashes to a scentless urn;
 Reckless what vapid drugs he flings thereon,
 Adulterate cassia, or dead cinnamon! —
 Can I (bethink in time) my means impair,
 And with impunity provoke my heir?
 — Here Bestius rails — "A plague on Greece," he cries.
 "And all her pedants! — there the evil lies;
 For since their mawkish, their enervate lore,
 With dates and pepper, cursed our luckless shore,
 Luxury has tainted all; and plowmen spoil
 Their wholesome barley-broth with luscious oil."

Heavens! can you stretch (to fears like these a slave)
 Your fond solicitude beyond the grave?
 Away! — But thou, my heir, whoe'er thou art,
 Step from the crowd, and let us talk apart.
 Hearest thou the news? Cæsar has won the day,
 (So, from the camp, his laureled missives say,)
 And Germany is ours! The city wakes,
 And from her altars the cold ashes shakes. —
 Lo! from the imperial spoils, Cæsonia brings
 Arms, and the martial robes of conquered kings,
 To deck the temples; while, on either hand,
 Chariots of war and bulky captives stand
 In long array. I, too, my joy to prove,
 Will to the emperor's Genius, and to Jove,
 Devote, in gratitude for deeds so rare,
 Two hundred well-matched fencers, pair by pair.
 Who blames — who ventures to forbid me? You?
 Woe to your future prospects! if you do.
 — And, sir, not this alone; for I have vowed
 A supplemental largess to the crowd,
 Of corn and oil. What! muttering still? draw near
 And speak aloud, for once, that I may hear.
 "My means are not so low that I should care
 For that poor pittance you may leave your heir."

Just as you please: but were I, sir, bereft
 Of all my kin; no aunt, no uncle left;
 No nephew, niece; were all my cousins gone,
 And all my cousins' cousins, every one,
 Aricia soon some Manius would supply,
 Well pleased to take that "pittance," when I die.

“Manius! a beggar of the first degree,
 A son of earth, your heir!” Nay, question me,
 Ask who my grandsire’s sire? I know not well,
 And yet, on recollection, I might tell;
 But urge me one step further — I am mute:
 A son of earth, like Manius, past dispute.
 Thus his descent and mine are equal proved,
 And we at last are cousins, though removed.

But why should you, who still before me run,
 Require my torch ere yet the race be won?

Think me your Mercury: Lo! here I stand,
 As painters represent him, purse in hand:
 Will you, or not, the proffered boon receive,
 And take, with thankfulness, whate’er I leave?

Something, you murmur, of the heap is spent.
 True: as occasion called it freely went;
 In life ’twas mine: but death your chance secures,
 And what remains, or more or less, is yours.
 Of Tadius’ legacy no questions raise,
 Nor turn upon me with a grandsire-phrase,
 “Live on the interest of your fortune, boy;
 To touch the principal is to destroy.”

“What, after all, may I expect to have?”
Expect! — Pour oil upon my viands, slave,
 Pour with unsparing hand! shall my best cheer
 On high and solemn days be the singed ear
 Of some tough, smoke-dried hog, with nettles drest;
 That your descendant, while in earth I rest,
 May gorge on dainties, and, when lust excites,
 Give to patrician beds his wasteful nights?

Shall I, a napless figure, pale and thin,
 Glide by, transparent, in a parchment skin,
 That he may strut with more than priestly pride,
 And swag his portly paunch from side to side?

Go, truck your soul for gain! buy, sell, exchange;
 From pole to pole in quest of profit range.
 Let none more shrewdly play the factor’s part;
 None bring his slaves more timely to the mart;
 Puff them with happier skill, as caged they stand,
 Or clap their well-fed sides with nicer hand.

Double your fortune — treble it — yet more —
 ’Tis four, six, tenfold what it was before:
 O bound the heap. You, who could yours confine,
 Tell me, Chrysippus, how to limit mine!

A SELF-MADE MAN.

By PETRONIUS ARBITER.

(From "Trimalchio's Banquet," in the "Saturnæ")

[PETRONIUS "Arbiter" (of manners or literary taste) is absolutely unknown as a personality by any direct evidence; but indirect evidence of a strong kind identifies him with a C. Petronius (called by Pliny the Elder "T. Petronius") put to death by Nero for conspiracy: a dashing, artistic profligate and dandy, the model for all the "bloods" of his time, who, when Nero ordered him to commit suicide, held a gay banquet as his farewell, broke a beautiful vase the emperor was supposed to covet, wrote and sent to Nero a list and denunciation of his crimes, and then opened his veins. The "Saturnæ," believed to be his, is exactly of the type of "Gil Blas," for whose prototypes it furnished the model: the adventures of a young fellow without morals, seeking his fortune, used as a thread for humorous description of the seamy side of contemporary life. It is thus the father of the picaresque novel. There are gaps even in the fragment of it we possess, which have been conjecturally filled.]

IT WAS now the third day, specified in the invitation we had received to Trimalchio's banquet; but as we had received some wounds, we thought it more advisable to abscond than to remain where we were. Therefore we hurried to our inn, went to bed, and, as our wounds were trifling, we dressed them with wine and oil.

One of our rogues, however, had been left on the ground, and we were afraid of a discovery. While then we were anxiously pondering how to get out of this scrape, we were startled by the sudden entrance of Agamemnon's servant. "What," said he, "do you not know who gives an entertainment to-day? It is Trimalchio, a most sumptuous man; he has a timepiece in his banqueting room, and a trumpeter on purpose to let him know, from time to time, how much of his span of life has gone by." So we dressed in haste, forgetting all our troubles, and told Giton, who had hitherto very willingly acted the part of a servant, to follow us to the bath. . . .

It would have taken too long to note every particular; so we entered the bath, and from the sweating room we passed at once, all reeking, into the chilling room. As for Trimalchio, after being sluiced with perfumes he was rubbed dry, not with towels, but with blankets of the softest and finest wool. Meanwhile three bath doctors were drinking Falernian in his presence; and as they brawled and spilled a good deal, Tri-malchio told them it was the same wine he drank himself. Then they wrapped him in a scarlet mohair mantle, and put him into a litter, preceded by four richly bedizened footmen and a wheeled chair, in which sat his favorite, a withered, blear-eyed eunuch, uglier than his master. As Trimalchio was borne along, a musician walked beside him with two very small flutes, and, bending forward as if to whisper in his ear, he kept playing all the way. Satiated with wonder, we followed, and arrived with Agamemnon at the gate, on one of the pillars of which hung a tablet with this inscription : —

ANY SLAVE
WHO SHALL GO OUT OF DOORS WITHOUT HIS MASTER'S LEAVE, SHALL RECEIVE
ONE HUNDRED LASHES.

At the entrance stood the porter dressed in green, with a cherry-colored sash, and engaged in picking peas in a silver dish ; and over the door, in a golden cage, hung a party-colored magpie, who saluted the company as they entered. But, while I was staring open-mouthed at all I saw before, I had like to have fallen backwards, and broken my legs. For to the left as we entered, not far from the porter's lodge, an enormous chained dog was painted on the wall, with an inscription over it in capital letters : —

BEWARE OF THE DOG.

My companions laughed heartily ; but my fright was soon over, and I continued to examine all the frescoes on the wall. There was a market of slaves with labels hung from their necks ; and Trimalchio himself, with long hair, a caduceus in his hand, and led by Minerva, was making his entry into Rome. In another place was shown how he had learned to keep accounts, and how he had come to be made steward ; and the painter, like an exact man, had been careful to explain everything by legends. At the end of the portico Mercury was lifting up the hero by the chin, and placing him aloft on a tribunal. Fortune stood by with her cornucopia, and the three Fates spinning a golden thread.

I noticed also in the portico a troop of running footmen exercising under the directions of a master. I saw besides a large console in a corner, and in it a shrine, in which were deposited Lares of silver, a marble Venus, and a golden casket, no small one either, in which, they told us, were preserved the first shavings of Trimalchio's beard.

I asked the hall keeper what were the paintings in the middle of the portico. The Iliad and Odyssey, he replied, and the combats of gladiators given under Lænas.

We had no time to examine further, being now arrived at the banqueting hall, at the entrance of which sat the steward, receiving accounts. But what struck me most was to see the doorposts adorned with rods and axes, resting, as it were, on the brazen prow of a ship, whereon was inscribed : —

TO GAIUS POMPEIUS TRIMALCHIO, AN AUGUSTAL SEVIR,
CINNAMUS HIS STEWARD.

Below this inscription a lamp with two branches was suspended from the ceiling, and two tablets were fixed, one on either side of the door. One of these, if I remember rightly, bore this inscription : —

ON THE THIRTIETH AND THIRTY-FIRST DAY OF DECEMBER
OUR PATRON GAIUS SUPS ABROAD.

On the other was represented the course of the moon and the seven stars ; and what days were lucky, what unlucky, with an embossed stud to distinguish the one from the other. . . .

A magnificent first course was served up, for we were all reclined except Trimalchio, for whom, after a new fashion, the chief place was reserved. On the table stood an ass in Corinthian metal, with two panniers containing olives, white on one side, black on the other ; and flanked by two silver dishes, on the borders of which was engraved Trimalchio's name, with the weight of metal in each. There were also little salvers in the shape of bridges, on which were laid dormice, strewed over with honey and poppy seed ; and smoking hot sausages on a silver gridiron, beneath which, by way of black and live coals, lay damsons and pomegranate grains.

We were in the midst of these dainties when Trimalchio himself was ushered in with a flourish of music, and was bolstered up on his couch with a number of little pillows, which set some indiscreet persons among us a-laughing. And well they might, for his shaven pate poked out of a scarlet mantle which loaded his neck, and over the mantle he had put a napkin adorned with a laticlave, with fringes that hung on either side. He had also a large gilded ring on the little finger of his left hand, and on the last joint of the finger next it a smaller ring that seemed of pure gold, but starred with steel. And to let us see that these were not the whole of his bravery, he stripped his right arm, which was adorned with a golden bracelet, and an ivory circle fastened with a glistening plate of gold.

Picking his teeth with a silver pin, "My friends," said he, "I had no mind to come yet to table; but lest my absence should keep you waiting, I deprived myself of my amusement. You will allow me, however, to finish my game."

A boy followed him with a draught-board of juniper wood and crystal dice; and I noticed one surpassing piece of luxury, for instead of black and white pieces he had medals of silver and gold.

Meantime, whilst he was sweeping off his adversary's pieces, and we were still engaged with the first course, a machine was handed in with a basket on it, in which sat a hen carved of wood, her wings lying round and hollowed as if she was brooding. The musicians struck up, and two servants began immediately to search the straw under the hen, and drawing forth some peafowl's eggs distributed them among the guests.

At this Trimalchio turned towards us and said, "My friends, I gave orders that this hen should be set upon peafowl's eggs; but, by Hercules! I am afraid they are half hatched. However, we will try if they are yet eatable."

We took our spoons, each of which weighed at least half a pound, and began to break our paste eggs. For my part I had like to have thrown mine away, for it seemed to me to have a chicken in it; but hearing an old guest say, "There must be something good in this," I continued my search, and found a fine fat beccafico surrounded with yolk of egg, seasoned with pepper.

Trimalchio having now left off his play, had been helped to everything on the table, and announced in a loud voice that if any one wished for more honeyed wine he might have it. The signal was given by the music, and the first course was removed by a company of singers; but a dish falling in the hurry, a servant took it up, which Trimalchio observing, boxed his ears and ordered him to throw it down again; and presently came the groom of the chambers with his broom, and swept away the silver dish with the rest of the litter.

He was followed immediately by two long-haired Ethiopians, with small leather bottles, such as are used for sprinkling the arena of the amphitheater; and they poured wine on our hands, for no one offered us water.

The master of the house, having been complimented on this piece of elegance, cried out, "Man is a lover of fair play." Then the old fellow gave orders that every man should have his own table; and, continued he, "we shall be less incommoded by heat when we are no longer crowded upon by these stinking servants."

At the same time there were brought in glass jars, close stopped with plaster, and with labels round their necks on which was written, —

*Opimian Falernian, a hundred years old.*¹

Whilst we were reading the labels, Trimalchio ejaculated, "O dear! O dear! to think that wine should be longer-lived than we poor manikins. Well, since it is so, let us e'en drink till we can hold no more. There's life in wine. This is genuine Opimian, you may take my word for it. I did not put so good on my table yesterday, and I had much more respectable men than you to dine with me."

So we drank our wine and mightily extolled all the fine things set before us; when in came a servant with a silver skeleton, so artfully put together that its joints and backbone turned every way. Having cast it a few times on the table, and made it assume various postures, Trimalchio cried out:—

"Vain as vanity we are!

Swift life's transient flames decay!

What this is, we soon shall be;

Then be merry whilst you may."

* * * * *

The table being uncovered to a flourish of music, three white hogs were brought in with bells about their necks and muzzled; one of which, the nomenclator told us, was two years old,

¹ It would have been 160 to 170, if really dating from the Consul Opimius.

another three, and the third full grown. For my part, I took them for tumblers, and imagined the hogs were to perform some of those surprising feats practised in the ring; but Trimalchio put an end to our surmises. "Which of these," said he, "will you have dressed for supper? Cocks and pheasants and such bagatelles are jobs for country-bred cooks, but mine are in the habit of sending a calf boiled whole to table."

Immediately sending for one of his cooks, he ordered him, without waiting for our choice, to kill the largest hog; then raising his voice, "Of what decuria are you?" he asked.

"Of the fortieth," replied the slave.

"Were you bought," said he, "or born in my house?"

"Neither," said the cook, "but left you by Pansa's testament."

"See then that this is expeditiously dressed, or I shall have you turned down into the decuria of the farm servants."

And with this cogent admonition away went the cook with his charge to the kitchen.

Then smoothing the sternness of his countenance, Trimalchio turned to us and asked if we liked our wine. "If not," said he, "it shall be changed; but pray commend it by your drinking. By the bounty of the gods I do not buy it, but have everything good for the mouth growing on one of my manors which I never saw myself, but they tell me it borders on Terracina and Tarentum. I am thinking of adding Sicily to my little possessions, so that when I have a mind to pass over into Africa I may sail by my own coasts.

"But pray tell me, Agamemnon, what subject was it you declaimed on to-day? For though I do not plead myself, yet I have learned the rules for composing an oration. Don't imagine that I have disdained literature; I have three libraries, one Greek, the others Latin. Tell me, therefore, if you love me, the argument of your declamation."

Agamemnon began. "A poor man and a rich were at enmity —"

"What is a poor man?" said Trimalchio, cutting him short.

"Good, very good indeed," said Agamemnon; and then he began to unfold I know not what controversy. When he had done, Trimalchio decided the question offhand, in these terms: "If the fact is so, it admits of no controversy; if it is not so, there's an end of the matter."

This dilemma having been hailed with applause, he continued: "Pray, my dear friend Agamemnon, do you happen to remember the twelve labors of Hercules, or the story of Ulysses, how the Cyclops put his thumb out of joint with a switch? I used to read these things in Homer when I was a boy. And the Sibyl, you know! I saw her myself at Cumæ, with my own eyes, hanging in a jar; and when the boys asked her, 'What would you, Sibyl?' she answered, 'I would die.'"

He was still running on when a very large hog was brought to table. We all wondered at the expedition which had been used, swearing a capon would not have been dressed in the time; and what increased our surprise was, that the hog appeared to be much larger than the boar which had been served up previously. "What," cried Trimalchio, looking closely at it, "are his guts not taken out? No, by Hercules, they are not! Call the cook, call the cook!"

The cook being brought before us, hung down his head, and excused himself, saying he had forgot. "Forgot?" cried Trimalchio; "why, the fellow talks as if it was only a pinch of pepper or cummin omitted. Strip him."

In a moment the poor cook was stripped and standing between two tormentors. We all interceded for him, saying such mistakes will happen occasionally; forgive him this time, but if ever he offends again, not one of us will say a good word for him. For my part, I felt mercilessly indignant against him, and could not help whispering to Agamemnon: "This must certainly be a most careless rascal. Forget to bowel a hog! By Hercules! I would not have forgiven him if he had served me so in the dressing of a fish."

Trimalchio seemed to think differently, for returning a pleasant look, "Come," said he, "you with the short memory, let us see if you can bowel him before us."

Then the cook, having put on his tunic again, took his knife, and with a trembling hand slashed the hog on both sides of the belly, and the apertures enlarging under the weight that pressed them, out tumbled a load of puddings and sausages. All the servants set up a spontaneous shout, and cried Felicity to Gaius. The cook too was presented with wine, a silver crown, and a drinking cup on a Corinthian salver, which Agamemnon narrowly viewing, "I am the only person," said Trimalchio, "who has the true Corinthian vessels. For my part, I am passionately fond of silver; and have several cups of the capacity of an urn, more or less, on which is to be seen how Cassandra killed her sons, and the dead boys appear so natural you would take them to be real. I have a large goblet left by Romulus to my patron, on which is represented Dædalus shutting up Niobe in the Trojan horse. Also I have the fights of Hermeros and of Petronas on cups, all massive; for you must know I would not sell my judgment in these things for any money."

Here he was interrupted by the fall of a cup which a servant let slip out of his hands. Trimalchio looked over his shoulder at him, and said, "Go and kill yourself instantly, for you are careless." The slave hung his lip and implored pardon. "What is the use of your beseeching me," said Trimalchio, "as though I was very hard upon you? I only require you to secure yourself from being careless in future." But at last he forgave him at our entreaty; whereupon the pardoned slave ran round the table and cried, "Out of doors with the water, in with the wine!" We all took the jest, but more especially Agamemnon, who very well knew in what way to earn another invitation.

Trimalchio, meanwhile, hearing himself commended, drank on all the merrier, and being nearly tipsy, "Will none of you," said he, "invite my Fortunata to dance? I assure you she is capital at the cordax, no one better." Then, putting his hands to his forehead, he began to imitate Syrus, the comedian, all the servants singing out together, "By Jove, well done! well done, by Jove!" He would also have stepped out and danced, had not Fortunata whispered in his ear, and told him, I suppose, that such low diversions were unbecoming a man of his station. But his humor was most ridiculously unequal; for sometimes Fortunata, and sometimes his inclination, got the better, and he would certainly have danced, had he not been prevented by the entrance of his historiographer, who read aloud, as if he were reciting the public records of Rome:—

"On the seventh of the Calends of July, on Trimalchio's manor at Cumæ, were born thirty boys and forty girls. Five hundred thousand bushels of wheat were carried from the threshing-floor to the granary; and in his stalls were five hundred oxen who bore the yoke.

"The same day Mithridates, one of his slaves, was crucified for cursing the Genius of our patron Gaius.

"The same day were brought back into the treasury a hundred thousand sesterces, for which no proper investment could be found.

"The same day a fire broke out in Pompey's Gardens, which began in the night, in the house of Nasta, the bailiff."

"Eh, what?" cries Trimalchio; "when were Pompey's Gardens bought for me?"

"Last year," replied the historiographer, "and therefore they have not yet been brought to account."

Upon this Trimalchio flew into a rage: "And whatever lands shall be purchased for me in future," said he, "if I hear nothing of them within six months, let them never be carried to my account."

Then were read the orders of his ædiles, and the wills of his foresters, who with great eulogiums made Trimalchio their heir. The names of his bailiffs were also recited; how his cursitor had repudiated his freedwoman for having caught her in bed with the bath keeper, how his chamberlain had been banished to Baiæ; his steward indicted; and judgment given in the dispute between his grooms of the chamber. . . .

We all fell into a moralizing strain of talk on the precarious nature of human affairs. "You are right," said Trimalchio; "nor must an accident like this be allowed to pass without an impromptu." He called immediately for tablets, and without much racking his brains, read to us the following lines: —

"Things fall out crosswise very oft,
When least we think it; for aloft
Sits Fortune, ruling our affairs;
So let us drink and drown our cares."

This epigram gave rise to a conversation about poets, and for a long while the highest encomiums were bestowed on Morsinus the tragic writer, until Trimalchio, turning to Agamemnon, said, "Pray, master, what think you is the difference between Cicero and Publius? In my opinion the former was the more eloquent of the two, the latter the more genteel. What, for instance, can be better said than this? —

"Degenerate Rome grows weak through luxury;
To please her appetite crammed peacocks die;
For her their plumed Assyrian gold they spread;
Capons and guinea fowls for her are fed;
The stork itself, dear, kindly, long-legged thing,
Shunner of winter, herald of the spring,
Castanet-playing bird, poor foreign guest,
Now in the cruel cauldron makes its nest.

Why have the Indian pearls such valued charms?
 To deck the wife for some adulterer's arms?
 Why prize you the carbuncle's mineral fire,
 Or green pellucid emeralds so desire,
 Unless to star your wanton females' pride?
 Virtue's the only jewel for a bride.
 Should wives to all the world their beauties bare,
 Clad in gauze mists, in robes of textured air?"

"But what think you now," he continued, "is the most difficult calling, next to that of letters? I think it is the physician's, or the money-changer's: the physician's, because he knows what we poor bodies have got in our very insides, and when the fever fit will come upon us (though, by the way, I hate them like poison, for they are always physicking me); and the money-changer's, because he can spy out a piece of bronze through the silver that plates it.

"Of dumb brutes the ox and the sheep are the most laborious; to oxen we are indebted for the bread we eat, and to sheep for the wool that makes us so fine. Only think what a shame it is that any one should eat mutton and wear a tunic! As for bees, I take them to be divine creatures, for they spit up honey, though people do say they fetch it from Jove. That is why they sting, too, for there is no sweet without its sour." . . .

The troops presently entered, rattling their spears and shields. Trimalchio himself sat up on his couch, and whilst the Homerists were carrying on a dialogue in the usual pompous manner, he read aloud from a Latin book. Presently, during an interval of silence, he said, "Do you know what is the story they are acting?"

"Diomedes and Ganymedes were two brothers, and Helen was their sister. Agamemnon carried her off, and palmed a hind on Diana in her stead. So Homer tells us how the Trojans and Tarentines fought together; but Agamemnon conquered, and married his daughter Iphigenia to Achilles, whereupon Ajax went mad, and will presently explain the argument to you."

When Trimalchio had done speaking, the great Homerists gave a great shout, and a boiled calf was brought in on a huge dish, with a helmet on its head, amid a great bustle of servants running to and fro. Ajax followed with his drawn sword, and brandishing it like a madman, slashed right and left at the calf, picked up the pieces on the point of his blade, and presented them to the astonished guests.

We had not much time to admire a device so finely conceived and executed; for on a sudden the ceiling began to crack, and the whole room trembled. I jumped up in great alarm, fearing some tumbler might fall on my head; and the rest of the company looked up in no less astonishment to see what new wonder was sent down to us from the sky. And behold you, in a moment the beams of the ceiling opened, and from the dome above descended a great circle, hung all round with golden crowns, and alabaster pots filled with perfumes. Being invited to help ourselves to these presents, we cast our eyes down on the table, which was already covered with a fresh service of sweetmeats, among which stood an image of Priapus in pastry, supporting on his ample bosom apples of all sorts, and clusters of grapes in the usual way. . . .

We should never have seen the last of these insufferable stupidities, but for the arrival of the last course, consisting, in the first place, of thrushes in pastry stuffed with raisins and nuts. Then came quinces stuck over with prickles to resemble sea urchins. All this would have been tolerable but for another dish, so monstrously revolting that we would rather have perished of hunger than have touched it. At first we took it for a fat goose surrounded by fish and fowl of all sorts, until Trimalchio said, "Everything you see there is made out of one body."

I, being a man of great sagacity, immediately guessed what it might be, and whispered Agamemnon, "I shall be much surprised if all this is not made out of excrements, or at least of mud; I have seen such a fictitious banquet at Rome during the Saturnalia."

I had scarce done speaking when Trimalchio resumed: "So may I grow bigger in fortune, not in body, as my cook has made all this out of a hog. A more valuable fellow it would be impossible to find. Only say the word, he will make you a fish out of the belly, a wood pigeon out of the lard, a turtle-dove out of the gammon, and a hen out of the shoulder; and therefore he has received a very fine name, a conception of my own, for we call him Dædalus; and because he is a good fellow, I brought him from Rome a present of knives of Noric steel." And immediately he had the knives brought in, turned them over and admired them, and was even so obliging as to allow us to try their edges on our cheeks.

Just then in rushed two servants who seemed as if they had quarreled at the fountain; at any rate they had pitchers still hanging from yokes on their shoulders. When Trimalchio gave his decision upon the point in dispute, neither would abide by his sentence, but each broke the other's pitcher with a stick. Amazed at the insolence of the drunken varlets, we stared with all our eyes at the combat, and saw oysters and scallops falling from the broken pitchers; and these were gathered up by a servant and carried round in a charger to the guests.

These elegant devices were matched by the ingenious cook, who brought in snails upon a silver gridiron, singing all the while in a cracked and horribly unpleasant voice. I am ashamed to relate what followed, it was such an unheard-of luxury. Long-haired boys brought in a rich perfume in a silver basin, with which they anointed our feet, having first bound them and our thighs and ankles with garlands of flowers. They also perfumed the wine vessels with the same ointment, and poured some of it melted into the lamps.

Fortunata had by this time taken it into her head to dance, and Scintilla was making more noise with her hands than with her tongue, when Trimalchio said, "I give you leave to come to the table, Philargyrus, and you, Carrio, though you are a champion of the green, and bid your bedfellow, Minophila, do the same."

In short, we were almost thrust off our couches, such was the throng of servants that suddenly invaded the room; and who should be placed above me but the ingenious cook who had made a goose out of a pig, all stinking of pickle and sauces? Nor was it enough for him to recline at table, but he must immediately begin to imitate Ephesus the tragedian; after which he offered his master a bet that at the next chariot races the green would win.

"My friends," cried Trimalchio, delighted at this challenge, "slaves, too, are men; they have sucked the same milk as we, though an ill fate has borne them down; however, without prejudice to myself, mine shall soon drink the water of the free. In a word, I enfranchise them all by my last will and testament.

"To Philargyrus I leave, moreover, a farm and his bedfellow ; to Carrio a block of houses, a twentieth, and a bed and bedding complete. As for my dear Fortunata, I make her my residuary legatee, and commend her to all my friends ; and all this I publicly declare, to the end that my family may love me as well now as they will when I am dead."

All the servants were loud in their expressions of gratitude to so good a master, when Trimalchio, no longer in the sportive mood, called for the copy of his will, and read it aloud from beginning to end, amid the sighs and sobs of the whole household. Then turning to Habinnas, "Tell me, my dear friend," he said, "are you building my monument as I directed? I earnestly entreat that at the feet of my statue you represent my little bitch, with garlands and boxes of perfumes, and all the fights of Petronas, that with your good help I may live after I am dead. Be sure, too, that it have a hundred feet frontage, and a depth of two hundred ; for I desire that there be all sorts of fruit trees round my ashes, and vines in abundance ; since it is a great mistake to adorn houses for the living, and to bestow no care on those in which we must dwell so long. Therefore, above all things, I will have this inscription : —

THIS MONUMENT SHALL NOT DESCEND TO MY HEIR.

"Moreover, I will take care to provide by my will that my mortal remains receive no insult ; for I will appoint one of my freedmen custodian of my tomb, that the rabble may not come and drop their wax about it. I beg too that you will carve the ships under full sail, and myself in my senatorial robes sitting on the tribunal, with five gold rings on my fingers, and throwing money out of a bag among the people ; for you know I gave a public banquet and two gold denarii to every guest. Let there be shown, if it so please you, a banqueting hall ; and let all the people be seen enjoying themselves to their hearts' content. On my right hand place my Fortunata's statue, holding a dove, and leading a little bitch in a string ; also my Cicaro ; also some large jars, close stopped, that the wine may not run out ; but you may sculpture one of them as broken, and a boy crying over it ; in the middle a horologe, that whoever wants to see what time of day it is, must, will he nill he, read my name. As for the epitaph, examine this carefully, and see if you think it will do : —

C. POMPEIUS TRIMALCHIO, ANOTHER MÆCENAS, RESTS HERE.

THE RANK OF SEVIR WAS DECREED TO HIM IN HIS ABSENCE.
THOUGH HE MIGHT HAVE BEEN IN ALL THE DECURIE OF ROME, YET HE WOULD NOT.
PIOUS, BRAVE, LOYAL,
HE RAISED HIMSELF FROM LITTLE,
LEFT BEHIND HIM THIRTY MILLIONS OF SESTERCES,
YET NEVER HEARD A PHILOSOPHER.
MAYEST THOU PROSPER TOO.

When he had read this, Trimalchio began to shed a deluge of tears; Fortunata wept; Habinnas wept; in fine, all the servants, as if they had been invited to a funeral, filled the room with their lamentations. Nay, even I myself was beginning to cry, when Trimalchio exclaimed, "Since, then, we know we must die, why do we not make the most of life? If you'd be happy, let us fling ourselves into the bath. I will take upon myself to say none of you will repent it, for it is as hot as an oven."

"Surely, surely," said Habinnas, "of one day to make two, I desire nothing better!" and getting up barefoot he followed Trimalchio, who led the way in great glee.

"What say you?" said I, turning to Ascyrtos; "as for me, if I see the bath, I shall faint at once."

"Let us assent," he replied, "and make our escape in the bustle when they are going to the bath."

I agreed. Giton lead the way through the portico and we reached the door, where a chained dog received us with such a terrible barking, that Ascyrtos fell into the tank. I too, who was drunk, and who had been frightened by a painted dog, in trying to help him, fell in myself; we were rescued, however, by the porter, who quieted the dog, pulled us out, and laid us shivering on the dry ground. Giton had found out a very clever way to ransom himself from the dog, by throwing everything we had given him from the dinner to the barking brute, whose rage was stilled by this diversion. But when, shaking with cold, we asked the porter to let us out, "You are mistaken," he said, "if you suppose you can go out the same way you came in. No guest is ever let out the same gate; they come in at one and go out at another."

What could we do in this unfortunate dilemma, prisoners in this new kind of labyrinth, and now brought to such a pass as even to wish for the bath? We therefore desired the porter to show us the way to it; and throwing off our clothes, which Giton spread to dry in the porch, we entered the bath, which was narrow and like a cooling cistern. Trimalchio stood upright in it, and not even there could he abstain from his filthy boasting; for nothing, he said, was more agreeable than to bathe without a crowd, and that the place had once been a bake-house. Lassitude compelled him at last to sit down, and tempered with the resonance of the bathroom, he opened his drunken mouth, turned it up to the ceiling, and began to murder the songs of Menecrates, as we were told by those who understood his jargon.

Some of the guests were running round the margin holding hands, giggling, and making a great uproar; others were trying to pick up a ring from the floor with their hands tied behind them, or kneeling down to bend back and kiss their toes. Whilst they were diverting themselves in this way, we descended into a hot bath prepared for Trimalchio, after which, having got rid of the fumes of our wine, we were conducted into another saloon, where Fortunata had set out a splendid repast in her own way. Over our heads hung lustres with little figures of fishermen in bronze; the tables were of massive silver, the cups of gilded pottery; and before us was a wine-bag, pouring out its contents in a stream.

"My friends," said Trimalchio, "this day a slave of mine has cut his first beard. He is a notable and thrifty lad, barring mischance. So let us moisten our clay, and make revel till daylight."

The words were hardly uttered when a cock crew, to the great discomfiture of Trimalchio, who immediately ordered wine to be thrown under the table, and the lamps to be sprinkled with it; besides which he shifted a ring to his right hand, and said, "It is not for nothing this trumpeter has sounded; for either there is sure to be a fire, or somebody will die in the neighborhood. Far from us be the omen! And so whoever brings me this prophet of evil shall have a present."

In a twinkling a cock was brought in, and Trimalchio ordering him to be fricasseed, he was torn up and put into a stewpan, by that most accomplished cook who a little before had manufactured fowls and fish; and whilst Dædalus was making the water boil, Fortunata pounded pepper in a box-wood mortar.

Having despatched this delicate dish, Trimalchio said to the servants, "What, have not you supped yet? Be off and let others take your places"; whereupon in came another set of servants, the outgoers crying, "Farewell, Gaius!" the incomers, "Hail, Gaius!" And here our mirth began to be disturbed; for a good-looking boy coming in with the last set of attendants, Trimalchio laid hold of him, and kissed him over and over again. Fortunata, that she might be even with her husband, and assert her lawful rights, began to load him with abuse, calling him a lump of dirt, an infamous man, that would not set bounds to his lechery; and she wound up by saying he was a dog.

Confounded and enraged at this attack, Trimalchio flung his cup at the head of Fortunata, who squalled as if her eye was knocked out, and clapped her trembling hands to her face. Scintilla too was all dismay, and sheltered her distressed friend in her bosom; and at the same time a servant officiously applied a pitcher full of cold water to her cheek, over which she leaned moaning and weeping.

"What!" cried Trimalchio, "could not this strumpet let me be? Though I took her from the kneading trough, and made her an honest woman; but now she swells like a frog, and belabours her own bosom, the fagot! But so it is, one who is born in a garret does not dream of a palace. So help me my Genius! I will take the conceit out of this trolloping Cassandra. When I was not worth twopence, I might have married a fortune of ten millions of sesterces. You know it's no lie. It was no longer ago than yesterday that Agatho, the perfumer, took me aside, and says he to me, 'I advise you not to let your race die out'; but I, who wished to act like a good-natured man, and not to seem changeable, I have stuck a thorn in my own foot. Never mind: I'll warrant I'll make you wish you could dig me up with your nails; and that you may know this moment what you have done for yourself— Habinnas! I forbid you to put her statue on my tomb, that I may have none of her wrangling when I am dead; nay, that she may know I can plague her, I will not have her kiss my corpse."

After this thunderclap Habinnas began to entreat him to forget his anger. "There is none of us," said he, "but does amiss; we are not gods, but men." Scintilla spoke to the same purpose amidst her tears, and besought him by his Genius, and calling him Gaius, to be pacified.

Trimalchio could no longer refrain from tears. "I beseech you, Habinnas," said he, "as you hope to enjoy what you have got, if I have done any harm, spit in my face. I kissed the boy, it is true, not for his beauty, but because he is a hopeful, thrifty lad. He can say ten declamations by heart, reads his book at sight, has saved the price of his freedom out of his daily rations, and has got him out of his own money a little box stool and two drinking cups. Does he not deserve that I should prize him like the apple of my eye? But Fortunata will not have it so. That's your game, is it, bandy-legs? Take my advice, make much of what you have got, you she-kite! Don't provoke me, sweetheart; or maybe I'll let you see whose head is hardest. You know me; what I have once made up my mind to is as fixed as a ten-penny nail.— But let us think of the living.

"I entreat you, my friends, be merry. I myself was once as you are, but by my own merit I have come to be what you see me. It is the heart that makes the man, all the rest is but stuff. I buy well, I sell well; others will tell you a different story; but as for me, I am ready to burst with prosperity. What, crying still, you grunter? Wait a bit, and I will give you something to cry for in earnest." . . .

Then he opened a pot of spikenard, and rubbed us all with it, saying, "I hope it will delight me as much when I am dead as it does now that I am alive." Then ordering the wine vessels to be filled, "Imagine," said he, "that you are invited to my funeral feast."

The whole affair was becoming supremely disgusting, when Trimalchio, now beastly drunk, bethought him of a new interlude; for ordering in hornblowers, he stretched himself out as if he was lying in state, with many pillows under him, saying, "Now make believe I am dead, and say something handsome on the occasion."

The hornblowers sounded as at a funeral; in particular one servant of the undertaker, who seemed the most respectable man in the room, made such a noise that he roused the whole neighborhood. The watchmen of the district, thinking that Trimalchio's house was on fire, suddenly broke open the door, and rushed in with water and axes in their usual tumultuous manner; and we, availing ourselves of so favorable an opportunity, gave Agamemnon the slip, and fled as from a real conflagration.

THE BATTLE OF PHARSALIA.

By LUCAN.

(Translated by Nicholas Rowe.)

[MARCUS ANNÆUS LUCANUS, the greatest Roman poet after the Augustan age, was nephew of Seneca, and born in Cordova, Spain, A.D. 39; son of a wealthy procurator (imperial revenue officer). Taken to Rome, he roused Nero's jealousy by his poetical superiority, or his fear by the republican sentiments of his verse, and was forbidden to recite in public; in revenge, or more probably from the same republicanism, he joined Piso's conspiracy, A.D. 65, and on its failure took his own life to avoid public execution. His chief work, and the only one which has survived, is the unfinished "Pharsalia," an epic of the downfall of the Roman republic; of great rhetorical energy, and in many places of high poetic quality. Some of the best judges, as Shelley and Southey, have ranked him above Virgil; Pope says he attains Virgil's level only in flashes; Quintilian says he "should be ranked rather among great orators than great poets." He was a great influence in molding the French drama.]

[NICHOLAS ROWE, poet and playwright, one of the Queen Anne group, friend of Addison and Steele, was born in 1673; wrote plays of which "The Fair Penitent" is a permanent classic from the character of Lothario, which has made that name the common term for a successful libertine, and was the model of Lovelace in "Clarissa Harlowe." His best work, however, is the translation here excerpted, which in force and fire is equal to the original. Rowe was also the first editor of Shakespeare, and poet laureate succeeding Nahum Tate. He died in 1718, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.]

Now flit the thrilling darts through liquid air,
And various vows from various masters bear:
Some seek the noblest Roman heart to wound
And some to err upon the guiltless ground;
While chance decrees the blood that shall be spilt,
And blindly scatters innocence and guilt.
But random shafts too scanty death afford,
A civil war is business for the sword:
Where face to face the parricides may meet,
Know whom they kill, and make the crime complete.

Firm in the front, with joining bucklers closed,
Stood the Pompeian infantry disposed;
So crowded was the space, it scarce affords
The power to toss their piles, or wield their swords.
Forward, thus thick embattled though they stand,
With headlong wrath rush furious Cæsar's band;
In vain the lifted shield their rage retards,
Or plaited mail devoted bosoms guards;
Through shields, through mail, the wounding weapons go,
And to the heart drive home each deadly blow;

Oh rage ill matched! Oh much unequal war;
Which those wage proudly, and these tamely bear!
These, by cold, stupid piety disarmed;
Those by hot blood and smoking slaughter warmed.
Nor in suspense uncertain fortune hung,
But yields, o'ermastered by a power too strong.
And borne by fate's impetuous stream along.

From Pompey's ample wings, at length the horse
Wide o'er the plain extending take their course;
Wheeling around the hostile line they wind,
While lightly armed the shot succeed behind.
In various ways the various bands engage,
And hurl upon the foe the missile rage:
There fiery darts and rocky fragments fly,
And heating bullets whistle through the sky:
Of feathered shafts, a cloud thick shading goes,
From Arab, Mede, and Ituræan bows:
But driven by random aim they seldom wound;
At first they hide the heaven, then strew the ground;
While Roman hands unerring mischief send,
And certain deaths on every pile attend.

But Cæsar, timely careful to support
His wavering front against the first effort,
Had placed his bodies of reserve behind,
And the strong rear with chosen cohorts lined.
There, as the careless foe the fight pursue,
A sudden band and stable forth he drew;
When soon, oh shame! the loose barbarians yield,
Scattering their broken squadrons o'er the field,
And show, too late, that slaves attempt in vain,
The sacred cause of freedom to maintain.
The fiery steeds impatient of a wound,
Hurl their neglected riders to the ground;
Or on their friends with rage ungoverned turn,
And trampling o'er the helpless foot are borne.
Hence foul confusion and dismay succeed,
The victors murder, and the vanquished bleed:
Their weary hands the tired destroyers ply,
Scarce can these kill, so fast as those can die.
Oh, that Emathia's ruthless guilty plain
Had been contented with this only stain;
With these rude bones had strewn her verdure o'er,
And dyed her springs with none but Asian gore!
But if so keen her thirst for Roman blood,
Let none but Romans make the slaughter good;

Let not a Mede nor Cappadocian fall,
No bold Iberian, or rebellious Gaul:
Let these alone survive for times to come,
And be the future citizens of Rome.
But fear on all alike her powers employed,
Did Cæsar's business, and like fate destroyed.

Prevailing still the victors held their course,
Till Pompey's main reserve opposed their force;
There, in his strength, the chief unshaken stood,
Repelled the foe, and made the combat good;
There in suspense th' uncertain battle hung,
And Cæsar's favoring goddess doubted long;
There no proud monarchs led their vassals on,
Nor eastern bands in gorgeous purple shone;
There the last force of laws and freedom lay,
And Roman patriots struggled for the day.
What parricides the guilty scene affords!
Sires, sons, and brothers, rush on mutual swords!
There every sacred bond of nature bleeds;
There met the war's worst rage, and Cæsar's blackest deeds.

But, oh! my muse, the mournful theme forbear
And stay thy lamentable numbers here;
Let not my verse to future times convey
What Rome committed on this dreadful day;
In shades and silence hide her crimes from fame,
And spare thy miserable country's shame.

But Cæsar's rage shall with oblivion strive,
And for eternal infamy survive.
From rank to rank, unwearied, still he flies,
And with new fires their fainting wrath supplies.
His greedy eyes each sign of guilt explore,
And mark whose sword is deepest dyed in gore;
Observe where pity and remorse prevail,
What arm strikes faintly, and what cheek turns pale.
Or while he rides the slaughtered heaps around,
And views some foe expiring on the ground,
His cruel hands the gushing blood restrain,
And strive to keep the parting soul in pain.
As when Bellona drives the world to war,
Or Mars comes thundering in his Thracian car;
Rage horrible darts from his Gorgon shield,
And gloomy terror broods upon the field;
Hate, fell and fierce, the dreadful gods impart,
And urge the vengeful warrior's heaving heart;
The many shout, arms clash, the wounded cry,
And one promiscuous peal groans upward to the sky.

Nor furious Cæsar, on Emathia's plains
 Less terribly the mortal strife sustains :
 Each hand unarmed he fills with means of death,
 And cooling wrath rekindles at his breath :
 Now with his voice, his gesture now, he strives,
 Now with his lance the lagging soldier drives :
 The weak he strengthens, and confirms the strong,
 And hurries war's impetuous stream along,
 "Strike home," he cries, "and let your swords erase
 Each well-known feature of the kindred face :
 Nor waste your fury on the vulgar band ;
 See ! where the hoary, doting senate stand ;
 There laws and right at once you may confound,
 And liberty shall bleed at every wound."

The cursed destroyer spoke : and, at the word,
 The purple nobles sunk beneath the sword :
 The dying patriots groan upon the ground,
 Illustrious names, for love of laws renowned,
 The great Metelli and Torquati bleed,
 Chiefs worthy, if the state had so decreed,
 And Pompey were not there, mankind to lead.

Say thou ! thy sinking country's only prop,
 Glory of Rome, and liberty's last hope ;
 What helm, oh Brutus ! could amidst the crowd,
 The sacred undistinguished visage shroud ?
 Where fought thy arm that day ! But ah ! forbear !
 Nor rush unwary on the pointed spear ;
 Seek not to hasten on untimely fate,
 But patient for thy own Emathia wait :
 Nor hunt fierce Cæsar on this bloody plain,
 To-day thy steel pursues his life in vain.
 Somewhat is wanting to the tyrant yet,
 To make the measure of his crimes complete ;
 As yet he has not every law defied,
 Nor reached the utmost heights of daring pride.
 Ere long thou shalt behold him Rome's proud lord,
 And ripened by ambition for thy sword ;
 Then, thy grieved country vengeance shall demand,
 And ask the victim at thy righteous hand.

But, oh ! what grief the ruin can deplore ;
 What verse can run the various slaughter o'er !
 For lesser woes our sorrows may we keep,
 No tears suffice, a dying world to weep.
 In differing groups ten thousand deaths arise,
 And horrors manifold the soul surprise.

Here the whole man is opened at a wound,
And gushing bowels pour upon the ground :
Another through the gaping jaws is gored,
And in his utmost throat receives the sword :
At once, a single blow a third extends ;
The fourth a living trunk dismembered stands.
Some in their breasts erect the javelin bear.
Some cling to earth with the transfixing spear.
Here, like a fountain, springs a purple flood.
Spouts on the foe, and stains his arms with blood.
There horrid brethen on their brethren prey ;
One starts, and hurls a well-known head away.
While some detested son, with impious ire,
Lops by the shoulders close his hoary sire :
Ev'n his rude fellows damn the cursed deed,
And bastard-born the murderer aread.

No private house its loss lamented then,
But count the slain by nations, not by men.
Here Grecian streams and Asiatic run,
And Roman torrents drive the deluge on.
More than the world at once was given away,
And late posterity was lost that day :
A race of future slaves received their doom,
And children yet unborn were overcome.
How shall our miserable sons complain,
That they are born beneath a tyrant's reign ?
Did our base hands, with justice shall they say,
The sacred cause of liberty betray ?
Why have our fathers given us up a prey ?
Their age, to ours, the curse of bondage leaves ;
Themselves were cowards, and begot us slaves.

'Tis just ; and fortune, that imposed a lord,
One struggle for their freedom might afford ;
Might leave their hands their proper cause to fight,
And let them keep, or lose themselves their right.
But Pompey, now, the fate of Rome descried,
And saw the changing gods forsake her side.
Hard to believe, though from a rising ground
He viewed the universal ruin round,
In crimson streams he saw destruction run,
And in the fall of thousands felt his own.
Nor wished he, like most wretches in despair,
The world one common misery might share :
But with a generous, great, exalted mind,
Besought the gods to pity poor mankind,

To let him die, and leave the rest behind.
This hope came smiling to his anxious breast,
For this his earnest vows were thus address'd:
"Spare man, ye gods! oh, let the nations live!
Let me be wretched, but let Rome survive.

Or if this head suffices not alone,
My wife, my sons, your anger shall atone;
If blood the yet unsated war demand,
Behold my pledges left in fortune's hand!
Ye cruel powers, who urge me with your hate,
At length behold me crushed beneath the weight:
Give then your long pursuing vengeance o'er,
And spare the world since I can lose no more."

So saying, the tumultuous field he crossed,
And warned from battle his despairing host.
Gladly the pains of death he had explored,
And fall'n undaunted on his pointed sword:
Had he not feared th' example might succeed,
And faithful nations by his side would bleed.
Or did his swelling soul disdain to die,
While his insulting father stood so nigh?
Fly where he will, the gods shall still pursue,
Nor his pale head shall 'scape the victor's view.
Or else, perhaps, and fate the thought approved,
For her dear sake he fled, whom best he loved:
Malicious fortune to his wish agreed,
And gave him in Cornelia's sight to bleed.
Borne by his winged steed at length away,
He quits the purple plain and yields the day.
Fearless of danger, still secure and great,
His daring soul supports his lost estate;
Nor groans his breast nor swell his eyes with tears,
But still the same majestic form he wears.
An awful grief sat decent in his face,
Such as became his loss and Rome's disgrace:
His mind, unbroken, keeps her constant frame,
In greatness and misfortune still the same;
While fortune, who his triumphs once beheld,
Unchanging sees him leave Pharsalia's field.
Now disentangled from unwieldy power,
O Pompey! run thy former honors o'er:
At leisure now review the glorious scene,
And call to mind how mighty thou hast been.
From anxious toils of empire turn thy care,
And from thy thoughts exclude the murd'rous war:

Let the first gods bear witness on thy side,
 Thy cause no more shall by the sword be tried.
 Whether sad Afric shall her loss bemoan,
 Or Munda's plains beneath their burden groan,
 The guilty bloodshed shall be all their own.
 No more the much-loved Pompey's name shall charm
 The peaceful world, with one consent, to arm;
 Nor for thy sake, nor awed by thy command,
 But for themselves, the fighting senate stand:
 The war but one distinction shall afford,
 And liberty or Cæsar be the word.

Nor, oh! do thou thy vanquished lot deplore,
 But fly with pleasure from those seas of gore:
 Look back upon the horror, guiltless thou,
 And pity Cæsar, for whose sake they flow.
 With what a heart, what triumph shall he come,
 A victor, red with Roman blood, to Rome?
 Though misery thy banishment attends,
 Though thou shalt die, by thy false Pharian friends:
 Yet trust securely to the choice of heaven,
 And know thy loss was for a blessing given;
 Though slight may seem the warrior's shame and curse;
 To conquer, in a cause like this, is worse.
 And, oh! let every mark of grief be spared.
 May no tear fall, no groan, no sigh be heard;
 Still let mankind their Pompey's fate adore,
 And reverence thy fall ev'n as thy height of power,
 Meanwhile survey th' attending world around.
 Cities by thee possessed, and monarchs crowned:
 On Afric, or on Asia, cast thy eye,
 And mark the land where thou shalt choose to die.
 Still greedy to possess the curs'd delight,
 To glut his soul, and gratify his sight,
 The last funereal honors he denies,
 And poisons with the stench Emathia's skies. . . .

But, oh! relent, forget thy hatred past,
 And give the wandering shades to rest at last.
 Nor seek we single honors for the dead,
 At once let nations on the pile be laid:
 To feed the flame, let heapy forests rise,
 Far be it seen to fret the ruddy skies,
 And grieve despairing Pompey where he flies.

Know too, proud conqueror, thy wrath in vain
 Strews with unburied carcasses the plain.
 What is it to thy malice, if they burn,
 Rot in the field, or molder in the urn?

The forms of matter all dissolving die,
And lost in nature's blending bosom lie.
Though now thy cruelty denies a grave,
These and the world one common lot shall have;
One last appointed flame, by fate's decree,
Shall waste yon azure heavens, this earth and sea;
Shall knead the dead up in one mingled mass,
Where stars and they shall undistinguished pass.
And though thou scorn their fellowship, yet know,
High as thine own can soar these souls shall go;
Or find, perhaps, a better place below.
Death is beyond thy goddess fortune's power,
And parent earth receives whate'er she bore;
Nor will we mourn those Romans' fate, who lie
Beneath the glorious covering of the sky;
That starry arch forever round them turns,
A nobler shelter far than tombs or urns.

But wherefore parts the loathing victor hence?
Does slaughter strike too strongly on thy sense?
Yet stay, yet breathe the thick, infectious steam,
Yet quaff with joy the blood-polluted stream,
But see, they fly! the daring warriors yield!
And the dead heaps drive Cæsar from the field! . . .

Oh fatal Thessaly! Oh land abhorred!
How have thy fields the hate of heaven incurred;
That thus the gods to the destruction doom,
And load thee with the curse of falling Rome!
Still to new crimes, new horrors dost thou haste,
When yet thy former mischiefs scarce were past.
What rolling years, what ages, can repay
The multitudes thy wars have swept away!
Though tombs and urns their numerous store should spread,
And long antiquity yield all her dead;
Thy guilty plains more slaughtered Romans hold,
Than all those tombs and all those urns enfold.
Hence bloody spots shall stain thy grassy green,
And crimson drops on bladed corn be seen:
Each plowshare some dead patriot shall molest,
Disturb his bones, and rob his ghost of rest.
Oh! had the guilt of war been all thy own,
Were civil rage confined to thee alone:
No mariner his laboring bark should moor,
In hopes of safety, on thy dreadful shore;
No swain thy specter-haunted plain should know,
Nor turn thy blood-stained fallow with his plow:

No shepherd e'er should drive his flock to feed
 Where Romans slain enrich the verdant mead :
 All desolate should lie the land and waste,
 As in some scorched or frozen region placed.
 But the great gods forbid our partial hate
 On Thessaly's distinguished land to wait ;
 New blood, and other slaughters, they decree,
 And others shall be guilty too, like thee.
 Munda and Mutina shall boast their slain,
 Pachynus' waters share the purple stain,
 And Actium justify Pharsalia's plain.

ON ANGER.

BY SENECA.

[LUCIUS ANNÆUS SENECA was born at Corduba, Spain, about B.C. 4 and became an eminent lawyer in Rome. In A.D. 41 he was banished to Corsica by Claudius at the instigation of Empress Messalina. Recalled after an exile of eight years, he was appointed by Agrippina joint tutor with Burrhus of the youthful Nero. The two secured good government in the early years of Nero's reign, but gradually lost their influence ; and Seneca, charged with conspiracy, committed suicide by the emperor's order, A.D. 65. He was a leading exponent of the Stoic philosophy. His writings comprise : discourses on philosophy and morals, the most important being "On Anger" ; "On Mercy," addressed to Nero ; "On Giving and Receiving Favors" ; over one hundred letters to Lucilius ; "Investigations in Natural Science" ; and eight tragedies, being the only complete specimens of Roman tragedies extant.]

WE WILL now, my Novatus, attempt to do that which you so especially long to do, that is, to drive out anger from our minds, or at all events to curb it and restrain its impulses. This may sometimes be done openly and without concealment, when we are only suffering from a slight attack of this mischief, and at other times it must be done secretly, when our anger is excessively hot, and when every obstacle thrown in its way increases it and makes it blaze higher. It is important to know how great and how fresh its strength may be, and whether it can be driven forcibly back and suppressed, or whether we must give way to it until its first storm blow over, lest it sweep away with it our remedies themselves. We must deal with each case according to each man's character : some yield to entreaties, others are rendered arrogant and masterful by submission : we may frighten some men out of their anger, while some may be turned from their purpose by reproaches, some by acknowledging oneself to be in the wrong, some by shame, and some by delay, a tardy remedy for a hasty disorder, which we ought only to use when all others have failed: for other passions admit of having their case put off, and may be healed at a later time; but the eager and self-destructive violence of anger does not grow up by slow degrees, but reaches its full height as soon as it begins. Nor does it, like other vices, merely disturb men's minds, but it takes them away, and torments them till they are incapable of restraining themselves and eager for the common ruin of all men; nor does it rage merely against its object, but against every obstacle which it encounters on its way. The other vices move our minds; anger hurls them headlong. If we are not able to withstand our passions, yet at any rate our passions ought to stand firm: but anger grows more and more powerful, like lightning flashes or hurricanes, or any other things which cannot stop themselves because they do not proceed along, but fall from above. Other vices affect our judgment, anger affects our sanity: others come in mild attacks and grow unnoticed, but men's minds plunge abruptly into anger. There is no passion that is more frantic, more destructive to its own self; it is arrogant if successful, and frantic if it fails. Even when defeated it does not grow weary, but if chance places its foe beyond its reach, it turns its teeth against itself. Its intensity is in no way regulated by its origin: for it rises to the greatest heights from the most trivial beginnings.

It passes over no time of life; no race of men is exempt from it: some nations have been saved from the knowledge of luxury by the blessing of poverty; some through their active and wandering habits have escaped from sloth; those whose manners are unpolished and whose life is rustic know not chicanery and fraud and all the evils to which the courts of law give birth: but there is no race which is not excited by anger, which is equally powerful with Greeks and barbarians, and is just as ruinous among law-abiding folk as among those whose only law is that of the stronger. Finally, the other passions seize upon individuals; anger is the only one which sometimes possesses a whole state. No entire people ever fell madly in love with a woman, nor did any nation ever set its affections altogether upon gain and profit. Ambition attacks single individuals; ungovernable rage is the only passion that affects nations. People often fly into a passion by troops; men and women, old men and boys, princes and populace all act alike, and the whole multitude, after being excited by a very few words, outdoes even its exciter: men betake themselves straightway to fire and sword, and proclaim a war against their neighbors or wage one against their countrymen. Whole houses are burned with the entire families which they contain, and he who but lately was honored for his popular eloquence now finds that his speech moves people to rage. Legions aim their darts at their commander; the whole populace quarrels with the nobles; the senate, without waiting for troops to be levied or appointing a general, hastily chooses leaders, for its anger chases wellborn men through the houses of Rome, and puts them to death with its own hand. Ambassadors are outraged, the law of nations violated, and an unnatural madness seizes the state. Without allowing time for the general excitement to subside, fleets are straightway launched and laden with a hastily enrolled soldiery. Without organization, without taking any auspices, the populace rushes into the field guided only by its own anger, snatches up whatever comes first to hand by way of arms, and then atones by a great defeat for the reckless audacity of its anger. This is usually the fate of savage nations when they plunge into war: as soon as their easily excited minds are roused by the appearance of wrong having been done them, they straightway hasten forth, and, guided only by their wounded feelings, fall like an avalanche upon our legions, without either discipline, fear, or precaution, and willfully seeking for danger. They delight in being struck, in pressing forward to meet the blow, writhing their bodies along the weapon, and perishing by a wound which they themselves make.

"No doubt," you say, "anger is very powerful and ruinous: point out, therefore, how it may be cured." Yet, as I stated in my former books, Aristotle stands forth in defense of anger, and forbids it to be uprooted, saying that it is the spur of virtue, and that when it is taken away, our minds become weaponless, and slow to attempt great exploits. It is therefore essential to prove its unseemliness and ferocity, and to place distinctly before our eyes how monstrous a thing it is that one man should rage against another, with what frantic violence he rushes to destroy alike himself and his foe, and overthrows those very things whose fall he himself must share. What, then? can any one call this man sane, who, as though caught up by a hurricane, does not go but is driven, and is the slave of a senseless disorder? He does not commit to another the duty of revenging him, but himself exacts it, raging alike in thought and deed, butchering those who are dearest to him, and for whose loss he himself will ere long weep. Will any one give this passion as an assistant and companion to virtue, although it disturbs calm reason, without which virtue can do nothing? The strength which a sick man owes to a paroxysm of disease is neither lasting nor wholesome, and is strong only to its own destruction. You need not, therefore, imagine that I am wasting time over a useless task in defaming anger, as though men had not made up their minds about it, when there is some one, and he, too, an illustrious philosopher, who assigns it services to perform, and speaks of it as useful and supplying energy for battles, for the management of business, and indeed for everything which requires to be conducted with spirit. Lest it should delude any one into thinking that on certain occasions and in certain positions it may be useful, we must show its unbridled and frenzied madness, we must restore to it its attributes, the rack, the cord, the dungeon, and the cross, the fires lighted round men's buried bodies, the hook that drags both living men and corpses, the different kinds of fetters, and of punishments, the mutilations of limbs, the branding of the forehead, the dens of savage beasts. Anger should be represented as standing among these her instruments, growling in an ominous and terrible fashion, herself more shocking than any of the means by which she gives vent to her fury.

There may be some doubt about the others, but at any rate no passion has a worse look. We have described the angry man's appearance in our former books, how sharp and keen he looks, at one time pale as his blood is driven inwards and backwards, at another with all the heat and fire of his body directed to his face, making it reddish-colored as if stained with blood, his eyes now restless and starting out of his head, now set motionless in one fixed gaze. Add to this his teeth, which gnash against one another, as though he wished to eat somebody, with exactly the sound of a wild boar sharpening his tusks: add also the cracking of his joints, the involuntary wringing of his hands, the frequent slaps he deals himself on the chest, his hurried breathing and deep-drawn sighs, his reeling body, his abrupt broken speech, and his trembling lips, which sometimes he draws tight as he hisses some curse through them. By Hercules, no wild beast, neither when tortured by hunger, or with a weapon struck through its vitals, not even when it gathers its last breath to bite its slayer, looks so shocking as a man raging with anger. Listen, if you have leisure, to his words and threats : how dreadful is the language of his agonized mind ! Would not every man wish to lay aside anger when he sees that it begins by injuring himself ? When men employ anger as the most powerful of agents, consider it to be a proof of power, and reckon a speedy revenge among the greatest blessings of great prosperity, would you not wish me to warn them that he who is the slave of his own anger is not powerful, nor even free ? Would you not wish me to warn all the more industrious and circumspect of men, that while other evil passions assail the base, anger gradually obtains dominion over the minds even of learned and in other respects sensible men ? So true is that, that some declare anger to be a proof of straightforwardness, and it is commonly believed that the best-natured people are prone to it.

You ask me, whither does all this tend ? To prove, I answer, that no one should imagine himself to be safe from anger, seeing that it rouses up even those who are naturally gentle and quiet to commit savage and violent acts. As strength of body and assiduous care of the health avail nothing against a pestilence, which attacks the strong and weak alike, so also steady and good-humored people are just as liable to attacks of anger as those of unsettled character, and in the case of the former it is both more to be ashamed of and more to be feared, because it makes a greater alteration in their habits. Now as the first thing is not to be angry, the second to lay aside our anger, and the third to be able to heal the anger of others as well as our own, I will set forth first how we may avoid falling into anger ; next, how we may set ourselves free from it, and, lastly, how we may restrain an angry man, appease his wrath, and bring him back to his right mind.

We shall succeed in avoiding anger, if from time to time we lay before our minds all the vices connected with anger, and estimate it at its real value : it must be prosecuted before us and convicted : its evils must be thoroughly investigated and exposed. That we may see what it is, let it be compared with the worse vices. Avarice scrapes together and amasses riches for some better man to use : anger spends money ; few can indulge in it for nothing. How many slaves an angry master drives to run away or to commit suicide ! how much more he loses by his anger than the value of what he originally became angry about ! Anger brings grief to a father, divorce to a husband, hatred to a magistrate, failure to a candidate for office. It is worse than luxury, because luxury enjoys its own pleasure, while anger enjoys another's pain. It is worse than either spitefulness or envy ; for they wish that some one may become unhappy, while anger wishes to make him so : they are pleased when evil befalls one by accident, but anger cannot wait upon Fortune ; it desires to injure its victim personally, and is not satisfied merely with his being injured. Nothing is more dangerous than jealousy : it is produced by anger. Nothing is more ruinous than war : it is the outcome of powerful men's anger ; and even the anger of humble private persons, though without arms or armies, is nevertheless war. Moreover, even if we pass over its immediate consequences, such as heavy losses, treacherous plots, and the constant anxiety produced by strife, anger pays a penalty at the same moment that it exacts one : it forswears human feelings. The latter urge us to love, anger urges us to hatred : the latter bid us do men good, anger bids us do them harm. Add to this that, although its rage arises from an excessive self-respect and appears to show high spirit, it really is contemptible and mean : for a man must be inferior to one by whom he thinks himself despised, whereas the truly great mind, which takes a true estimate of its own value, does not revenge an insult because it does not feel it. As weapons rebound from a hard surface, and solid substances hurt those who strike them, so also no insult can make a really great mind sensible of its presence, being weaker than that against which it is aimed. How far more glorious is it to throw back all wrongs and insults from oneself, like one wearing armor of proof against all weapons, for revenge is an admission that we have been hurt. That cannot be a great mind which is disturbed by injury. He who has hurt you must be either stronger or weaker than yourself. If he be weaker, spare him : if he be stronger, spare yourself.

There is no greater proof of magnanimity than that nothing which befalls you should be able to move you to anger. The higher region of the universe, being more excellently ordered and near to the stars, is never gathered into clouds, driven about by storms, or whirled round by cyclones : it is free from all disturbance : the lightnings flash in the region below it. In like manner a lofty mind, always placid and dwelling in a serene atmosphere, restraining within itself all the impulses from which anger springs, is modest, commands respect, and remains calm and collected : none of which qualities will you find in an angry man : for who, when under the influence of grief and rage, does not first get rid of bashfulness? who, when excited and confused and about to attack some one, does not fling away any habits of shamefacedness he may have possessed? what angry man attends to the number or routine of his duties? who uses moderate language? who keeps any part of his body quiet? who can guide himself when in full career? We shall find much profit in that sound maxim of Democritus which defines peace of mind to consist in not laboring much, or too much for our strength, either in public or private matters. A man's day, if he is engaged in many various occupations, never passes so happily that no man or no thing should give rise to some offense which makes the mind ripe for anger. Just as when one hurries through the crowded parts of the city one cannot help jostling many people, and one cannot help slipping at one place, being hindered at another, and splashed at another, so when one's life is spent in disconnected pursuits and wanderings, one must meet with many troubles and many accusations. One man deceives our hopes, another delays their fulfillment, another destroys them : our projects do not proceed according to our intention. No one is so favored by Fortune as to find her always on his side if he tempts her often : and from this it follows that he who sees several enterprises turn out contrary to his wishes becomes dissatisfied with both men and things, and on the slightest provocation flies into a rage with people, with undertakings, with places, with fortune, or with himself. In order, therefore, that the mind may be at peace, it ought not to be hurried hither and thither, nor, as I said before, wearied by labor at great matters, or matters whose attainment is beyond its strength. It is easy to fit one's shoulder to a light burden, and to shift it from one side to the other without dropping it : but we have difficulty in bearing the burdens which others' hands lay upon us, and when overweighted by them we fling them off upon our neighbors. Even when we do stand upright under our load, we nevertheless reel beneath a weight which is beyond our strength.

Be assured that the same rule applies both to public and private life: simple and manageable undertakings proceed according to the pleasure of the person in charge of them, but enormous ones, beyond his capacity to manage, are not easily undertaken. When he has got them to administer, they hinder him, and press hard upon him, and just as he thinks that success is within his grasp, they collapse, and carry him with them: thus it comes about that a man's wishes are often disappointed if he does not apply himself to easy tasks, yet wishes that the tasks which he undertakes may be easy. Whenever you would attempt anything, first form an estimate both of your own powers, of the extent of the matter which you are undertaking, and of the means by which you are to accomplish it: for if you have to abandon your work when it is half done, the disappointment will sour your temper. In such cases, it makes a difference whether one is of an ardent or of a cold and unenterprising temperament: for failure will rouse a generous spirit to anger, and will move a sluggish and dull one to sorrow. Let our undertakings, therefore, be neither petty nor yet presumptuous and reckless: let our hopes not range far from home: let us attempt nothing which if we succeed will make us astonished at our success.

Since we know not how to endure an injury, let us take care not to receive one: we should live with the quietest and easiest-tempered persons, not with anxious or with sullen ones: for our own habits are copied from those with whom we associate, and just as some bodily diseases are communicated by touch, so also the mind transfers its vices to its neighbors. A drunkard leads even those who reproach him to grow fond of wine; profligate society will, if permitted, impair the morals even of robust-minded men; avarice infects those nearest it with its poison. Virtues do the same thing in the opposite direction, and improve all those with whom they are brought in contact: it is as good for one of unsettled principles to associate with better men than himself as for an invalid to live in a warm country with a healthy climate. You will understand how much may be effected this way, if you observe how even wild beasts grow tame by dwelling among us, and how no animal, however ferocious, continues to be wild, if it has long been accustomed to human companionship: all its savageness becomes softened, and amid peaceful scenes is gradually forgotten. We must add to this, that the man who lives with quiet people is not only improved by their example, but also by the fact that he finds no reason for anger and does not practice his vice : it will, therefore, be his duty to avoid all those who he knows will excite his anger. You ask, who these are : many will bring about the same thing by various means ; a proud man will offend you by his disdain, a talkative man by his abuse, an impudent man by his insults, a spiteful man by his malice, a quarrelsome man by his wrangling, a braggart and liar by his vaingloriousness ; you will not endure to be feared by a suspicious man, conquered by an obstinate one, or scorned by an ultra-refined one. Choose straightforward, good-natured, steady people, who will not provoke your wrath, and will bear with it. Those whose dispositions are yielding, polite, and suave will be of even greater service, provided they do not flatter, for excessive obsequiousness irritates bad-tempered men. One of my own friends was a good man indeed, but too prone to anger, and it was as dangerous to flatter him as to curse him. Cælius the orator, it is well known, was the worst-tempered man possible. It is said that once he was dining in his own chamber with an especially long-suffering client, but had great difficulty when thrown thus into a man's society to avoid quarreling with him. The other thought it best to agree to whatever he said, and to play second fiddle, but Cælius could not bear his obsequious agreement, and exclaimed, "Do contradict me in something, that there may be two of us !" Yet even he, who was angry at not being angry, soon recovered his temper, because he had no one to fight with. If, then, we are conscious of an irascible disposition, let us especially choose for our friends those who will look and speak as we do : they will pamper us and lead us into a bad habit of listening to nothing that does not please us, but it will be good to give our anger respite and repose. Even those who are naturally crabbed and wild will yield to caresses : no creature continues either angry or frightened if you pat him. Whenever a controversy seems likely to be longer or more keenly disputed than usual, let us check its first beginnings, before it gathers strength. A dispute nourishes itself as it proceeds, and takes hold of those who plunge too deeply into it ; it is easier to stand aloof than to extricate oneself from a struggle.

Irascible men ought not to meddle with the more serious class of occupations, or, at any rate, ought to stop short of weariness in the pursuit of them ; their mind ought not to be engaged upon hard subjects, but handed over to pleasing arts :

let it be softened by reading poetry, and interested by legendary history: let it be treated with luxury and refinement. Pythagoras used to calm his troubled spirit by playing upon the lyre; and who does not know that trumpets and clarions are irritants, just as some airs are lullabies and soothe the mind? Green is good for wearied eyes, and some colors are grateful to weak sight, while the brightness of others is painful to it. In the same way cheerful pursuits soothe unhealthy minds. We must avoid law courts, pleadings, verdicts, and everything else that aggravates our fault, and we ought no less to avoid bodily weariness; for it exhausts all that is quiet and gentle in us, and rouses bitterness. For this reason those who cannot trust their digestion, when they are about to transact business of importance always allay their bile with food, for it is peculiarly irritated by fatigue, either because it draws the vital heat into the middle of the body, and injures the blood and stops its circulation by the clogging of the veins, or else because the worn-out and weakened body reacts upon the mind: this is certainly the reason why those who are broken by ill health or age are more irascible than other men. Hunger also and thirst should be avoided for the same reason; they exasperate and irritate men's minds: it is an old saying that "a weary man is quarrelsome": and so also is a hungry or a thirsty man, or one who is suffering from any cause whatever: for just as sores pain one at the slightest touch, and afterwards even at the fear of being touched, so an unsound mind takes offense at the slightest things, so that even a greeting, a letter, a speech, or a question provokes some men to anger.

That which is diseased can never bear to be handled without complaining: it is best, therefore, to apply remedies to oneself as soon as we feel that anything is wrong, to allow oneself as little license as possible in speech, and to restrain one's impetuosity: now it is easy to detect the first growth of our passions: the symptoms precede the disorder. Just as the signs of storms and rain come before the storms themselves, so there are certain forerunners of anger, love, and all the storms which torment our minds. Those who suffer from epilepsy know that the fit is coming on if their extremities become cold, their sight fails, their sinews tremble, their memory deserts them, and their head swims: they accordingly check the growing disorder by applying the usual remedies: they try to prevent the loss of their senses by smelling or tasting some drug ; they battle against cold and stiffness of limbs by hot fomentations ; or, if all remedies fail, they retire apart, and faint where no one sees them fall. It is useful for a man to understand his disease, and to break its strength before it becomes developed. Let us see what it is that especially irritates us. Some men take offense at insulting words, others at deeds : one wishes his pedigree, another his person, to be treated with respect. This man wishes to be considered especially fashionable, that man to be thought especially learned : one cannot bear pride, another cannot bear obstinacy. One thinks it beneath him to be angry with his slaves, another is cruel at home, but gentle abroad. One imagines that he is proposed for office because he is unpopular, another thinks himself insulted because he is not proposed. People do not all take offense in the same way ; you ought then to know what your own weak point is, that you may guard it with especial care.

It is better not to see or to hear everything : many causes of offense may pass by us, most of which are disregarded by the man who ignores them. Would you not be irascible ? then be not inquisitive. He who seeks to know what is said about him, who digs up spiteful tales even if they were told in secret, is himself the destroyer of his own peace of mind. Some stories may be so construed as to appear to be insults : wherefore it is best to put some aside, to laugh at others, and to pardon others. There are many ways in which anger may be checked ; most things may be turned into jest. It is said that Socrates, when he was given a box on the ear, merely said that it was a pity a man could not tell when he ought to wear his helmet out walking. It does not so much matter how an injury is done, as how it is borne ; and I do not see how moderation can be hard to practice, when I know that even despots, though success and impunity combine to swell their pride, have sometimes restrained their natural ferocity. At any rate, tradition informs us that once, when a guest in his cups bitterly reproached Pisistratus, the despot of Athens, for his cruelty, many of those present offered to lay hands on the traitor, and one said one thing and one another to kindle his wrath, he bore it coolly, and replied to those who were egging him on, that he was no more angry with the man than he should be with one who ran against him blindfold.

~ A large part of mankind manufacture their own grievances

either by entertaining unfounded suspicions or by exaggerating trifles. Anger often comes to us, but we often go to it. It ought never to be sent for: even when it falls in our way it ought to be flung aside. No one says to himself, "I myself have done or might have done this very thing which I am angry with another for doing." No one considers the intention of the doer, but merely the thing done: yet we ought to think about him, and whether he did it intentionally or accidentally, under compulsion or under a mistake, whether he did it out of hatred for us, or to gain something for himself, whether he did it to please himself or to serve a friend. In some cases the age, in others the worldly fortunes of the culprit may render it humane or advantageous to bear with him and put up with what he has done. Let us put ourselves in the place of him with whom we are angry: at present an overweening conceit of our own importance makes us prone to anger, and we are quite willing to do to others what we cannot endure should be done to ourselves. No one will postpone his anger: yet delay is the best remedy for it, because it allows its first glow to subside, and gives time for the cloud which darkens the mind either to disperse or at any rate to become less dense. Of these wrongs which drive you frantic, some will grow lighter after an interval, not of a day, but even of an hour: some will vanish altogether. Even if you gain nothing by your adjournment, still what you do after it will appear to be the result of mature deliberation, not of anger. If you want to find out the truth about anything, commit the task to time: nothing can be accurately discerned at a time of disturbance. Plato, when angry with his slave, could not prevail upon himself to wait, but straightway ordered him to take off his shirt and present his shoulders to the blows which he meant to give him with his own hand: then, when he perceived that he was angry, he stopped the hand which he had raised in the air, and stood like one in act to strike. Being asked by a friend who happened to come in, what he was doing, he answered: "I am making an angry man expiate his crime." He retained the posture of one about to give way to passion, as if struck with astonishment at its being so degrading to a philosopher, forgetting the slave, because he had found another still more deserving of punishment. He therefore denied himself the exercise of authority over his own household, and once, being rather angry at some fault, said, "Speusippus, will you please to correct that slave with stripes; for I am in a rage." He would not strike him, for the very reason for which another man would have struck him. "I am in a rage," said he; "I should beat him more than I ought: I should take more pleasure than I ought in doing so: let not that slave fall into the power of one who is not in his own power." Can any one wish to grant the power of revenge to an angry man, when Plato himself gave up his own right to exercise it? While you are angry, you ought not to be allowed to do anything. "Why?" do you ask? Because when you are angry there is nothing that you do not wish to be allowed to do.

Fight hard with yourself, and if you cannot conquer anger, do not let it conquer you: you have begun to get the better of it if it does not show itself, if it is not given vent. Let us conceal its symptoms, and as far as possible keep it secret and hidden. It will give us great trouble to do this, for it is eager to burst forth, to kindle our eyes, and to transform our face; but if we allow it to show itself in our outward appearance, it is our master. Let it rather be locked in the innermost recesses of our breast, and be borne by us, not bear us: nay, let us replace all its symptoms by their opposites; let us make our countenance more composed than usual, our voice milder, our step slower. Our inward thoughts gradually become influenced by our outward demeanor. With Socrates it was a sign of anger when he lowered his voice, and became sparing of speech; it was evident at such times that he was exercising restraint over himself. His friends, consequently, used to detect him acting thus, and convict him of being angry: nor was he displeased at being charged with concealment of anger. How much more needful is it for us to do this? let us beg all our best friends to give us their opinion with the greatest freedom at the very time when we can bear it least, and never to be compliant with us when we are angry. While we are in our right senses, while we are under our own control, let us call for help against so powerful an evil, and one which we regard with such unjust favor. Those who cannot carry their wine discreetly, and fear to be betrayed into some rash and insolent act, give their slaves orders to take them away from the banquet when they are drunk; those who know by experience how unreasonable they are when sick, give orders that no one is to obey them when they are in ill health. It is best to prepare obstacles beforehand for vices which are known.

DEATHS AND CHARACTERS OF GALBA, OTHO, AND VITELLIUS.

By TACITUS.

[For biographical sketch, see page 33.]

OTHO'S CONSPIRACY AND GALBA'S DEATH.

OTHO felt every motive that could inflame ambition. In quiet times he had nothing before him but despair; trouble and confusion were his only source of hope. His luxury was too great for the revenue of a prince, and his poverty scarcely endurable in a private citizen. He hated Galba and envied Piso. To these he added pretended fears, to give a color to his inordinate ambition.

The mind of Otho was not, like his body, soft and effeminate. His slaves and freedmen lived in a course of luxury unknown to private families. Aware of his attachment to such pleasures they painted to him in lively colors the joys of Nero's court. . . . These, if he dared nobly, they represented to him as his own; if he remained inactive, as the prize of others. The astrologers also inflamed his ardor: they announced great commotions, and to Otho a year of glory. These bodings were welcome to the ear of Otho: he considered them as the effect of science, and believed the whole with that natural credulity which receives the marvelous for reality. Ptolemy followed up his work: he now inspired the plan of treason, and Otho embraced it with avidity. The heart that has formed such a wish has no scruple about the means.

Whether this bold conspiracy was then first imagined, or prepared and settled long before, cannot now be known. It is, however, certain that Otho had been in the habit of courting the affections of the army, either with a view to the succession, or with a design to some bold step. On their march, in the lines, at their quarters, he made it his business to converse freely with all; he accosted the veterans by name, and, reminding them of their joint service under Nero, called them his brother soldiers; he renewed his acquaintance with some; he inquired after others, and with his interest and his purse was ready to be their friend. Mingling complaints, and with malignant insinuation glancing at Galba, he omitted nothing that could fill the vulgar mind with discontent. . . .

On the eighteenth day before the calends of February, Galba assisted at a sacrifice in the temple of Apollo, when Umbricius the augur, after inspecting the entrails of the victims, announced impending treason and an enemy within the walls of Rome. Otho, who stood near the emperor, heard this prediction, but interpreted it in his own favor, pleased with omens that promised so well to his cause. In that moment Onomastus came to inform him that his builders and surveyors were waiting to talk with him on business. This, as had been concerted, was a signal that the conspirators were assembling, and ready to strike the decisive blow. Otho told such as wondered at his sudden departure that, being on the point of purchasing certain farm-houses, which from their age were thought to be out of repair, he had appointed workmen to examine the buildings before he concluded his bargain, and then walked off, supported by his freedman; and passing through the palace formerly belonging to Tiberius, went to the Velabrum, and thence to the golden milestone near the temple of Saturn. At that place a party of the prætorian soldiers, in number three and twenty, saluted him emperor. The sight of such an insignificant handful of men struck him with dismay; but his partisans drew their swords, and placing him in a litter, carried him off. They were joined in their way by an equal number, some of them accomplices in the treason; others in wonder and astonishment: some brandishing their swords, and shouting; others in silence, determined to see the issue before they took a decided part.

Julius Martialis, a military tribune, at that time commanded the guard in the camp. Either amazed at a treason so daring, or imagining that it extended wider, and dreading destruction if he attempted to oppose the torrent, he created a suspicion in many of a confederacy in guilt. The rest of the tribunes and centurions, in their solicitude for their immediate safety, lost all sense of honor and constancy. Such, in that alarming crisis, was the disposition of the camp: a few seditious incendiaries dared to attempt an act of the foulest treason; more wished to see it, and all were disposed to acquiesce.

Galba, in the meantime, ignorant of all that passed, continued in the temple, attentive to the sacred rites, and with his prayers fatiguing the gods of an empire now no longer his. Intelligence at length arrived that a senator (whom, no man could tell) was being carried in triumph to the camp. Otho was soon after announced. At the same time the people poured in from every quarter, according as each fell in with him; some representing the danger as greater than it was, others lessening it, not even then forgetting their habitual flattery. A council was called. On deliberation, it was thought advisable to sound the dispositions of the cohort then on duty before the palace, but not by Galba in person. His authority was to be reserved entire, to meet more pressing necessities. Piso called the men together, and from the steps of the palace addressed them. . . .

During this harangue, the soldiers belonging to the guard withdrew from the palace. The rest of the cohort showed no sign of discontent; and as usual in a disturbed state of things, displayed their colors as a matter of course, and without any preconcerted design, rather than, as was imagined afterwards, with a concealed purpose of treachery and revolt. Celsus Marius was sent to use his influence with the forces from Illyricum. Orders were likewise given to Amulius Serenus and Domitius Sabinus to draw from the temple of Liberty the German soldiers there. The legion drafted from the marines was not to be trusted: they had seen, on Galba's entry into Rome, the massacre of their comrades; and the survivors, with minds exasperated, panted for revenge. At the same time, Cetrius Severus, Subrius Dexter, and Pompeius Longinus, three military tribunes, made the best of their way to the prætorian camp, to try if the mutiny, as yet in its early stage and not full grown, might be appeased by wholesome advice. Subrius and Cetrius were assailed with menaces. Longinus was roughly handled; the revolvers took away his weapons, unwilling to listen to a man whom they considered as an officer promoted out of his turn, by the favor of Galba, and for that reason faithful to his prince. The marine legion, without hesitation, joined the prætorian malcontents. The chosen troops of the Illyrian army obliged Celsus to retire under a shower of darts. The veterans from Germany wavered for a long time, suffering as they still were from bodily weakness, though their minds were favorably disposed: for they had been sent by Nero to Alexandria, but being recalled they returned to Rome, worn out by toil and weakened by sickness during their voyage, and Galba had been particularly attentive in recruiting their strength.

The whole populace, in the meantime, with a crowd of slaves intermixed, crowded the palace, demanding, with discordant cries, vengeance on the head of Otho and his partisans, as though they were clamoring in the circus or amphitheater for some spectacle: without judgment or sincerity, for before the close of day, the same mouths were bawling as loudly as ever for the reverse of what they desired in the morning, but according to the established custom of courting with heedless shouts and unmeaning acclamation the reigning prince, whoever he may be. Galba, in the meantime, balanced between two opposite opinions, but finally adopted what seemed to him the more plausible advice. Piso, notwithstanding, was sent forward to the camp; but was hardly gone forth, when a rumor prevailed that Otho was slain in the camp. The report at first was vague and uncertain, but like all important lies, it was confirmed by men who averred that they were on the spot, and saw the blow given: the account gaining easy credence, what with those who rejoiced in it, and those who cared not to scrutinize it. It was afterwards thought to be a rumor, framed and encouraged by Otho's friends, who mingled in the crowd, and published a false report of good news, in order to entice Galba from his palace.

Then indeed not only the vulgar and ignorant multitude were transported beyond all bounds, but the knights and senators were hurried away with the torrent: they forgot their fears; they rushed to the emperor's presence; broke open the doors of the palace, and complaining that the punishment of treason was taken out of their hands, the men who, as it appeared soon after, were the most likely to shrink from danger, displayed their zeal with ostentation; lavish of words, yet cowards in their hearts. No man knew that Otho was slain, yet all averred it as a fact. In this situation, wanting certain intelligence, but overpowered by the consentient voice of mistaken men, Galba determined to go forth from his palace. He called for his armor, and finding himself too feeble from age and bodily constitution for the throng that gathered round him, he was supported in a litter. Before he left the palace, Julius Atticus, a soldier of the body-guard, accosted him with a bloody sword in his hand, crying aloud, "It was I that killed Otho." Galba answered, "Comrade, who gave you orders?" So signally was the spirit of the man adapted to repress the licentiousness of the soldiers; undismayed by their insolence, unseduced by their flattery.

Meanwhile, the prætorian guards with one voice declared for Otho. . . .

Galba, meanwhile, was borne in various directions according as the waving multitude impelled him. The temples and great halls round the forum were filled with crowds of sorrowing spectators. A deep and sullen silence prevailed: the very rabble was hushed: amazement sat on every face. Their eyes watched every motion, and their ears caught every sound. It was not a tumult—it was not the stillness of peace, but the silence of terrible anticipation and high-wrought resentment. Otho, however, received intelligence that the populace had recourse to arms, and thereupon ordered his troops to push forward with rapidity, and prevent the impending danger. At his command the Roman soldiers, as if marching to dethrone an eastern monarch, a Vologeses, or a Pacorus, and not their own lawful sovereign, advanced with impetuous fury to imbrue their hands in the blood of an old man, defenseless and unarmed. They entered the city—they dispersed the common people—trampled the Senate under foot—with swords drawn, and horses at full speed, they burst into the forum.

The prætorians no sooner appeared in sight, than the standard-bearer of the cohort still remaining with Galba (his name, we are told, was Atilius Vergilio) tore off the image of Galba, and dashed it on the ground: that signal given, the soldiers, with one voice, declared for Otho. The people fled in consternation: such as hesitated were attacked sword in hand. The men who carried Galba in a litter, in their fright, let him fall to the ground, near the Curtian lake. His last words, according as men admired or hated him, have been variously reported. According to some, he asked, in a suppliant tone, What harm had he done? and prayed for a few days, that he might discharge the donative due to the soldiers. Others assure us, that he promptly presented his neck to the assassin's stroke, and said with a firm voice, "Strike, if the good of the commonwealth requires it." To ruffians thirsting for blood, no matter what he said. By what hand the blow was given cannot now be known; some impute it to Terentius, a resumed veteran; others to Lecanius: a still more general tradition states, that Camurius, a common soldier of the fifteenth legion, killed him by cutting his throat, with his sword pressed against it. The rest tore his legs and arms with brutal rage, for his breast was covered with armor; and many wounds were inflicted, in a savage and ferocious spirit, upon the body as it lay headless. . . .

From this time the soldiers had everything their own way. The praetorians chose their own prefect. As governor of Rome they named Flavius Sabinus, in accordance with the judgment of Nero, who had committed to him the same charge. The majority meant it as a compliment to Vespasian, his brother. Their next object was to abolish the fees exacted by the centurions for occasional exemptions from duty and for leave of absence; for they were an annual tribute out of the pockets of common men. A fourth part of every company was rambling about the country, or loitering in the very camp, provided the centurion received his perquisites. Nor was the soldier solicitous about the price: he purchased a right to be idle, and the means by which he enabled himself to defray the expense gave him no kind of scruple. By theft, by robbery, and by servile employments, he gained enough to purchase an exemption from military duties. Then, whoever had hoarded up a little money was, for that reason, harassed with labor and severity, till he purchased an exemption. By these extortions the soldier was impoverished, his industry moreover relaxed, and he returned to the camp poor instead of rich, and lazy instead of active. And so again another and another had his principles corrupted by poverty and irregularities similarly induced, whence they fell rapidly into sedition and dissension, and lastly into civil war. To remedy the mischief, and, at the same time, not to alienate the minds of the centurions, by giving up these fees as a bounty to the common soldiers, Otho undertook to pay an annual equivalent to the officers out of his own revenue. This reform was, no doubt, both wise and just. Good princes adopted it afterwards, and made it a settled rule in the military system.

Galba's body lay neglected for a long time, and, under license of the night, was molested by numberless indignities. It was at length conveyed by Argius, his former slave and steward, to the private gardens of his master, and there deposited in an humble manner. His mangled head was fixed on a pole by the rabble of the camp, near the tomb of Patrobius, a slave manumitted by Nero, and by Galba put to death. There it was found the following day, and added to the ashes of the body.

Such was the end of Servius Galba, in the seventy-third year of his age. He had, during the reign of five princes, enjoyed a series of prosperity, happier as a private citizen than a prince. He was descended from a long line of ancestors. His wealth was great; his talents not above mediocrity. Free from vice, he cannot be celebrated for his virtues. He knew the value of fame, yet was neither arrogant nor vain-glorious. Without rapacity, he was an economist of his own, and of the public treasure careful to a degree of avarice. To his friends and freedmen, when his choice was happily made, his passive submission was unobnoxious to censure; but when bad men surrounded him, his blindness bordered on criminality. The splendor of his birth, and the dangerous character of the times, formed a pretext for giving the appellation of wisdom to what in fact was sheer indolence. In the vigor of his days, he served with honor in Germany; as proconsul of Africa, he governed with moderation; and Hither Spain, when he was advanced in years, was administered with similar equity. While a private citizen, his merit was thought superior to his rank; and he would have been held by every one worthy to reign had he never reigned.

BATTLE OF BEDRIACUM AND OTHO'S DEATH.

The centre of Otho's army gave way, and fled with precipitation toward Bedriacum. A long space lay before them; the road was obstructed with heaps of slain: the slaughter, therefore, was the more dreadful. In civil wars, indeed, no prisoners are reserved for sale.

The army of Vitellius halted at the distance of five miles from Bedriacum, the generals not thinking it advisable on the same day to attempt the enemy's camp. A voluntary surrender was at the same time anticipated. But the soldiers, having gone forth prepared only as for battle, and unencumbered, their arms and their victory were their only defense. On the following day the inclination of the Othonians showing itself unequivocally, and even those who had been the fiercest being now disposed to relent, they sent a deputation to the enemy.

Otho, in the meantime, having taken his resolution, waited without trepidation for an account of the event. First, rumors of a melancholy character reached his ears; soon after, fugitives, who escaped from the field, brought sure intelligence that all was lost. The fervor of the soldiers stayed not for the voice of the emperor; they bade him summon up his best resolution: there were forces still in reserve, and in their prince's cause they were ready to suffer and dare the utmost. Nor was this the language of flattery : impelled by a kind of frenzy, and like men possessed, they were all on fire to go to the field and restore the state of their party. The men who stood at a distance stretched forth their hands in token of their assent, while such as gathered round the prince clasped his knees ; Plotius Firmus being the most zealous. This officer commanded the prætorian guards. He implored his master not to abandon an army devoted to his interest ; a soldiery who had undergone so much in his cause. "It was more magnanimous," they said, "to bear up against adversity, than to shrink from it : the brave and strenuous sustained themselves upon hope, even against the current of fortune ; the timorous and abject only allowed their fears to plunge them into despair." While uttering these words, accordingly as Otho relaxed or stiffened the muscles of his face, they shouted or groaned. Nor was this spirit confined to the prætorians, the peculiar soldiers of Otho ; the detachment sent forward by the Mæsiæ legions brought word that the same zeal pervaded the coming army, and that the legions had entered Aquileia. Whence it is evident that a fierce and bloody war, the issue of which could not have been foreseen by the victors or the vanquished, might have been still carried on.

Otho himself was averse to any plans of prosecuting the war. He talked with his friends, addressing each in courteous terms, according to his rank, his age, or dignity, and endeavored to induce all, the young in an authoritative tone, the old by entreaties, to depart without loss of time, and not aggravate the resentment of the conqueror by remaining with him. His countenance serene, his voice firm, and endeavoring to repress the tears of his friends as uncalled for, he ordered boats or carriages for those who were willing to depart. Papers and letters, containing strong expressions of duty toward himself, or ill will toward Vitellius, he committed to the flames. He distributed money in presents, but not with the profusion of a man quitting the world. Then, observing his brother's son, Salvius Cocceianus, in the bloom of youth, and distressed and weeping, he even comforted him, commending his duty, but rebuking his fears : "Could it be supposed that Vitellius, finding his own family safe, would refuse, inhumanly, to return the generosity shown to himself ? By hastening his death," he said, "he should establish a claim upon his clemency ; since, not in the extremity of despair, but at a time when the army was clamoring for another battle, he had made his death an offering to his country. For himself, he had gained ample renown, and left to his family enough of luster. After the Julian race, the Claudian, and the Servian, he was the first who carried the sovereignty into a new family. Wherefore he should cling to life with lofty aspirations, and neither forget at any time that Otho was his uncle, nor remember it overmuch."

After this, his friends having all withdrawn, he reposed awhile. When lo! while his mind was occupied with the last act of his life, he was diverted from his purpose by a sudden uproar. The soldiers, he was told, were in a state of frenzy and riot, threatening destruction to all who offered to depart, and directing their fury particularly against Verginius, whom they kept besieged in his house, which he had barricaded. Having reproved the authors of the disturbance, he returned, and devoted himself to bidding adieu to those who were going away, until they had all departed in security. Toward the close of day he quenched his thirst with a draught of cold water, and then ordered two poniards to be brought to him. He tried the points of both, and laid one under his head. Having ascertained that his friends were safe on their way, he passed the night in quiet, and, as we are assured, even slept. At the dawn of day, he applied the weapon to his breast, and fell upon it. On hearing his dying groans, his freedmen and slaves, and with them Plotius Firmus, the prætorian præfect, found that with one wound he had dispatched himself. His funeral obsequies were performed without delay. This had been his earnest request, lest his head should be cut off and be made a public spectacle. He was borne on the shoulders of the prætorian soldiers, who kissed his hands and his wound, amidst tears and praises. Some of the soldiers slew themselves at the funeral pile: not from any consciousness of guilt, nor from fear; but in emulation of the bright example of their prince, and to show their affection. At Bedriacum, Placentia, and other camps, numbers of every rank adopted that mode of death. A sepulchre was raised to the memory of Otho, of ordinary structure, but likely to endure.

Such was the end of Otho, in the thirty-seventh year of his age. The features of his character have been already delineated. By two actions, one atrocious and detestable, the other great and magnanimous, he earned an equal degree of honor and infamy among posterity.

THE CLOSE OF VITELLIUS'S REIGN.

The army of Vespasian, quitting Narnia, were passing the Saturnalian holidays at Oriculum, quite at their ease. To wait for the arrival of Mucianus, was the ostensible reason for this ill-timed delay. Motives of a different nature were imputed to Antonius. There were those who suspected him of having lingered there with a fraudulent intent, in consequence of letters of Vitellius, in which he offered him the consulship, his daughter, who was marriageable, and a rich dowry. Others treated it as mere invention, a contrivance to gratify Mucianus. Some were of opinion that it was the deliberate plan of all the generals to alarm the city with the appearance of war, rather than to carry it into Rome ; since the strongest cohorts had abandoned Vitellius, and as all his resources were cut off, it was thought he would abdicate. But all was defeated, at first by the temerity, and in the end by the irresolution, of Sabinus, who, having rashly taken up arms, was not able, against so small a force as three cohorts, to defend the Capitol, a fortress of unequalled strength, and capable of resisting the shock of powerful armies.

Antonius, in the night time, moved along the Flaminian road, and arrived at the Red Rocks when the mischief was done. There he heard that Sabinus was murdered ; that the Capitol was burnt ; that the city was in consternation ; in fact, nothing but bad news. Word was also brought that the populace, joined by the slaves, had taken up arms for Vitellius. At the same time the cavalry, under Petilius Cerealis, met with a defeat. Advancing incautiously, and with precipitation, as against vanquished troops, they were received by a body of infantry and cavalry intermixed. The battle was fought at a small distance from Rome, amidst houses and gardens and zig-zag ways, well known to the Vitellians, but creating alarm and confusion in men unacquainted with them. Nor did now the cavalry under Cerealis act with unanimity. They had among them a party of those who laid down their arms at Narnia, who waited to see the issue. Tullius Flavianus, who commanded a squadron of Vespasian's horse, was taken prisoner. The rest fled with scandalous precipitation ; the conquering troops pursuing them only as far as Fidenæ.

The success of the Vitellians in this engagement inspired the partisans at Rome with new courage. The populace had recourse to arms. A few were provided with regular shields; the rest snatched up whatever weapons fell in their way, and with one voice demanded the signal for the attack. Vitellius thanked them, and bade them press forward in defense of the city. He then convened the senate; when ambassadors to the armies were chosen, to propose, in the name of the commonwealth, an agreement and pacification. . . . The Vestal virgins went out with letters from Vitellius addressed to Antonius. He requested a postponement of the contest for a single day. If he allowed an interval for reflection, it would afford facilities for settling matters. The virgins were permitted to depart with every mark of honor. An answer in writing was sent to Vitellius, informing him, that by the murder of Sabinus, and the destruction of the Capitol, negotiations for the settlement of the war were put out of the question.

Antonius, however, called an assembly of the soldiers, and in a soothing speech endeavored to induce them to encamp at the Milvian bridge, and enter Rome the next day. His reason for delay was, lest the soldiery, with feelings excited by the late battle, should give no quarter to the people or the senate, nor respect the temples and shrines of the gods. But they looked with suspicion on every postponement of their victory, as proceeding from hostility to them. At the same time colors glittering on the hills, though followed by an undisciplined rabble, gave the appearance of a hostile army. The mob was put to flight by a cavalry charge; and the Vitellian soldiers, themselves also ranged in three columns, came on. Many engagements took place before the walls, with various success, but for the most part favorable to Vespasian's men, who had the advantage in the talent of their leaders. That party only that had wheeled round to the left of the city, through slippery and narrow passes, toward the Sallustian gardens, were roughly handled. The Vitellians, standing on the walls of the gardens, repulsed them with stones and javelins as they approached, for the best part of the day; but at length Vespasian's cavalry forced their way through the Collinian gate, and took them in the rear. A fierce battle was also fought in the field of Mars. Their good fortune and reiterated success gave the Flavians the victory. The Vitellians fought under the impulse of despair alone; and though dispersed, they rallied again within the walls of the city.

The people were present as spectators of the combatants; and, as in a theatrical contest, encouraged now this side, and, when a change took place, the other, with shouts and plaudits. Whenever one or other side gave way, and the men took shelter in shops, or ran for refuge into any houses, by demanding to have them dragged forth and put to death, they secured to themselves a larger share of plunder; for while the soldiers were intent on blood and slaughter, the plunder fell to the rabble. The city exhibited one entire scene of ferocity and abomination; in one place, battle and wounds; in another, bathing and revelry. Rivers of blood and heaps of bodies at the same time; and by the side of them harlots and women that differed not from harlots — all that unbridled passion can suggest in the wantonness of ease — all the enormities that are committed when a city is sacked by its relentless foes — so that you would positively suppose that Rome was at one and the same time frantic with rage and dissolved in sensuality. Before this period regular bodies of armed men had met in conflict within the city, twice when Sylla, and once when Cinna conquered. Nor was there less of cruelty on those occasions; but now there prevailed a reckless indifference alien from human nature; nay, even pleasures were not intermitted, no not for an instant. As if the occurrence formed an accession to the delight of the festive season, they romped, they enjoyed themselves, without a thought about the success of their party, and rejoicing amidst the afflictions of their country.

The greatest exertions were required in storming the camp, which the bravest of the Vitellians still clung to as their last hope; and therefore, with the more diligent heed, the conquerors, and with especial zeal the old prætorian cohorts, applied at once whatever means had been discovered in the capture of the strongest cities; shells, engines, mounds, and firebrands; exclaiming that all the fatigues and dangers they had undergone in so many battles were consummated in that effort, that their city was restored to the senate and people of Rome, and to the gods their temples; that the camp was the peculiar glory of the soldier — there was his country, there his household gods. They must either carry it forthwith, or pass the night under arms. On the other hand, the Vitellians, though inferior in numbers, and less favored by fortune, sought to mar the victory, to delay the pacification, stained their hearths and altars with their blood, clung to those endearing objects which the vanquished might never more behold. Many, exhausted, breathed their last upon the towers and battlements; the few that remained tore open the gates, in a solid mass rushed in upon the victors, and fell, to a man, with honorable wounds, facing the enemy ; such was their anxiety, even in death, to finish their course with credit. Vitellius, seeing the city conquered, was conveyed in a litter, by a private way at the back of the palace, to his wife's house on Mount Aventine, with intent, if he could lie concealed during the day, to fly for refuge to his brother and the cohorts at Tarracina.

Straightway, from his inherent fickleness, and the natural effects of fright, — since, as he dreaded everything, whatever course he adopted was the least satisfactory, — he returned to his palace, and found it empty and desolate ; even his meanest slaves having made their escape, or shunning the presence of their master. The solitude and silence of the scene alarmed him ; he opened the doors of the apartments, and was horror-struck to see all void and empty. Exhausted with this agonizing state of doubt and perplexity, and concealing himself in a wretched hiding place, he was dragged forth by Placidus, the tribune of a cohort. With his hands tied behind him, and his garment torn, he was conducted, a revolting spectacle, through crowds insulting his distress, without a friend to shed a tear over his misfortunes. The unseemliness of his end banished all sympathy. Whether one of the Germanic soldiers who met him intended for him the stroke he made, and if he did, whether from rage or to rescue him the quicker from the mockery to which he was exposed ; or whether he aimed at the tribune, is uncertain : he cut off the ear of the tribune and was immediately dispatched.

Vitellius was pushed along, and with swords pointed at his throat, forced to raise his head, and expose his countenance to insults : one while they made him look at his statues tumbling to the ground ; frequently to the rostrum, or the spot where Galba perished ; and lastly, they drove him to Gemoniæ, where the body of Flavius Sabinus had been thrown. One expression of his was heard, that spoke a spirit not utterly fallen, when to a tribune who insulted him in his misery he observed, that nevertheless he had been his emperor. He died soon after under repeated wounds. The populace, with the same perversity of judgment that had prompted them to honor him while living, assailed him with indignities when dead.

He was born at Luceria. He had completed his fifty-seventh year. He rose to the consulship, to pontifical dignities, and a name and rank amongst the most eminent citizens, without personal merit, obtaining all from the splendid reputation of his father. The men who conferred the imperial dignity upon him did not so much as know him. By impotence and sloth he gained the affections of the army, to a degree in which few have attained them by worthy means. Frankness and generosity, however, he possessed : qualities which, unless duly regulated, become the occasions of ruin. He imagined that friendships could be cemented, not by a uniform course of virtue, but by profuse liberality ; and therefore earned them rather than cultivated them.

THE LAST DAYS OF VITELLIUS.

By G. J. WHYTE-MELVILLE.

(From "The Gladiators.")

[GEORGE JOHN WHYTE-MELVILLE, English novelist, was born near St. Andrews, Scotland, in 1821; educated at Eton, and became a major in the army, serving in the Crimean War; was killed by a fall from his horse, in 1878. He attained great popularity as a novelist of country-gentleman and sporting life, and writer of songs of the hunting field, and some historical novels, as "The Gladiators," "Sarchedon," etc. His first novel was "Digby Grand" (1853); others are: "Tilbury Nogo," "General Bounce," "Kate Coventry," "Holmby House," "Good for Nothing," "The Brookes of Bridlemere," "Cerise," "Bones and I," "M or N," "Satanella," "Uncle John," "Katerfelto," "Sister Louise," "Black but Comely."]

THE GERMAN GUARD.

ALL was in confusion at the palace of the Cæsars. The civil war that had now been raging for several hours in the capital, the tumults that pervaded every quarter of the city, had roused the alarm, and to a certain extent the vigilance, of such troops as still owned allegiance to Vitellius. But late events had much slackened the discipline for which Roman soldiers were so famous, and that could be but a spurious loyalty which depended on amount of pay and opportunities for plunder, which was accustomed moreover to see the diadem transferred from one successful general to another at a few months' interval. Perhaps his German guards were the only soldiers of Vitellius on whom he could place any reliance: but even these had been reduced to a mere handful by slaughter and desertion, while the few who remained, though unimpeachable in their fidelity, were wanting in every quality that constitutes military efficiency, except the physical strength and desperate courage they brought with them from the North.

They were, however, the Emperor's last hope. They occupied palace gardens to-night, feeding their bivouac fires with branches from its stately cedars, or uprooting its exotic shrubs to hurl them crackling in the blaze. The Roman citizens looking on their gigantic forms moving to and fro in the glare, shuddered and whispered, and pointed them out to each other as being half men, half demons, while a passing soldier would raise his eagle crest more proudly, relating how those were the foes over whom the legions had triumphed, and would turn forthwith into a wine shop to celebrate his prowess at the expense of some admiring citizen in the crowd.

One of these German mercenaries may be taken as a sample of the rest. He was standing sentry over a narrow wicket that afforded entrance to the palace gardens, and was the first obstacle encountered by Esea, after the latter had hastened from the Esquiline to give intelligence of the design against Cæsar's life.

Leaning on his spear, with his tall frame and large muscles thrown into strong relief by the light of the bivouac fire behind him, he brought to the Briton's mind many a stirring memory of his own warlike boyhood, when by the side of just such champions, armed in such a manner, he had struggled, though in vain, against the discipline and the strategy of the invader.

Scarcely older than himself, the sentry possessed the comely features and the bright coloring of youth, with a depth of chest and squareness of shoulder that denoted all the power of mature manhood. He seemed indeed a formidable antagonist for any single foe, and able to keep at bay half a score of the finest men who stood in the front rank of the legions. He was clad in a long white garment of linen, reaching below the knee, and fastened at the neck by a single clasp of gold; his shield and helmet too, although this was no state occasion, but one on which he would probably be massacred before morning, were of the same metal, his spearhead and sword of the finest tempered steel. The latter, especially, was a formidable weapon. Considerably longer than the Roman's, which was only used for the thrust at close quarters, it could deal sweeping blows that would cleave a headpiece or lop a limb, and managed lightly as a riding wand by the German's powerful arm, would hew fearful gaps in the ranks of an enemy, if their line wavered, or their order was in any degree destroyed.

Notwithstanding the warlike nature of his arms and bearing, the sentry's face was fair and smooth as a woman's; the flaxen down was scarcely springing on his chin, and the golden locks escaped beneath his helmet, and clustered in curls upon his neck. His light blue eye, too, had a mild, and rather vacant expression as it roved carelessly around; but the Romans had long ago learned that those light blue eyes could kindle into sparks of fire when steel was crossed, could glare with invincible hatred and defiance even when fixed in death.

Esca's heart warmed to the barbarian guardsman with a feeling of sympathy and kindred. The latter sentiment may have suggested the plan by which he obtained entrance to the palace, for the difficulty of so doing had presented itself to him in brighter colors every moment as he approached. Pausing, therefore, at a few paces from the sentry, who leveled his spear and challenged when he heard footsteps, the Briton unbuckled his sword and cast it down between them, to indicate that he claimed protection and had no intention of offense.

The other muttered some unintelligible words in his own language. It was obvious that he knew no Latin and that their conversation must be carried on by signs. This, however, rather smoothed than enhanced the difficulty; and it was a relief to Esca that the first impulse of the German had not been to alarm his comrades and resort to violence.

The latter seemed to entertain no apprehension from any single individual, whether friend or foe, and looked, moreover, with favorable eyes on Esca's appearance, which bore a certain family likeness to that of his own countrymen. He suffered him therefore to approach his post, questioning him by signs, to which the Briton replied in the same manner, perfectly ignorant of their meaning, but with a fervent hope that the result of these mysterious gestures might be his admission within the wall.

Under such circumstances the two were not likely to arrive at a clear understanding. After a while the German looked completely puzzled, and passed the word in his own language to a comrade within hearing, apparently for assistance. Esca heard the sound repeated in more than one voice, till it died away under the trees ; there was obviously a strong chain of sentries round Cæsar's palace.

In the mean time the German would not permit Esca to approach within spear's length of his post, though he kept him back good-humoredly with the butt end of that weapon, nor would he suffer him to pick his sword up and gird it round his waist again — making nevertheless, all the while, signs of cordiality and friendship ; but though Esca responded to these with equal warmth, he was no nearer the inside than at first.

Presently the heavy tramp of armed men smote his ear, and a centurion, accompanied by half a dozen soldiers, approached the wicket. These bore a strong resemblance, both in form and features, to the sentry who had summoned them ; but their officer spoke Latin, and Esca, who had gained a little time to mature his plan, answered the German centurion's questions without hesitation.

"I belong to your own division," said he, "though I come from farther north than your troop, and speak a different dialect. We were disbanded but yesterday, by a written order from Cæsar. It has turned out to be a forgery. We have been scattered through half the wine shops in Rome, and a herald came round and found me drinking, and bade me return to my duty without delay. He said we were to muster somewhere hereabouts, that we should find a post at the palace, and could join it till our own officers came back. I am but a barbarian, I know little of Rome, but this is the palace, is it not? and you are a centurion of the German guard?"

He drew himself up as he spoke with military respect, and the officer had no hesitation in believing his tale, the more so that certain of Cæsar's troops had lately been disbanded at a time when their services seemed to be most in requisition. Taking charge of Esca's weapon, he spoke a few words in his own language to the sentry, and then addressed the Briton.

"You may come to the main guard," said he. "I should not mind a few more of the same maniple. We are likely to want all we can get to-night."

As he conducted him through the gardens, he asked several questions concerning the strength of the opposing party, the state of the town, and the general feeling of the citizens towards Vitellius, all which Esca parried to the best of his abilities, hazarding a guess where he could, and accounting for his ignorance where he could not, on the plea that he had spent his whole time since his dismissal in the wine shops — an excuse which the centurion's knowledge of the tastes and habits of his division caused him to accept without suspicion of its truth.

Arrived at the watch fire, Esea's military experience, slight as it had been, was enough to apprise him of the imminent dangers that threatened the palace in the event of an attack. The huge Germans lounged and lay about in the glare of the burning logs, as though feast, and song, and revelry were the objects for which they were mustered. Wine was flowing freely in large flagons, commensurate to the noble thirst of these Scandinavian warriors; and even the sentries, leaving their posts at intervals, as caprice or indolence prompted, strode up to the watch fire, laughed a loud laugh, drained a full beaker, and walked quietly back again, none the worse, to their beat. All hailed a new comrade with the utmost glee, as a further incentive to drink; and although Esea was pleased to find that none but their centurion was familiar with Latin, and that he was consequently free from much inconvenient cross-examination, it was obvious that there was no intention of letting him depart without pledging them in deep draughts of the rough and potent Sabine wine.

With youth, health, and a fixed resolve to keep his wits about him, the Briton managed to perform this part of a soldier's duty to the satisfaction of his entertainers. The moments seemed very long, but whilst the Germans were singing, drinking, and making their remarks upon him in their own language, he had time to think of his plans. To have declared at once that he knew of a plot against Cæsar, and to call upon the centurion to obtain his admittance to the person of the Emperor, would, he was well aware, only defeat his own object, by throwing suspicion on himself as a probable assassin, and confederate of the conspirators. To put the officer on the alert, would cause him, perhaps, to double his sentries, and to stop the allowance of wine in course of consumption; but Esea saw plainly that no resistance from within the palace could be made to the large force his late master would bring to bear upon it. The only chance for the Emperor was to escape. If he could himself reach his presence, and warn him personally, he thought he could prevail upon him to fly. This was the difficulty. A monarch in his palace is not visible to every one who may wish to see him, even when his own safety is concerned; but Esea had already gained the interior of the gardens, and that success encouraged him to proceed.

The Germans, though believing themselves more vigilant than usual (to such a low state the boasted discipline of Cæsar's bodyguard had fallen), were confused and careless under the influence of wine, and their attention to the newcomer was soon distracted by a fresh chorus and a fresh flagon. Esca, under pretense that he required repose, managed to withdraw himself from the glare of the firelight, and borrowing a cloak from a ruddy comrade with a stentorian voice, lay down in the shadow of an arbutus, and affected profound repose. By degrees, coiling himself along the sward like a snake, he slipped out of sight, leaving his cloak so arranged as to resemble a sleeping form, and sped off in the direction of the palace, to which he was guided by numerous distant lights.

Some alarm had evidently preceded him even here. Crowds of slaves, both male and female, chiefly Greeks and Asiatics, were pouring from its egresses and hurrying through the gardens in obvious dismay. The Briton could not but remark that none were empty-handed, and the value of their burdens denoted that those who now fled had no intention ever to return. They took little notice of him when they passed, save that a few of the more timid, glancing at his stalwart figure, turned aside and ran the swifter; while others, perceiving that he was unarmed, for he had left his sword with the Germans, shot at him some contemptuous gesture or ribald jest, which they thought the barbarian would not understand in time to resent.

Thus he reached the spacious front of the palace, and here, indeed, the trumpets were sounding, and the German guard forming, evidently for resistance to an attack. There was no mistaking the expression of the men's faces, nor the clang of their heavy weapons. Though they filled the main court, however, a stream of fugitives still poured from the side doors, and through one of these, the Briton determined he would find no difficulty in effecting an entrance. Glancing at the fine men getting under arms with such businesslike rapidity, he thought how even that handful might make such a defense as would give Cæsar time to escape, either at the back of the palace, or, if that were invested, disguised as one of the slaves who were still hurrying off in motley crowds; and notwithstanding his newborn feelings, he could not help, from old association, wishing that he might strike a blow by the side of these stalwart guardsmen, even for such a cause as theirs.

Observing a door opening on a terrace which had been left completely undefended, Esca entered the palace unopposed, and roamed through hall after hall without meeting a living creature. Much of value had already been cleared away, but enough remained to have excited the cupidity of the richest subject in Rome. Shawls, arms, jewels, vases, statues, caskets, and drinking cups were scattered about in a waste of magnificent confusion, while in many instances, rapacious ignorance had carried off that which was comparatively the dross, and left the more precious articles behind. Esca had never even dreamed of such gorgeous luxury as he now beheld. For a few minutes his mind was no less stupefied than his eye was dazzled, and he almost forgot his object in sheer wonder and admiration; but there was no time to be lost, and he looked about in vain for some clew to guide him through this glittering wilderness to the presence of the Emperor.

The rooms seemed endless, opening one into another, and each more splendid than the last. At length he heard the sound of voices, and darting eagerly forward, found himself in the midst of half a dozen persons clad in robes of state, with garlands on their heads, reclining round the fragments of a feast, a flagon or two of wine, and a golden cornucopia of fruit and flowers.

As he entered, these started to their feet, exclaiming, "They are upon us!" and huddled together in a corner, like a flock of sheep when terrified by a dog. Observing, however, that the Briton was alone and unarmed, they seemed to take courage, and a fat figure thrusting itself forward, exclaimed in one breath, "He is not to be disturbed! Cæsar is busy. Are the Germans firm?"

His voice shook and his whole frame quivered with fear; nevertheless Esca recognized the speaker. It was his old antagonist Spado, a favorite eunuch of the household, in dire terror for his life, yet showing the one redeeming quality of fidelity to the hand that fed him.

His comrades kept behind him, taking their cue from his conduct as the bellwether of the flock, yet trusting fervently his wisdom would counsel immediate flight.

"I know you," said Esca, hurriedly. "I struck you that night in anger. It is all over now. I have come to save your lives, all of you, and to rescue Cæsar."

"How?" said Spado, ignoring his previous injuries in the alarm of the hour. "You can save us? You can rescue Cæsar? Then it is true. The tumult is grown to a rebellion! The Germans are driven in, and the game is lost!"

The others caught up their mantles, girded themselves, and prepared for instant flight.

"The guard can hold the palace for half an hour yet," replied Esca, coolly. "But the Emperor must escape. Julius Placidus will be here forthwith, at the head of two hundred gladiators, and the Tribune means to murder his master as surely as you stand trembling there."

Ere he had done speaking, he was left alone in the room with Spado. The Tribune's character was correctly appreciated, even by the eunuchs of the palace, and they stayed to hear no more; but Spado only looked blankly in the Briton's face, wringing his fat hands, and answered to the other's urgent appeals, "His orders were explicit. Cæsar is busy. He must not be disturbed. He said so himself. Cæsar is busy!"

THE BUSINESS OF CÆSAR.

Thrusting Spado aside without ceremony, and disregarding the eunuch's expostulations in obedience to the orders he had received, Esca burst through a narrow door, tore down a velvet curtain, and found himself in the private apartment of the Emperor. Cæsar's business was at that moment scarcely of an urgency to weigh against the consideration of Cæsar's life. Vitellius was reclining on a couch, his dress disordered and ungirt, a garland of roses at his feet, his heavy face, of which the swollen features had lost all their early comeliness, expressing nothing but sullen torpid calm; his eye fixed on vacancy, his weak nerveless hands crossed in front of his unwieldy person, and his whole attitude that of one who had little to occupy his attention, save his own personal indulgence and comfort.

Yet for all this, the mind was busy within that bloated form. There are moments in existence, when the past comes back to us day by day, and incident by incident, shining out in colors vivid and lifelike as the present. On the eve of an important crisis, during the crisis itself if we are not permitted to take an active part in it but compelled to remain passive, the mere sport of its contingencies, for the few minutes that succeed a complete demolition of the fabric we have been building all our lives, we become possessed of this faculty, and seem, in a strange dreamlike sense, to live our time over again.

For the last few days, even Vitellius had awoke to the conviction that his diadem was in danger, for the last few hours he had seen cause to tremble for his life; nevertheless, none of the usual habits of the palace had been altered; and even when Primus, the successful general of his dangerous rival, Vespasian, occupied the suburbs, his reverses did but elicit from the Emperor a call for more wine and a heartless jest.

To-day he must have seen clearly that all was lost, yet the supper to which he sat down with half a dozen favorite eunuchs was no less elaborate than usual, the wine flowed as freely, the Emperor ate as enormously, and when he could eat no more, retired to pass his customary half hour in perfect silence and repose, nor suffered the important process of digestion to be disturbed by the fact that his very gates must ere midnight be in possession of the enemy.

Nevertheless, as if in warning of what was to come, the pageant of his life seemed to move past his half-closed eyes; and who shall say how vain and empty such a pageant may have appeared even to the besotted glutton, who, though he had the address to catch the diadem of the Cæsars, when it was thrown to him by chance, knew but too well that he had no power to retain it on his head, when wrested by the grasp of force. Though feeble and worn out, he was not old, far short of three-score years, yet what a life of change and turmoil and vicissitudes his had been!

Proconsul of Africa, favorite of four emperors, it must have been a certain versatility of talent, that enabled him to rule such an important province with tolerable credit, and yet retain the good graces of successive tyrants, resembling each other in nothing save incessant caprice. An informer with Tiberius; a pander to the crimes, and a proselyte to the divinity, of mad Caligula; a screen for Messalina's vices, and an easy adviser to her easy and timid lord; lastly, everything in turn with Nero—chariot driver, singer, parasite, buffoon, and in all these various parts preserving the one unfailing characteristic of a consummate and systematic debauchee.

It seemed but yesterday that he had thrown the dice with Claudius, staking land and villas as freely as jewels and gold, losing heavily to his imperial master; and, though he had to borrow the money at high usury, quick-witted enough to perceive the noble reversion he had thus a chance of purchasing.

It seemed but yesterday that he flew round the dusky circus, grazing the goal with practiced skill, and, by a happy dexterity, suffering Caligula to win the race so narrowly, as to enhance the pleasure of imperial triumph.

It seemed but yesterday that he sang with Nero, and flattered the monster by comparing him with the sirens, whose voices charmed mariners to their destruction.

And now was it all over? Must he indeed give up the imperial purple and the throne of blazing gold?—the luxurious banquets and the luscious wines? He shuddered and sickened while he thought of a crust of brown bread and a pitcher of water. Nay, worse than this, was he sure his life was safe? He had seen death often—what Roman had not? But at his best, in the field, clad in corselet and headpiece, and covered with a buckler, he had thought him an ugly and unwelcome visitor.

Even at Bedriacum, when he told his generals as he rode over the slain, putrefying on the ground, that “a dead enemy smelt sweet, and the sweeter for being a citizen,” he remembered now that his gorge had risen while he spoke. He remembered, too, the German bodyguard that had accompanied him, and the faithful courage with which his German levies fought. There were a few of them in the palace yet. It gave him confidence to recollect this. For a moment the soldier spirit kindled up within, and he felt as though he could put himself at the head of those blue-eyed giants, lead them into the very center of the enemy, and die there like a man. He rose to his feet, and snatched at one of the weapons hanging for ornament against the wall, but the weak limbs failed, the pampered body asserted itself, and he sank back helpless on the couch.

It was at this moment that Esca burst so unceremoniously into the Emperor’s presence.

Vitellius did not rise again, less alarmed, perhaps, than astonished. The Briton threw himself upon his knees, and touched the broad crimson binding of the imperial gown.

“There is not a moment to lose!” said he. “They are forcing the gates. The guard has been driven back. It is too late for resistance; but Caesar may yet escape if he will trust himself to me.”

Vitellius looked about him, bewildered. At that moment a shout was heard from the palace gardens, accompanied by a rush of many feet, and the ominous clash of steel. Esca knew that the assailants were gladiators. If they came in with their blood up, they would give no quarter.

"Caesar must disguise himself," he insisted earnestly. "The slaves have been leaving the palace in hundreds. If the Emperor would put on a coarse garment and come with me, I can show him the way to safety; and Placidus, hastening to this apartment, will find it empty."

With all his sensual vices, there was yet something left of the old Roman spirit in Vitellius, which sparkled out in an emergency. After the first sudden surprise of Esca's entrance, he became cooler every moment. At the mention of the Tribune's name he seemed to reflect.

"Who are you?" said he, after a pause; "and how came you here?"

Short as had been his reign he had acquired the tone of royalty; and he could even assume a certain dignity, notwithstanding the urgency of his present distress.

In a few words Esca explained to him his danger, and his enemies.

"Placidus," repeated the Emperor, thoughtfully, and as if more concerned than surprised; "then there is no chance of the design failing; no hope of mercy when it has succeeded. Good friend! I will take your advice. I will trust you, and go with you where you will. If I am an Emperor to-morrow, you will be the greatest man in Rome."

Hitherto he had been leaning indolently back on the couch. Now he seemed to rouse himself for action, and stripped the crimson-bordered gown from his shoulders, the signet ring from his hand. "They will make a gallant defense," said he, "but if I know Julius Placidus, he will outnumber them ten to one. Nevertheless they may hold him at bay with their long swords till we get clear of the palace. The gardens are dark and spacious; we can hide there for a time, and take an opportunity of reaching my wife's house on Mount Aventine; Galeria will not betray me, and they will never think of looking for me there."

Speaking thus coolly and deliberately, but more to himself than his companion, Caesar, divested of all marks of splendor in his dress and ornaments, stripped to a plain linen garment, turning up his sleeves and girding himself the while, like a slave busied in some household work requiring activity and dispatch, suffered the Briton to lead him into the next apartment, where, deserted by his comrades, and sorely perplexed between a vague sense of duty and a strong inclination to run away, Spado was pacing to and fro in a ludicrous state of perturbation and dismay.

Already the noise of fighting was plainly distinguished in the outer court. The gladiators, commanded by Hippias and guided by the treacherous Tribune, had overpowered the main body of the Germans who occupied the imperial gardens, and were now engaged with the remnant of these faithful barbarians at the very doors of the palace.

The latter, though outnumbered, fought with the desperate courage of their race. The Roman soldier, in his cool methodical discipline, was sometimes puzzled to account for that frantic energy which acknowledged no superiority either of position or numbers, which seemed to gather a fresher and more stubborn courage from defeat; and even the gladiators, men whose very livelihood was slaughter, and whose weapons were never out of their hands, found themselves no match for these large savage warriors in the struggle of a hand-to-hand combat, — recoiled more than once in baffled rage and astonishment from the long swords, and the blue eyes, and the tall forms that seemed to tower and dilate in the fierce revelry of battle.

The military skill of Placidus, exercised before many a Jewish rampart, and on many a Syrian plain, had worsted the main body of the Germans by taking them in flank. Favored by the darkness of the shrubberies, he had contrived to throw a hundred practiced swordsmen unexpectedly on their most defenseless point. Surprised and outnumbered, they retreated nevertheless in good order, though sadly diminished, upon their comrades at the gate. Here the remaining handful made a desperate stand, and here Placidus, wiping his bloody sword upon his tunic, whispered to Hippias, "We must put Hirpinus and the supper party in front! If we can but carry the gate, there are a score of entrances into the palace. Remember! we give no quarter, and we recognize no one."

Whilst the chosen band who had left the Tribune's table were held in check by the guard, there was a moment's respite, during which Caesar might possibly escape. Esea, rapidly calculating the difficulties in his own mind, had resolved to hurry him through the most secluded part of the gardens into the streets, and so running the chance of recognition which in the darkness of night, and under the coarse garb of a household slave, was but a remote contingency, to convey him by a circuitous route to Galeria's house, of which he knew the situation, and where he might be concealed for a time without danger of detection. The great obstacle was to get him out of the palace without being seen. The private door by which he had himself entered, he knew must be defended, or the assailants would have taken advantage of it ere this, and he dared not risk recognition, to say nothing of the chances of war, by endeavoring to escape through the midst of the conflict at the main gate. He appealed to Spado for assistance.

"There is a terrace at the back here," stammered the eunuch; "if Caesar can reach it, a pathway leads directly down to the summer house in the thickest part of the gardens; thence he can go between the fish ponds straight to the wicket that opens on the Appian Way."

"Idiot!" exclaimed the Emperor, angrily, "how am I to reach the terrace? There is no door, and the window must be a man's height at least from the ground."

"It is your only chance of life, illustrious!" observed Esca, impatiently. "Guide us to the window, friend," he added, turning to Spado, who looked from one to the other in helpless astonishment, "and tear that shawl from the couch; we may want it for a rope to let the Emperor down."

A fresh shout from the combatants at the gate, while it completely paralyzed the eunuch, seemed to determine Vitellius. He moved resolutely forward, followed by his two companions, Spado whispering to the Briton, "You are a brave young man. We will all escape together, I—I will stand by you to the last!"

They needed but to cross a passage and traverse another room. Caesar peered over the window sill into the darkness below, and drew back.

"It is a long way down," said he. "What if I were to break a limb?" Esca produced the shawl he had brought with him from the adjoining apartment, and offered to place it under his arms and round his body.

"Shall I go first?" said Spado. "It is not five cubits from the ground."

But the Emperor thought of his brother Lucius and the cohorts at Terracina. Could he but gain the camp there he would be safe, nay more, he could make head against his rival; he would return to Rome with a victorious army; he would retrieve the diadem and the purple, and the suppers at the palace once more.

"Stay where you are!" he commanded Spado, who was looking with an eager eye at the window. "I will risk it. One draught of Falernian, and I will risk it and begone."

He turned back towards the banqueting room, and while he did so another shout warned him that the gate was carried, and the palace in possession of the conspirators.

Esca followed the Emperor, vainly imploring him to fly. Spado, taking one more look from the window ere he risked his bones, heard the ring of armor and the tramp of feet coming round the corner of the palace, on the very terrace he desired to reach. White and trembling, he tore the garland from his head and gnawed its roses with his teeth in the impotence of his despair. He knew the last chance was gone now, and they must die.

The Emperor returned to the room where he had supped, seized a flagon of Falernian, filled himself a large goblet which he half emptied at a draught, and set it down on the board with a deep sigh of satisfaction. The courtyard had been taken at last, and the palace surrounded. Resistance was hopeless, and escape impossible. The Germans were still fighting, indeed, within the rooms, disputing inch by inch the glittering corridors and the carved doorways and the shining polished floors, now more slippery than ever with blood. Pictures and statues seemed to look down in calm amazement at thrust and blow and death grapple, and all the reeling confusion of mortal strife. But the noise came nearer and nearer; the Germans, falling man by man, were rapidly giving ground. Esca knew the game was lost at last, and he turned to his companions in peril with a grave and clouded brow.

"There is nothing for it left," said he, "but to die like men. Yet if there be any corner in which Cæsar can hide," he added, with something of contempt in his tone, "I will gain him five minutes more of life, if this glittering toy holds together so long."

Then he snatched from the wall an Asiatic javelin, all lacquered and ornamented with gold, cast one look at the others, as if to bid them farewell, and hurried from the room.

Spado, a mass of shaking flesh, and tumbled garments and festive ornaments strangely out of keeping with his attitude, cowered down against the wall, hiding his face in his hands: but Vitellius, with something akin even to gratification on his countenance, returned to the half-emptied cup, and raising it to his lips, deliberately finished his Falernian.

AT BAY.

It was not in Esca's nature to be within hearing of shrewd blows and yet abstain from taking part in the fray.

His recent sentiments had indeed undergone a change that would produce timely fruit; and neither the words of the preacher in the Esquiline, nor the example of Calchas, nor the sweet influence of Mariamne, had been without their effect. But it was ingrained in his very character to love the stir and tumult of a fight. From a boy his blood leaped and tingled at the clash of steel. His was the courage which is scarcely exercised in the tide of personal conflict, and must be proved rather in endurance than in action—so naturally does it force itself to the front when men are dealing blow for blow.

His youth, too, had been spent in warfare, and in that most ennobling of all warfare which defends home from the aggression of an invader. He had long ago learned to love danger for its own sake, and now he experienced besides a morbid desire to have his hand on the Tribune's throat, so he felt the point and tried the shaft of his javelin with a thrill of savage joy, while, guided by the sounds of combat, he hurried along the corridor to join the remnant of the faithful German Guard.

Not a score of them were left, and of these scarce one but bled from some grievous wound. Their white garments were stained with crimson, their gaudy golden armor was hacked and dented, their strength was nearly spent, and every hope of safety gone; but their courage was still unquenched, and as man after man went down, the survivors closed in and fought on, striking desperately with their faces to the foe.

The Tribune and his chosen band, supported by a numerous body of inferior gladiators, were pressing them sore. Placidus, an expert swordsman, and in no way wanting physical courage, was conspicuous in the front. Hippias alone seemed to vie with the Tribune in reckless daring, though Hirpinus, Eumolpus, Lutorius, and the others were all earning their wages with scrupulous fidelity, and bearing themselves according to custom, as if fighting were the one business of their lives.

When Esca reached the scene of conflict, the Tribune had just closed with a gigantic adversary. For a minute they reeled in the death grapple, then parted as suddenly as they met, the German falling backward with a groan, the Tribune's blade as he brandished it aloft dripping with blood to the very hilt. "Euge!" shouted Hippias, who was at his side, parrying at the same moment, with consummate address, a sweeping sword cut, dealt at him from the dead man's comrade. "That was prettily done, Tribune, and like an artist!"

Esca, catching sight of his enemy's hated face, dashed in with the bound of a tiger, and taking him unawares, delivered at him so fierce and rapid a thrust as would have settled accounts between them, had Placidus possessed no other means of defense than his own skillful swordsmanship; but the fencing master, whose eye seemed to take in all the combatants at once, cut through the curved shaft of the Briton's weapon with one turn of his short sword, and its head fell harmless on the floor. His hand was up for a deadly thrust when Esca found himself felled to the ground by some powerful fist, while a ponderous form holding him down with its whole weight, made it impossible for him to rise.

"Keep quiet, lad," whispered a friendly voice in his ear; "I was forced to strike hard to get thee down in time. Faith! the Master gives short warning with his thrusts. Here thou'rt safe, and here I'll take care thou shalt remain till the tide has rolled over us, and I can pass thee out unseen. Keep quiet! I tell thee, lest I have to strike thee senseless for thine own good."

In vain the Briton struggled to regain his feet; Hirpinus kept him down by main force. No sooner had the gladiator caught sight of his friend, than he resolved to save him from the fate which too surely threatened all who were found in the palace, and with characteristic promptitude used the only means at his disposal for the fulfillment of his object.

A moment's reflection satisfied Esca of his old comrade's good faith. Life is sweet, and with the hope of its preservation came back the thought of Mariamme. He lay still for a few minutes, and by that time the tide of fight had rolled on, and they were left alone.

Hirpinus rose first with a jovial laugh. "Why, you went down, man," said he, "like an ox at an altar. I would have held my hand a little—in faith I would—had there been time. Well, I must help thee up, I suppose, seeing that I put thee down. Take my advice, lad, get outside as quick as thou canst. Keep the first turning to the right of the great gate, stick to the darkest part of the gardens, and run for thy life!"

So speaking, the gladiator helped Esca to his feet, and pointed down the corridor, where the way was now clear. The Briton would have made one more effort to save the Emperor, but Hirpinus interposed his burly form, and finding his friend so refractory, half led, half pushed him to the door of the palace. Here he bade him farewell, looking wistfully out into the night, as though he would fain accompany him.

"I have little taste for the job here, and that's the truth," said he, in the tone of a man who has been unfairly deprived of some expected pleasure. "The Germans made a pretty good stand for a time, but I thought there were more of them, and that the fight would have lasted twice as long. Good luck go with thee, lad, I shall perhaps never see thee again. Well, well, it can't be helped. I have been bought and paid for, and must go back to my work."

So, while Esca, hopeless of doing any more good, went his way into the gardens, Hirpinus reëntered the palace to follow his comrades, and assist in the search for the Emperor.

He was somewhat surprised to hear loud shouts of laughter echoing from the end of the corridor. Hastening on to learn the cause of such strangely timed mirth, he came upon Rufus lying across the prostrate body of a German, and trying hard to stanch the blood that welled from a fatal gash inflicted by his dead enemy, ere he went down.

Hirpinus raised his friend's head, and knew it was all over.

"I have got it," said Rufus, in a faint voice; "my foot slipped and the clumsy barbarian lunged in over my guard. Farewell, old comrade! Bid the wife keep heart. There is a home for her at Picenum, and—the boys—keep them out of the Family. When you close with these Germans,—disengage—at half distance, and turn your wrist down with the—old—thrust, so as to——"

Weaker and weaker came the gladiator's last syllables, his head sank, his jaw dropped, and Hirpinus, turning for a farewell look at the comrade with whom he had trained, and toiled, and drunk, and fought, for half a score of years, dashed his hand angrily to his shaggy eyelashes, for he saw him through a mist of tears.

Another shout of laughter, louder still and nearer, roused him to action. Turning into the room whence it proceeded, he came upon a scene of combat, nearly as ludicrous as the last was pitiful.

Surrounded by a circle of gladiators, roaring out their applause and holding their sides with mirth, two most unwilling adversaries were pitted against each other. They seemed, indeed, very loath to come to close quarters, and stood face to face with excessive watchfulness and caution.

In searching for the Emperor, Placidus and his myrmidons had scoured several apartments without success. Finding the palace thus unoccupied, and now in their own hands, the men had commenced loading themselves with valuables, and prepared to decamp with their plunder, each to his home, as having fulfilled their engagement, and earned their reward. But the Tribune well knew that if Vitellius survived the night, his own head would be no longer safe on his shoulders, and that it was indispensable to find the Emperor at all hazards; so, gathering a handful of gladiators round him, persuading some and threatening others, he instituted a strict search in one apartment after another, leaving no hole nor corner untried, persuaded that Cæsar must be still inside the palace, and consequently within his grasp.

He entertained, nevertheless, a lurking mistrust of treachery, roused by the late appearance of Euchenor at supper, which was rather strengthened than destroyed by the Greek's unwillingness to engage in personal combat with the Germans. Whilst he was able to do so, the Tribune had kept a wary eye upon the pugilist, and had indeed prevented him more than once from slipping out of the conflict altogether. Now that the Germans were finally disposed of, and the palace in his power, he kept the Greek close at hand with less difficulty, jeering him, half in jest and half in earnest, on the great care he had taken of his own person in the fray.

Thus, with Euchenor at his side, followed by Hippas, and some half-dozen gladiators, the Tribune entered the room in which the Emperor had supped, and from which a door, concealed by a heavy curtain, led into a dark recess originally intended for a bath. At the foot of this curtain, half lying, half sitting, groveled an obese, unwieldy figure, clad in white, which moaned and shook and rocked itself to and fro, in a paroxysm of abject fear.

The Tribune leapt forward with a gleam of diabolical triumph in his eyes. The next instant his face fell, as the figure, looking up, presented the scared features of the bewildered Spado.

But even in his wrath and disappointment Placidus could indulge himself with a brutal jest.

"Euchenor," said he, "thou hast hardly been well blooded to-night. Drive thy sword through this carrion, and draw it out of our way."

The Greek was only averse to cruelty, when it involved personal danger. He rushed in willingly enough, his blade up, and his eyes glaring like a tiger's; but the action roused whatever was left of manhood in the victim, and Spado sprang to his feet with the desperate courage of one who has no escape left.

Close at his hand lay a Parthian bow, one of the many curiosities in arms that were scattered about the room, together with a sandalwood quiver of puny painted arrows.

"Their points are poisoned," he shouted; "and a touch is death!"

Then he drew the bow to its full compass, and glared about him like some hunted beast brought to bay.

Euchenor, checked in his spring, stood rigid as if turned to stone. His beautiful form indeed, motionless in that life-like attitude, would have been a fit study for one of his own country's sculptors; but the surrounding gladiators, influenced only by the ludicrous points of the situation, laughed till their sides shook, at the two cowards thus confronting each other.

"To him, Euchenor!" said they, with the voice and action by which a man encourages his dog at its prey. "To him, lad! Here's old Hirpinus come to back thee. He always voted thee a cur. Show him some of thy mettle now!"

Goaded by their taunts, Euchenor made a rapid feint, and crouched for another dash. Terrified and confused, the eunuch let the bowstring escape from his nerveless fingers, and the light gaudy arrow, grazing the Greek's arm and scarcely drawing blood, fell, as it seemed, harmless to the floor between his feet.

Again there was a loud shout of derision, for Euchenor, dropping his weapon, applied this trifling scratch to his mouth; ere the laugh subsided, however, the Greek's face contracted and turned pale. With a wild yell he sprang bolt upright, raising his arms above his head, and fell forward on his breast, dead.

The gladiators, leaping in, passed half a dozen swords through the eunuch's body, almost ere their comrade touched the floor.

Then Lutorius and Eumolpus, tearing down the curtain, disappeared in the dark recess behind. There was an exclamation of surprise, a cry for mercy, a scuffling of feet, the fall of some heavy piece of furniture, and the two emerged again, dragging between them, pale and gasping, a bloated and infirm old man.

"Cæsar is fled!" said he, looking wildly round. "You seek Cæsar?"

Then, perceiving the dark smile on the Tribune's face, and abandoning all hope of disguise, he folded his arms with a certain dignity that his coarse garments and disordered state could not wholly neutralize, and added:—

"I am Cæsar! Strike! since there is no mercy and no escape!"

The Tribune paused an instant and pondered. Already the dawn was stealing through the palace, and the dead upturned face of Spado looked gray and ghastly in the pale cold light. Master of the situation, he did but deliberate whether he should slay Cæsar with his own hand, thus bidding high for the gratitude of his successor, or whether, by delivering him over to an infuriated soldiery, who would surely massacre him on the spot, he should make his death appear an act of popular justice, in the furtherance of which he was himself a mere dutiful instrument.

A few moments' reflection on the character of Vespasian decided him to pursue the latter course. He turned to the gladiators, and bade them secure their prisoner.

Loud shouts, and the tramp of many thousand armed feet, announced that the disaffected legions were converging on the palace, and had already filled its courtyard with masses of disciplined men, ranged under their eagles in all the imposing precision and the glittering pomp of war. The increasing daylight showed their serried files, extending far beyond the gate.

over the spacious gardens of the palace, and the cold morning breeze unfurled a banner here and there, on which were already emblazoned the initials of the new Emperor, "Titus Flavius Vespasian Cæsar."

As Vitellius, with his hands bound, led between two gladiators, passed out of the gate which at midnight had been his own, one of these gaudy devices glittered in the rising sun before his eyes. Then his whole frame seemed to collapse, and his head sank upon his breast, for he knew that the bitterness of death had indeed come at last.

But it was no part of the Tribune's scheme that his victim's lineaments should escape observation. He put his own sword beneath the Emperor's chin, and forced him to hold his head up while the soldiers hooted and reviled, and ridiculed their former lord.

"Let them see thy face," said the Tribune, brutally. "Even now thou art still the most notorious man in Rome."

Obese in person, lame in gait, pale, bloated, disheveled, and a captive, there was yet a certain dignity about the fallen Emperor, while he drew himself up, and thus answered his enemy:—

"Thou hast eaten of my bread and drunk from my cup. I have loaded thee with riches and honors. Yesterday I was thine Emperor and thy host. To-day I am thy captive and thy victim. But here, in the jaws of death, I tell thee that not to have my life and mine empire back again, would I change places with Julius Placidus the Tribune!"

They were the last words he ever spoke, for while they paraded him along the Sacred Way, the legions gathered in and struck him down, and hewed him in pieces, casting the fragments of his body into the stream of Father Tiber, stealing calm and noiseless by the walls of Rome. And though the faithful Galeria collected them for decent interment, few cared to mourn the memory of Vitellius the glutton; for the good and temperate Vespasian reigned in his stead.

JOSEPHUS ON THE JEWISH WAR.

[FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS, Jewish statesman and historian, was the son of a priest by a descendant of the Asmonean princes, and was born at Jerusalem, 37 A.D. He was early a distinguished scholar and a leader of the Pharisees; was sent as delegate to Nero at twenty-six; was governor of Galilee when the last rising against the Roman government took place, and was captured at the siege of Jotapata; made terms for himself with the Romans, and accompanied their army at the siege of Jerusalem. He then lived at Rome till after 97 A.D. He wrote the "History of the Jewish War"; "Jewish Antiquities"; a pamphlet, "Against Apion," in defense of his countrymen; and his autobiography.]

THE SIEGE OF JOTAPATA.

JOTAPATA is almost all of it a precipice, having on all sides of it but one ravines immensely deep, so that those who try to look down find their sight fail them before it reaches the bottom. It is only to be got at on the north side, where the city is built on the mountain, as it ends obliquely at a plain. Josephus had surrounded this mountain with a wall when he fortified the city, that its summit might not be able to be seized upon by the enemies. The city is covered all round with other mountains, and is invisible till one comes just upon it. Such was the strong situation of Jotapata.

Vespasian, therefore, being put on his mettle by the natural strength of the place, as well as the bold defense of the Jews, resolved to prosecute the siege with vigor. To this end he called the commanders that were under him to a council of war, and consulted with them as to the assault. And when it was resolved to raise a bank against that part of the wall which was accessible, he sent his whole army abroad to collect materials. So when they had cut down all the trees near the city, and had got together a great heap of stones besides the wood they had cut down, some of them spread fascines over their works, to avoid the effects of the darts that were shot from above at them, under cover whereof they kept on forming their bank, and so were hurt little or nothing by the darts that were thrown upon them from the wall, while others pulled the neighboring hillocks to pieces, and perpetually brought them earth; so nobody was idle, as they were busy three sorts of ways. But the Jews cast great stones from the walls and all sorts of darts upon the fascines which protected the men, and their noise, though they did not reach them, was so terrible that it was some impediment to the workmen.

Vespasian then put into position all round the city the engines for throwing stones and darts (the number of which was in all a hundred and sixty), and bade the engineers shoot at those that were upon the wall. Then simultaneously the catapults hurled lances with a great noise, and stones of the weight of a talent were thrown by the engines for hurling stones, and fire and a vast multitude of arrows, which not only made the walls difficult of access to the Jews, but also reached the parts within the walls. For the mass of the Arabian archers, as well as all those that threw darts and slung stones, hurled their shot at the same time as the engines. However, the others did not lie still when they could not fight the Romans from the higher ground. For they then made sallies, like robbers, in bands, and tore away the fascines that covered the workmen, and struck them when they were thus unprotected; and when those workmen gave way, they shoveled away the earth that composed the bank, and burnt the woodwork of it and the fascines, till Vespasian perceived that the intervals between the works caused this damage, for these intervals gave the Jews opportunity to attack the Romans. So he united the fascines, and at the same time concentrated all his army close to them, which prevented these sallies of the Jews.

And when the bank was now raised, and brought very close to the battlements, Josephus thought it would be strange if he could make no counter contrivance for the city's preservation; so he got together his workmen, and ordered them to build the wall higher. And when they said that it was impossible to build while they were being pelted with so many darts, he invented the following shelter for them. He bade them fix stakes, and stretch over them the raw hides of oxen just killed, that these hides, by yielding and hollowing themselves when the stones were thrown at them, might receive them, and the other darts would slide off them, and fire that was thrown would be quenched by the moisture that was in them. And these he set over the workmen, and under them they went on with their work in safety, and raised the wall higher both by day and night, till it was twenty cubits higher. He also built frequent towers upon the wall, and fitted to it strong battlements. This greatly discouraged the Romans, who thought by now they would have already got inside the city, and they were at once dismayed at Josephus' contrivance and at the courage of the citizens.

And Vespasian was irritated at the great subtlety of this stratagem, and at the boldness of the men of Jotapata. For taking heart again upon the building of this wall, they made fresh sallies upon the Romans, and had every day conflicts with them in bands, together with all such contrivances as robbers make use of, as plundering all that came to hand, as also setting fire to all the Roman works; till Vespasian made his army leave off fighting them, and resolved to sit down before the city, and to starve it into a surrender, supposing that they would either be forced to petition him for mercy by want of provisions, or, if they should have the courage to hold out till the last extremity, that they would perish by famine: and he concluded he should conquer them the more easily in fighting, if he left them alone for a time, and then fell upon them when they were weakened by famine. But he gave orders that they should guard all the outlets from the city.

Now the besieged had plenty of corn and indeed of all other things within the city, but they wanted water, because there was no fountain in the city, the people there being supplied with rain water. But it is a rare thing in that country if ever to have rain in summer. And as the siege was at this season, they were in great distress for some contrivance to satisfy their thirst, and they chafed as if already entirely in want of water. For Josephus, seeing that the city abounded with other necessities, and that the men were of good courage, and wishing to protract the siege longer than the Romans expected, ordered their drink to be given them by measure. But they deemed this scanty distribution of water by measure a thing harder than the want of it; and their not being able to drink as much as they would stimulated still more their desire for drinking, and they were as much disheartened thereby as if they were come to the last degree of thirst. Nor were the Romans ignorant of the condition they were in; for where they stood opposite them above the wall, they could see them running together, and taking their water by measure, which made them throw their javelins there, the place being within their reach, and kill a great many of them.

And Vespasian hoped that their cisterns of water would in no long time be emptied, and that they would be forced to deliver up the city to him. But Josephus, being minded to frustrate his hope, commanded a great many to wet their clothes, and hang them out upon the battlements, till the entire wall was of a sudden all wet with the running down of the water. At this the Romans were discouraged and in consternation, seeing them able to throw away in sport so much water, when they supposed them not to have enough to drink. And the Roman general despaired of taking their city by famine, and even betook himself again to arms and force, which was what the Jews greatly desired. For as they despaired of safety for either themselves or their city, they preferred death in battle to death by hunger and thirst.

However, Josephus contrived another stratagem, besides the foregoing one, to get plenty of what they wanted. Through a certain ravine that was almost inaccessible, and so was neglected by the soldiers, Josephus sent out certain persons along the western parts of it, and by them sent letters to whom he pleased of the Jews that were outside the city, and procured from them in abundance whatever necessities they wanted in the city. He ordered them also to creep along generally when near the watch as they returned to the city, and to cover their backs with fleeces, that if any one should observe them by night, they might be believed to be dogs. This was done till the watch perceived their contrivance, and surrounded the ravine. . . .

[Josephus] with his bravest men made a sally, and dispersed the enemies' outposts, and ran as far as the Roman camp itself, and pulled the coverings of their tents upon their bank to pieces, and set fire to their works. And he never left off fighting in the same manner either the next day or the day after that, or for a considerable number of both days and nights.

Upon this Vespasian, as he saw the Romans distressed by these sallies (for they were ashamed to be put to flight by the Jews, and when at any time they made the Jews run away, their heavy armor would not let them pursue them far, and the Jews, when they had done any mischief, before they could be hurt themselves, still retired into the city), ordered his armed men to avoid their attacks, and not fight it out with men in desperation, for nothing was more courageous than despair, and their violence would be quenched when they saw they failed of their purposes, as fire was quenched when it wanted fuel. He said also that it became the Romans to gain their victories as cheaply as they could, since they did not fight for their existence, but only to enlarge their dominions. So he repelled the Jews most by the Arabian archers, and Syrian slingers and stone throwers. Nor was there any intermission of the numerous engines that hurled missiles. Now the Jews suffered greatly by these engines and gave way before them, but when they threw stones or javelins a great distance, then the Jews came to close quarters and pressed hard upon the Romans, and fought desperately, without sparing either soul or body, one detachment relieving another by turns when it was tired out.

Now Vespasian, looking upon himself as besieged in turn by these sallies of the Jews and the long time the siege lasted, as his banks were now not far from the walls, determined to apply his battering-ram. This is a vast beam of wood like the mast of a ship; its fore part is armed with a thick piece of iron at the head of it, which is so carved as to be like the head of a ram, whence its name is taken. This ram is slung in the air by its middle by ropes, and is hung, like the balance in a pair of scales, from another beam, and braced by strong beams on both sides of it. When this is pulled backward by a great number of men, and then with united force thrust forward by the same men, it batters walls with the iron part which is prominent. Nor is there any tower so strong, or walls so broad, if they resist its first battery, but are forced to yield to it at last. This was the experiment which the Roman general betook himself to, as he was eagerly bent upon taking the city, for he found lying in the field so long to be to his disadvantage, as the Jews would never be quiet. So the Romans brought their catapults and other engines for galling an enemy nearer to the walls, that they might reach such as were upon the walls who endeavored to frustrate their attempts, and threw stones and javelins at them, and the archers and slingers in like manner came closer to the wall. This brought matters to such a pass that none of the Jews durst man the walls, and then other Romans brought forward the battering-ram, that was cased with wickerwork all over, and in the upper part was covered by skins, and this both for the security of themselves and it. Now the wall was shaken at the very first stroke of this battering-ram, and a terrible clamor was raised by the people within the city, as if they were already taken.

Now when Josephus observed this ram frequently battering the same place, and saw that the wall would quickly be thrown down by it, he resolved to elude for a while the force of that contrivance. So he gave orders to fill sacks with chaff, and to let them down before the place where they saw the ram always battering, that the stroke might be turned aside, or that the place might feel less of the stroke in consequence of the yielding nature of the chaff. This very much delayed the Romans, because, let them remove their battering-ram to what part they pleased, those that were on the walls also removed their sacks, and placed them opposite the strokes it made, in-somuch that the wall was not at all injured in consequence of the resistance that the sacks made, till the Romans made a counter contrivance of long poles, and by tying scythes at their ends cut off the sacks. Now when the battering-ram thus became effective again, and the wall (having been but newly built) was giving way, Josephus and those about him had thenceforward recourse to fire to defend themselves. So they took whatever materials they had that were dry, and made a sally three ways, and set fire to the machines and wickerwork and banks of the Romans. And they could not well come to their assistance, being at once in consternation at the Jews' boldness, and being prevented by the flames from coming to their aid. For the materials being dry, and bitumen and pitch and brimstone also being among them, the fire spread quicker than one would think, and what cost the Romans a great deal of labor was in one hour consumed. . . .

Those who were with Josephus, though they fell one after another, being struck by the darts and stones which the engines threw at them, could not for all that be driven from the wall, but attacked with fire and iron weapons and stones those who were propelling the ram under the protection of the wickerwork: though they could do little or nothing, but fell themselves perpetually, because they were seen by those whom they could not see. For the light of their own fire shone about them, and made them as visible a mark to the enemy as they were in the daytime, while the enemy's engines could not be seen at a great distance, and so what was thrown at them could not well be avoided. For the force with which these engines threw stones and darts made them wound many at a time, and the whizzing stones that were cast by the engines carried away the battlements, and broke off the corners of the towers. Indeed, no body of men could be so strong as not to be overthrown to the last rank by the size of the stones. . . . The whirl of the instruments and the noise of the missiles was more terrible still. Dire too was the noise the dead bodies made when they were knocked down one after another on the walls, and dreadful was the clamor which the women raised within the city, which was echoed back by the cries of those outside who were being slain; and the whole space of ground whereon they fought ran with blood, and the wall might have been climbed up to over dead bodies. The mountains also contributed to increase the noise by their echoes, nor was there on that night anything wanting that could terrify either the ear or eye. And very many of those that fought nobly at Jotapata fell, and very many were wounded, and the morning watch was come ere the wall yielded to the machines employed against it, though it had been battered without intermission ; and those within covered their bodies with their armor and built up again what was thrown down of the wall, before those scaling machines were laid to the wall by which the Romans were to ascend into the city.

In the morning Vespasian mustered together his army to take the city, after a little rest from the fatigues of the night. And as he wished to draw off those that checked him from the places where the wall had been thrown down, he made the most courageous of his cavalry dismount from their horses, and placed them in three files opposite these breaches in the wall, defended by their armor on every side, and with poles in their hands, that so they might begin the ascent as soon as the machines for such ascent were laid to the wall. And behind these he placed the flower of his foot, and he ordered the rest of the horse to deploy from the walls over all the hills to prevent any from escaping out of the city when it should be taken ; and behind these he placed the archers all round, and commanded them to have their arrows ready to shoot. He gave the same commands to the slingers, and to those that managed the engines, and bade others bring ladders and apply them to those parts of the wall that were uninjured, that those who tried to hinder their ascent might leave off guarding the breaches in the wall, while the rest of the besieged might be overpowered by the darts cast at them, and yield an entrance into the city.

But Josephus, seeing through Vespasian's plan, set the old men and those that were tired out at the sound part of the wall, as not at all likely to be hurt there, but set the most efficient of his soldiers at the place where the wall was broken down, and in front of them all six men by themselves, among whom he himself shared in the post of greatest danger. He also gave orders that when the legions made a shout they should stop their ears, that they might not be dismayed at it, and also that, to avoid the shower of the enemies' darts, they should bend down on their knees, and cover themselves with their shields, and retreat a little backwards for a while, till the archers should have emptied their quivers ; and that, when the Romans should lay their machines for ascending the walls, they should leap out, and with their own instruments meet the enemy, and that every one should strive to do his best, not to defend his own city, as if it were possible to be preserved, but to revenge it, as if it was already destroyed ; and that they should try and picture before their eyes how their old men would be slain, and their children and wives killed immediately by the enemy ; and that they should beforehand spend all their fury on account of the calamities coming upon them, and pour it out on the perpetrators of them.

Thus did Josephus dispose of both his bodies of men. As for the useless part of the citizens, the women and children, when they saw their city surrounded by a triple line (for none of the former guards were withdrawn for battle), and their enemies with swords in their hands at the breaches in the wall, as also the hilly country above them shining with arms, and the darts ready and poised in the hands of the Arabian archers, they made a final wail at their capture, as if their ruin was not only imminent, but had actually come upon them already. But Josephus ordered the women to be shut up in their houses, lest they should unnerve the courage of the men by pity, and commanded them to hold their peace, and threatened them if they did not, and went himself to the breach, where his position was allotted. As to those who brought up ladders to the other places, he took no notice of them, but earnestly waited for the expected shower of arrows.

And now the trumpeters of all the Roman legions sounded together, and the army raised a terrible shout, and as a shower of darts were hurled at a preconcerted signal, the air was darkened by them. But Josephus' men remembered the orders he had given them : they stopped their ears at the shouts, and protected their bodies against the darts ; and as for the scaling engines that were laid to the wall, the Jews sallied out at them, before those that should have used them were got upon them. And now, on the ascending of the soldiers, there was a great hand-to-hand fight, and much valor both of hands and soul was exhibited, while the Jews earnestly endeavored, in the extreme danger they were in, not to show less courage than those who, without being in danger, fought so stoutly against them, nor did they leave struggling with the Romans till they either fell down dead themselves, or killed their antagonists. But as the Jews grew weary with defending themselves continually, and had not enough men to relieve them, so on the side of the Romans fresh men still succeeded those that were tired, and still new men quickly got upon the scaling engines in the room of those that were thrust down, encouraging one another, and joining side to side, and protecting themselves with their shields over their heads, so that they became an invincible body, and as they pushed back the Jews with their whole line, as though they were but one body, they began already to get upon the wall.

Then did Josephus in this utmost distress take for his counselor necessity (which is very clever in invention when it is sharpened by despair), and gave orders to pour scalding oil upon those whose shields protected them. Whereupon they soon got it ready, for many brought it and in great quantities, and poured it on all sides upon the Romans, and threw down upon them the vessels as they were still hissing from the heat of the fire. This so burnt the Romans, that it dispersed their compact body, who now tumbled down from the wall in dreadful pain, for the oil easily ran down their whole bodies from head to foot under their full armor, and fed upon their flesh like fire, its fat and unctuous nature rendering it soon heated and slowly cooled. And as the men were incumbered with their helmets and breastplates, they could in no way get free from this burning, and could only leap and roll about in pain, as they fell off their gangways. And as they thus were beaten back, and retired to their own party, who still pressed them forward, they became an easy prey to those that wounded them from behind.

However, in this ill success of the Romans, their courage did not fail them; nor did the Jews want prudence to oppose them. For the Romans, although they saw their own men thrown down and in a miserable condition, yet were they vehemently bent against those that poured the oil upon them: while every one reproached the man before him as a coward, and one that hindered him from exerting himself; and while the Jews made use of another stratagem to prevent their ascent and poured boiling fenugreek upon the boards, in order to make them slip and fall down. By which means neither could those that were coming up, nor those that were going down, stand on their feet. But some of them fell backward upon the machines on which they ascended, and were trodden upon,

Many of them fell down upon the bank they had raised ; and when they had fallen upon it were slain by the Jews. For when the Romans could not keep their feet, the Jews, being freed from fighting hand to hand, had leisure to throw their darts at them. So the general called off those soldiers in the evening that had suffered so sorely: of whom the number of the slain was not a few ; while that of the wounded was still greater. But of the people of Jotapata no more than six men were killed ; although more than three hundred were carried off wounded.

Hereupon Vespasian comforted his army upon occasion of what happened. And as he found them angry indeed, but rather wanting somewhat to do than any further exhortations, he gave orders to raise the bank still higher, and to erect three towers each fifty feet high : and that they should cover them with plates of iron on every side, that they might be both firm by their weight, and not easily liable to be set on fire. These towers he set upon the banks, and placed upon them such as could shoot darts and arrows, with the lighter engines for throwing stones and darts also : and besides these he set upon them the stoutest men among the slingers, who, not being visible by reason of the height they stood upon and the battlement that protected them, might throw their weapons at those that were upon the wall and were easily seen by them. Hereupon the Jews, not being easily able to escape those darts that were thrown down upon their heads, nor to avenge themselves on those whom they could not see, and perceiving that the height of the towers was so great that a dart which they threw with their hand could hardly reach it, and that the iron plates about them made it very hard to come at them by fire, left the walls and sallied out of the city, and fell upon those that shot at them. And thus did the people of Jotapata resist the Romans ; while a great number of them were every day killed, without their being able to retort the evil upon their enemies. Nor could they keep them out of the city without danger to themselves. . . .

But the people of Jotapata still held out manfully, and bore up under their miseries beyond all that could be hoped for. On the forty-seventh day of the siege the banks cast up by the Romans were become higher than the wall. On which day a certain deserter went to Vespasian, and told him, how few were left in the city, and how weak they were, and that they had been so worn out with perpetual watching, and as perpetual fighting, that they could not now oppose any force that came against them, and that they might be taken by stratagem if any one would attack them : for that about the last watch of the night, when they thought they might have some rest from the hardships they were under, and when a morning sleep used to come upon them, as they were thoroughly weary, he said the watch used to fall asleep. Accordingly his advice was, that they should make their attack at that hour. But Vespasian had a suspicion about this deserter ; as knowing how faithful the Jews were to one another, and how much they despised any punishments that could be inflicted on them. He also knew that one of the people of Jotapata had undergone all sorts of torments ; and though they made him pass through a fiery trial of his enemies in his examination, yet would he inform them nothing of the affairs within the city ; and as he was crucified, smiled at them. However, the probability there was in the relation itself partly confirmed the truth of what the deserter told them ; and they thought he might probably speak truth. However, Vespasian thought they should be no great sufferers if the report were false. So he commanded them to keep the man in custody ; and prepared the army for taking the city.

According to this resolution, they marched without noise, at the hour that had been told them, to the wall. And it was Titus himself that first got upon it, with one of his tribunes, Domitius Sabinus, and a few of the fifteenth legion along with him. So they cut the throats of the watch, and entered the city very quietly. After these came Cerealis the tribune, and Placidus, and led on those that were under them. Now when the citadel was taken, and the enemy were in the very midst of the city, and when it was already day, yet the capture of the city was not known by those that held it. For a great many of them were fast asleep ; and a great mist which then by chance fell upon the city, hindered those that got up from distinctly seeing the case they were in, till the whole Roman army was gotten in, and they were raised up only to find the miseries they were under ; and as they were slaying they perceived the city was taken. And for the Romans, they so well remembered what they had suffered during the siege, that they neither spared nor pitied any ; but drove the people down the precipice from the citadel, and slew them as they drove them down. At which time the difficulties of the place hindered those that were still able to fight from defending themselves; for as they were distressed in the narrow streets, and could not keep their feet sure along the precipice, they were overpowered with the crowd of those that came fighting them down from the citadel. This incited a great many, even of those chosen men that were about Josephus, to kill themselves with their own hands. For when they saw that they could kill none of the Romans, they resolved to prevent being killed by the Romans; and got together in great numbers in the utmost parts of the city, and killed themselves.

However, such of the watch as at the first perceived they were taken, and ran away as fast as they could, went up into one of the towers on the north side of the city, and for a while defended themselves there. But as they were encompassed with a multitude of enemies, they tried to use their right hands when it was too late; and at length they cheerfully offered their necks to be cut off by those that stood over them. And the Romans might have boasted that the conclusion of that siege was without blood on their side, if there had not been a centurion, Antonius, who was slain at the taking of the city. His death was occasioned by the following treachery. There was one of those that were fled into the caverns, which were a great number, who desired that this Antonius would give him his hand for his security, and would assure him that he would preserve him, and give him his assistance in getting up out of the cavern. Accordingly, he incautiously reached him his right hand; when the other man prevented him, and stabbed him under his loins with a spear, and killed him instantly.

On this day it was that the Romans slew all the multitude that appeared openly. But on the following days they searched the hiding places, and fell upon those that were under ground, and in the caverns. And went thus through every age, excepting the infants, and the women; and of these there were gathered together as captives twelve hundred. And as for those that were slain at the taking of the city, and in the former fights, they were numbered to be forty thousand. So Vespasian gave order that the city should be entirely demolished, and all the fortifications burnt down. And thus was Jotapata taken, in the thirteenth year of the reign of Nero, on the first day of the month Panemus or Tamuz (A.D. 67).

THE GLORIES OF DOMITIAN'S REIGN.

By JUVENAL.

(The Fourth Satire : Translation of William Gifford.)

[DECIMUS JUNIUS JUVENALIS, the most powerful satirical poet of the world, was probably born about A.D. 50, under Claudius, and died at above eighty, under Hadrian. He was a rhetorician and lawyer, and poured out in his later years, when he could do so in safety after Domitian's death in A.D. 96, the fury which the shameless social corruption and political profligacy and barbarity of the times excited in him. The graphic incidents of his life are few and very uncertain : he seems to have been of provincial birth, of the middle class, and a struggling professional man in Rome for many years.]

AGAIN Crispinus comes ! and yet again,
And oft, shall he be summoned to sustain
His dreadful part : — the monster of the times,
Without ONE virtue to redeem his crimes !
Diseased, emaciate, weak in all but lust,
And whom the widow's sweets alone disgust.
Avails it, then, in what long colonnades
He tires his mules ? through what extensive glades
His chair is borne ? what vast estates he buys,
What splendid domes that round the Forum rise ?
Ah, no ! — Peace visits not the guilty mind,
Least his, who incest to adultery joined,
And stained thy priestess, Vesta ; — whom, dire fate !
The long dark night and living tomb await.

Turn we to slighter vices : — yet had these,
In others, Seius, Titius, whom you please,
The Censor roused ; for what the good would shame,
Becomes Crispinus, and is honest fame.
But when the actor's person far exceeds,
In native loathsomeness, his loathsom'st deeds,
Say, what can satire ? For a fish that weighed
Six pounds, six thousand sesterces he paid !
As those report, who catch, with greedy ear,
And magnify the mighty things they hear.
Had this expense been meant, with well-timed skill,
To gull some childless dotard of a Will ;
Or bribe some rich and fashionable fair,
Who flaunts it in a close, wide-windowed chair ;
'Twere worth our praise : — but no such plot was here.
'Twas for HIMSELF he bought a treat so dear !
This, all past gluttony from shame redeems,
And even Apicius poor and frugal seems.

What! You, Crispinus, brought to Rome, erewhile,
 Lapt in the rushes of your native Nile,
 Buy scales, at such a price! you might, I guess,
 Have bought the fisherman himself for less;
 Bought, in some countries, manors at this rate,
 And, in Apulia, an immense estate!

How gorged the emperor, when so dear a fish,
 Yet, of his cheapest meals, the cheapest dish,
 Was guttled down by this impurpled lord,
 Chief knight, chief parasite, at Cæsar's board,
 Whom Memphis heard so late, with ceaseless yell,
 Clamoring through all her streets — "Ho! shads to sell!"

Pierian MAIDS, begin: — but, quit your lyres,
 The fact I bring no lofty chord requires:
 Relate it, then, and in the simplest strain,
 Nor let the poet style you MAIDS, in vain.

When the last Flavius, drunk with fury, tore
 The prostrate world, which bled at every pore,
 And Rome beheld, in body as in mind,
 A baldpate Nero rise, to curse mankind;
 It chanced that, where the fane of Venus stands,
 Reared on Ancona's coast by Grecian hands,
 A turbot, wandering from the Illyrian main,
 Fill'd the wide bosom of the bursting seine,
 Monsters so bulky, from its frozen stream,
 Mæotis renders to the solar beam,
 And pours them, fat with a whole winter's ease,
 Through the bleak Euxine, into warmer seas.

The mighty draught the astonished boatman eyes,
 And to the Pontiff's table dooms his prize:
 For who would dare to sell it? who to buy?
 When the coast swarmed with many a practised spy,
 Mud-rakers, prompt to swear the fish had fled
 From Cæsar's ponds, ingrate! where long it fed,
 And thus recaptured, claimed to be restored
 To the dominion of its ancient lord!
 Nay, if Palphurius may our credit gain,
 Whatever rare or precious swims the main,
 Is forfeit to the crown, and you may seize
 The obnoxious dainty, when and where you please.
 This point allowed, our wary boatman chose
 To give — what, else, he had not failed to lose.

Now were the dogstar's sickly fervors o'er,
 Earth, pinched with cold, her frozen livery wore;

The old began their quartan fits to fear,
And wintry blasts deformed the beauteous year,
And kept the turbot sweet : yet on he flew,
As if the sultry South corruption blew. —
And now the lake, and now the hill he gains,
Where Alba, though in ruins, still maintains
The Trojan fire, which, but for her, were lost,
And worships Vesta, though with less of cost.

The wondering crowd, that gathered to survey
The enormous fish, and barred the fisher's way,
Satiated, at length retires ; the gates unfold ! —
Murmuring, the excluded senators behold
The envied dainty enter : — On the man
To great Atrides pressed, and thus began.

“ This, for a private table far too great,
Accept, and sumptuously your Genius treat :
Haste to unload your stomach, and devour
A turbot, destined to this happy hour.
I sought him not ; — he marked the toils I set,
And rushed, a willing victim, to my net.”

Was flattery e'er so rank ! yet he grows vain,
And his crest rises at the fulsome strain.
When, to divine, a mortal power we raise,
He looks for no hyperboles in praise.

But when was joy unmixed ? no pot is found,
Capacious of the turbot's ample round :
In this distress, he calls the chiefs of state,
At once the objects of his scorn and hate,
In whose pale cheeks distrust and doubt appear,
And all a tyrant's friendship breeds of fear.

Scarce was the loud Liburnian heard to say,
“ He sits,” ere Pegasus was on his way ;
Yes : — the new bailiff of the affrighted town
(For what were prefects more ?) had snatched his gown,
And rushed to council : from the ivory chair,
He dealt out justice with no common care ;
But yielded oft to those licentious times,
And where he could not punish, winked at crimes.

Then old, facetious Crispus tript along,
Of gentle manners, and persuasive tongue.
None fitter to advise the lord of all,
Had that pernicious pest, whom thus we call,
Allowed a friend to soothe his savage mood,
And give him counsel, wise at once and good.

But who shall dare this liberty to take,
When, every word you hazard, life's at stake?
Though but of stormy summers, showery springs —
For tyrants' ears, alas! are ticklish things.
So did the good old man his tongue restrain;
Nor strove to stem the torrent's force in vain.
Not one of those, who, by no fears deterred,
Spoke the free soul, and truth to life preferred.
He temporized — thus fourscore summers fled,
Even in that court, securely, o'er his head.

Next him, appeared Acilius hurrying on,
Of equal age, — and followed by his son;
Who fell, unjustly fell, in early years,
A victim to the tyrant's jealous fears:
But long ere this were hoary hairs become
A prodigy, among the great, at Rome;
Hence, had I rather owe my humble birth,
Frail brother of the giant brood, to earth.
Poor youth! in vain the ancient sleight you try;
In vain, with frantic air, and ardent eye,
Fling every robe aside, and battle wage
With bears and lions, on the Alban stage.
All see the trick: and, spite of Brutus' skill,
There are who count him but a driveler still;
Since, in his days, it cost no mighty pains
To outwit a prince, with much more beard than brains.

Rubrius, though not, like these, of noble race,
Followed with equal terror in his face;
And, laboring with a crime too foul to name,
More, than the pathic satirist, lost to shame.

Montanus' belly next, and next appeared
The legs, on which that monstrous pile was reared.

Crispinus followed, daubed with more perfume,
Thus early! than two funerals consume.
Then bloodier Pompey, practiced to betray,
And hesitate the noblest lives away.

Then Fuscus, who in studious pomp at home,
Planned future triumphs for the Arms of Rome.
Blind to the event! those arms, a different fate,
Inglorious wounds, and Dacian vultures, wait.

Last, sly Veiento with Catullus came,
Deadly Catullus, who, at beauty's name
Took fire, although unseen: a wretch, whose crimes
Struck with amaze even those prodigious times.

A base, blind parasite, a murderous lord,
 From the bridge-end raised to the council board:
 Yet fitter still to dog the traveler's heels,
 And whine for alms to the descending wheels!
 None dwelt so largely on the turbot's size,
 Or raised with such applause his wondering eyes;
 But to the left (O, treacherous want of sight)
 He poured his praise; — the fish was on the right!
 Thus would he at the fencers' matches sit,
 And shout with rapture, at some fancied hit;
 And thus applaud the stage machinery, where
 The youths were rapt aloft, and lost in air.

Nor fell Veiento short: — as if possess
 With all Bellona's rage, his laboring breast
 Burst forth in prophecy; "I see, I see
 The omens of some glorious victory!
 Some powerful monarch captured! — lo, he rears,
 Horrent on every side, his pointed spears!
 Arviragus hurled from the British car:
 The fish is foreign, foreign is the war."

Proceed, great seer, and what remains untold,
 The turbot's age and country, next unfold;
 So shall your lord his fortunes better know,
 And where the conquest waits and who the foe.

The emperor now the important question put,
 "How say ye, Fathers, SHALL THE FISH BE CUT?"
 "O, far be that disgrace," Montanus cries;
 "No, let a pot be formed, of amplest size,
 Within whose slender sides the fish, dread sire,
 May spread his vast circumference entire!
 Bring, bring the tempered clay, and let it feel
 The quick gyrations of the plastic wheel: —
 But, Cæsar, thus forewarned, make no campaign,
 Unless your potters follow in your train!"

Montanus ended; all approved the plan,
 And all, the speech, so worthy of the man!
 Versed in the old court luxury, he knew
 The feasts of Nero, and his midnight crew;
 Where oft, when potent draughts had fired the brain,
 The jaded taste was spurred to gorge again. —
 And, in my time, none understood so well
 The science of good eating: he could tell,
 At the first relish, if his oysters fed
 On the Rutupian, or the Lucrine bed;

And from a crab or lobster's color, name
The country, nay, the district, whence it came.

Here closed the solemn farce. The Fathers rise,
And each, submissive, from the presence hies :—
Pale, trembling wretches, whom the chief, in sport,
Had dragged, astonished, to the Alban court ;
As if the stern Sicambri were in arms,
Or the fierce Catti threatened new alarms ;
As if ill news by flying posts had come,
And gathering nations sought the fall of Rome !

O ! that such scenes (disgraceful at the most)
Had all those years of cruelty engrost,
Through which his rage pursued the great and good,
Unchecked, while vengeance slumbered o'er their blood !
And yet he fell !—for when he changed his game,
And first grew dreadful to the vulgar name,
They seized the murderer, drenched with Lamian gore,
And hurled him, headlong, to the infernal shore !

THE LIBYAN DRAGON.

By SILIUS ITALICUS.

[SILIUS ITALICUS, a Roman orator and poet, was born A.D. 25, died A.D. 101. He was a noted advocate, and a politician who perhaps secured his own head under Nero by acting as his tool in the mock trials that slew many eminent citizens. In the year of Nero's death (A.D. 69) he was consul. Says Pliny the Younger : "He conducted himself wisely and courteously as the friend of the luxurious and cruel Vitellius ; he won repute by his proconsulship of Asia, and obliterated by the praiseworthy use he made of his leisure the stain he had incurred during his active exertions in former days." He then retired to private life. He was a passionate devotee of art and literature, a patron and collector ; he bought the estates, at Tusculum and Naples, of Horace and Virgil, whom he worshiped, and passed his later years near Virgil's tomb. He was a Stoic, and, true to his creed, cheerfully starved himself to death when attacked by an incurable disease. Epictetus considered him the most philosophic spirit of his time. His surviving work is the epic poem "Punica," treating of the Second Punic War in Virgil's manner.]

WHERE Bragada's slow river scarce contains
Its shrinking current, midst the Libyan plains,—
And yet no stream more daringly expands
Its vent'rous waters o'er those burning sands,—
There, pleased, we drink, or, by the river's edge,
Sit, tired, but happy, in the cooling sedge.

Fast by the bank, a dark'ning grove defies
 The sultry warfare of those burning skies,
 A wood of gloomy shadow, and of hue.
 As if by Styx's hellish waves it grew,
 From the deep arches of those antique trees,
 Borne on the flagging pinions of the breeze,
 A horrid odor strikes, and through the screen
 Of blackened trees a cave is darkly seen,
 With downward windings struggling deep, to shun
 The piercing glances of the tyrant sun.
 Here, horror to relate! a monster fell,
 Born in the spite of Earth, was found to dwell;
 Nor eye hath witnessed nor tradition told
 Of such a serpent, coiled in such a fold;
 There, dark, in many a loathsome knot he lay,
 Sullyng the splendor of the outer day.
 Around the shore are scattered fragments seen,
 That tell where many a bloody feast hath been, —
 The lion hath been there his thirst to slake;
 His bones beneath the whitening sunbeams bake.
 The timid antelope, whom quenchless heat
 Hath driv'n to venture near the dark retreat,
 His slender limbs are crushed. — The venomous breath
 Brings down the vulture, hovering near — to death.
 Gorged with repast, and tired with slaughter, then
 Sluggish he lies, and heaves within his den,
 And sleeps a deathlike sleep; and, should he feel
 The waking thirst of such a murd'rous meal,
 Mound-like he lies across the river's course,
 And dams the current with resistless force,
 Through the vext stream his restless folds are spread,
 The further bank supports his scaly head.

Thoughtless of such a danger, we explore —
 My friends and I — the melancholy shore.
 We breathe — we know not why — a passing prayer,
 To ev'ry unknown Power presiding there.
 And fearful, though unconscious of the cause,
 We enter on the cavern's yawning jaws.
 Lo! from its entrails a Tartarian breath
 Is volumed forth — and in the gale is death;
 It rushes forth more angry than the East,
 When all his caverned fury is released;
 And, then, methought I heard a deeper sound,
 With less of earth, but rising through the ground —
 VOL. VI. — K

The rock on which we trod, I felt to move,
And darker shadows swept along the grove.

Vast as those Titan giants erst who strove,
Sons of the earth, against the rule of Jove,
Vaster than that which erst Alcides strake,
Amid the flags of the Lernæan lake,
The ringed monster roused him from his lair,
And breathed a sickness on the tainted air.
We fly; and panting with our headlong fear,
Strive, in faint shouts, to make our comrades hear,
In vain — tremendous hissings load the wind,
And we can feel the monster's breath behind.
Havens, whom dread almost of sight bereaves,
Clings to a tree, and hides amid the leaves;
When lo! mine eyes beheld the serpent clasp
The black and quivering oak, with spiral grasp,
And, in gigantic circles winding round,
Tear from its roots and level with the ground,
— A mossy tower — I saw it bend and break —
I heard the final crash and smothered shriek.
Aquinus, just as hapless, tried the wave,
Nor found his differing choice avail to save;
Seized in the middle of the stream, his blood
Tinged with a deeper stain, that faithless flood —
Half drowned — half crushed — it hath no life for him —
The monster hath entombed him, limb by limb.
Alone I scaped — and told, as wretches tell,
Saved from some horrid chance, what hap befell.
Then sudden fury seized our leader's breast,
To wreak full vengeance on this hateful pest;
In rage he draws his blade, and with him go,
Both horse and foot, to see the reptile foe;
There the speared horsemen march — the bowmen here —
The huge Balista moves far in the rear,
And turrets, wheeled t' approach a hostile walls —
Prepared to stand, whatever may befall.
Hard hoofs, and ceaseless shoutings shake the ground,
Till the wide cave reëchoes with the sound;
But all give back, and all are silent when
The roused snake rolls slowly from his den.
He eyes us — and his eyes shoot keener fires;
Louder and louder his hot breath expires —
High in the air his restless head he's flung,
And seems to lick it with protruded tongue.

But when the startling trumpets ring, at length
 He twists him sudden, in convulsive strength,
 As suddenly the massive folds subside,
 And, at full length, and with the lightnings' glide
 In all his ire, he rushes on the line —
 Then wheel the horses round, the shouts decline —
 The broken cohorts mix — and midst the press,
 Is the fell snake in all his ghastliness.
 Above the tottering standards — crossing spears —
 Writhing, with sudden leap, his crest he rears,
 And down he comes resistless, dire as fate,
 And man and horse are crushed beneath the weight.
 Then, on a thought, he flies, as in disdain,
 And with strange swiftness bounds along the plain,
 Then nears the troops again, and, from his track,
 Standard, and steed, and phalanx, all give back.
 Our leader foams, and cries, "What, will ye fly
 A serpent's pow'r, ye youth of Italy?
 Is Rome's best chivalry o'ermatched to wake
 And scotch the fury of one Libyan snake?
 If all your strength has found a sudden death,
 Struck with the blast of that pestiferous breath;
 Or, if the reptile's eye your valor awes —
 Or ye wax faint to see his bloody jaws,
 Alone your general ventures, through the storm,
 Of sand and stench, on this portentous worm." —

He said, nor paused, but, with determined force,
 Drove at the twisting snake his shrinking horse;
 And, straining to the task his sinews, sped
 A whizzing javelin at the monster's head.
 Deep in that hideous head, the weapon stood,
 And a loud shout proclaimed the following blood.
 The maddened monster spins in rage to feel
 The pang and shock of the encumb'ring steel;
 And blindly dashes, with tremendous force,
 In dizzy circles, round the frightened horse;
 Nor joy, nor peril Regulus confounds,
 Firm he eludes the foe's successive bounds,
 And, with an apt and strongly stiffened rein,
 Makes many a turn, elusive, on the plain —
 To Marus, then, when greater were afraid,
 'Twas granted to afford his leader aid.
 This hand, in all that warlike host, was found
 The readiest to inflict a second wound;

Deep in that body, ringed with many a joint,
 I plunged, in desperate strength, my steely point,
 Just as the terrors of that forked tongue
 Above the charger's fault'ring haunches hung,
 And the lost rider deemed his fate was near,
 And felt the poison hissing in his ear.
 Struck with fresh pain, and stopped in his intent,
 On me the reptile's open mouth is bent, —
 But now the cohort launches dart on dart,
 Barb follows barb, and smart succeeds to smart.
 Still with new pangs the baffled monster burns,
 Convulsive writhes, and threatens all, by turns,
 Till the discharged Balista maims, at length,
 And breaks th' array of his enormous strength;
 Then the crushed spine refuses to supply
 The vengeance threatened by the burning eye,
 And the raised head twists in increasing pain,
 And the tired mouth breathes hissings, now in vain.

Then were the reptile's volumed entrails riven
 By the Phalarica, — and strongly driven,
 By the unerring archer, venturing nigh,
 A shaft is buried deep in either eye.
 With many a gasp the eddying air he draws,
 And belches back envenomed from his jaws;
 In vain, — with swords and heavy poles they wound
 His writhing tail, and pin it to the ground,
 Till the huge beam from the vast engine sped
 With final bruise, quells the still threat'ning head;
 Then all his length he stretches on the shore, —
 And slowly gasps — and dying — moves no more.
 — But from the mournful River there arose
 A sound, as of the voice of many woes, —
 Along the waves it came, that grove beside,
 And there — within that darksome cavern — died;
 Ah! too prophetic of our future doom,
 Of sad mischances and of ills to come!
 For when upon those sullen waters crept
 That wail of death, and all their Naiads wept,
 'Twas no vain augury — as thou canst tell,
 O son of Regulus — alas! too well.

EPIGRAMS OF MARTIAL.

(Translations by various hands ; in part made for this work.)

[MARCUS VALERIUS MARTIALIS, one of the earliest professional men of letters in Rome, — that is, literary workers with no support but their pens, — was born at Bilbilis in Spain, of native blood, A.D. 40 or 41 ; went to Rome before A.D. 65 under Nero, and remained there till A.D. 98, having seen Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva, and Trajan succeed one another. Titus and Domitian patronized him most, making him a knight and tribune, but giving him little material help. In return Martial heaped laudations on Domitian, at a time when he was perpetrating year-long massacres of the best citizens in frenzied panic ; but after the tyrant was himself slaughtered, heaped equally unmeasured execrations on his memory. Nerva and Trajan, however, detested the obscenity of much of his work, and would do nothing for him. In 98 he returned to his native town, married a wealthy lady, and remained three years ; but returned to Rome in 101, and died probably the next year. He early became celebrated all over the Roman world for his brief but brilliant skits on life and society, and continued a literary Bohemian, acquainted with all the leading lights of his day, living mainly on the doles of rich patrons, and evidently from hand to mouth. His “ Epigrams ” are invaluable as portraits, though largely sordid and often dirty portraits, of one of the worst ages in human history.]

A CENSOR OUT OF PLACE.

SINCE you knew how licentious are gay Flora's rites,
The lewd games and the boisterous crowd she invites,
Why, Cato the Sour, did you come to the rout ?
Did you enter to just turn around and go out ?

THE AUTHOR TO HIS BOOK.

In the booksellers' windows you long to be shown,
Little book, though my desk be entirely your own.
You know not our critics have nice judging eyes,
And, believe me, the town is prodigiously wise.
Men are loud both their censure and scorn to disclose ;
Young and old, even children, all turn up their nose.
While you fondly expect on Fame's pinions to rise,
'Tis a blanket will toss you, my book, to the skies.
But you, that your master may cease to condemn,
Nor your sallies be quenched any more by his phlegm,
Are ambitious to leave me, and largely to roam.
Go, fly ; — but you might have been safer at home.

APOLOGY TO DOMITIAN.

Cæsar, whene'er you take in hand my books,
Awe of the world ! lay by your sterner looks.

On your own triumphs have buffooneries broke,
 Nor need a captain shame to take a joke.
 With the same brow, I pray, look on my verse,
 As Thymeles's leg-dance or Latinus' farce.
 May harmless jests no censorship endure:
 Free are my verses, but my life is pure.

THE EMPEROE'S REPLY.

I give you sea-fights, you give me a skit:
 No doubt you'd have me float both you and it.

THE HARDER PART.

That you, like Thræsea or like Cato great,
 Pursue their maxims but decline their fate,
 Nor rashly point the dagger to your heart, —
 More to my wish you act a Roman's part.
 I like not him who fame by death retrieves:
 Give me the man who merits praise, and lives.

TO AN AMBITIOUS DANDY.

You wish, Cotta, to be at once pretty and great;
 But a pretty man, Cotta, a small man we rate.

ONLY THE PRESENT OUR OWN.

Thou, whom (if faith or honor recommends
 A friend) I rank amongst my dearest friends,
 Remember, you are now almost threescore;
 Few days of life remain, if any more.
 Defer not, what no future time insures:
 And only what is past, esteem that yours.
 Successive cares and trouble for you stay;
 Pleasure not so; it nimbly fleets away.
 Then seize it fast; embrace it ere it flies;
 In the embrace it vanishes and dies.
 "I'll live to-morrow," will a wise man say?
 To-morrow is too late, then live to-day.

PHILIP SOBER REPUDIATES PHILIP DRUNK.

Last night I had invited you to sup with me to-day —
 After some fifty cups, no doubt, we each had stowed away.
 You took me at my drunken word, and thought your fortune made;
 The precedent is dangerous, and makes me sore afraid:
 I hate, Procillus, drinking with rememberers by trade.

ANOTHER "DR. FELL." (SEE CATULLUS.)

I do not love thee, Sabidius, nor can I say why; I can only say this, I do not love thee.

The following lines, in imitation of this epigram, or of Catullus, were made by some Oxford wit on Dr. John Fell, Bishop of Oxford, who died in 1686:—

I do not love thee, Doctor Fell;
The reason why I cannot tell.
But this I'm sure I know full well,
I do not love thee, Doctor Fell.

OSTENTATIOUS SORROW.

Gellia ne'er mourns her father's loss,
When no one's by to see,
But yet her soon commanded tears
Flow in society.
To weep for praise is but a feignèd moan:
He grieves most truly, that does grieve alone.

ON THE BROTHERS LUCANUS AND TULLUS.

Fraternal love in such strong currents runs,
That, were your fate like that of Leda's sons,
This were the single, but the generous, strife,
Which for the other first should yield his life:
He first would cry, who first should breath resign,
"Live thou, dear brother, both thy days and mine."

A LIVING IDEAL.

If there be any man fit to be numbered among one's few choice friends, a man such as the honesty of past times and ancient renown would readily acknowledge; if any man thoroughly imbued with the accomplishments of the Athenian and Latin Minervas, and exemplary for true integrity; if there be any man who cherishes what is right, and admires what is honorable, and asks nothing of the gods but what all may hear; if there be any man sustained by the strength of a great mind,—may I die if that man is not Decianus.

ON ENVIOUS MEN.

I.

You who make wry faces at every other's good,
Reading even my verses with acid in your blood,

Gnawed by jealous misery, envy whom you may —
 Nobody will envy you, whatever you display.

II.

I ne'er begged riches from the gods before,
 Well pleased with what I had, and to be poor :
 But, want, now get thee hence : Heaven grant me store
 Whence comes this sudden new desire of self ?
 I'd fain see envious Zoilus hang himself.

A PETITION FOR FRIENDSHIP.

If yet one corner in thy breast
 Remains, good Fuscus, unpossessed
 (For many a friend, I know, is thine),
 Give me to boast that corner mine.
 Nor thou the honored place I sue
 Refuse to an acquaintance new.
 The oldest friend of all thy store
 Was once, 'tis certain, nothing more.
 It matters not how late the choice,
 If but approved by reason's voice !
 Then let thy sole inquiry be,
 If thou canst find such worth in me
 That, constant as the years are rolled,
 Matures new friendship into old.

SELF-PRAISE IS SELF-DETRACTION.

You are pretty — we know it; and young — it is true;
 And rich — who denies it ? Your one foe is — you.
 'Tis your self-praise, Fabulla, fore'er on your tongue,
 Makes you seem neither wealthy, nor pretty, nor young.

THE DOTING LOVER.

Let Rufus weep, rejoice, stand, sit, or walk,
 Still he can nothing but of Nævia talk :
 Let him eat, drink, ask questions, or dispute,
 Still he must speak of Nævia, or be mute.
 He writ to his father, ending with this line,
 "I am, my lovely Nævia, ever thine."

TO A JEALOUS HUSBAND.

Your wife's the plainest piece a man can see :
 No soul would touch her, whilst you left her free :
 But since to guard her you employ all arts,
 The rakes besiege her. — You're a man of parts !

ON A DEAD-BEAT.

Lend Linus what he asks? You'd best refuse,
And give him half. That's quite enough to lose.

ON NOVIUS, A MISER.

(Paraphrase by Swift.)

My neighbor Hunks's house and mine
Are built so near they almost join;
The windows too project so much,
That through the casements we may touch.
Nay, I'm so happy, most men think,
To live so near a man of chink,
That they are apt to envy me
For keeping such good company:
But he's as far from me, I vow,
As London is from good Lord Howe;
For when old Hunks I chance to meet,
Or one or both must quit the street.
Thus he who would not see old Roger
Must be his neighbor — or his lodger.

PITAPH ON ALCIMUS.

Dear boy! whom, torn in early youth away,
The light turf covers in Labicum's way,
Receive no tomb hewn from the Parian cave
By useless toil to molder o'er the grave;
But box and shady palms shall flourish here,
And softest herbage green with many a tear.
Dear boy! these records of my grief receive,
These simple honors that will bloom and live;
And be, when Fate has spun my latest line,
My ashes honored, as I honor thine!

TO CRITICASTERS.

I.

Lælius, you score my verse and hide your own:
Publish what you write, or let mine alone.

II.

Velox, you call my skits too long real epigrams to be;
But you write nothing when you write — the soul of brevity.

III.

You, Cosconius, who think my epigrams long, may possibly be expert at greasing carriage-wheels. With like judgment, you would think the Colossus too tall, and might call Brutus's boy too short. Learn something which you do not know : two pages of Marsus and the learned Pedo often contain only one epigram. Those compositions are not long, in which there is nothing to retrench ; but you, Cosconius, write even distichs that are too long.

OUT OF DEBT.

You owe nothing, Sextus ; Sextus,
 You owe nothing, it is true :
 Only he owes money, Sextus,
 Who can pay it when it's due.

NO NEWS IS GOOD NEWS.

Nævia won't answer my note ; —
 She will not grant me my boon.
 But I'm sure that she read what I wrote :
 That means that she will grant it soon.

LITIGATION COSTS.

The judge wants money, and the counsel too :
 Pay your debt, Sextus, I should counsel you.

ON MEN WITH FOUL BREATH.

I.

Hor aus, letting your drinking-cup be used by none beside
 Is merely a proof of humanity, and not in the least of pride.

II.

Postumus, kisses you give to some,
 Some have your hand to shake :
 "Which will you have ?" you say to me — "come" :
 The hand is the one I'll take.

III.

No matter how often you ask me who this is
 I speak of as Postumus, I shall not tell :
 Why should I have the folly to anger the kisses
 With power to avenge themselves only too well ?

GOOD-WILL ONLY FOR EMERGENCIES.

"If harsh Fortune should overwhelm you with some terrible accusation, I will attend you in mourning habit, and more pale than a person accused. If he should order you to depart under condemnation from your native land, I will go, through seas, through mountains, your companion in exile." She gives you riches. "Are they the common property of us both?" Will you give me half? "It is a large sum." Candidus, will you give me anything? You will, then, share with me in misfortune only: but if heaven with smiling countenance shows you favor, you will enjoy your happiness, Candidus, alone.

TO A WARY FLIRT.

Galla, each that asks you the favors in your store
Always gains a promise, and never any more.
If you mean forever by contraries to go,
Galla, for the future I beg you to say "No."

TO A DINNER-HUNTER.

Angling for a dinner, Seliu, every line
Of your verse or speeches, puts you to the blush:
"How delicious!" "Charming!" "Exquisite!" "Divine!"
There now, Seliu, now you've earned your victuals, hush!

GENEROUS WITH ADVICE.

I asked a thousand-dollar loan one day; —
No breaking matter even to give away.
'Twas to an old acquaintance I applied, —
Rich, with vast income, and (expense beside)
A surplus hard to invest in prudent wise.
He says, "Turn lawyer: you'll get rich and rise."
Give, Caius, what I ask: it's not advice.

A USEFUL GULF.

Would you know what profit my Nomentan estate
Brings to me, Linus? The profitable fate
Of not seeing you, Linus, comes from my estate.

TO A DIRTY FELLOW.

Zoilus, why do you dirty the bath by dipping your legs in the flow?
It could only be made more dirty, Zoilus, by plunging your head in too.

THE INEXORABLE CHOICE.

You wish to be treated with deference, Sextus: I wished to love you. I must obey you: you shall be treated with deference, as you desire. But if I treat you with deference, I shall not love you.

TO A BILK.

You laugh, well-dressed Zoilus, at my threadbare gown;
'Tis indeed threadbare, Zoilus, but then 'tis my own.

A LEGACY WITHOUT FUNDS.

Five pounds of silver Marius has left you from his hoards:
The man whom you gave nothing to has given you — some words.

NOT DECEIVED.

You invite me, Nasica, only when you know
I'm engaged and cannot come:
Excuse me, pray, I'm engaged just now —
Engaged to dine at home.

TO A BRUTAL MASTER.

Why do you maim your slave, Ponticus, by cutting out his tongue?
Do you not know that the public says what he cannot?

TIT FOR TAT.

A gallon of snow-cooled water,¹ in a wickered demijohn,
Is my Christmas gift to you this year: an inappropriate one?
If you grumble at a summer's gift amid December's chill,
Retaliate with a summer suit — I shall not take it ill.

TO CLASSICUS, IN DISPARAGEMENT OF DIFFICULT POETIC TRIFLES.

Because I neither delight in verse that may be read backward, nor reverse the effeminate Sotades; because nowhere in my writings, as in those of the Greeks, are to be found echoing verses, and the handsome Attis does not dictate to me a soft and enervated Gallic strain; I am not on that account, Classicus, so very bad a poet. What if you were to order Ladas against his will to mount the narrow ridge of the petaurum? It is absurd to make one's amusements difficult; and labor expended on follies is childish. Let Palæmon write verses for admiring crowds: I would rather please select ears.

¹ To cool wine.

THE SAME TRICKS OF THE TRADE.

"But where is Volume One," you ask, "since this is Volume Two?" —

If that is modester than this, why, what am I to do?

Still, if you'd rather have this first, it's easy to be done:

Turn, Regulus, to the title-page, and simply cancel one [I].

ON A RIVAL.

Cinna is called a writer — of squibs against me, it is said:

No man can be called a writer, whose writings are never read.

DISINHERITED BY HAVING THE PROPERTY TO SQUANDER.

Your sire, Philomusus, they say,

Allowed you twelve hundred a year;

And paid it as so much a day,

Or each day you'd have been in arrear.

Your vice needed regular food;

For you cared not a straw, to his sorrow,

That to-day's blindly prodigal mood

Involved destitution to-morrow.

But now he has left you his all,

And is dead, you are facing the truth —

Philomusus, you're what one must call

An outright disinherited youth.

A FEAST OF THE DEAD.

The perfumes you gave to your guests at the yesterday evening treat

Were excellent, truly enough; but you gave them nothing to eat.

To be scented and starved at once is a queer entertainment indeed:

That is my definition of corpses — embalmed and unable to feed.

MASTER AND SLAVE.

A slave, branded on the forehead by his master, saved him when proscribed. Thus, while the master's life was preserved, his infamy was perpetuated.

WELL-REGULATED TEMPER.

My rich friends, you know nothing save how to put yourselves into a passion. It is not a nice thing for you to do, but it suits your purpose. Do it.

TO JEALOUSLY EXACTING FRIENDS.

I.

Such attentions as you receive from a new and lately made friend, Fabianus, you expect to receive also from me. You expect that I should constantly run in deshabille to salute you at the dawn of day, and that your litter should drag me through the middle of the mud; that, worn out, I should follow you at four o'clock or later to the baths of Agrippa, while I myself wash in those of Titus. Is this my reward after twenty winters' service, Fabianus, that I am ever to be in my apprenticeship to your friendship? Is this what I have gained, Fabianus, by my worn-out toga, — and this too my own, — that you do not consider me to have yet earned my discharge?

II.

You demand from me, without end, the attentions due from a client. I go not myself, but send you my freedman. "It is not the same," you say. I will prove that it is much more. I can scarcely follow your litter, he will carry it. If you get into a crowd, he will keep it off with his elbow: my sides are weak and unsuited to such labor. Whatever statement you may make in pleading, I should hold my tongue; but he will roar out for you the thrice-glorious "bravo!" If you have a dispute with any one, he will heap abuse upon your adversary with a stentorian voice: modesty prevents me from using strong language. "Well, then, will you show me," say you, "no attention as my friend?" Yes, Candidus, every attention which my freedman may be unable to show.

THE POET IN TIMES OF PERSONAL PATRONAGE.

I.

Do you wish to know the reason, Ligurinus, that no one willingly meets you; that wherever you come, everybody takes flight, and a vast solitude is left around you? You are too much of a poet. This is an extremely dangerous fault. The tigress aroused by the loss of her whelps, the viper scorched by the midday sun, or the ruthless scorpion, are less objects of terror than you. For who, I ask, could undergo such calls upon his patience as you make? You read your verses to me, whether I am standing, or sitting, or running, or about private business. I fly to the hot baths, there you din my ears; I seek the cold bath, there I cannot swim for your noise; I hasten to dinner, you stop me on my way; I sit down to dinner, you drive me from my seat; wearied, I fall asleep, you rouse me from my couch. Do you wish to see how much evil you occasion? — You, a man just, upright, and innocent, are an object of fear.

II.

Whether Phœbus fled from the table and supper of Thyestes, I do not know : I flee from yours, Ligurinus. It is certainly a splendid one, and well furnished with excellent dishes; but nothing pleases me when you recite. I do not want you to put upon table turbot or a mullet of two pounds' weight, nor do I wish for mushrooms or oysters: what I want is your silence.

III.

The reason you ask us to dinner, Ligurinus, is no other than this, that you may recite your verses. I have just put off my shoes, when forthwith in comes an immense volume among the lettuces and sharp sauce. Another is handed while the first course is lingering on the table; then comes a third before even the second course is served. During a fourth course you recite; and again during a fifth. Why, a boar, if so often placed upon table, is unsavory. If you do not hand over your accursed poems to the mackerel sellers, Ligurinus, you will soon dine alone.

TO FAUSTINUS.

Yonder, Faustinus, where the Capene Gate drips with large drops, and where the Almo cleanses the Phrygian sacrificial knives of the Mother of the Gods, where the sacred meadow of the Horatii lies verdant, and where the temple of the Little Hercules swarms with many a visitor, Bassus was taking his way in a well-packed chariot, carrying with him all the riches of a favored country spot. There you might have seen cabbages with noble hearts, and both kinds of leeks, dwarf lettuces, and beet-roots not unserviceable to the torpid stomach. There also you might have seen an osier ring, hung with fat thrushes; a hare, pierced by the fangs of a Gallic hound; and a sucking pig, that had never yet crushed bean. Nor did the running footman go idly before the carriage, but bore eggs safely wrapped in hay. Was Bassus going to town? No; he was going to his country seat.

TO CHLOE.

I could do without your face, and your neck, and your hands, and your limbs, and your bosom, and other of your charms. Indeed, not to fatigue myself with enumerating each of them, I could do without you, Chloe, altogether.

(Moore's Paraphrase.)

I could resign that eye of blue,
Howe'er its splendor used to thrill me;

And even that cheek of roseate hue —
To lose it, Chloe, scarce would kill me.

That snowy neck I ne'er should miss,
However much I've raved about it;
And sweetly as that lip can kiss,
I think I could exist without it.

In short, so well I've learned to fast,
That sooth, my love, I know not whether
I might not bring myself at last —
To do without you altogether.

AN INDEFENSIBLE FRAUD.

A crafty innkeeper at Ravenna lately cheated me. I asked him for wine and water: he sold me pure wine.

(Warton's Version.)

A landlord of Bath put upon me a queer hum:
I asked him for punch, and the dog gave me mere rum.¹

TO CINNA.

Whatever favor you ask, presuming Cinna, you call nothing: if you ask for nothing, Cinna, I refuse you nothing.

TO ARROGANT RICH MEN.

I.

Because you purchase slaves at a hundred and often two hundred thousand sesterces; because you drink wines stored in the reign of Numa; because your not over-large stock of furniture cost you a million; because a pound weight of wrought silver costs you five thousand; because a golden chariot becomes yours at the price of a whole farm; because your mule cost you more than the value of a house, — do you imagine that such expenses are the proof of a great mind, Quintus? You are mistaken, Quintus; they are the extravagances of a small mind.

II.

You never say, "Good day!" first, Nævulus: but content yourself with returning the salute, though even the crow is often in the habit of saying it first. Why do you expect this from me, Nævulus?

¹ The original pun: merum = pure wine.

I pray you, tell me. For I consider, Nævulus, you are neither better than I am, nor have precedence of me in the eyes of the world. Both Cæsars have bestowed upon me praise and rewards, and have given me the rights of a father of three children. I am read by many; and fame has given me a name known throughout the cities of the earth, without waiting for my death. There is something, too, in this that Rome has seen me a tribune, and that I sit in those seats whence Oceanus excludes you. I suspect that your servants are not even as numerous as the Roman citizens that Cæsar has made at my request. But you are a debauchee, Nævulus, and play your part excellently in that capacity. Yes, now you take precedence of me, Nævulus; you have decidedly the advantage. Good day to you.

III.

When fortune smiles on you, Nævulus, you're the most hateful of men;
 When you are in trouble, Nævulus, none is more pleasing again.
 When thriving, you answer nobody's bow, you look down on all that you meet;
 You seem to think every man living a slave, unworthy your stopping to greet.
 But when you're in trouble, oh, then, what a change! rich presents are one man's share;
 At another's levee, as your patron and lord, you make your respects and your prayer;
 All are asked to your house. — Never, Nævulus, be without burdens and care.

IV.

“Coranus owes me a hundred thousand sesterces, Mancinus two hundred thousand, Titius three hundred thousand, Albinus six hundred thousand, Sabinus a million, and Seranus another million; from my lodging-houses and farms I receive three millions, from my Parmesan flocks six hundred thousand.” Such are the words, Afer, that you daily din into my ear; and I know them better than my own name. You must pay me something, to enable me to bear this. Dispel my daily nausea with a round sum: I cannot listen to your catalogue, Afer, for nothing.

V.

I am, I confess, Callistratus, and have always been, poor; yet I am not an obscure or unknown knight, but am read throughout the world, and people say of me, “That is he!” and what death has awarded to but few has become mine during my lifetime. But you have halls, resting upon a hundred columns; your coffers with difficulty contain the wealth which you have gained as a freedman; vast farms in Egyptian Syene are yours; and Gallic Parma shears for you innumerable flocks. Such are you and I; but what I am you cannot be; what you are, any one of the multitude may be.

TO THE MODEST MATRON.

Thus far this book [Book III] is written entirely for you, chaste matron. Do you ask for whom the sequel is written? For myself. The gymnasium, the warm baths, the race course, are here; you must retire. We lay aside our garments; spare yourself the sight of us in that state. Here at last, after her wine and crowns of roses, Terpsichore is intoxicated, and, laying aside all restraint, knows not what she says. She names no longer in doubtful guise, but openly, that deity whom triumphant Venus welcomes to her temple in the sixth month of the year; whom the bailiff stations as protector in the midst of his garden, and at whom all modest maidens gaze with hand before the face. If I know you well, you were laying down the long book from weariness; now you will read diligently to the end.

GOOD WISHES FOR A MARRIAGE.

Claudia Peregrina, Rufus, is about to be married to my friend Pudens. Be propitious, Hymen, with thy torches. As fitly is precious cinnamon united with nard, and Massic wine with Attic honey. Nor are elms more fitly wedded to tender vines; nor does the lotus more love the waters, or the myrtle the river's bank. Mayest thou always hover over their couch, fair Concord, and may Venus ever be auspicious to a couple so well matched. In after years may the wife cherish her husband in his old age; and may she, when grown old, not seem so to her husband.

TO SILIUS ITALICUS.

Silius, glory of the Castalian sisters, who composest, in mighty song, the perjuries of barbaric rage, and compellest the perfidious pride of Hannibal and the faithless Carthaginians to yield to our great Scipios; lay aside for a while thy austere gravity, and while December, sporting with attractive games, resounds on every side with the boxes of hazard, and plays at tropa with fraudulent dice, accord some indulgence to my muse, and read not with severe but with cheerful countenance my little books, abounding with jocular pleasantries. Just so perhaps might the tender Catullus venture to send his sparrow to the great Virgii.

ON A RICH ATHEIST.

Selius asserts there's neither God nor heaven;
And thinks sufficient proof of that is given,
By the fact that he has said so and still thriven.

ON A BEE INCLOSED IN AMBER.

The bee is inclosed, and shines preserved, in a tear of the sisters of Phaëton, so that it seems enshrined in its own nectar. It has obtained a worthy reward for its great toils; we may suppose that the bee itself would have desired such a death.

TO GALLA.

Galla, say "No": love is soon sated, unless our pleasures are mixed with some pain; but do not continue, Galla, to say "No" too long.

REFUTING A LIBEL.

I did not call you, Coracinus, an unnatural debauchee—I am not so rash or daring; nor am I a person to utter falsehoods willingly. If I so spoke of you, Coracinus, may I find the flagon of Pontia and the cup of Metilus hostile to me; I swear to you by the extravagance and madness of the rites of Isis and Cybele. What I said, however, was of a light and trifling nature—a something well known, and which you yourself will not deny: I said, Coracinus, that you are strangely fond of the female sex.

A MERE COINCIDENCE.

You always, it is true, Pamphilus, place Setine wine, or Massie, on table; but rumor says that they are not so pure as they ought to be. You are reported to have been four times made a widower by the aid of your goblet. I do not think this, or believe it, Pamphilus; but I am not thirsty.

HARMONIOUS JUDGMENTS.

You beg me, Quintus, to present you my works. I have not a copy, but the bookseller Trypho has. "Am I going to give money for trifles," you say, "and buy your verses while in my sober senses? I shall not do anything so ridiculous." Nor shall I.

CHEATED.

Matho, you fairly lived at my Tivoli country seat;
Now you have bought it, I tell you my selling it to you's a cheat:
I've sold you nothing but what you already owned complete.

THE PREFERRED PLEASURE.

No man that walks the city streets or tills the country farms
 Can say that Thais ever gave her favors to his arms,
 Though many ask them of her. Is Thais then so pure?
 Oh no: she has an ugly tongue, that gives more pleasure to her.

TO GELLIA.

(Evidently the original of Philomede in Pope's "Satire on Women.")

While you were telling us of your ancestors, and their ancestors, and the great names of your family, while you looked down on our equestrian order as a mean rank, and while you were asserting that you would marry no one who did not wear the broad border of the senator, you married, Gellia, a porter.

TO A POOR GENTLEMAN.

You have, I admit, a knight's intelligence, education, manners, and birth; your other qualities you have in common with the multitude. The fourteen rows of seats are not of so much consequence to you, that you should seat yourself there to grow pale at the sight of Oceanus [the usher who excluded men of lower rank].

THE MEANING OF ENVY.

By no excellence of character, Aulus, could you induce Mamercus to think or speak well of you, even though you surpassed the two Curtii in piety, the Nervæ in inoffensiveness, the Rusones in courtesy, the Macri in probity, the Maurici in equity, the Reguli in eloquence, the Pauli in wit. Mamercus gnaws everything with his foul teeth. Perhaps you think him envious: I may think him whom no one can please, a wretch.

BE CONTENT WITH YOUR LINE OF ACTION.

Artemidorus, you have painted Venus while Minerva is the object of your veneration, and do you wonder that your work has not given pleasure?

WHAT IS GIVEN TO FRIENDS IS NOT LOST.

Thieves may break locks, and with your cash retire;
 Your ancient seat may be consumed by fire:
 Debtors refuse to pay you what they owe,
 Or your ungrateful field the seed you sow;
 Your steward plundered by a greedy punk,
 Your ships with all their store at sea be sunk:

Who gives to friends, so much from fate secures;
That is the only wealth forever yours.

THE PRECARIOUSNESS OF PARASITISM.

How has it come about, I ask, how has it so suddenly come about, Dento, that though I have asked you to dinner four times, you have (who would believe it?) constantly presumed to refuse me? You not only avoid looking back when I call, but you flee from me as I follow you, — me whom you so lately used to hunt for at the baths, at the theaters, and at every place of resort? The reason is, that you have been captivated by a more delicate table, and that a richer kitchen has attracted you like a dog. But very soon, when your rich host shall have found you out, and left you in disgust, you will come back to the bones of your old dinner with me.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES.

Philo declares he never dines at home,
And it is so, no doubt:
The truth is that he never dines at all
Unless invited out.

ON ONE WHO FORGETS NAMES.

My friend the rhetorician has become an improvisatore: he has never written down Calpurnius' name, and yet he called him by it recently.

WHEN TO LIVE.

(Cowley's Translation.)

To-morrow you will live, you always cry;
In what fair country does this morrow lie,
That 'tis so mighty long ere it arrive?
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis so far-fetched, this morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old and very dear.
"To-morrow I will live," the fool does say;
To-day itself's too late, — the wise lived yesterday.

HOW TO LIVE.

Fill high the bowl with sparkling wine;
Cool the bright draught with summer snow.
Amid my locks let odors flow;
Around my temples roses twine.
See yon proud emblem of decay,
Yon lordly pile that braves the sky!

It bids us live our little day,
Teaching that gods themselves may die.

TO A DETRACTOR.

Although you bark at me for ever and ever, and weary me with your shameless invectives, I am determined to persist in denying you that fame which you have been so long seeking, namely, that you, such as you are, may be read of in my works throughout the whole world. For why should any one know that you ever existed? You must perish unknown, wretched man; it must be so. Still there will not be wanting in this town perhaps one or two, or three or four, who may like to gnaw a dog's hide. For myself, I keep my hands away from such corruption.

UNBEARABLE PUNISHMENT.

Do you wonder for what reason, Theodorus, notwithstanding your frequent requests and importunities, I have never presented you with my works? I have an excellent reason; it is lest you should present me with yours.

ON POMPEY AND HIS SONS.

The sons of Pompey are covered by the soil of Asia and Europe; Pompey himself by that of Africa, if indeed he be covered by any. What wonder that they are thus dispersed over the whole globe? So great a ruin could not have lain in a single spot.

PLAIN LIVING BUT GOOD COMPANY.

If you are suffering from dread of a melancholy dinner at home, Toranius, you may come and fast with me. If you are in the habit of taking a preparatory whet, you will experience no want of common Cappadocian lettuces and strong leeks. The tunny will lurk under slices of egg; a cauliflower hot enough to burn your fingers, and which has but just left the cool garden, will be served fresh and green on a black platter; while sausages will float on snow-white porridge, and the pale bean will accompany the red-streaked bacon. If you would know the riches of the second course, raisins will be set before you, and pears which pass for Syrian, and chestnuts to which learned Naples gave birth, roasted at a slow fire. The wine you will prove in drinking it. After all this, if Bacchus perchance, as is his wont, produce a craving, excellent olives, which Picenian branches recently bore, will come to your relief, with the hot vetch and the tepid lupine. The dinner is small; who can deny it?—but you will not have to invent falsehoods, or hear them invented; you will recline at ease, and with your own natural look; the host will not read aloud a bulky volume of his own compositions, nor will licentious girls from shameless Cadiz be there to gratify you with wanton attitudes; but (and I hope it will not be unpleasant or distasteful to you) the small reed pipe will be heard. Such is my little dinner. You will follow Claudia, whom you earnestly wish should be with me before yourself.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

I have bought a farm in the country for a sum all out of bounds;
I ask you, Cæcilianus, to lend me a thousand pounds.
You don't answer: no doubt you are thinking, "He'll never be able to pay."
Of course not, Cæcilianus: that's why I am begging to-day.

MODESTY AMOUNTING TO GENIUS.

You assert, Laberius, that you can write excellent verses; why then do you not write them? Whoever can write excellent verses, and does not write them, I shall regard as a remarkable man.

TO A WINDY LAWYER.

My suit has nothing to do with assault, or battery, or poisoning, but is about three goats, which I complain have been stolen by my neighbor. This the judge desires to have proved to him; but you, with swelling words and extravagant gestures, dilate on the Battle of Cannæ, the Mithridatic war, and the perjuries of the insensate Carthaginians, the Syllæ, the Marii, and the Mucii. It is time, Postumus, to say something about my three goats.

A DELAYED GIFT IS A THANKLESS GIFT.

If you had given me six thousand sesterces forthwith, when you said to me, "Take them, and carry them away, I make you a present of them," I should have felt as much indebted to you, Pætus, as if you had given me two hundred thousand. But now, when you have given them to me after a long delay, — after seven, I believe, or nine months, — I can tell you (shall I?) something as true as truth itself: you have lost all thanks, Pætus, for the six thousand sesterces.

A DELICATE HINT.

I have not a farthing in the house; one thing only remains for me to do, Regulus, and that is, to sell the presents which I have received from you; are you inclined to buy them?

TO A RIVAL EPIGRAMMATIST.

Although the epigrams which you write are always sweetness itself and more spotless than a white-leaded skin, and although there is in them neither an atom of salt nor a drop of bitter gall, yet you expect, foolish man, that they will be read. Why, not even food itself is pleasant, if it be wholly destitute of acid seasoning; nor is a face pleasing which shows no dimples. Give children your honey-apples and luscious figs; the Chian fig, which has sharpness, pleases my taste.

HOW NOT TO ACT.

The greatest favor that you can do me, Cinna, if I ask anything of you, is to give it me; the next, Cinna, to refuse it at once. I love one who gives, Cinna; I do not hate one who refuses: but you, Cinna, neither give nor refuse.

A FINE OLD VINTAGE.

I have just drunk some consular wine. You ask how old and how generous? It was bottled in the consul's own year; and he who gave it me, Severus, was that consul himself.

TO A CHAPLET OF ROSES.

Go, happy rose, and wreath with a delicate chaplet the tresses of my Apollinaris. Remember, also, to wreath them even after they are grown gray, but far distant be that time! So may Venus ever love thee.

PRAISE IN DISGUISE.

Matho exults that I have produced a book full of inequalities; if this be true, Matho only commends my verses. Books without inequalities are produced by Calvinus and Umber. A book that is all bad, Creticus, may be all equality.

TOO WISE FOR HIS PLACE.

I bought what you called a fool for twenty thousand sesterces. Return me my money, Gargilianus; he is no fool at all.

A BAD CAUSE.

I pleaded your cause, Sextus, having agreed to do so for two thousand sesterces. How is it that you have sent me only a thousand? "You said nothing," you tell me; "and the cause was lost through you." You ought to give me so much the more, Sextus, as I had to blush for you.

NOW OR NEVER.

I seem to you cruel and too much addicted to gluttony, when I beat my cook for sending up a bad dinner. If that appears to you too trifling a cause, say for what cause you would have a cook flogged?

THE REAL MEANING.

He who makes presents to you, Gaurus, rich and old as you are, says plainly, if you have but sense and can understand him, "Die!"

TO A BOASTER.

You say that you have a piece of plate which is an original work of Mys. That rather is an original, in the making of which you had no hand.

NO INCOMPATIBILITY.

Since you are so well matched, and so much alike in your lives, a very bad wife and a very bad husband, I wonder that you do not agree.

MISPLACED ENVY.

Charinus is pale and bursting with envy; he rages, weeps, and is looking for a high branch on which to hang himself; not, as formerly, because I am repeated and read by everybody, or because I am circulated with elegant bosses, and anointed with oil of cedar, through all the nations that Rome holds in subjection; but because I possess in the suburbs a summer country house, and ride on mules which are not, as of old, hired. What evil shall I imprecate on him, Severus, for his envy? This is my wish: that he may have mules and a country house.

PREFERABLY A LIVE DOG.

You admire, Vacerra, only the poets of old, and praise only those who are dead. Pardon me, I beseech you, Vacerra, if I think death too high a price to pay for your praise.

AN UNWELCOME TRUTH.

"Pray tell me, Marcus, tell me without fear
The truth, the thing I most desire to hear."
This you say, Gallicus, when your works you quote;
And when you plead, this is your constant note.
'Tis most inhuman longer to deny
What you so often press so earnestly.
To the great truth of all then lend an ear—
"You are uneasy when the truth you hear."

A LITANY ON A SLANDEROUS POET.

Whoever, despising the matron and the noble, whom he ought to respect, has injured them with impious verse; may he wander through town after town, an outcast on bridge and hill, and lowest among craving mendicants, may he entreat for mouthfuls of the spoilt bread reserved for the dogs. May December be dreary to him, and the dripping winter and close cell prolong the cheerless cold. May he call those blessed, and pronounce them happy, who are borne past him upon the funeral bier. And when the thread of his last hour is spun, and the day of death, which has seemed too slow, has arrived, may he hear around him the howling of dogs for his body, and have to drive off the birds of prey by shaking his rags. Nor may the punishment of the abject wretch end with his death; but, sometimes lashed with the thongs of the severe Æacus, sometimes burthened with the mountain stone of unresting Sisyphus, sometimes thirsting amid the waters of the babbling old Tantalus, may he exhaust all the fabled torments of the poets; and when the Furies shall have compelled him to confess the truth, may he exclaim, betrayed by his conscience, "I wrote those verses."

THE RULE OF COMPOSITION.

You are always wishing, Matho, to speak finely; speak sometimes merely well; sometimes neither well nor ill; sometimes even ill.

THE FATE OF AN IMITATOR.

Near the fourth milestone from the city, Torquatus has a princely mansion: near the fourth milestone, Otacilius purchases a little country house. Torquatus has built splendid warm baths of variegated marble; Otacilius erects a basin. Torquatus has laid out a plantation of laurels on his land; Otacilius sows a hundred chestnuts. When Torquatus was consul, Otacilius was chief magistrate of the village, and, proud of such a dignity, did not imagine himself a less personage than Torquatus. As, of old, the large ox made the small frog burst, so, I suspect, Torquatus will burst Otacilius.

PLEASURES OF A COUNTRY LIFE.

You are astonished, Avitus; that I, who have grown old in the capital of Latium, should so often speak of countries afar off; that I should thirst for the gold-bearing Tagus, and my native Salo; and that I should long to return to the rude fields around my well-furnished cottage. But that land wins my affection, in which a small income is sufficient for happiness, and a slender estate affords even luxuries. Here we must nourish our fields: there the fields nourish us. Here the hearth is warmed by a half-starved fire; there it burns with unstinted brilliancy. Here to be hungry is an expensive gratification, and the market ruins us; there the table is covered with the riches of its own neighborhood. Here four togas or more are worn out in a summer; there one suffices for four autumns. Go then and pay your court to patrons, while a spot exists which offers you everything that a protector refuses you.

PASSAGES FROM STATIUS.

[PUBLIUS PAPINIUS STATIUS was born at Naples about A.D. 45, the son of a distinguished teacher of rhetoric and literature, who was moreover a constant prize winner in poetical tournaments. The son also won many of these prizes; a contemporary of Martial, he adopted in the same way the profession of court poet, and was Martial's chief rival both in that position and in public repute. Both flourished chiefly under Domitian, and flattered him with shameless grossness, Statius descending a step lower and writing a poem on the emperor's favorite "boy's" hair. He had wonderful powers of improvisation, and wrote all his shorter poems with great rapidity. These occasional poems are grouped under the name of "Silvæ." His most elaborate work was the epic, "The Thebaid." He died apparently A.D. 96, the year of Domitian's murder.]

THE WANDERING OF POLYNICES.

(From the "Thebaid": Pope's translation.)

THE hero then resolves his course to bend
Where ancient Danaus' fruitful fields extend,
And famed Mycene's lofty towers ascend,
(Where late the sun did Atreus' crimes detest
And disappeared in horror of the feast.)
And now, by chance, by fate, or furies led,
From Bacchus' consecrated caves he fled,
Where the shrill cries of frantic matrons sound,
And Pentheus' blood enriched the rising ground.
Then sees Cithæron towering o'er the plain,
And thence declining gently to the main.
Next to the bounds of Nisus' realm repairs,
Where treacherous Scylla cut the purple hairs:
The hanging cliffs of Scyros' rock explores,
And hears the murmurs of the different shores:
Passes the strait that parts the foaming seas,
And stately Corinth's pleasing site surveys.

'Twas now the time when Phœbus yields to night,
And rising Cynthia sheds her silver light;
Wide o'er the world in solemn pomp she drew
Her airy chariot, hung with pearly dew;

All birds and beasts lie hushed : Sleep steals away
The wild desires of men, and toils of day,
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care.
Yet no red clouds, with golden borders gay
Promise the skies the bright return of day ;
No faint reflections of the distant light
Streak with long gleams the scattering shades of night ;
From the damp earth impervious vapors rise,
Increase the darkness, and involve the skies.
At once the rushing winds with roaring sound
Burst from the Æolian caves, and rend the ground,
With equal rage their airy quarrel try,
And win by turns the kingdom of the sky ;
But with a thicker night black Auster shrouds
The heavens, and drives on heaps the rolling clouds,
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily showers.
From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud
And broken lightnings flash from every cloud.
Now smokes with showers the misty mountain ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguished round,
The Inachian streams with headlong fury run,
And Erasinus rolls a deluge on :
The foaming Serna swells above its bounds,
And spreads its ancient poisons o'er the grounds :
Where late was dust, now rapid torrents play,
Rush through the mounds, and bear the dams away :
Old limbs of trees from crackling forests torn,
Are whirled in air, and on the winds are borne :
The storm the dark Sycæan groves displayed,
And first to light exposed the sacred shade.
The intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonished from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the watery war,
That, driven by storms, and pouring o'er the plain,
Swept herds, and hinds, and houses to the main.
Through the brown horrors of the night he fled,
Nor knows, amazed, what doubtful path to tread ;
His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears.
So fares a sailor on the stormy main,
When clouds conceal Boötes' golden wain ;
When not a star its friendly luster keeps,
Nor trembling Cynthia glimmers on the deeps ;

He dreads the rocks and shoals and seas and skies,
While thunder roars, and lightning round him flies.

Thus strove the chief, on every side distressed,
Thus still his courage with his toils increased;
With his broad shield opposed, he forced his way
Through thickest woods, and roused the beasts of prey,
Till he beheld, where from Sarissa's height
The shelving walls reflect a glancing light:
Thither with haste the Theban hero flies;
On this side Serna's poisonous water lies,
On that Prosymna's grove and temple rise:
He passed the gates, which then unguarded lay,
And to the regal palace bent his way;
On the cold marble, spent with toil, he lies,
And waits till pleasing slumbers seal his eyes.

THE PALACE OF SLEEP.

(The remaining translations are by Alfred Church.)

Beyond the cloudy chamber of the Night,
And the far Æthiop's land, a forest stands,
Whose gloom no star of heaven can pierce. Below,
Deep in the mountain's side a cavern yawns
With awful jaws. There Sleep hath set his halls,
And Nature in her mood of sloth hath built
The House of Careless Ease. Deep-shadowed Rest
And dull Oblivion by the threshold crouch,
And Indolence with slow unwatchful eyes,
And Leisure in the porch and Silence sit,
Speechless with folded wings. There never sounds
Wild wind, or rustling bough, or cry of bird.
Mute are the seas, though all the shores be loud
With crash of billows, and the thunders sleep
In voiceless skies. The river, as he flows,
Gliding through cavernous rocks, deep sunk, is still;
Black are the herds about the banks, and all
Crouched low upon the grass. The year's new growth
Is withered in its spring, and every herb
Crushed down by some dark influence to earth.
Within the hall the Fire-god's craft had wrought
Sleep in a thousand figures. There he stood,
Crowned Pleasure at his side, and then with Toil,
That bowed his head to rest; and now was seen
Comrade of wine or love, or lay, a sight
Guiltless of sorrow, side by side with death.

TO LUCAN.

Here on the blest Elysian shore,
 Thy blameless spirit evermore
 Haunteth the quiet groves of light,
 Where, listening to thy stately song,
 The heroes of Pharsalia's fight,
 Catos and Pompeys, round thee throng.
 No dark Tartarean shades affright
 Thy noble soul; which, far away,
 Can hear the awful scourges smite
 The cowering shapes of guilt, and gaze
 Where Nero sees with pale dismay
 His mother's vengeful torches blaze.

ATALANTA'S PRESAGE.

Then, after sleep, by shapes of dread oppressed,
 Barefoot, in mourner's fashion, and with hair
 Loose streaming in the wind, ere dawn of day,
 She sought cold flowing Ladon, if his stream
 Haply might purge the trouble of her brain.
 For all the watches of the night had crept
 Smitten with nameless terror, while she saw
 Spoils of the chase, her gifts to Dian's shrine,
 Slip from the walls, or seemed to wander lost
 In some strange place of tombs, from woods remote,
 And the fair Dryad troop, or eager watched
 The triumph of return, the warrior train,
 The spear, the shield, the war-horse, but himself,
 For all her watching, saw not.

PARTHENOPEUS' FAREWELL MESSAGE.

I perish; haste, my Dorceus, comfort her,
 Saddest of mothers, who, if love and care
 Have aught of true prevision, knows to-day,
 By dream or evil sign, this fatal chance.
 But yet with artifice of kindly fraud
 Keep her in long suspense of hope and fear,
 Nor take her unprepared, nor when she holds
 Arrow or spear in hand; and, driven to speak,
 Then speak these words for me: 'As I have sown,
 My mother, so I reap; a foolish boy,
 Unheeding thy command, I seized my arms,
 And spurned at peace, nor spared thy tender heart.
 Weep not, be rather angry, and let wrath

Sting thee to life. Thy fears at least are past;
 No more from high Lycæus wilt thou watch,
 On every sound intent, and eager-eyed,
 To mark the dust cloud of my homeward march.
 On the bare earth, death-cold, I lie; and thou
 Not here to close dim eye and gasping mouth.
 But take, O desolate mother,' and he held
 A ringlet to the knife, 'this little lock—
 Ah me! what wrath I had in days of old
 When thou wouldst comb it—take this little lock,
 Of all that was thy son this little lock,
 For this must serve for burial. But forbid,
 If at my funeral games some clumsy hand
 Abuse my arrows, and my dogs of chase.
 Dear comrades, they have served me, let them rest.'"

MAXIMS OF EPICTETUS.

TRANSLATED BY T. W. ROLLESTON.

[EPICTETUS, the Stoic philosopher, was born at Hierapolis, in Phrygia, about 50 A.D. He was a slave of Epaphroditus, a favorite of Nerc. Afterwards manumitted, he studied philosophy, and when banished from Rome with other philosophers by an edict of Domitian, removed to Nicopolis, in Epirus. His maxims and doctrines were collected by his pupil Arrian in the work entitled "Enchiridion" (Handbook), and in eight books of "Commentaries," four of which are lost.]

KNOW THYSELF.

IF a man have any advantage over others, or think himself to have it when he hath it not, it cannot but be that if he is an untaught man he shall be puffed up by it. Thus the tyrant says, I am he that is master of all. And what can you give me? Can you set my pursuit free of all hindrance? How is it in you to do that? For have you the gift of never falling into what you shun? or never missing the mark of your desire? And whence have you it? Come, now, in a ship do you trust to yourself or to the captain? or in a chariot, to any one else than the driver? And how will you do with regard to other acts? Even thus. Where, then, is your power? All men minister to me. And do I not minister to my plate, and I wash it and wipe it, and drive in a peg for my oil flask? What then, are these things greater than I? Nay, but they supply certain of my needs, and for this reason I take care of them. Yea, and do I not minister to my ass? Do I not wash his feet and groom him? Know you not that every man ministers to himself? And he ministers to you also, even as he doth to the ass. For who treats you as a man? Show me one that doth. Who wisheth to be like unto you? who becomes your imitator, as men did of Socrates? But I can cut off thy head. You say well. I had forgotten that I must pay regard to you as to a fever or the cholera; and set up an altar to you, as there is in Rome an altar to Fever.

What is it, then, whereby the multitude is troubled and terrified? The tyrant and his guards? Never—God forbid it! It is not possible that that which is by nature free should be troubled, by any other thing, or hindered, save by itself. But it is troubled by opinions of things. For when the tyrant saith to any one, I will bind thy leg, then he who setteth store by his leg saith, Nay, have pity! but he that setteth store by his own Will, If it seem more profitable to you, then bind it.

—“Dost thou not regard me?”

I do not regard you. I will show you that I am master. How can you be that? Me hath God set free; or think you that he would let his own son be enslaved? You are lord of my dead body—take that.

—“So when thou comest near to me, thou wilt not do me service?”

Nay, but I will do it to myself; and if you will have me say that I do it to you also, I tell you that I do it as to my kitchen pot.

This is no selfishness; for every living creature is so made that it doth all things for its own sake. For the sun doth all things for his own sake, and so, moreover, even Zeus himself. But when He will be Raingiver and Fruitgiver and Father of Gods and men, thou seest that He may not do these works and have these titles, but He be serviceable to the common good. And, on the whole, He hath so formed the nature of the reasoning creature that he may never win aught of his own good without he furnish something of service to the common good. Thus it is not to the excluding of the common good that a man do all things for himself. For is it to be expected that a man shall stand aloof from himself and his own interest? And where then would be that same and single principle which we observe in all things, their affection to themselves?

So, then, when we act on strange and foolish opinions of things beyond the Will, as though they were good or evil, it is altogether impossible but we shall do service to tyrants. And would it were to the tyrants alone, and not to their lackeys also!

But what hinders the man that hath distinguished these things to live easily and docile, looking calmly on all that is to be, and bearing calmly all that is past? Will you have me bear poverty? Come, and see what poverty is when it strikes one that knoweth how to play the part well. Will you have me rule? Give me power, then, and the pains of it. Banishment? Whithersoever I go, it shall be well with me; for in this place it was well with me, not because of the place, but because of the opinions which I shall carry away with me. For these no man can deprive me of. Yea, these only are mine own, whereof I cannot be deprived, and they suffice for me as long as I have them, wherever I be, or whatever I do.

— “But now is the time come to die.”

What say you? to die? Nay, make no tragedy of the business, but tell it as it is. Now is it time for my substance to be resolved again into the things wherefrom it came together. And what is dreadful in this? What of the things in the universe is about to perish? What new, or what unaccountable thing is about to come to pass? Is it for these things that a tyrant is feared? through these that the guards seem to bear swords so large and sharp? Tell that to others; but by me all these things have been examined; no man hath power on me. I have been set free by God, I know His commandments, henceforth no man can lead me captive. I have a liberator such as I need, and judges such as I need. Are you not the master of my body? What is that to me? Of my property? What is that to me? Of exile or captivity? Again, I say, from all these things, and the poor body itself, I will depart when you will. Try your power, and you shall know how far it reaches.

But the tyrant will bind — what? The leg. He will take away — what? The head. What, then, can he not bind and not take away? The Will. And hence that precept of the ancients — KNOW THYSELF.

Whom, then, can I still fear? The lackeys of the bedchamber? For what that they can do? Shut me out? Let them shut me out, if they find me wishing to go in.

—“Why, then, didst thou go to the doors?”

Because I hold it proper to join the play while the play lasts.

—“How, then, shalt thou not be shut out?”

Because if I am not received, I do not wish to enter; but always that which happens is what I wish. For I hold what God wills above what I will. I cleave to Him as His servant and follower; my impulses are one with His, my pursuit is one with His; in a word, my will is one with His. There is no shutting out for me—nay, but for those who would force their way in. And wherefore do I not force my way? Because I know that no good thing is dealt out within to those that enter. But when I hear some one congratulated on being honored by Cæsar, I say, What hath fortune brought him? A government? Has it also, then, brought him such an opinion as he ought to have? A magistracy? Hath he also gained the power to be a good magistrate? Why will I still push myself forward? A man scatters figs and almonds abroad; children seize them, and fight among themselves; but not so men, for they hold it too trifling a matter. And if a man should scatter about oyster shells, not even the children would seize them. Offices of government are dealt out—children will look for them; money is given—children will look for it; military commands, consulships—let children scramble for them. Let them be shut out and smitten, let them kiss the hands of the giver, of his slaves—it is figs and almonds to me. What then? If thou miss them when he is flinging them about, let it not vex thee. If a fig fall into thy bosom, take and eat it, for so far even a fig is to be valued. But if I must stoop down for it, and throw down another man, or another throw me down, and I flatter those who enter in, then neither is a fig worth so much, nor is any other of the things that are not good, even those which the philosophers have persuaded me not to think good.

THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

Even as in a sea voyage, when the ship is brought to anchor, and you go out to fetch in water, you make a bywork of gathering a few roots and shells by the way, but have need ever to keep your mind fixed on the ship, and constantly to look round, lest at any time the master of the ship call, and you must, if he call, cast away all those things, lest you be treated like the sheep that are bound and thrown into the hold : So it is with human life also. And if there be given wife and children instead of shells and roots, nothing shall hinder us to take them. But if the master call, run to the ship, forsaking all those things, and looking not behind. And if thou be in old age, go not far from the ship at any time, lest the master should call, and thou be not ready.

THE MARK OF EFFORT.

Seek not to have things happen as you choose them, but rather choose them to happen as they do, and so shall you live prosperously.

Disease is a hindrance of the body, not of the Will, unless the Will itself consent. Lameness is a hindrance of the leg, not of the Will. And this you may say on every occasion, for nothing can happen to you but you will find it a hindrance not of yourself but of some other thing.

What, then, are the things that oppress us and perturb us? What else than opinions? He that goeth away and leaveth his familiars and companions and wonted places and habits — with what else is he oppressed than his opinions? Now, little children, if they cry because their nurse has left them for a while, straightway forget their sorrow when they are given a small cake. Wilt thou be likened unto a little child?

—“Nay, by Zeus! for I would not be thus affected by a little cake, but by right opinions.”

And what are these?

They are such as a man should study all day long to observe — that he be not subject to the effects of anything that is alien to him, neither of friend, nor place, nor exercises ; yea, not even of his own body, but to remember the Law, and have it ever before his eyes. And what is the divine Law? To hold fast that which is his own, and to claim nothing that is another's ; to use what is given him, and not to covet what is not given ; to yield up easily and willingly what is taken away, giving thanks for the time that he has had it at his service. This do — or cry for the nurse and mamma ; for what doth it matter to what or whom thou art subject, from what thy welfare hangs? Wherein art thou better than one who bewails himself for his mistress, if thou lament thy exercises and porticoes and comrades, and all such pastime? Another cometh, grieving because he shall no more drink of the water of Dirce. And is the Marcian water worse than that of Dirce?

—"But I was used to the other."

And to this also thou shalt be used; and when thou art so affected towards it, lament for it too, and try to make a verse like that of Euripides—

The baths of Nero and the Marcian stream.

Behold how tragedies are made, when common chances happen to foolish men!

—"But when shall I see Athens and the Acropolis again?"

Wretched man! doth not that satisfy thee which thou seest every day? Hast thou aught better or greater to see than the sun, the moon, the stars, the common earth, the sea? But if withal thou mark the way of Him that governeth the whole, and bear Him about within thee, wilt thou still long for cut stones and a fine rock? And when thou shalt come to leave the sun itself and the moon, what wilt thou do? Sit down and cry, like the children? What, then, wert thou doing in the school? What didst thou hear, what didst thou learn? Why didst thou write thyself down a philosopher, when thou mightest have written the truth, as thus: 'I made certain beginnings, and read Chrysippus, but did not so much as enter the door of a philosopher'? For how shouldst thou have aught in common with Socrates, who died as he died, who lived as he lived,—or with Diogenes? Dost thou think that any of these men lamented or was indignant because he should see such a man or such a woman no more? or because he should not dwell in Athens or in Corinth, but, as it might chance, in Susa or Ecbatana? When a man can leave the banquet or the game when he pleases, shall such a one grieve if he remains? Shall he not, as in a game, stay only so long as he is entertained? A man of this stamp would easily endure such a thing as perpetual exile or sentence of death.

Wilt thou not now be weaned as children are, and take more solid food, nor cry any more after thy mother and nurse, wailing like an old woman?

—"But if I quit them I shall grieve them."

Thou grieve them? Never; but that shall grieve them which grieveth thee—Opinion. What hast thou, then, to do? Cast away thy own bad opinion; and they, if they do well, will cast away theirs ; if not, they are the causes of their own lamenting.

Man, be mad at last, as the saying is, for peace, for freedom, for magnanimity. Lift up thy head, as one delivered from slavery. Dare to look up to God and say : Deal with me henceforth as thou wilt ; I am of one mind with thee ; I am thine. I reject nothing that seems good to thee ; lead me whithersoever thou wilt, clothe me in what dress thou wilt. Wilt thou have me govern or live privately, or stay at home, or go into exile, or be a poor man, or a rich ? For all these conditions I will be thy advocate with men — I show the nature of each of them, what it is.

Nay, but sit in a corner and wait for thy mother to feed thee.

Who would Hercules have been if he had sat at home ? He would have been Eurystheus, and not Hercules. And how many companions and friends had he in his journeying about the world ? But nothing was dearer to him than God ; and for this he was believed to be the son of God, yea, and was the son of God. And trusting in God, he went about purging away lawlessness and wrong. But thou art no Hercules, and canst not purge away evils not thine own ? nor yet Theseus, who cleared Attica of evil things ? Then clear away thine own. From thy breast, from thy mind cast out, instead of Procrustes and Sciron, grief, fear, covetousness, envy, malice, avarice, effeminacy, profligacy. And these things cannot otherwise be cast out than by looking to God only, being affected only by him, and consecrated to his commands. But choosing anything else than this, thou wilt follow with groaning and lamentation whatever is stronger than thou, ever seeking prosperity in things outside thyself, and never able to attain it. For thou seekest it where it is not, and neglectest to seek it where it is.

FACULTIES.

Remember at anything that shall befall thee to turn to thyself and seek what faculty thou hast for making use of it. If thou see a beautiful person, thou wilt find a faculty for that — namely, self-mastery. If toil is laid upon thee, thou wilt find the faculty of Perseverance. If thou art reviled, thou wilt find Patience. And making this thy wont, thou shalt not be carried away by the appearances.

THAT A MAN MAY ACT HIS PART BUT NOT CHOOSE IT.

Remember that thou art an actor in a play, of such a part as it may please the director to assign thee ; of a short part if he choose a short part ; of a long one if he choose a long. And if he will have thee take the part of a poor man or of a cripple, or a governor, or a private person, mayest thou act that part with grace ! For thine it is to act well the allotted part, but to choose it is another's.

Say no more then How will it be with me ? for however it be thou wilt settle it well, and the issue shall be fortunate. What would Hercules have been had he said, How shall I contrive that a great lion may not appear to me, or a great boar, or a savage man ? And what hast thou to do with that ? if a great boar appear, thou wilt fight the greater fight ; if evil men, thou wilt clear the earth of them. But if I die thus ? Thou wilt die a good man, in the accomplishing of a noble deed. For since we must by all means die, a man cannot be found but he will be doing somewhat, either tilling or digging or trading or governing, or having an indigestion or a diarrhea. What wilt thou, then, that Death shall find thee doing ? I, for my part, will choose some work, humane, beneficent, social, noble. But if I am not able to be found doing things of this greatness, then, at least, I will be doing that which none can hinder me to do, that which is given to me to do — namely, correcting myself, bettering my faculty for making use of appearances, working out my peace, giving what is due in every obligation of life ; and if I prosper so far, then entering upon the third topic of philosophy, which concerneth the security of judgments.

If Death shall find me in the midst of these studies, it shall suffice me if I can lift up my hands to God and say, The means which thou gavest me for the perceiving of thy government, and for the following of the same, have I not neglected : so far as in me lies, I have not dishonored thee. Behold how I have used my senses, and my natural conceptions. Have I ever blamed thee ? was I ever offended at aught that happened, or did I desire it should happen otherwise ? Did I ever desire to transgress my obligations ? That thou didst beget me I thank thee for what thou gavest. I am content that I have used thy gifts so long. Take them again, and set them in what place thou wilt, for thine were all things, and thou gavest them me.

Is it not enough to depart in this condition? and what life is better and fairer than one like this, and what end more happy?

THAT EVERY MAN FULFILL HIS OWN TASK.

Let such thoughts never afflict thee as, I shall live unhonored, and never be anybody anywhere. For if lack of honor be an evil, thou canst no more fall into evil through another's doings than into vice. Is it, then, of thy own doing to be made a governor, or invited to feasts? By no means. How, then, is this to be unhonored? How shouldst thou never be anybody anywhere, whom it behooves to be somebody only in the things that are in thine own power, wherein it lies with thee to be of the greatest worth?

But I shall not be able to serve my friends. How sayst thou? to serve them? They shall not have money from thee, nor shalt thou make them Roman citizens. Who, then, told thee that these were of the things that are in our power, and not alien to us? And who can give that which himself hath not?

Acquire, then, they say, that we may possess. If I can acquire, and lose not piety, and faith, and magnanimity withal, show me the way, and I will do it. But if ye will have me lose the good things I possess, that ye may compass things that are not good at all, how unjust and unthinking are ye! But which will ye rather have—money, or a faithful and pious friend? Then, rather take part with me to this end; and ask me not to do aught through which I must cast away those things.

But, he saith, I shall not do my part in serving my country. Again, what is this service? Thy country shall not have porticoes nor baths from thee, and what then? Neither hath she shoes from the smith, nor arms from the cobbler; but it is enough if every man fulfill his own task. And if thou hast made one other pious and faithful citizen for her, art thou, then, of no service? Wherefore, neither shalt thou be useless to thy country.

What place, then, he saith, can I hold in the State? Whatever place thou canst, guarding still thy faith and piety. But if in wishing to serve her thou cast away these things, what wilt thou profit her then, when perfected in shamelessness and faithlessness?

THE WORLD'S PRICE FOR THE WORLD'S WORTH.

Is some one preferred before thee at a feast, or in salutation, or in being invited to give counsel? Then, if these things are good, it behooves thee rejoice that he hath gained them; but if evil, be not vexed that thou hast not gained them; but remember that if thou act not as other men to gain the things that are not in our own power, neither canst thou be held worthy of a like reward with them.

For how is it possible for him who will not hang about other men's doors to have a like reward with him who doth so? or him who will not attend on them with him who doth attend? or him who will not flatter them with the flatterer? Thou art unjust, then, and insatiable, if thou desire to gain those things for nothing, without paying the price for which they are sold.

But how much is a lettuce sold for? A penny, perchance. If any one, then, will spend a penny, he shall have lettuce; but thou, not spending, shalt not have. But think not thou art worse off than he; for as he has the lettuce, so thou the penny which thou wouldst not give.

And likewise in this matter. Thou art not invited to some man's feast? That is, for thou gavest not to the host the price of the supper; and it is sold for flattery, it is sold for attendance. Pay, then, the price, if it will profit thee, for which the thing is sold. But if thou wilt not give the price, and wilt have the thing, greedy art thou and infatuated.

Shalt thou have nothing, then, instead of the supper? Thou shalt have this—not to have praised one whom thou hadst no mind to praise, and not to have endured the insolence of his doorkeepers.

THE MIND'S SECURITY.

If any one should set your body at the mercy of every passer-by, you would be indignant. When, therefore, you set your own mind at the mercy of every chance, to be troubled and perturbed when any one may revile you, have you no shame of this?

THAT A MAN SHOULD BE ONE MAN.

In every work you will take in hand mark well what must go before and what must follow, and so proceed. For else you shall at first set out eagerly, as not regarding what is to follow ; but in the end, if any difficulties have arisen, you will leave it off with shame.

So you wish to conquer in the Olympic games? And I, too, by the Gods ; and a fine thing it would be. But mark the prefaces and the consequences, and then set to work. You must go under discipline, eat by rule, abstain from dainties, exercise yourself at the appointed hour, in heat or cold, whether you will or no, drink nothing cold, nor wine at will ; in a word, you must give yourself over to the trainer as to a physician. Then in the contest itself there is the digging race, and you are like enough to dislocate your wrist, or turn your ankle, to swallow a great deal of dust, to be soundly drubbed, and after all these things to be defeated.

If, having considered these things, you are still in the mind to enter for the contest, then do so. But without consideration you will turn from one thing to another like a child, who now plays the wrestler, now the gladiator, now sounds the trumpet, then declaims like an actor ; and so you, too, will be first an athlete, then a gladiator, then an orator, then a philosopher, and nothing with your whole soul ; but as an ape you will mimic everything you see, and be charmed with one thing after another. For you approached nothing with consideration nor regularity, but rashly, and with a cold desire.

And thus some men, having seen a philosopher, and heard discourse like that of Euphrates (yet who indeed can say that any discourse is like his?), desire that they also may become philosophers.

But, O man ! consider first what it is you are about to do, and then inquire of your own nature whether you can carry it out. Will you be a pentathlos, or a wrestler? Then, scan your arms and thighs ; try your loins. For different men are made for different ends.

Think you, you can be a sage, and continue to eat and drink and be wrathful and take offense just as you were wont? Nay, but you must watch and labor, and withdraw yourself from your household, and be despised by any serving boy, and be ridiculed by your neighbors, and take the lower place everywhere, in honors, in authority, in courts of justice, in dealings of every kind.

Consider these things—whether you are willing at such a price to gain peace, freedom, and an untroubled spirit. And if not, then attempt it not, nor, like a child, play now the philosopher, then the taxgatherer, then the orator, then the Procurator of Cæsar. For these things agree not among themselves; and, good or bad, it behooves you to be one man. You should be perfecting either your own ruling faculty, or your outward well-being; spending your art either on the life within or the life without; that is to say, you must hold your place either among the sages or the vulgar.

NATURAL PHILOSOPHY AT THE CHRISTIAN ERA.

By PLINY THE ELDER.

[CAIUS PLINIUS SECUNDUS was born in North Italy, A.D. 23, of a wealthy and influential family. He was in the army from the age of twenty-three to twenty-nine; then practiced law unsuccessfully in Rome; shortly retired to his estates and spent his time in literary work during most of Nero's reign. Returning to Rome in 73 under Vespasian (whom he had known in the army and who received him as an intimate), and adopting his sister's son, "Pliny the Younger," he kept on his studies with monastic severity in the intervals of public work, till his death in 79 during the eruption of Vesuvius. (See letters of his nephew.) He wrote a work on the training of an orator, and one on grammar; but his chief work, still extant, is his immense "Natural History."]

THUNDER AND LIGHTNING.

It is not generally known, what has been discovered by men who are the most eminent for their learning, in consequence of their assiduous observations of the heavens, that the fires which fall upon the earth, and receive the name of thunderbolts, proceed from the three superior stars, but principally from the one which is situated in the middle. It may, perhaps, depend on the superabundance of moisture from the superior orbit communicating with the heat from the inferior, which are expelled in this manner; and hence it is commonly said, the thunderbolts are darted by Jupiter. And as in burning wood, the burnt part is cast off with a crackling noise, so does the star throw off this celestial fire, bearing the omens of future events, even the part which is thrown off not losing its divine operation. And this takes place more particularly when the air is in an unsettled state, either because the moisture which is then collected excites the greatest quantity of fire, or because the air is disturbed, as if by the parturition of the pregnant star. . . .

It cannot be denied that fire proceeding from the stars which are above the clouds may fall on them, as we frequently observe on serene evenings, and that the air is agitated by the impulse, as darts when they are hurled whiz through the air. And when it arrives at the cloud, a discordant kind of vapor is produced, as when hot iron is plunged into water, and a wreath of smoke is evolved. Hence arise squalls. And if wind or vapor be struggling in the cloud, thunder is discharged; if it bursts out with a flame, there is a thunderbolt; if it be long in forcing out its way, it is simply a flash of lightning. By the latter the cloud is simply rent, by the former it is shattered. Thunder is produced by the stroke given to the condensed air, and hence it is that the fire darts from the chinks of the clouds. It is possible, also, that the vapor, which has risen from the earth, being repelled by the stars, may produce thunder when it is pent up in a cloud; nature restraining the sound whilst the vapor is struggling to escape, but when it does escape, the sound bursting forth, as is the case with bladders that are distended with air. It is possible, also, that the spirit, whatever it be, may be kindled by friction, when it is so violently projected. It is possible that, by the dashing of the two clouds, the lightning may flash out, as is the case when two stones are struck against each other. But all these things appear to be casual. Hence there are thunderbolts which produce no effect, and proceed from no immediate actual cause; but by these mountains and seas are struck, and no injury is done. Those which prognosticate future events proceed from on high and from stated causes, and they come from their peculiar stars.

THE GOOSE IN WAR, LOVE, GOURMANDISM, SYBARITISM, AND SICKNESS.

The goose keeps a vigilant guard; a fact which is well attested by the defense of the Capitol at a moment when by the silence of the dogs the commonwealth had been betrayed; for which reason it is that the Censors always, the first thing of all, attend to the farming out of the feeding of the sacred geese. What is still more, too, there is a love-story about this animal. At Ægium one is said to have conceived a passion for a beautiful boy, a native of Olenos, and another for Glauce, a damsel, who was lute-player to King Ptolemy; for whom, at the same time a ram is said also to have conceived a passion. One might almost be tempted to think that these creatures have an appreciation of wisdom; for it is said that one of them was the constant companion of the philosopher Lacydes, and would never leave him, either in public or when at the bath, by night or by day. . . .

Our people, however, only esteem the goose for the goodness of its liver. When they are crammed, this grows to a very large size, and on being taken from the animal, is made still larger by being soaked in honeyed milk. And, indeed, it is not without good reason that it is matter of debate who it was that first discovered so great a delicacy; whether, in fact, it was Scipio Metellus, a man of consular dignity, or M. Seius, a contemporary of his, and a Roman of equestrian rank. However, a thing about which there is no dispute, it was Messalinus Cotta, the son of the orator Messala, who first discovered the art of roasting the webbed feet of the goose, and of cooking them in a ragout with cocks' combs: for I shall faithfully award each culinary palm to such as I shall find deserving of it. It is a wonderful fact, in relation to this bird, that it comes on foot all the way from the country of the Morini to Rome; those that are tired are placed in the front rank, while the rest, taught by a natural instinct to move in a compact body, drive them on.

A second income, too, is also to be derived from the feathers of the white goose. In some places, this animal is plucked twice a year, upon which the feathers quickly grow again. Those are the softest which lie nearest to the body, and those that come from Germany are the most esteemed; the geese there are white, but of small size, and are called gantæ. The price paid for their feathers is five denarii per pound. It is from this fruitful source that we have repeated charges brought against the commanders of our auxiliaries, who are in the habit of detaching whole cohorts from the posts where they ought to be on guard, in pursuit of these birds; indeed, we have come to such a pitch of effeminacy, that nowadays not even the men can think of lying down without the aid of the goose's feathers, by way of pillow. . . .

The part of Syria which is called Commagene has discovered another invention also: the fat of the goose is inclosed with some cinnamon in a brazen vessel, and then covered with a thick layer of snow. Under the influence of the excessive cold, it becomes macerated, and fit for use as a medicament, remarkable for its properties: from the country which produces it, it is known to us as "Commagenum."

THE CHENALOPEX, THE CHENEROS, THE TETRAO, AND THE OTIS.

To the goose genus belong also the chenalopex and the cheneros, a little smaller than the common goose, and which forms the most exquisite of all the dainties that Britannia provides for the table. The tetrao is remarkable for the luster of its plumage and its extreme darkness, while the eyelids are of a scarlet color. Another species of this last bird exceeds the vulture in size, and is of a similar color to it; and, indeed, there is no bird, with the exception of the ostrich, the body of which is of a greater weight; for to such a size does it grow, that it becomes incapable of moving, and allows itself to be taken on the ground. The Alps and the region of the North produce these birds; but when kept in aviaries, they lose their fine flavor, and by retaining their breath will die of mere vexation. Next to these in size are the birds which in Spain they call the "tarda," and in Greece the "otis": they are looked upon, however, as very inferior food; the marrow, when disengaged from the bones, immediately emits a most noisome smell.

CRANES.

By the departure of the cranes, which, as we have already stated, were in the habit of waging war with them, the nation of the Pygmies now enjoys a respite. The tracts over which they travel must be immense, if we only consider that they come all the way from the Eastern Sea. These birds agree by common consent at what moment they shall set out, fly aloft to look out afar, select a leader for them to follow, and have sentinels duly posted in the rear, which relieve each other by turns, utter loud cries, and with their voice keep the whole flight in proper array. During the night, also, they place sentinels on guard, each of which holds a little stone in its claw; if the bird should happen to fall asleep, the claw becomes relaxed and the stone falls to the ground, and so convicts it of neglect. The rest sleep in the meanwhile, with the head beneath the wing, standing first on one leg and then on the other; the leader looks out, with neck erect, and gives warning when required.

These birds, when tamed, are very frolicsome, and even when alone will describe a sort of circle, as they move along with their clumsy gait.

It is a well-known fact, that these birds, when about to fly over the Euxine, first of all repair to the narrowest part of it, that lies between the two promontories of Criumetopon and Carambis, and then ballast themselves with coarse sand. When they have arrived midway in the passage, they throw away the stones from out of their claws, and, as soon as they reach the mainland, discharge the sand by the throat.

STORKS.

Cornelius Nepos, who died in the reign of the late Emperor Augustus, after stating that thrushes had been fattened for the first time shortly before that period, has added that storks were more esteemed as food than cranes; whereas at the present day, this last bird is one of those that are held in the very highest esteem, while no one will so much as touch the other.

Up to the present time it has not been ascertained from what place the storks come, or whither they go when they leave us. There can be no doubt but that, like the cranes, they come from a very great distance, the cranes being our winter, the storks our summer, guests. When about to take their departure, the storks assemble at a stated place, and are particularly careful that all shall attend, so that not one of their kind may be left behind, with the exception of such as may be in captivity or tamed; and then on a certain day they set out, as though by some law they were directed to do so. No one has ever yet seen a flight of cranes taking their departure, although they have been often observed preparing to depart; and in the same way, too, we never see them arrive, but only when they have arrived; both their departure as well as their arrival take place in the night. Although, too, we see them flying about in all directions, it is still supposed that they never arrive at any other time but in the night. Pythonoscome is the name given to some vast plains of Asia, where, as they assemble together, they keep up a gabbling noise, and tear to pieces the one that happens to arrive the last; after which they take up their departure. It has been remarked that after the ides of August, they are never by any accident to be seen there.

There are some writers who assure us that the stork has no tongue. So highly are they esteemed for their utility in destroying serpents, that in Thessaly it was a capital crime for any one to kill a stork, and by the laws the same penalty was inflicted for it as for homicide.

Storks return to their former nests, and the young in their turn support their parents when old.

SWANS.

The flocks, forming a point, move along with great impetus, much indeed after the manner of our Liburnian beaked galleys, and it is by doing so that they are enabled to cleave the air more easily than if they presented to it a broad front. The flight gradually enlarges in the rear, much in the form of a wedge, presenting a vast surface to the breeze, as it impels them onward; those that follow place their necks on those that go before, while the leading birds, as they become weary, fall to the rear.

It is stated that at the moment of the swan's death, it gives utterance to a mournful song; but this is an error, in my opinion,—at least I have tested the truth of the story on several occasions. These birds will eat the flesh of one another.

THE HYÆNA IN MAGIC AND MEDICINE.

Many wonderful things are related of this animal; and strangest of all, that it imitates the human voice among the stalls of the shepherds; and while there, learns the name of some one of them, and then calls him away, and devours him. It is said also that it can imitate a man vomiting, and that in this way, it attracts the dogs and then falls upon them. It is the only animal that digs up graves, in order to obtain the bodies of the dead. The female is rarely caught; its eyes, it is said, are of a thousand various colors and changes of shade. It is said also that in coming in contact with its shadow, dogs will lose their voice; and that by certain magical influences, it can render any animal immovable around which it has walked three times.

But of all animals, it is the hyæna that has been held in the highest admiration by the magicians, who have gone so far as to attribute to it certain magical virtues even, and the power of alluring human beings and depriving them of their senses. Of its change of sex each year, and other monstrous peculiarities in its nature, we have spoken already; we will now proceed to describe the medicinal virtues that are ascribed to it.

The hyæna, it is said, is particularly terrible to panthers; so much so, indeed, that they will not attempt to make the slightest resistance to it, and will never attack a man who has any portion of a hyæna's skin about him. A thing truly marvelous to tell of, if the hides of these two animals are hung up facing one another, the hair will fall from off the panther's skin! When the hyæna flies before the hunter, it turns off on the right, and letting the man get before it, follows in his track; should it succeed in doing which, the man is sure to lose his senses and fall from his horse even. But if, on the other hand, it turns off to the left, it is a sign that the animal is losing strength, and that it will soon be taken. The easiest method, however, of taking it, they say, is for the hunter to tie his girdle with seven knots, and to make as many knots in the whip with which he guides his horse. In addition to all this, so full of quirks and subtleties are the vain conceits of the magicians, they recommend the hyæna to be captured while the moon is passing through the sign of Gemini, and every hair of it to be preserved, if possible. They say, too, that the skin of the head is highly efficacious, if attached to a person suffering from headache; that the gall, applied to the forehead, is curative of ophthalmia; and that if the gall is boiled down with three cyathi of Attic honey and one ounce of saffron, it will be a most effectual preservative against that disease, the same preparation being equally good for the dispersion of films on the eyes and cataract. If, again, this preparation is kept till it is old, it will be all the better for improving the sight, due care being taken to preserve it in a box of Cyprian copper; they assert also that it is good for the cure of argema, eruptions and excrescences of the eyes, and marks upon those organs. For diseases of the crystalline humors of the eyes, it is recommended to anoint them with the gravy of the hyæna's liver roasted fresh, incorporated with clarified honey.

We learn also, from the same sources, that the teeth of the hyæna are useful for the cure of toothache, the diseased tooth being either touched with them, or the animal's teeth being arranged in their regular order, and attached to the patient; that the shoulders of this animal are good for the cure of pains in the arms and shoulders; that the teeth, extracted from the left side of the jaw, and wrapped in the skin of a sheep or he-goat, are an effectual cure for pains in the stomach; that the lights of the animal, taken with the food, are good for cœliac affections; that the lights, reduced to ashes and applied with oil, are also soothing to the stomach; that the marrow of the backbone, used with old oil and gall, is strengthening to the sinews; that the liver, tasted thrice just before the paroxysms, is good for quartan fevers; that the ashes of the vertebræ, applied in hyæna's skin with the tongue and right foot of a sea-calf and a bull's gall, the whole boiled up together, are soothing for gout; that for the same disease hyæna's gall is advantageously employed in combination with stone of Assos; that for cold shiverings, spasms, sudden fits of starting, and palpitations of the heart, it is a good plan to eat some portion of a hyæna's heart cooked, care being taken to reduce the rest to ashes, and to apply it with the brains of the animal to the part affected; that this last composition, or the gall applied alone, acts as a depilatory, the hairs being first plucked out which are wanted not to grow again; that by this method superfluous hairs of the eyelids may be removed.

The fumes of the burnt fat of this animal will put serpents to flight, they say; and the jawbone, pounded with anise and taken with the food, is a cure for shivering fits. A fumigation made therewith has the effect of an emmenagogue; and such are the frivolous and absurd conceits of the professors of the magic art, that they boldly assert that if a man attached to his arm a tooth from the right side of the upper jaw, he will never miss any object he may happen to aim at with a dart. The palate, dried and warmed with Egyptian alum, is curative of bad odors and ulcers of the mouth, care being taken to renew the application three times. Dogs, they say, will never bark at persons who have a hyæna's tongue in the shoe, beneath the sole of the foot. The left side of the brain, applied to the nostrils, is said to have a soothing effect upon all dangerous maladies either in men or beasts. They say, too, that the skin of the forehead is a preservative against all fascinations; that the flesh of the neck, whether eaten or dried and taken in drink, is good for pains in the loins; that the sinews of the back and shoulders, used as a fumigation, are good for pains in the sinews; that the bristles of the snout, applied to a woman's lips, have all the effect of a philter; and that the liver, administered in drink, is curative of griping pains and urinary calculi.

OTHER MAGICAL CHARMS.

The following are some of the reveries of magic. A whetstone upon which iron tools have been frequently sharpened, if put, without his being aware of it, beneath the pillow of a person sinking under the effects of poison, will make him give evidence and declare what poison has been administered, and at what time and place, though at the same time he will not disclose the author of the crime. When a person has been struck by lightning, if the body is turned upon the side which has sustained the injury, he will instantly recover the power of speech—that is quite certain. For the cure of inguinal tumors, some persons take the thrum of an old web, and after tying seven or nine knots in it, mentioning at each knot the name of some widow woman or other, attach it to the part affected. To assuage the pain of a wound, they recommend the party to take a nail or any other substance that has been trodden under foot, and to wear it, attached to the body with the thrum of a web. To get rid of warts, some lie in a footpath with the face upwards, when the moon is twenty days old at least, and after fixing their gaze upon it, extend their arms above the head, and rub themselves with anything within their reach. If a person is extracting a corn at the moment that a star shoots, he will experience an immediate cure, they say. By pouring vinegar upon the hinges of a door, a thick liniment is formed, which, applied to the forehead, will alleviate headache; an effect equally produced, we are told, by binding the temples with a halter with which a man has been hanged. When a fishbone happens to stick in the throat, it will go down immediately if the person plunges his feet into cold water; but where the accident has happened with any other kind of bone, the proper remedy is to apply to the head some fragments of bones taken from the same dish. In cases where bread has stuck in the throat, the best plan is to take some of the same bread, and insert it in both ears.

CORRESPONDENCE OF PLINY THE YOUNGER.

(Translation by WILLIAM MELMOTH.)

[CAIUS PLINIUS CECILIUS SECUNDUS, nephew of Pliny the Elder, was born A.D. 61, and on his father's death was adopted by his uncle about A.D. 70. He was of precocious ability; wrote a Greek tragedy at thirteen, studied rhetoric under Quintilian, began to speak in the Forum at nineteen, and became a distinguished advocate, of immense repute for learning. He rose high in public service under the good emperors, after being a military tribune in Syria, was quæstor, prætor, consul under Trajan, proprætor of Pontus and Bithynia, and curator of the Tiber. He died after A.D. 107. His Letters are very valuable for the history of the time.]

TO JUNIUS MAURICUS—MATCH-MAKING.

YOU desire me to look out a proper husband for your niece: it is with justice you enjoin me that office. You were a witness to the esteem and affection I bore that great man, her father, and with what noble instruction he formed my youth, and taught me to deserve those praises he was pleased to bestow upon me. You could not give me, then, a more important, or more agreeable commission; nor could I be employed in an office of higher honor than that of choosing a young man worthy of being father of the grandchildren of Rusticus Arulenus; a choice I should be long in determining if I were not acquainted with Minutius Æmilianus, who seems formed for our purpose. He loves me with all that warmth of affection which is usual between young men of equal years (as indeed I have the advance of him but a very few), and reveres me, at the same time, with all the deference due to age; and, in a word, he is no less desirous to model himself by my instructions than I was by those of yourself and your brother. He is a native of Brixia, one of those provinces in Italy which still retain much of the frugal simplicity and purity of ancient manners. He is the son of Minutius Macrinus, whose humble desires were satisfied with standing at the head of the Equestrian order; for, though he was nominated by Vespasian among those whom that prince dignified with the pretorian office, yet, with an inflexible greatness of mind, he resolutely preferred an elegant repose to the ambitious, shall I call them, or honorable pursuits in which we in public life are engaged? His grandmother on the mother's side is Serrana Procula, of Padua; you are no stranger to the character of its citizens ; yet Serrana is looked upon, even among these people of correct manners, as an exemplary instance of strict virtue. Acilius, his uncle, is a man of singular gravity, wisdom, and integrity. In short, you will find nothing throughout his family unworthy of yours. Minutius himself has great vivacity, as well as application, together with a most amiable and becoming modesty. He has already, with much credit, passed through the offices of quaestor, tribune, and praetor, so that you will be spared the trouble of soliciting for him those honorable employments. He has a genteel and florid countenance, with a certain noble mien that speaks the man of distinction ; advantages, I think, by no means to be slighted, and which I consider as the proper tribute to virgin innocence. I am doubtful whether I should add that his father is very rich. When I contemplate the character of those who require a husband of my choosing, I know it is unnecessary to mention wealth ; but when I reflect upon the prevailing manners of the age, and even the laws of Rome, which rank a man according to his possessions, it certainly claims some regard ; and indeed, in establishments of this nature, where children and many other circumstances are to be duly weighed, it is an article that well deserves to be taken into account.

You will be inclined, perhaps, to suspect that affection has had too great a share in the character I have been drawing, and that I have heightened it beyond the truth. But I will stake all my credit, that you will find every circumstance far beyond what I have represented. I confess, indeed, I love Minutius (as he justly deserves) with the warmth of a most ardent affection ; but for that very reason I would not ascribe more to his merit than I know it will support. Farewell.

TO SUETONIUS TRANQUILLUS ON DREAMS.

Your letter informs me that you are extremely alarmed by a dream ; apprehending that it forebodes some ill success to you in the cause you have undertaken to defend, and therefore desire that I would get it adjourned for a few days, or at least to the next. This is a favor, you are sensible, not very easily obtained, but I will use all my interest for that purpose ; —

For dreams descend from Jove. — HOM.

In the meanwhile, it is very material for you to recollect whether your dreams generally represent things as they afterwards fall out, or quite the reverse. But if I may judge of yours by one that happened to myself, you have nothing to fear, for it portends you will acquit yourself with great success. I had promised to be counsel for Julius Pastor, when I fancied in my sleep that my mother-in-law came to me, and throwing herself at my feet, earnestly entreated me not to be concerned in the cause. I was at that time a very young man; the case was to be argued in the four centumviral courts; my adversaries were some of the most considerable men in Rome and particular favorites of Cæsar; any of which circumstances was sufficient, after such an inauspicious dream, to have discouraged me. Notwithstanding this, I engaged in the cause, reflecting that, —

Without a sign, his sword the brave man draws,
And asks no omen but his country's cause:

for I looked upon the promise I had given to be as sacred to me as my country, or, if that were possible, more so. The event happened as I wished; and it was that very cause which first procured me the favorable attention of the public, and threw open to me the gates of fame. Consider, then, whether your dream, like that which I have related, may not pre-signify success. But after all, perhaps, you will think it more safe to pursue this cautious maxim, "Never do a thing concerning the rectitude of which you are in doubt:" if so, write me word. In the interval I will consider of some expedient, and endeavor that your cause shall be heard any day you like best. In this respect you are in a better situation than I was: the court of the Centumviri, where I was to plead, admits of no adjournment; whereas, in that where your cause is to be heard, though it is not easy to procure one, still, however, it is possible. Farewell.

TO ARRIANUS ON A STATE TRIAL.

You take pleasure, I know, in a relation of anything that is transacted in the Senate, worthy of that august assembly: for though love of ease has led you into retirement, your heart still retains its zeal for the majesty of the commonwealth. Accept, then, the following account of what lately passed in that venerable body : a transaction forever memorable by its importance, and not only remarkable by the quality of the person concerned, but useful by the severity of the example. Marius Priscus, formerly proconsul of Africa, being impeached by that province, instead of entering upon his defense, petitioned that a commission of select judges might be appointed for his trial. Cornelius Tacitus and myself, being assigned by the Senate counsel for that province, thought it our duty to inform the house that the crimes alleged against Priscus were of too atrocious a nature to fall within the cognizance of an inferior court ; for he was charged with venality in the administration of justice, and even of taking money to pass sentence of death upon persons perfectly innocent. Fronto Catus rose in his behalf, and moved that the whole inquiry might be confined to the single article of bribery ; displaying upon this occasion all the force of that pathetic eloquence he is master of, in order to raise the compassion of the Senate. The debates grew warm, and the members were much divided in their sentiments. Some were of opinion that it was a matter which did not legally come under the discussion of the Senate ; others, that the house was at liberty to proceed upon it, or not, as it should see proper ; and that none of his different crimes ought to escape the hand of justice. At last, Julius Ferox, the consul elect, a man of great worth and integrity, proposed that judges should be granted him provisionally, and, in the meanwhile, that those persons should be proceeded against, to whom it was alleged he had sold innocent blood. Not only the majority of the Senate gave in to this opinion ; but, after all the contention that had been raised, it was generally adopted. I could not but observe, upon this occasion, that sentiments of compassion, though they at first operate with great force, give way at last to the cool dictates of reason and reflection ; and that numbers will support an opinion by joining in the general voice, which they would never singly and deliberately defend. The fact is, there is no discerning the right side of a question amidst the confused clamors of a crowd ; one must consider it apart, if one would view it in its true light. Vitellius Honoratus and Flavius Martianus, the persons who were ordered to be summoned, were brought before the house. Honoratus was charged with having given three hundred thousand sesterces to procure a sentence of banishment against a Roman knight, as also the capital conviction of seven of his friends. Against Martianus it was alleged that he gave seven hundred thousand, in order to procure another person to be condemned to suffer various tortures; which he accordingly inflicted, and the unhappy man was first whipped, afterwards sent to work in the mines, and at last strangled in prison. But the death of Honoratus prevented the justice of the Senate upon him. Martianus, however, appeared, but without Priscus. Tullius Cerealis, therefore, who had been formerly consul, thought proper to move, agreeably to his privilege as a senator, that Priscus might have notice of the business then before the house: whether it was because he thought his being present would raise more compassion or more resentment toward him; or because, as I am inclined to believe, he thought it most equitable, that as the charge was against them both, so they should both join in the defence, and be acquitted or condemned together. The affair was adjourned to the next meeting of the Senate, which proved the most august and solemn I was ever present at. The emperor himself (for he was consul) presided. It happened likewise to be the month of January; a season remarkable on many accounts, and particularly for the great number of senators it always brings together. Not only the importance of the cause, the noise it had made in the world, the expectation that had been raised by the several adjournments, but that innate curiosity in mankind to acquaint themselves with everything remarkable and uncommon, drew the people from all parts. Figure to yourself the concern and anxiety which we who were to speak before such an awful assembly, and in the presence of the prince, must have felt! I have often pleaded in the Senate; and indeed there is no place where I am more favorably heard; yet, as if the scene had been entirely new to me, I found myself under an unusual distress upon this occasion. Besides, there was something in the circumstances of the person accused which added considerably to the difficulties I labored under: a man, once of consular dignity, and a member of the sacred college, now stood before me stripped of all his honors. It was a painful office, I thought, to accuse one who appeared already condemned; and for whom, therefore, though his crimes were enormous, compassion took its turn, and seemed to plead in his behalf. However, I collected myself enough to begin my speech; and the applause I received was equal to the fears I had suffered. I spoke almost five hours successively (for they indulged me above an hour beyond the time at first allotted to me), and what at my first setting out had most contributed to raise my apprehensions, proved in the event greatly to my advantage. The goodness, the care (I dare not say the solicitude), of the emperor were so great toward me that he frequently spoke to one of my attendants, who stood behind me, to desire me to spare myself; imagining I should exert my strength beyond what the weakness of my constitution would admit. Claudius Marcellinus replied in behalf of Martianus. After which the assembly broke up till the next day; for the evening coming on, there was not time to proceed further. The next day Salvius Liberalis, a very clear, acute, and spirited orator, spoke in defense of Priscus: and he exerted all his talents upon this occasion. C. Tacitus replied to him in a strain of the most powerful eloquence, and with a certain dignity which distinguishes all his speeches. Fronto Catus arose up a second time in favor of Priscus, and in a very impressive speech endeavored, as indeed the case required, rather to soften the judges, than defend his client. The evening coming on, the Senate proceeded no further that day, but met the next, and entered upon the proofs. It was much to the honor of the Senate, and worthy of ancient Rome, thus to be adjourned only by the night, and then reassemble for three days successively. The excellent Cornutus Tertullus, consul elect, ever firm in the cause of truth, moved that Marius should pay into the treasury the seven hundred thousand sesterces he had received, and be banished Italy. Tertullus was for extending the sentence still farther with respect to Martianus, and proposed that he should be banished even from Africa. He concluded with adding that Tacitus and I, having faithfully and diligently discharged the parts assigned to us, the Senate should declare we had executed our trust to their satisfaction. The consuls elect, and those who had already enjoyed that office, agreed with Tertullus, except Pompeius: he moved that Priscus should pay the seven hundred thousand sesterces into the treasury, but suffer no other punishment than what had been already inflicted upon him for extortion: as for Martianus, he was for having him banished during five years only. There was a large party for both opinions, and perhaps the majority secretly inclined to the milder sentence; for many of those who appeared at first to agree with Tertullus, seemed afterwards inclined to join with Pompeius. But upon a division of the house, all those who stood near the consuls went over to the side of Tertullus. This being observed by the party of Pompeius, they also deserted him in the same manner; so that he was extremely exasperated against those who had urged him to this vote, particularly against Regulus, whom he upbraided for abandoning him in a step which he himself had advised. There is, indeed, such an inconsistency in the general character of Regulus, that he is at once both bold and timorous. Thus ended this important trial; but there remains a considerable part of the business still behind. It is concerning Hostilius Firminus, lieutenant to Marius Priscus, who is strongly charged with being an accomplice; as it appears by the account books of Martianus, and by a speech which he made in an assembly of the people at Leptis, that he had exacted fifty thousand denarii of Martianus; that he was also accessory to the wicked administration of Priscus; and that he received ten thousand sesterces under the title of his perfumer: an office perfectly well adapted to this effeminate fop, who is all over essence and perfume. It was agreed, on the motion of Tertullus, to proceed against him the next meeting of the Senate: for, either by accident or design, he was at this time absent.

Thus have I given you an account of what is doing in town. Let me know, in return, the news of the country: how your shrubs and your vineyards, your corn and your delicate flocks of sheep flourish? In a word, if you should not send me a long letter, you must expect for the future to be punished in your own way, and to receive none but short ones from me. Farewell.

TO THE SAME.

The remaining part of the inquiry which I mentioned to you in my former letter, concerning the affair of Priscus, is at last, I will not say terminated as it ought, however it is finished. Firminus being brought before the Senate, made such a sort of defense as a man generally does who is conscious of detected guilt. The consuls elect were much divided what sentence to pass. Cornutus Tertullus moved he should be expelled the Senate; but Nerva, with more artifice, proposed that he should be only declared forever incapable of holding the office of proconsul: and this, as it had the appearance of a milder sentence prevailed; though in truth it is of all others most severe. For can any situation be more wretched than to be obliged to undergo the fatigue of a member of the Senate, at the same time that one is cut off from all hopes of enjoying those honors to which a senator is entitled? And after having received such an ignominy, were it not better to be forever buried in retirement than to be marked out by so conspicuous a station, to the view and scorn of the world? Besides, to consider this with respect to the public, what can be more unbecoming the dignity of the Senate than to suffer a person to retain his seat in the house after having been publicly censured by that august assembly. What can be more indecent than for the criminal to be ranked with his judges? for a man excluded the proconsulship, because he behaved infamously as a lieutenant, to sit in judgment upon proconsuls? for one proved guilty of extortion, to condemn or acquit others of similar crimes? Yet these reflections, it seems, made no impression upon the majority. Votes go by number, not weight; nor can it be otherwise in assemblies of this kind, where nothing is more unequal than that equality which prevails in them; for though every member has the same right of suffrage, every member has not the same strength of judgment to direct it.

I have thus discharged the promise I gave you in my last letter, which by this time, I imagine (unless any accident should have befallen the messenger), has reached your hands; for I trusted the conveyance to one of whose diligence and fidelity I am well assured. I hope you will now, on your part, make me as full a return for this and my former, as the scene you are in will afford. Farewell.

TO CORNELIUS NEPOS—STORY OF ARRIA.

I have frequently observed, that amongst the noble actions and remarkable sayings of distinguished persons in either sex, those which have been most celebrated have not always been the most worthy of admiration; and I am confirmed in this opinion, by a conversation I had yesterday with Fannia. This lady is granddaughter to that famous Arria, who animated her husband to meet death, by her own glorious example. She informed me of several particulars relating to Arria, not less heroic than this applauded action of hers, though less the subject of general renown; and which I am persuaded will raise her as much in your admiration as they did in mine.

Her husband, Cæcina Pætus, and her son were each attacked at the same time with a dangerous illness, of which the son died. This youth, who had a most beautiful person and amiable behavior, was not less endeared to his parents by his virtues than by the ties of affection. His mother managed his funeral so privately that Pætus did not know of his death. Whenever she came into his bedchamber, she pretended her son was better: and as often as he inquired concerning his health, she answered he had rested well or had eaten with an appetite.

When she found she could no longer restrain her grief, but her tears were gushing out, she would leave the room, and having given vent to her passion, return again with dry eyes and a serene countenance, as if she had dismissed every sentiment of sorrow at her entrance. Her resolution, no doubt, was truly noble; when, drawing the dagger she plunged it in her breast, and then presented it to her husband with that ever memorable, I had almost said that divine, expression, "Pætus, it is not painful." It must, however, be considered, when she spoke and acted thus, she was encouraged and supported by the prospect of immortal glory. But was it not something much greater, without the aid of such animating motives to hide her tears, to conceal her grief, and cheerfully act the mother when she was a mother no more?

Scribonianus had taken up arms in Illyria against Claudius, where, having lost his life, Pætus, who was of his party, was brought prisoner to Rome. When they were going to put him on board a ship, Arria besought the soldiers that she might be permitted to attend him. Certainly, said she, you cannot refuse a man of consular dignity, as he is, a few slaves to wait upon him; but if you will take me, I alone will perform their office. Her request was refused; upon which she hired a small fishing vessel, and boldly ventured to follow the ship. At her return to Rome, she met the wife of Scribonianus in the emperor's palace, who, pressing her to discover all she knew of that insurrection, What! said she, shall I regard thy advice, who saw'st thy husband murdered even in thy very arms, and yet survivest him? An expression which evinces that the glorious manner in which she put an end to her life was no unpremeditated effect of sudden passion. When Thræsea, who married her daughter, was dissuading her from her purpose of destroying herself, and among other arguments, said to her, Would you then advise your daughter to die with me, if my life were to be taken from me! Most certainly I would, she replied, if she had lived as long and in as much harmony with you, as I have with Pætus. This answer greatly heightened the alarm of her family, and made them observe her for the future more narrowly; which, when she perceived, she assured them all their caution would be to no purpose. You may oblige me, she said, to execute my resolution in a way that will give me more pain, but it is impossible you should prevent it. She had scarce said this, when she sprang from her chair, and running her head with the utmost violence against the wall, fell down in appearance dead.

But being brought to herself, I told you, said she, if you would not suffer me to take an easy path to death, I should make my way to it through some more difficult passage. Now, is there not, my friend, something much greater in all this than in the so-much-talked-of "Pætus, it is not painful"? to which, indeed, it seems to have led the way: and yet this last is the favorite topic of some, while all the former are passed over in profound silence. Whence I cannot but infer, what I observed in the beginning of my letter, that the noblest actions are not always the most celebrated. Farewell.

TO SURA — GHOST STORIES.

The present recess from business affords you leisure to communicate, and me to receive, information. I am very desirous to know your opinion concerning specters; whether you believe they have a real existence and are a sort of divinities, or are only the visionary impressions of a terrified imagination? What particularly inclines me to give credit to their reality is a story which I lately heard of Curtius Rufus. When he was in low circumstances, and unknown in the world, he attended the governor of Africa into that province. One evening, as he was walking in the public portico, he was extremely surprised with the apparition of a woman, whose figure and beauty were more than human. She told him she was the tutelar power who presided over Africa, and was come to inform him of the future events of his life: that he should go back to Rome, where he should be raised to the highest honors; should return to that province invested with the proconsular dignity, and there should die. Accordingly, every circumstance of this prediction was actually accomplished. It is said further, that upon his arrival at Carthage, as he was coming out of the ship, the same figure accosted him upon the shore. It is certain, at least, that being seized with a fit of illness, though there were no symptoms in his case that led his attendants to despair, he instantly gave up all hope of recovery; judging, it should seem, of the truth of the future part of the prophecy by that which had already been fulfilled, and of the misfortune which threatened him by the success which he had experienced. To this story let me add another, not less remarkable than the former, but attended with more terrifying circumstances: and I will give it you exactly as it was related to me. There was at Athens a large and commodious house, which lay under the disrepute of being haunted.

In the dead of the night a noise resembling the clashing of iron was frequently heard, which, if you listened more attentively, sounded like the rattling of chains. At first it seemed distant, but approached nearer by degrees, till a specter appeared in the form of an old man, extremely meager and ghastly, with a long beard and disheveled hair, rattling the chains on his feet and hands. The distressed inhabitants, in the meanwhile, passed their nights under the most dreadful terrors imaginable. This, as it broke their rest, ruined also their health, and brought on distempers which, together with their constant horrors of mind, proved in the end fatal to their lives. Even in the daytime, though the spirit did not then appear, yet the impression remained so strong upon their imaginations that it still seemed before their eyes, and kept them in perpetual alarm. By these means the house was at last deserted, as being deemed absolutely uninhabitable; so that it was now entirely abandoned to the ghost. However, in hopes that some tenant might be found who was ignorant of this very alarming circumstance which attended it, a bill was put up, giving notice that it was either to be let or sold. It happened that Athenodorus, the philosopher, came to Athens at this time, and reading the bill, inquired the price. The extraordinary cheapness raised his suspicion; nevertheless, when he heard the whole story he was so far from being discouraged that he was more strongly inclined to hire it, and, in short, actually did so. When it grew toward evening he ordered a couch to be prepared for him in the fore-part of the house, and after calling early for a light, together with his pencil and tablets, he directed all his people to retire. But, that his mind might not, for want of employment, be open to the vain terrors of imaginary noises and spirits, he applied himself to writing with the utmost attention. The first part of the night passed in usual silence, when at length the chains began to rattle: however, he neither lifted up his eyes nor laid down his pencil, but diverted his observation by pursuing his studies with greater earnestness. The noise increased and advanced nearer, till it seemed at the door, and at last in the chamber. He looked up, and saw the ghost exactly in the manner it had been described to him: it stood before him, beckoning with the finger. Athenodorus made a sign with his hand that it should wait a little, and threw his eyes again upon his papers; but the ghost still rattling his chains in his ears, he looked up, and saw him beckoning as before. Upon this he immediately arose, and, with the light in his hand, followed it. The specter slowly stalked along, as if incumbered with his chains, and turning into the area of the house, suddenly vanished. Athenodorus being thus deserted, made a mark with some grass and leaves where the spirit left him. The next day he gave information to the magistrates, and advised them to order that spot to be dug up. This was accordingly done, and the skeleton of a man in chains was there found; for, the body having lain a considerable time in the ground, was putrefied, and had moldered away from the fetters. The bones being collected together were publicly buried: and thus, after the ghost was appeased by the proper ceremonies, the house was haunted no more. This story I believe upon the credit of others: what I am going to mention I give you upon my own. I have a freedman named Marcus, who is by no means illiterate. One night, as he and his younger brother were lying together, he fancied he saw some person upon his bed, who took out a pair of scissiors and cut off the hair from the top part of his head: in the morning it appeared the boy's hair was actually cut, and the clippings lay scattered about the floor.

A short time after, an event of the like nature contributed to give credit to the former story. A young lad of my family was sleeping in his apartment with the rest of his companions, when two persons clad in white came in, as he says, through the windows, and cut off his hair as he lay; and having finished the operation, returned the same way they entered. The next morning it was found that this boy had been served just as the other, and with the very same circumstance of the hair spread about the room. Nothing remarkable indeed followed these events, unless that I escaped a prosecution, in which if Domitian (during whose reign this happened) had lived some time longer, I should certainly have been involved. For, after the death of that emperor, articles of impeachment against me were found in his scrutoire, which had been exhibited by Carus. It may therefore be conjectured, since it is customary for persons under any public accusation to let their hair grow, this cutting off the hair of my servants was a sign I should escape the imminent danger that threatened me. Let me desire you, then, maturely to consider this question. The subject merits your examinations; as, I trust, I am not myself altogether unworthy to participate of the abundance of your superior knowledge. And though you should, with your usual skepticism, balance between two opinions, yet I hope you will throw the weightier reasons on one side, lest, whilst I consult you in order to have my doubt settled, you should dismiss me in the same suspense and indecision that occasioned you the present application. Farewell.

TO TACITUS, ASKING TO BE IMMORTALIZED.

I strongly presage (and I am persuaded I shall not be deceived) that your histories will be immortal. I ingeniously own, therefore, I so much the more earnestly wish to find a place in them.

If we are generally careful to have our persons represented by the best artists, ought we not to desire that our actions may be related and celebrated by an author of your distinguished abilities? In view to this, I acquaint you with the following affair, which though it cannot have escaped your attention, as it is mentioned in the public journals, still I acquaint you with it, that you may be the more sensible how agreeable it will be to me, that this action, greatly heightened by the hazard which attended it, should receive an additional luster from the testimony of so bright a genius.

The Senate appointed Herennius Senecio and myself counsel for the province of Bœtica, in their impeachment of Bœbius Massa. He was condemned; and the house ordered his effects to be seized into the hands of the public officer. Shortly after, Senecio having learnt that the consuls intended to sit to hear petitions, came to me, and proposed that we should go together, and address them, with the same unanimity we executed the office which had been enjoined us, that they would not suffer Massa's effects to be dissipated by those who were appointed to preserve them. I answered, that as we had been counsel in this cause by order of the Senate, I would recommend it to his consideration, whether it would be proper for us, after sentence had passed, to interpose any further. "You are at liberty," said he, "to prescribe what bounds you please to yourself, who have no particular connections with the province, except what result from your late services to them; but they have a much stronger claim upon me, who was born there, and enjoyed the post of quaestor among them." If such, I replied, was his determined resolution, I was ready to attend him, that whatever resentment should be the consequence, it might not fall singly upon himself. Accordingly we went to the consuls, where Senecio declared what he thought proper upon the occasion; to which I subjoined a few words on my part. We had scarcely ended, when Massa, complaining that Senecio had not acted against him with the fidelity of an advocate, but the bitterness of an enemy, desired he might be at liberty to prosecute him for treason. The whole assembly was struck with the utmost consternation and horror at this motion.

I immediately rose up: "Most noble consuls," said I, "I am afraid it should seem that Massa has tacitly charged me with having favored him in this cause, since he did not think proper to join me with Senecio in the desired prosecution." This short speech was extremely well received by those who were present; as it soon afterwards got abroad, and was publicly mentioned with general applause. The late emperor Nerva (who though at that time in a private station, yet interested himself in every meritorious action which concerned the public) wrote an admirable letter to me upon the occasion, wherein he not only congratulated me, but the age, which had produced an example so much in the spirit (as he was pleased to call it) of better days. But whatever the fact be, it is in your power to heighten and spread the luster of it; though far am I from desiring you would in the least exceed the bounds of reality. History ought to be guided by strict truth; and worthy actions require nothing more. Farewell.

TO THE EMPEROR TRAJAN ASKING LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

As I had a very favorable voyage to Ephesus, so in traveling post from thence I was extremely incommoded by the heats which occasioned a fever, and detained me some time at Pergamum. From thence, sir, I took ship again, but being delayed by contrary winds, I did not arrive at Bithynia so soon as I hoped.

However, I have no reason to complain of this delay, since it did not prevent me from reaching the province in time to celebrate your birthday; a circumstance which I consider as the most auspicious that could attend me. I am at present engaged in examining the finances of the Prusienses, their disbursements and credits; and the farther I proceed in this affair the more I am convinced of the necessity of my inquiry.

Several considerable sums of money are owing to the city from private persons, which they neglect to pay upon various pretenses; as, on the other hand, I find the public funds are, in some instances, very unwarrantably applied. This, sir, I write to you immediately on my arrival. I entered this province on the 17th of September, and found in it those sentiments of obedience and loyalty which you justly merit from all mankind.

TRAJAN TO PLINY, IN REPLY.

I should have rejoiced to have heard that you arrived at Bithynia without inconvenience to yourself or any of your train, and that your journey from Ephesus had been as easy as your voyage to that place was favorable. For the rest, your letter informs me, my dear Pliny, what day you reached Bithynia. The people of that province will be convinced, I persuade myself, that I am attentive to their interest, as your conduct toward them will make it manifest that I could have chosen no person more proper to supply my place. Your first inquiry ought, no doubt, to turn upon the state of the public finances, for it is but too evident they have been mismanaged. I have scarce surveyors sufficient to inspect those works which I am carrying on at Rome and in the neighborhood; but persons of integrity and skill in this art may be found, most certainly, in every province, so that you cannot be at a loss in that article, if you will make due inquiry.

TO THE EMPEROR TRAJAN — ON THE PROSECUTION OF CHRISTIANS.

It is a rule, sir, which I inviolably observe, to refer myself to you in all my doubts; for, who is more capable of removing my scruples, or informing my ignorance? Having never been present at any trials concerning those persons who are Christians, I am unacquainted, not only with the nature of their crimes, or the measure of their punishment, but how far it is proper to enter into an examination concerning them. Whether, therefore, any difference is usually made with respect to the ages of the guilty, or no distinction is to be observed between the young and the adult; whether repentance entitles them to a pardon; or, if a man has been once a Christian, it avails nothing to desist from his error; whether the very profession of Christianity, unattended with any criminal act, or only the crimes themselves inherent in the profession, are punishable: in all these points I am greatly doubtful. In the meanwhile, the method I have observed towards those who have been brought before me as Christians, is this: I interrogated them whether they were Christians; if they confessed, I repeated the question twice, adding threats at the same time; and if they still persevered, I ordered them to be immediately punished. For, I was persuaded, whatever the nature of their opinions might be, a contumacious and inflexible obstinacy certainly deserved correction. There were others also brought before me possessed with the same infatuation; but being citizens of Rome, I directed that they should be conveyed thither. But this crime spreading (as is usually the case), while it was actually under prosecution, several instances of the same nature occurred. An information was presented to me without any name subscribed, containing a charge against several persons: these, upon examination, denied they were, or ever had been, Christians. They repeated, after me, an invocation to the gods, and offered religious rites with wine and frankincense before your statue (which for that purpose I had ordered to be brought, together with those of the gods), and even reviled the name of Christ; whereas there is no forgiving, it is said, those who are really Christians, into any of these compliances. I thought it proper, therefore, to discharge them. Some among those who were accused by a witness in person, at first confessed themselves Christians, but immediately after denied it ; the rest owned, indeed, that they had been of that number formerly, but had now (some above three, others more, and a few about twenty years ago), renounced that error. They all worshiped your statue, and the images of the gods, uttering imprecations at the same time against the name of Christ. They affirmed the whole of their guilt, or their error, was, that they met on a certain stated day before it was light, and addressed themselves in a form of prayer to Christ, as to some god, binding themselves by a solemn oath, not for the purposes of any wicked design, but never to commit any fraud, theft, or adultery ; never to falsify their word, nor deny a trust when they should be called upon to deliver it up ; after which, it was their custom to separate, and then reassemble, to eat in common a harmless meal. From this custom, however, they desisted after the publication of my edict, by which, according to your commands, I forbade the meeting of any assemblies. In consequence of this their declaration, I judged it the more necessary to endeavor to extort the real truth, by putting two female slaves to the torture, who were said to officiate in their religious functions ; but all I could discover was, that these people were actuated by an absurd and excessive superstition. I deemed it expedient, therefore, to adjourn all further proceedings, in order to consult you. For, it appears to be a matter highly deserving your consideration ; more especially as great numbers must be involved in the danger of these prosecutions, which have already extended, and are still likely to extend, to persons of all ranks and ages, and even of both sexes. In fact, this contagious superstition is not confined to the cities only, but has spread its infection among the neighboring villages and country. Nevertheless, it still seems possible to restrain its progress. The temples, at least, which were once almost deserted, begin now to be frequented ; and the sacred solemnities, after a long intermission, are revived ; to which I must add, there is again also a general demand for the victims, which for some time past had met with but few purchasers. From the circumstances I have mentioned, it is easy to conjecture what numbers might be reclaimed, if a general pardon were granted to those who shall repent of their error.

TRAJAN TO PLINY, IN REPLY.

The method you have pursued, my dear Pliny, in the proceedings against those Christians which were brought before you, is extremely proper; as it is not possible to lay down any fixed rule by which to act in all cases of this nature. But I would not have you officiously enter into any inquiries concerning them. If, indeed, they should be brought before you, and the crime should be proved, they must be punished; with this restriction, however, that where the party denies he is a Christian, and shall make it evident that he is not, by invoking our gods, let him (notwithstanding any former suspicion) be pardoned upon his repentance. Informations without the accuser's name subscribed ought not to be received in prosecutions of any sort; as it is introducing a very dangerous precedent, and by no means agreeable to the equity of my government.

THE GREAT ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

(Translation of Church and Brodribb.)

When my uncle had started, I spent such time as was left on my studies—it was on their account, indeed, that I had stopped behind. Then followed the bath, dinner, and sleep,—this last disturbed and brief. There had been noticed for many days before a trembling of the earth, which had caused, however, but little fear, because it is not unusual in Campania. But that night it was so violent, that one thought that everything was being not merely moved but absolutely overturned. My mother rushed into my chamber; I was in the act of rising, with the same intention of awaking her should she have been asleep. We sat down in the open court of the house, which occupied a small space between the buildings and the sea.

And now—I do not know whether to call it courage or folly, for I was but in my eighteenth year—I called for a volume of Livy, read it, as if I were perfectly at leisure, and even continued to make some extracts which I had begun. Just then arrived a friend of my uncle, who had lately come to him from Spain; when he saw that we were sitting down—that I was even reading—he rebuked my mother for her patience, and me for my blindness to the danger. Still I bent myself as industriously as ever over my book.

It was now seven o'clock in the morning, but the daylight was still faint and doubtful. The surrounding buildings were now so shattered, that in the place where we were, which though open was small, the danger that they might fall on us was imminent and unmistakable. So we at last determined to quit the town. A panic-stricken crowd followed us. They preferred the ideas of others to their own—in a moment of terror this has a certain look of prudence—and they pressed on us and drove us on, as we departed, by their dense array. When we had got away from the building, we stopped. There we had to endure the sight of many marvelous, many dreadful things. The carriages which we had directed to be brought out moved about in opposite directions, though the ground was perfectly level; even when scotched with stones they did not remain steady in the same place. Besides this, we saw the sea retire into itself, seeming, as it were, to be driven back by the trembling movement of the earth. The shore had distinctly advanced, and many marine animals were left high and dry upon the sands. Behind us was a dark and dreadful cloud, which, as it was broken with rapid zigzag flashes, revealed behind it variously shaped masses of flame: these last were like sheet lightning, though on a larger scale.

Then our friend from Spain addressed us more energetically and urgently than ever. "If your brother," he said, "if your uncle is alive, he wishes you to be saved; if he has perished, he certainly wished you to survive him. If so, why do you hesitate to escape?" We answered that we could not bear to think about our own safety while we were doubtful of his. He lingered no longer, but rushed off, making his way out of the danger at the top of his speed. It was not long before the cloud that we saw began to descend upon the earth and cover the sea. It had already surrounded and concealed the island of Capreae, and had made invisible the promontory of Misenum. My mother besought, urged, even commanded me to fly as best I could; "I might do so," she said, "for I was young; she, from age and corpulence, could move but slowly, but would be content to die, if she did not bring death upon me." I replied that I would not seek safety except in her company; I clasped her hand, and compelled her to go with me. She reluctantly obeyed, but continually reproached herself for delaying me.

Ashes now began to fall — still, however, in small quantities. I looked behind me ; a dense dark mist seemed to be following us, spreading itself over the country like a cloud. “Let us turn out of the way,” I said, “whilst we can still see, for fear that should we fall in the road we should be trodden underfoot in the darkness by the throngs that accompany us.” We had scarcely sat down when night was upon us, — not such as we have when there is no moon, or when the sky is cloudy, but such as there is in some closed room when the lights are extinguished. You might hear the shrieks of women, the monotonous wailing of children, the shouts of men. Many were raising their voices, and seeking to recognize by the voices that replied, parents, children, husbands, or wives. Some were loudly lamenting their own fate, others the fate of those dear to them. Some even prayed for death, in their fear of what they prayed for. Many lifted their hands in prayer to the gods ; more were convinced that there were now no gods at all, and that the final endless night of which we have heard had come upon the world. There were not wanting persons who exaggerated our real perils with terrors imaginary or willfully invented. I remember some who declared that one part of the promontory Misenum had fallen, that another was on fire ; it was false, but they found people to believe them.

It now grew somewhat light again ; we felt sure that this was not the light of day, but a proof that fire was approaching us. Fire there was, but it stopped at a considerable distance from us ; then came darkness again, and a thick heavy fall of ashes. Again and again we stood up and shook them off ; otherwise we should have been covered by them, and even crushed by the weight. I might boast that not a sigh, not a word wanting in courage, escaped me, even in the midst of peril so great, had I not been convinced that I was perishing in company with the universe, and the universe with me — a miserable and yet a mighty solace in death. At last the black mist I had spoken of seemed to shade off into smoke or cloud, and to roll away. Then came genuine daylight, and the sun shone out with a lurid light, such as it is wont to have in an eclipse. Our eyes, which had not yet recovered from the effects of fear, saw everything changed, everything covered deep with ashes as if with snow. We returned to Misenum, and, after refreshing ourselves as best we could, spent a night of anxiety in mingled hope and fear. Fear, however, was still the stronger feeling; for the trembling of the earth continued, while many frenzied persons, with their terrific predictions, gave an exaggeration that was even ludicrous to the calamities of themselves and of their friends. Even then, in spite of all the perils which we had experienced and which we still expected, we had not a thought of going away till we could hear news of my uncle.

POMPEII AND HERCULANEUM.

(By Schiller : translated by Sir John Bowring.)

[JOHANN CHRISTOPH FRIEDRICH SCHILLER, the second in general repute among German poets, was born at Marbach, Württemberg, in 1759. He was a regimental surgeon when at twenty-one he wrote "The Robbers," a play produced in 1782, which set him in the first rank among German dramatists. The Duke of Württemberg taking offense at its revolutionary utterances, Schiller fled and lived in various German cities, — including Weimar, where he formed a close friendship with Goethe, Wieland, and Herder, and edited the German Mercury, — writing plays, poetry, history, philosophy, etc., and winning a great name; in 1789 was professor of history in Jena; in 1790 retired on a pension, settled in Weimar, and died in 1805. His most famous plays, besides "The Robbers," are "Wallenstein," "Mary Stuart," "Joan of Arc," and "William Tell"; his ballads are of the best in existence; and his "History of the Thirty Years' War" and "Revolt of the Netherlands" are classic.]

WHAT strange wonder is this? Our prayer to thee was for water, Earth! What is this that thou now send'st from thy womb in reply?

In the abyss is there life? Or hidden under the lava Dwelleth some race now unknown? Does what hath fled e'er return?

Greeks and Romans, oh come! Oh, see the ancient Pompeii
Here is discovered again, — Hercules' town is rebuilt!

Gable on gable arises, the roomy portico opens

Wide its halls, so make haste, — haste ye to fill it with life!
Open, too, stands the spacious theater, let, then, the people,
Like a resistless flood, pour through its sevenfold mouths!

Mimes, where are ye? Advance! Let Atrides finish the rites now
He had begun, — let the dread chorus Orestes pursue!

Whither leads yon triumphal arch? Perceive ye the forum?

What are those figures that sit on the Curulian chair?

Lictors! precede with your fasces, — and let the Pretor in judgment

Sit,—let the witness come forth! let the accuser appear!
 Cleanly streets spread around, and with a loftier pavement
 Does the contracted path wind close to the houses' long row;
 While, to protect them, the roofs protrude,—and the handsome apartments

Round the now desolate court peacefully, fondly, are ranged.
 Hasten to open the shops, and the gateways that long have been choked up,

And let the bright light of day fall on the desolate night!
 See how around the edge extend the benches so graceful,
 And how the floor rises up, glitt'ring with many-hued stone!
 Freshly still shines the wall with colors burning and glowing!

Where is the artist? His brush he has but now laid aside.
 Teeming with swelling fruits, and flowers disposed in fair order,
 Chases the brilliant festoon ravishing images there.

Here, with a basket full-laden, a Cupid gayly is dancing,
 Genie industrious there tread out the purple-dyed wine.
 High there the Bacchanal dances and here she calmly is sleeping,

While the listening Faun has not yet sated his eyes;
 Here she puts to flight the swift-footed Centaur, suspended
 On one knee, and, the while, goads with the Thyrsus his steps.

Boys, why tarry ye? Quick! The beauteous vessels still stand there;
 Hasten, ye maidens, and pour into the Etrurian jar!

Does not the tripod stand here, on sphinxes graceful and winged?

Stir up the fire, ye slaves! Haste to make ready the hearth!

Go and buy; here is money that's coined by Titus the Mighty;
 Still are the scales lying here; not e'en one weight has been lost.

Place the burning lights in the branches so gracefully fashioned,

And with the bright-shining oil see that the lamp is supplied!

What does this casket contain? Oh, see what the bridegroom has sent thee!

Maiden! 'Tis buckles of gold; glittering gems for thy dress.

Lead the bride to the odorous bath.—here still are the unguents;

Paints, too, are still lying here, filling the hollow-shaped vase.

But where tarry the men? the elders? In noble museum

Still lies a heap of strange rolls, treasures of infinite worth!

Styles, too, are here, and tablets of wax, all ready for writing;

Nothing is lost, for, with faith, earth has protected the whole.

E'en the Penates are present, and all the glorious Immortals

Meet here again, and of all, none, save the priests, are not here.

Hermes, whose feet are graced with wings, his Caduceus is waving,

And from the grasp of his hand victory lightly escapes.

Still are the altars standing here,—oh come, then, and kindle—

Long hath the God been away,—kindle the incense to Him!

THE DESTRUCTION OF POMPEII.

BY BULWER-LYTTON.

(From "The Last Days of Pompeii.")

THE DREAM OF ARBACES. — A VISITOR AND A WARNING TO THE EGYPTIAN.

[EDWARD GEORGE EARLE LYTTON-BULWER, later LORD LYTTON, English novelist, playwright, and poet, was born in Norfolk in 1803. He graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge; became a member of Parliament for many years, colonial secretary 1858-1859; was editor of the New Monthly Magazine 1831-1833; elected lord rector of Glasgow University 1856; died January 18, 1873. His novels include (among many others): "Pelham," "Paul Clifford," "Eugene Aram," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "Rienzi," "Ernest Maltravers," "Alice, or the Mysteries," "Zanoni," "The Caxtons," "My Novel," "Kenelm Chillingly," and "The Coming Race"; his plays, the permanent favorites "Richelieu," "Money," and "The Lady of Lyons"; his poems, the satirical "New Timon," and translations of Schiller's ballads.]

THE awful night preceding the fierce joy of the amphitheater rolled drearily away, and grayly broke forth the dawn of THE LAST DAY OF POMPEII! The air was uncommonly calm and sultry — a thin and dull mist gathered over the valleys and hollows of the broad Campanian fields. But yet it was remarked in surprise by the early fishermen, that, despite the exceeding stillness of the atmosphere, the waves of the sea were agitated, and seemed, as it were, to run disturbedly back from the shore; while along the blue and stately Sarnus, whose ancient breadth of channel the traveler now vainly seeks to discover, there crept a hoarse and sullen murmur, as it glided by the laughing plains and the gaudy villas of the wealthy citizens. Clear above the low mist rose the time-worn towers of the immemorial town, the red-tiled roofs of the bright streets, the solemn columns of many temples, and the statue-crowned portals of the Forum and the Arch of Triumph. Far in the distance, the outline of the circling hills soared above the vapors, and mingled with the changeful hues of the morning sky. The cloud that had so long rested over the crest of Vesuvius had suddenly vanished, and its rugged and haughty brow looked without a frown over the beautiful scenes below.

Despite the earliness of the hour, the gates of the city were already opened. Horseman upon horseman, vehicle after vehicle, poured rapidly in; and the voices of numerous pedestrian groups, clad in holiday attire, rose high in joyous and excited merriment ; the streets were crowded with citizens and strangers from the populous neighborhood of Pompeii ; and noisily—fast—confusedly swept the many streams of life toward the fatal show.

Despite the vast size of the amphitheater, seemingly so disproportioned to the extent of the city, and formed to include nearly the whole population of Pompeii itself, so great, on extraordinary occasions, was the concourse of strangers from all parts of Campania, that the space before it was usually crowded for several hours previous to the commencement of the sports, by such persons as were not entitled by their rank to appointed and especial seats. And the intense curiosity which the trial and sentence of two criminals so remarkable had occasioned, increased the crowd on this day to an extent wholly unprecedented.

While the common people, with the lively vehemence of their Campanian blood, were thus pushing, scrambling, hurrying on,—yet, amid all their eagerness, preserving, as is now the wont with Italians in such meetings, a wonderful order and unquarrelsome good humor,—a strange visitor to Arbaces was threading her way to his sequestered mansion. At the sight of her quaint and primeval garb—of her wild gait and gestures—the passengers she encountered touched each other and smiled ; but as they caught a glimpse of her countenance, the mirth was hushed at once, for the face was as the face of the dead ; and, what with the ghastly features and obsolete robes of the stranger, it seemed as if one long entombed had risen once more among the living. In silence and awe each group gave way as she passed along, and she soon gained the broad porch of the Egyptian's palace.

The black porter, like the rest of the world, astir at an unusual hour, started as he opened the door to her summons.

The sleep of the Egyptian had been unusually profound during the night ; but as the dawn approached, it was disturbed by strange and unquiet dreams. . . .

With a shriek of wrath, and woe, and despairing resistance, Arbaces awoke—his hair on end—his brow bathed in dew—his eyes glazed and staring—his mighty frame quivering as an infant's beneath the agony of that dream. He awoke—he collected himself—he blessed the gods whom he disbelieved, that he was in a dream ;—he turned his eyes from side to side—he saw the dawning light break through his small but lofty window—he was in the Precincts of Day—he rejoiced—he smiled;—his eyes fell, and opposite to him he beheld the ghastly features, the lifeless eye, the livid lip—of the Hag of Vesuvius!

“Ha!” he cried, placing his hands before his eyes, as to shut out the grisly vision, “do I dream still?—Am I with the dead?”

“Mighty Hermes—no! Thou art with one deathlike, but not dead. Recognize thy friend and slave.”

There was a long silence. Slowly the shudders that passed over the limbs of the Egyptian chased each other away, faintlier and faintlier dying till he was himself again.

“It was a dream, then,” said he. “Well—let me dream no more, or the day cannot compensate for the pangs of night. Woman, how camest thou here, and wherefore?”

“I came to warn thee,” answered the sepulchral voice of the saga.

“Warn me! The dream lied not, then? Of what peril?”

“Listen to me. Some evil hangs over this fated city. Fly while it be time. Thou knowest that I hold my home on that mountain beneath which old tradition saith there yet burn the fires of the river of Phlegethon; and in my cavern is a vast abyss, and in that abyss I have of late marked a red and dull stream creep slowly, slowly on; and heard many and mighty sounds hissing and roaring through the gloom. But last night, as I looked thereon, behold the stream was no longer dull, but intensely and fiercely luminous; and while I gazed, the beast that liveth with me, and was cowering by my side, uttered a shrill howl, and fell down and died, and the slaver and froth were round his lips. I crept back to my lair; but I distinctly heard, all the night, the rock shake and tremble; and, though the air was heavy and still, there were the hissing of pent winds, and the grinding as of wheels, beneath the ground. So, when I rose this morning at the very birth of dawn, I looked again down the abyss, and I saw vast fragments of stone borne black and floatingly over the lurid stream; and the stream itself was broader, fiercer, redder than the night before. Then I went forth, and ascended to the summit of the rock; and in that summit there appeared a sudden and vast hollow, which I had never perceived before, from which curled a dim, faint smoke; and the vapor was deathly, and I gasped, and sickened, and nearly died. I returned home, I took my gold and my drugs, and left the habitation of many years; for I remembered the dark Etruscan prophecy which saith, 'When the mountain opens, the city shall fall — when the smoke crowns the Hill of the Parched Fields, there shall be woe and weeping in the hearths of the Children of the Sea.' Dread master, ere I leave these walls for some more distant dwelling, I come to thee. As thou livest, know I in my heart that the earthquake that sixteen years ago shook this city to its solid base, was but the forerunner of more deadly doom. The walls of Pompeii are built above the fields of the Dead and the rivers of the sleepless Hell. Be warned and fly!"

"Witch, I thank thee for thy care of one not ungrateful. On yon table stands a cup of gold; take it, it is thine. I dreamed not that there lived one, out of the priesthood of Isis, who would have saved Arbaces from destruction. The signs thou hast seen in the bed of the extinct volcano," continued the Egyptian, musingly, "surely tell of some coming danger to the city; perhaps another earthquake fiercer than the last. Be that as it may, there is a new reason for my hastening from these walls. After this day I will prepare my departure. Daughter of Etruria, whither wendest thou?"

"I shall cross over to Herculaneum this day, and, wandering thence along the coast, shall seek out a new home."

The hag, who had placed the costly gift of Arbaces in the loose folds of her vest, now rose to depart. When she had gained the door she paused, turned back, and said, "This may be the last time we meet on earth; but whither flieth the flame when it leaves the ashes? — Wandering to and fro, up and down, as an exhalation on the morass, the flame may be seen in the marshes of the lake below; and the witch and the Magian, the pupil and the master, the great one and the accursed one, may meet again. Farewell!"

"Out, croaker!" muttered Arbaces, as the door closed on the hag's tattered robes; and, impatient of his own thoughts, not yet recovered from the past dream, he hastily summoned his slaves.

It was the custom to attend the ceremonials of the amphitheater in festive robes, and Arbaces arrayed himself that day with more than usual care. His tunic was of the most dazzling white; his many fibulæ were formed from the most precious stones: over his tunic flowed a loose eastern robe, half-gown, half-mantle, glowing in the richest hues of the Tyrian dye; and the sandals, that reached halfway up the knee, were studded with gems, and inlaid with gold. In the quackeries that belonged to his priestly genius, Arbaces never neglected, on great occasions, the arts which dazzle and impose upon the vulgar; and on this day, that was forever to release him, by the sacrifice of Glaucus, from the fear of a rival and the chance of detection, he felt that he was arraying himself as for a triumph or a nuptial feast.

THE AMPHITHEATER ONCE MORE.

Glaucus and Olinthus had been placed together in that gloomy and narrow cell in which the criminals of the arena waited their last and fearful struggle. Their eyes, of late accustomed to the darkness, scanned the faces of each other in this awful hour, and by that dim light, the paleness which chased away the natural hues from either cheek assumed a yet more ashy and ghastly whiteness. Yet their brows were erect and dauntless—their limbs did not tremble—their lips were compressed and rigid. The religion of the one, the pride of the other, the conscious innocence of both, and it may be the support derived from their mutual companionship, elevated the victim into the hero.

“Hark! hearest thou that shout? They are growling over their human blood,” said Olinthus.

“I hear; my heart grows sick; but the gods support me.”

“The gods! O rash young man! in this hour recognize only the One God. Have I not taught thee in the dungeon, wept for thee, prayed for thee?—in my zeal and in my agony, have I not thought more of thy salvation than my own?”

“Brave friend!” answered Glaucus, solemnly, “I have listened to thee with awe, with wonder, and with a secret tendency toward conviction. Had our lives been spared, I might gradually have weaned myself from the tenets of my own faith, and inclined to thine; but, in this last hour, it were a craven thing and a base, to yield to hasty terror what should only be the result of lengthened meditation. Were I to embrace thy creed, and cast down my father’s gods, should I not be bribed by thy promise of heaven, or awed by thy threats of hell? Olinthus, no! Think we of each other with equal charity—I honoring thy sincerity—thou pitying my blindness or my obdurate courage. As have been my deeds, such will be my reward ; and the Power or Powers above will not judge harshly of human error, when it is linked with honesty of purpose and truth of heart. Speak we no more of this. Hush ! Dost thou hear them drag yon heavy body through the passage ? Such as that clay will be ours soon."

"O Heaven ! O Christ ! already I behold ye !" cried the fervent Olinthus, lifting up his hands ; "I tremble not—I rejoice that the prison house shall be soon broken."

Glaucus bowed his head in silence. He felt the distinction between his fortitude and that of his fellow-sufferer. The heathen did not tremble ; but the Christian exulted.

The door swung gratingly back—the gleam of spears shot along the walls.

"Glaucus the Athenian, thy time has come," said a loud and clear voice ; "the lion awaits thee."

"I am ready," said the Athenian. "Brother and co-mate, one last embrace ! Bless me—and, farewell !"

The Christian opened his arms—he clasped the young heathen to his breast—he kissed his forehead and cheek—he sobbed aloud—his tears flowed fast and hot over the features of his new friend.

"Oh ! could I have converted thee, I had not wept. Oh ! that I might say to thee, 'We two shall sup this night in Paradise !'"

"It may be so yet," answered the Greek, with a tremulous voice. "They whom death parts now, may yet meet beyond the grave : on the earth—on the beautiful, the beloved earth, farewell forever !—Worthy officer, I attend you."

Glaucus tore himself away ; and when he came forth into the air, its breath, which, though sunless, was hot and arid, smote witheringly upon him. His frame, not yet restored from the effects of the deadly draught, shrank and trembled. The officers supported him.

"Courage !" said one ; "thou art young, active, well knit. They give thee a weapon ! despair not, and thou mayst yet conquer."

Glaucus did not reply ; but, ashamed of his infirmity, he made a desperate and convulsive effort, and regained the firmness of his nerves. They anointed his body, completely naked save by a cineture round the loins, placed the stilus (vain weapon !) in his hand, and led him into the arena.

And now when the Greek saw the eyes of thousands and tens of thousands upon him, he no longer felt that he was mortal. All evidence of fear—all fear itself—was gone. A red and haughty flush spread over the paleness of his features—he towered aloft to the full of his glorious stature. In the elastic beauty of his limbs and form, in his intent but unfrowning brow, in the high disdain, and in the indomitable soul, which breathed visibly, which spoke audibly, from his attitude, his lip, his eye,—he seemed the very incarnation, vivid and corporeal, of the valor of his land—of the divinity of its worship—at once a hero and a god!

The murmur of hatred and horror at his crime, which had greeted his entrance, died into the silence of involuntary admiration and half-compassionate respect; and, with a quick and convulsive sigh, that seemed to move the whole mass of life as if it were one body, the gaze of the spectators turned from the Athenian to a dark uncouth object in the center of the arena. It was the grated den of the lion!

“By Venus, how warm it is!” said Fulvia; “yet there is no sun. Would that those stupid sailors could have fastened up that gap in the awning!”

“Oh, it is warm indeed. I turn sick—I faint!” said the wife of Pansa, even her experienced stoicism giving way at the struggle about to take place.

The lion had been kept without food for twenty-four hours, and the animal had, during the whole morning, testified a singular and restless uneasiness, which the keeper had attributed to the pangs of hunger. Yet its bearing seemed rather that of fear than of rage; its roar was painful and distressed; it hung its head—snuffed the air through the bars—then lay down—started again—and again uttered its wild and far-resounding cries. And now, in its den, it lay utterly dumb and mute, with distended nostrils forced hard against the grating, and disturbing, with a heaving breath, the sand below on the arena.

The editor's lip quivered, and his cheek grew pale; he looked anxiously around—hesitated—delayed; the crowd became impatient. Slowly he gave the sign; the keeper, who was behind the den, cautiously removed the grating, and the lion leaped forth with a mighty and glad roar of release. The keeper hastily retreated through the grated passage leading from the arena, and left the lord of the forest—and his prey.

Glaucus had bent his limbs so as to give himself the firmest posture at the expected rush of the lion, with his small and shining weapon raised on high, in the faint hope that one well-directed thrust (for he knew that he should have time but for one) might penetrate through the eye to the brain of his grim foe.

But, to the unutterable astonishment of all, the beast seemed not even aware of the presence of the criminal.

At the first moment of its release it halted abruptly in the arena, raised itself half on end, snuffing the upward air with impatient sighs; then suddenly it sprang forward, but not on the Athenian. At half-speed it circled round and round the space, turning its vast head from side to side with an anxious and perturbed gaze, as if seeking only some avenue of escape; once or twice it endeavored to leap up the parapet that divided it from the audience, and, on falling, uttered rather a baffled howl than its deep-toned and kingly roar. It evinced no sign, either of wrath or hunger; its tail drooped along the sand, instead of lashing its gaunt sides; and its eye, though it wandered at times to Glaucus, rolled again listlessly from him. At length, as if tired of attempting to escape, it crept with a moan into its cage, and once more laid itself down to rest.

The first surprise of the assembly at the apathy of the lion soon grew converted into resentment at its cowardice; and the populace already merged their pity for the fate of Glaucus into angry compassion for their own disappointment.

The editor called to the keeper:—

“How is this? Take the goad, prick him forth, and then close the door of the den.”

As the keeper, with some fear but more astonishment, was preparing to obey, a loud cry was heard at one of the entrances of the arena; there was a confusion, a bustle—voices of remonstrance suddenly breaking forth, and suddenly silenced at the reply. All eyes turned, in wonder at the interruption, toward the quarter of the disturbance; the crowd gave way, and suddenly Sallust appeared on the senatorial benches, his hair disheveled—breathless—heated—half-exhausted. He cast his eyes hastily round the ring. “Remove the Athenian!” he cried; “haste—he is innocent! Arrest Arbaces the Egyptian—he is the murderer of Apæcides!”

“Art thou mad, O Sallust!” said the pretor, rising from his seat. “What means this raving?”

“Remove the Athenian!—quick! or his blood be on your head. Pretor, delay, and you answer with your own life to the emperor! I bring with me the eyewitness to the death of the priest Apæcides. Room there!—stand back!—give way! People of Pompeii, fix every eye upon Arbaces—there he sits! Room there for the priest Calenus!”

Pale, haggard, fresh from the jaws of famine and of death, his face fallen, his eyes dull as a vulture's, his broad frame gaunt as a skeleton,—Calenus was supported into the very row in which Arbaces sat. His releasers had given him sparingly of food; but the chief sustenance that nerved his feeble limbs was revenge!

“The priest Calenus!—Calenus!” cried the mob. “Is it he? No—it is a dead man!”

“It is the priest Calenus,” said the pretor, gravely. “What hast thou to say?”

“Arbaces of Egypt is the murderer of Apæcides, the priest of Isis; these eyes saw him deal the blow. It is from the dungeon into which he plunged me—it is from the darkness and horror of a death by famine—that the gods have raised me to proclaim his crime! Release the Athenian—he is innocent!”

“It is for this, then, that the lion spared him.—A miracle! a miracle!” cried Pansa.

“A miracle! a miracle!” shouted the people. “Remove the Athenian—Arbaces to the lion!”

And that shout echoed from hill to vale—from coast to sea—“Arbaces to the lion!”

“Officers, remove the accused Glaucus—remove, but guard him yet,” said the pretor. “The gods lavish their wonders upon this day.”

As the pretor gave the word of release, there was a cry of joy—a female voice—a child's voice—and it was of joy! It rang through the heart of the assembly with electric force—it was touching, it was holy, that child's voice! And the populace echoed it back with sympathizing congratulation!

“Silence!” said the grave pretor—“who is there?”

“The blind girl—Nydia,” answered Sallust; “it is her hand that has raised Calenus from the grave, and delivered Glaucus from the lion.”

“Of this hereafter,” said the pretor. “Calenus, priest of Isis, thou accusest Arbaces of the murder of Apæcides?”

“I do!”

"Thou didst behold the deed?"

"Pretor — with these eyes ——"

"Enough at present — the details must be reserved for more suiting time and place. Arbaces of Egypt, thou hearest the charge against thee — thou hast not yet spoken — what hast thou to say?"

The gaze of the crowd had been long riveted on Arbaces: but not until the confusion which he had betrayed at the first charge of Sallust and the entrance of Calenus had subsided. At the shout, "Arbaces to the lion!" he had indeed trembled, and the dark bronze of his cheek had taken a paler hue. But he had soon recovered his haughtiness and self-control. Proudly he returned the angry glare of the countless eyes around him; and replying now to the question of the pretor, he said, in that accent so peculiarly tranquil and commanding, which characterized his tones:—

"Pretor, this charge is so mad that it scarcely deserves reply. My first accuser is the noble Sallust—the most intimate friend of Glaucus! my second is a priest; I revere his garb and calling—but, people of Pompeii! ye know somewhat of the character of Calenus—he is griping and gold-thirsty to a proverb; the witness of such men is to be bought! Pretor, I am innocent!"

"Sallust," said the magistrate, "where found you Calenus?"

"In the dungeons of Arbaces."

"Egyptian," said the pretor, frowning, "thou didst, then, dare to imprison a priest of the gods—and wherefore?"

"Hear me," answered Arbaces, rising calmly, but with agitation visible in his face. "This man came to threaten that he would make against me the charge he has now made, unless I would purchase his silence with half my fortune: I remonstrated—in vain. Peace there—let not the priest interrupt me! Noble pretor—and ye, O people! I was a stranger in the land—I knew myself innocent of crime—but the witness of a priest against me might yet destroy me. In my perplexity I decoyed him to the cell whence he has been released, on pretense that it was the coffer house of my gold. I resolved to detain him there until the fate of the true criminal was sealed, and his threats could avail no longer; but I meant no worse. I may have erred—but who among ye will not acknowledge the equity of self-preservation? Were I guilty, why was the witness of this priest silent at the trial?—then I had not detained or concealed him. Why did he not proclaim my guilt when I proclaimed that of Glaucus? Pretor, this needs an answer. For the rest, I throw myself on your laws. I demand their protection. Remove hence the accused and the accuser. I will willingly meet, and cheerfully abide by, the decision of the legitimate tribunal. This is no place for further parley."

"He says right," said the pretor. "Ho! guards—remove Arbaces—guard Calenus! Sallust, we hold you responsible for your accusation. Let the sports be resumed."

"What!" cried Calenus, turning round to the people, "shall Isis be thus contemned? Shall the blood of Apæcides yet cry for vengeance? Shall justice be delayed now, that it may be frustrated hereafter? Shall the lion be cheated of his lawful prey? A god! a god!—I feel the god rush to my lips! To the lion—to the lion with Arbaces!"

His exhausted frame could support no longer the ferocious malice of the priest; he sank on the ground in strong convulsions—the foam gathered to his mouth—he was as a man, indeed, whom a supernatural power had entered! The people saw, and shuddered.

"It is a god that inspires the holy man!—To the lion with the Egyptian."

With that cry up sprang—on moved—thousands upon thousands! They rushed from the heights—they poured down in the direction of the Egyptian. In vain did the ædile command—in vain did the pretor lift his voice and proclaim the law. The people had been already rendered savage by the exhibition of blood—they thirsted for more—their superstition was aided by their ferocity. Aroused—inflamed by the spectacle of their victims, they forgot the authority of their rulers. It was one of those dread popular convulsions common to crowds wholly ignorant, half free and half servile, and which the peculiar constitution of the Roman provinces so frequently exhibited. The power of the pretor was as a reed beneath the whirlwind; still, at his word the guards had drawn themselves along the lower benches, on which the upper classes sat separate from the vulgar. They made but a feeble barrier—the waves of the human sea halted for a moment, to enable Arbaces to count the exact moment of his doom! In despair and in a terror which beat down even pride, he glanced his eyes over the rolling and rushing crowd—when, right above them, through the wide chasm which had been left in the velaria, he beheld a strange and awful apparition—he beheld—and his craft restored his courage!

He stretched his hand on high; over his lofty brow and royal features there came an expression of unutterable solemnity and command.

“Behold!” he shouted with a voice of thunder, which stilled the roar of the crowd; “behold how the gods protect the guiltless! The fires of the avenging Orcus burst forth against the false witness of my accusers!”

The eyes of the crowd followed the gesture of the Egyptian, and beheld, with ineffable dismay, a vast vapor shooting from the summit of Vesuvius, in the form of a gigantic pine tree; the trunk, blackness,—the branches, fire!—a fire that shifted and wavered in its hues with every moment, now fiercely luminous, now of a dull and dying red, that again blazed terrifically forth with intolerable glare!

There was a dead, heart-sunken silence—through which there suddenly broke the roar of the lion, which was echoed back from within the building by the sharper and fiercer yells of its fellow-beast. Dread seers were they of the Burden of the Atmosphere, and wild prophets of the wrath to come!

Then there arose on high the universal shrieks of women; the men stared at each other, but were dumb. At that moment they felt the earth shake beneath their feet; the walls of the theater trembled; and beyond in the distance, they heard the crash of falling roofs; an instant more and the mountain cloud seemed to roll toward them, dark and rapid, like a torrent; at the same time, it cast forth from its bosom a shower of ashes mixed with vast fragments of burning stone! Over the crushing vines,—over the desolate streets,—over the amphitheater itself,—far and wide,—with many a mighty splash in the agitated sea,—fell that awful shower!

No longer thought the crowd of justice or of Arbaces; safety for themselves was their sole thought. Each turned to fly—each dashing, pressing, crushing, against the other. Trampling recklessly over the fallen—amid groans, and oaths, and prayers, and sudden shrieks, the enormous crowd vomited itself forth through the numerous passages. Whither should they fly? Some, anticipating a second earthquake, hastened to their homes to load themselves with their most costly goods, and escape while it was yet time; others, dreading the showers of ashes that now fell fast, torrent upon torrent, over the streets, rushed under the roofs of the nearest houses, or temples, or sheds — shelter of any kind — for protection from the terrors of the open air. But darker, and larger, and mightier, spread the cloud above them. It was a sudden and more ghastly Night rushing upon the realm of Noon!

THE CELL OF THE PRISONER AND THE DEN OF THE DEAD.
— GRIEF UNCONSCIOUS OF HORROR.

Stunned by his reprieve, doubting that he was awake, Glaucus had been led by the officers of the arena into a small cell within the walls of the theater. They threw a loose robe over his form, and crowded round in congratulation and wonder. There was an impatient and fretful cry without the cell; the throng gave way, and the blind girl, led by some gentler hand, flung herself at the feet of Glaucus.

"It is I who have saved thee," she sobbed; "now let me die!"

"Nydia, my child! — my preserver!"

"Oh, let me feel thy touch — thy breath! Yes, yes, thou livest! We are not too late! That dread door, methought it would never yield! and Calenus — oh! his voice was as the dying wind among tombs: — we had to wait, — gods! it seemed hours ere food and wine restored to him something of strength. But thou livest! thou livest yet! And I — I have saved thee!"

This affecting scene was soon interrupted by the event just described.

"The mountain! the earthquake!" resounded from side to side. The officers fled with the rest; they left Glaucus and Nydia to save themselves as they might.

As the sense of the dangers around them flashed on the Athenian, his generous heart recurred to Olinthus. He, too, was reprieved from the tiger by the hand of the gods; should he be left to a no less fatal death in the neighboring cell? Taking Nydia by the hand, Glaucus hurried across the passages; he gained the den of the Christian. He found Olinthus kneeling and in prayer.

"Arise! arise! my friend," he cried. "Save thyself, and fly! See; Nature is thy dread deliverer!" He led forth the bewildered Christian, and pointed to a cloud which advanced darker and darker, disgorging forth showers of ashes and pumice stones ; — and bade him hearken to the cries and trampling rush of the scattered crowd.

“ This is the hand of God — God be praised ! ” said Olinthus, devoutly.

“ Fly ! seek thy brethren ! Concert with them thy escape. Farewell ! ”

Olinthus did not answer, neither did he mark the retreating form of his friend. High thoughts and solemn absorbed his soul ; and in the enthusiasm of his kindling heart, he exulted in the mercy of God rather than trembled at the evidence of His power.

At length he roused himself, and hurried on, he scarce knew whither.

The open doors of a dark, desolate cell suddenly appeared on his path ; through the gloom within there flared and flickered a single lamp ; and by its light he saw three grim and naked forms stretched on the earth in death. His feet were suddenly arrested ; for, amid the terrors of that drear recess — the spoliarium of the arena — he heard a low voice calling on the name of Christ !

He could not resist lingering at that appeal ; he entered the den, and his feet were dabbled in the slow streams of blood that gushed from the corpses over the sand.

“ Who,” said the Nazarene, “ calls upon the Son of God ? ”

No answer came forth ; and turning round, Olinthus beheld, by the light of the lamp, an old gray-headed man sitting on the floor, and supporting in his lap the head of one of the dead. The features of the dead man were firmly and rigidly locked in the last sleep ; but over the lip there played a fierce smile — not the Christian’s smile of hope, but the dark sneer of hatred and defiance.

Yet on the face still lingered the beautiful roundness of early youth. The hair curled thick and glossy over the unwrinkled brow ; and the down of manhood but slightly shaded the marble of the hueless cheek. And over this face bent one of such unutterable sadness — of such yearning tenderness — of such fond, and such deep despair ! The tears of the old man fell fast and hot, but he did not feel them ; and when his lips moved, and he mechanically uttered the prayer of his benign and hopeful faith, neither his heart nor his sense responded to the words : it was but the involuntary emotion that broke from the lethargy of his mind. His boy was dead, and had died for him! — and the old man's heart was broken!

“Medon!” said Olinthus, pityingly, “arise, and fly! God is forth upon the wings of the elements! The New Gomorrah is doomed! — Fly, ere the fires consume thee!”

“He was ever so full of life! — he cannot be dead! Come hither! — place your hand on his heart! — sure it beats yet?”

“Brother, the soul has fled! — we will remember it in our prayers! Thou canst not reanimate the dumb clay! Come, come, — hark! while I speak, yon crashing walls! — hark! yon agonizing cries! Not a moment is to be lost! — Come!”

“I hear nothing!” said Medon, shaking his gray hair. “The poor boy, his love murdered him!”

“Come! come! forgive this friendly force.”

“What! Who would sever the father from the son?” And Medon clasped the body tightly in his embrace, and covered it with passionate kisses. “Go!” said he, lifting up his face for one moment. “Go! — we must be alone!”

“Alas!” said the compassionate Nazarene. “Death hath severed ye already!”

The old man smiled very calmly. “No, no, no!” he muttered, his voice growing lower with each word, — “Death has been more kind!”

With that his head drooped on his son's breast — his arms relaxed their grasp. Olinthus caught him by the hand — the pulse had ceased to beat! The last words of the father were the words of truth, — Death had been more kind!

Meanwhile, Glaucus and Nydia were pacing swiftly up the perilous and fearful streets. The Athenian had learned from his preserver that Ione was yet in the house of Arbaces. Thither he fled, to release — to save her! The few slaves whom the Egyptian had left at his mansion when he had repaired in long procession to the amphitheater, had been able to offer no resistance to the armed band of Sallust; and when afterward the volcano broke forth they had huddled together, stunned and frightened, in the inmost recesses of the house. Even the tall Ethiopian had forsaken his post at the door; and Glaucus (who left Nydia without — the poor Nydia, jealous once more, even in such an hour!) passed on through the vast hall without meeting one from whom to learn the chamber of Ione. Even as he passed, however, the darkness that covered the heavens increased so rapidly, that it was with difficulty he could guide his steps. The flower-wreathed columns seemed to reel and tremble; and with every instant he heard the ashes fall craunchingly into the roofless peristyle. He ascended to the upper rooms—breathless he paced along, shouting out aloud the name of Ione; and at length he heard, at the end of the gallery, a voice—her voice, in wondering reply! To rush forward—to shatter the door—to seize Ione in his arms—to hurry from the mansion—seemed to him the work of an instant! Scarce had he gained the spot where Nydia was, than he heard steps advancing toward the house, and recognized the voice of Arbaces, who had returned to seek his wealth and Ione ere he fled from the doomed Pompeii. But so dense was already the reeking atmosphere, that the foes saw not each other, though so near,—save that, dimly in the gloom, Glaucus caught the moving outline of the snowy robes of the Egyptian.

They hastened onward—those three! Alas!—whither? They now saw not a step before them—the blackness became utter. They were encompassed with doubt and horror!—and the death he had escaped seemed to Glaucus only to have changed its form and augmented its victims.

CALENUS AND BURBO.—DIOMED AND CLODIUS.—THE GIRL OF THE AMPHITHEATER AND JULIA.

The sudden catastrophe which had, as it were, riven the very bonds of society, and left prisoner and jailer alike free, had soon rid Calenus of the guards to whose care the pretor had consigned him. And when the darkness and the crowd separated the priest from his attendants, he hastened with trembling steps toward the temple of his goddess. As he crept along, and ere the darkness was complete, he felt himself suddenly caught by the robe, and a voice muttered in his ear—

“Hist!—Calenus!—an awful hour!”

“Ay! by my father’s head! Who art thou?—thy face is dim, and thy voice is strange!”

“Not know thy Burbo?—fie!”

“Gods!—how the darkness gathers! Ho, ho;—by yon terrific mountain, what sudden blazes of lightning!—How they dart and quiver! Hades is loosed on earth!”

“Tush!—thou believest not these things, Calenus! Now is the time to make our fortune!”

“Ha!”

"Listen! Thy temple is full of gold and precious mummies! — let us load ourselves with them, and then hasten to the sea and embark! None will ever ask an account of the doings of this day."

"Burbo, thou art right! Hush! and follow me into the temple. Who cares now — who sees now — whether thou art a priest or not? Follow, and we will share."

In the precincts of the temple were many priests gathered around the altars, praying, weeping, groveling in the dust. Impostors in safety, they were not the less superstitious in danger! Calenus passed them, and entered the chamber yet to be seen in the south side of the court. Burbo followed him — the priest struck a light. Wine and viands strewed the table; the remains of a sacrificial feast.

"A man who has hungered forty-eight hours," muttered Calenus, "has an appetite even in such a time." He seized on the food, and devoured it greedily. Nothing could, perhaps, be more unnaturally horrid than the selfish baseness of these villains; for there is nothing more loathsome than the valor of avarice. Plunder and sacrilege while the pillars of the world tottered to and fro! What an increase to the terrors of nature can be made by the vices of man!

"Wilt thou never have done?" said Burbo, impatiently; "thy face purples and thine eyes start already."

"It is not every day one has such a right to be hungry. Oh, Jupiter! what sound is that? — the hissing of fiery water! What! does the cloud give rain as well as flame! Ha! — what! shrieks? And, Burbo, how silent all is now! Look forth!"

Amid the other horrors, the mighty mountain now cast up columns of boiling water. Blent and kneaded with the half-burning ashes, the streams fell like seething mud over the streets in frequent intervals. And full where the priests of Isis had now cowered around the altars, on which they had vainly sought to kindle fires and pour incense, one of the fiercest of those deadly torrents, mingled with immense fragments of scoria, had poured its rage. Over the bended forms of the priests it dashed: that cry had been of death — that silence had been of eternity! The ashes — the pitchy stream — sprinkled the altars, covered the pavement, and half concealed the quivering corpses of the priests!

"They are dead," said Burbo, terrified for the first time, and hurrying back into the cell. "I thought not the danger was so near and fatal."

The two wretches stood staring at each other — you might have heard their hearts beat! Calenus, the less bold by nature, but the more griping, recovered first.

"We must to our task, and away!" he said in a low whisper, frightened at his own voice. He stepped to the threshold, paused, crossed over the heated floor and his dead brethren to the sacred chapel, and called to Burbo to follow. But the gladiator quaked, and drew back.

"So much the better," thought Calenus; "the more will be my booty." Hastily he loaded himself with the more portable treasures of the temple, and thinking no more of his comrade, hurried from the sacred place. A sudden flash of lightning from the mount showed to Burbo, who stood motionless at the threshold, the flying and laden form of the priest. He took heart; he stepped forth to join him, when a tremendous shower of ashes fell right before his feet. The gladiator shrank back once more. Darkness closed him in. But the shower continued fast — fast; its heaps rose high and suffocatingly — deathly vapors steamed from them. The wretch gasped for breath — he sought in despair again to fly — the ashes had blocked up the threshold — he shrieked as his feet shrank from the boiling fluid. How could he escape? — he could not climb to the open space; nay, were he able, he could not brave its horrors. It were best to remain in the cell, protected, at least, from the fatal air. He sat down and clenched his teeth. By degrees, the atmosphere from without — stifling and venomous — crept into the chamber. He could endure it no longer. His eyes, glaring round, rested on a sacrificial ax, which some priest had left in the chamber: he seized it. With the desperate strength of his gigantic arm, he attempted to hew his way through the walls.

Meanwhile, the streets were already thinned; the crowd had hastened to disperse itself under shelter; the ashes began to fill up the lower parts of the town; but, here and there, you heard the steps of fugitives cravching them warily, or saw their pale and haggard faces by the blue glare of the lightning, or the more unsteady glare of torches, by which they endeavored to steer their steps. But ever and anon, the boiling water, or the straggling ashes, mysterious and gusty winds, rising and dying in a breath, extinguished these wandering lights, and with them the last living hope of those who bore them.

In the street that leads to the gate of Herculaneum, Clodius now bent his perplexed and doubtful way. "If I can gain the open country," thought he, "doubtless there will be various vehicles beyond the gate, and Herculaneum is not far distant. Thank Mercury! I have little to lose, and that little is about me!"

"Holla! — help there — help!" cried a querulous and frightened voice. "I have fallen down — my torch has gone out — my slaves have deserted me. I am Diomed — the rich Diomed; — ten thousand sesterces to him who helps me!"

At the same moment, Clodius felt himself caught by the feet. "Ill fortune to thee, — let me go, fool!" said the gambler.

"Oh, help me up! — give me thy hand!"

"There — rise!"

"Is this Clodius? I know the voice! Whither flyest thou?"

"Toward Herculaneum."

"Blessed be the gods! our way is the same, then, as far as the gate. Why not take refuge in my villa? Thou knowest the long range of subterranean cellars beneath the basement, — that shelter, what shower can penetrate?"

"You speak well," said Clodius, musingly. "And by storing the cellar with food, we can remain there even some days, should these wondrous storms endure so long."

"Oh, blessed be he who invented gates to a city!" cried Diomed. "See! — they have placed a light within yon arch: by that let us guide our steps."

The air was now still for a few minutes: the lamp from the gate streamed out far and clear: the fugitives hurried on — they gained the gate — they passed by the Roman sentry; the lightning flashed over his livid face and polished helmet, but his stern features were composed even in their awe! He remained erect and motionless at his post. That hour itself had not animated the machine of the ruthless majesty of Rome into the reasoning and self-acting man. There he stood, amid the crashing elements: he had not received the permission to desert his station and escape.

Diomed and his companion hurried on, when suddenly a female form rushed athwart their way. It was the girl whose ominous voice had been raised so often and so gladly in anticipation of "the merry show!"

"Oh, Diomed!" she cried, "shelter! shelter! See, —" pointing to an infant clasped to her breast — “see this little one! — it is mine! — the child of shame! I have never owned it till this hour. But now I remember I am a mother! I have plucked it from the cradle of its nurse: she had fled! Who could think of the babe in such an hour but she who bore it? Save it! save it!”

“Curses on thy shrill voice! Away, harlot!” muttered Clodius between his ground teeth.

“Nay, girl,” said the more humane Diomed; “follow if thou wilt. This way — this way — to the vaults!”

They hurried on — they arrived at the house of Diomed — they laughed aloud as they crossed the threshold, for they deemed the danger over.

Diomed ordered his slaves to carry down into the subterranean gallery, before described, a profusion of food and oil for lights; and there Julia, Clodius, the mother and her babe, the greater part of the slaves, and some frightened visitors and clients of the neighborhood, sought their shelter.

THE PROGRESS OF THE DESTRUCTION.

The cloud, which had scattered so deep a murkiness over the day, had now settled into a solid and impenetrable mass. It resembled less even the thickest gloom of a night in the open air than the close and blind darkness of some narrow room. But in proportion as the blackness gathered, did the lightnings around Vesuvius increase in their vivid and scorching glare. Nor was their horrible beauty confined to the usual hues of fire; no rainbow ever rivaled their varying and prodigal dyes. Now brightly blue as the most azure depth of a southern sky — now of a livid and snakelike green, darting restlessly to and fro as the folds of an enormous serpent — now of a lurid and intolerable crimson, gushing forth through the columns of smoke, far and wide, and lighting up the whole city from arch to arch — then suddenly dying into a sickly paleness, like the ghost of their own life!

In the pauses of the showers, you heard the rumbling of the earth beneath, and the groaning waves of the tortured sea; or, lower still, and audible but to the watch of intensest fear, the grinding and hissing murmur of the escaping gases through the chasms of the distant mountain. Sometimes the cloud appeared to break from its solid mass, and, by the lightning, to assume quaint and vast mimics of human or of monster shapes, striding across the gloom, hurtling one upon the other, and vanishing swiftly into the turbulent abyss of shade ; so that, to the eyes and fancies of the affrighted wanderers, the unsubstantial vapors were as the bodily forms of gigantic foes — the agents of terror and of death.

The ashes in many places were already knee-deep ; and the boiling showers which came from the steaming breath of the volcano forced their way into the houses, bearing with them a strong and suffocating vapor. In some places, immense fragments of rock, hurled upon the house roofs, bore down along the streets masses of confused ruin, which yet more and more, with every hour, obstructed the way ; and as the day advanced, the motion of the earth was more sensibly felt — the footing seemed to slide and creep — nor could chariot or litter be kept steady, even on the most level ground.

Sometimes the huge stones, striking against each other as they fell, broke into countless fragments, emitting sparks of fire, which caught whatever was combustible within their reach ; and along the plains beyond the city the darkness was now terribly relieved, for several houses, and even vineyards, had been set in flames, and at various intervals, the fires rose sullenly and fiercely against the solid gloom. To add to this partial relief of the darkness, the citizens had, here and there, in the more public places, such as the porticoes of temples and the entrances to the forum, endeavored to place rows of torches ; but these rarely continued long ; the showers and the winds extinguished them, and the sudden darkness into which their fitful light was converted had something in it doubly terrible and doubly impressive on the impotence of human hopes, the lesson of despair.

Frequently, by the momentary light of these torches, parties of fugitives encountered each other, some hurrying toward the sea, others flying from the sea back to the land ; for the ocean had retreated rapidly from the shore — an utter darkness lay over it, and, upon its groaning and tossing waves, the storm of cinders and rocks fell without the protection which the streets and roofs afforded to the land. Wild — haggard — ghastly with supernatural fears, these groups encountered each other, but without the leisure to speak, to consult, to advise ; for the showers fell now frequently, though not continuously, extinguishing the lights, which showed to each band the deathlike faces of the other, and hurrying all to seek refuge beneath the nearest shelter. The whole elements of civilization were broken up. Ever and anon, by the flickering lights, you saw the thief hastening by the most solemn authorities of the law, laden with and fearfully chuckling over the produce of his sudden gains. If, in the darkness, wife was separated from husband, or parent from child, vain was the hope of reunion. Each hurried blindly and confusedly on. Nothing in all the various and complicated machinery of social life was left save the primal law of self-preservation!

Through this awful scene did the Athenian wade his way, accompanied by Ione and the blind girl. Suddenly, a rush of hundreds, in their path to the sea, swept by them. Nydia was torn from the side of Glaucus, who, with Ione, was borne rapidly onward; and when the crowd (whose forms they saw not, so thick was the gloom) were gone, Nydia was still separated from their side. Glaucus shouted her name. No answer came. They retraced their steps—in vain: they could not discover her—it was evident she had been swept along in some opposite direction by the human current. Their friend, their preserver, was lost! And hitherto Nydia had been their guide. Her blindness rendered the scene familiar to her alone. Accustomed, through a perpetual night, to thread the windings of the city, she had led them unerringly toward the seashore, by which they had resolved to hazard an escape. Now, which way could they wend? All was rayless to them—a maze without a clew. Wearied, despondent, bewildered, they, however, passed along, the ashes falling upon their heads, the fragmentary stones dashing up in sparkles before their feet.

“Alas! alas!” murmured Ione, “I can go no further; my steps sink among the scorching cinders. Fly, dearest!—beloved, fly! and leave me to my fate!”

“Hush, my betrothed! my bride! Death with thee is sweeter than life without thee! Yet, whither—oh! whither, can we direct ourselves through the gloom? Already, it seems that we have made but a circle, and are in the very spot which we quitted an hour ago.”

“O gods! yon rock—see, it hath riven the roof before us! It is death to move through the streets!”

“Blessed lightning! See, Ione—see! the portico of the Temple of Fortune is before us. Let us creep beneath it ; it will protect us from the showers."

He caught his beloved in his arms, and with difficulty and labor gained the temple. He bore her to the remoter and more sheltered part of the portico, and leaned over her, that he might shield her, with his own form, from the lightning and the showers ! The beauty and the unselfishness of love could hallow even that dismal time !

"Who is there?" said the trembling and hollow voice of one who had preceded them in their place of refuge. "Yet, what matters? — the crush of the ruined world forbids to us friends or foes."

Ione turned at the sound of the voice, and, with a faint shriek, cowered again beneath the arms of Glaucus : and he, looking in the direction of the voice, beheld the cause of her alarm. Through the darkness glared forth two burning eyes — the lightning flashed and lingered athwart the temple — and Glaucus, with a shudder, perceived the lion to which he had been doomed crouched beneath the pillars ; — and, close beside it, unwitting of the vicinity, lay the giant form of him who had accosted them — the wounded gladiator, Niger.

That lightning had revealed to each other the form of beast and man ; yet the instinct of both was quelled. Nay, the lion crept near and nearer to the gladiator as for companionship ; and the gladiator did not recede or tremble. The revolution of Nature had dissolved her lighter terrors as well as her wonted ties.

While they were thus terribly protected, a group of men and women, bearing torches, passed by the temple. They were of the congregation of the Nazarenes ; and a sublime and unearthly emotion had not, indeed, quelled their awe, but it had robbed awe of fear. They had long believed, according to the error of the early Christians, that the Last Day was at hand ; they imagined now that the Day had come.

"Woe ! woe !" cried, in a shrill and piercing voice, the elder at their head. "Behold ! the Lord descendeth to judgment ! He maketh fire come down from heaven in the sight of men ! Woe ! woe ! ye strong and mighty ! Woe to ye of the fasces and the purple ! Woe to the idolator and the worshiper of the beast ! Woe to ye who pour forth the blood of saints, and gloat over the death pangs of the sons of God ! Woe to the harlot of the sea ! — woe ! woe !"

And with a loud and deep chorus, the troop chanted forth along the wild horrors of the air, — “Woe to the harlot of the sea! — woe! woe!”

The Nazarenes paced slowly on, their torches still flickering in the storm, their voices still raised in menace and solemn warning, till, lost amid the windings in the streets, the darkness of the atmosphere and the silence of death again fell over the scene.

There was one of the frequent pauses in the showers, and Glaucus encouraged Ione once more to proceed. Just as they stood, hesitating, on the last step of the portico, an old man, with a bag in his right hand and leaning upon a youth, tottered by. The youth bore a torch. Glaucus recognized the two as father and son — miser and prodigal.

“Father,” said the youth, “if you cannot move more swiftly, I must leave you, or we both perish!”

“Fly, boy, then, and leave thy sire!”

“But I cannot fly to starve; give me thy bag of gold!” And the youth snatched at it.

“Wretch! wouldst thou rob thy father?”

“Ay! who can tell the tale in this hour? Miser, perish!”

The boy struck the old man to the ground, plucked the bag from his relaxing hand, and fled onward with a shrill yell.

“Ye gods!” cried Glaucus: “are ye blind, then, even in the dark? Such crimes may well confound the guiltless with the guilty in one common ruin. Ione, on! — on!”

ARBACES ENCOUNTERS GLAUCUS AND IONE.

Advancing, as men grope for escape in a dungeon, Ione and her lover continued their uncertain way. At the moments when the volcanic lightnings lingered over the streets, they were enabled, by that awful light, to steer and guide their progress: yet, little did the view it presented to them cheer or encourage their path. In parts where the ashes lay dry and uncommixed with the boiling torrents cast upward from the mountain at capricious intervals, the surface of the earth presented a leprous and ghastly white. In other places, cinder and rock lay matted in heaps, from beneath which emerged the half-hid limbs of some crushed and mangled fugitive. The groans of the dying were broken by wild shrieks of women's terror—now near, now distant—which, when heard in the utter darkness, were rendered doubly appalling by the crushing sense of helplessness and the uncertainty of the perils around; and clear and distinct through all were the mighty and various noises from the Fatal Mountain; its rushing winds; its whirling torrents; and, from time to time, the burst and roar of some more fiery and fierce explosion. And ever as the winds swept howling along the street, they bore sharp streams of burning dust, and such sickening and poisonous vapors, as took away, for the instant, breath and consciousness, followed by a rapid revulsion of the arrested blood, and a tingling sensation of agony trembling through every nerve and fiber of the frame.

"Oh, Glaucus! my beloved! my own!—take me to thy arms! One embrace! let me feel thy arms around me—and in that embrace let me die—I can no more!"

"For my sake—for my life—courage, yet, sweet Ione—my life is linked with thine; and see—torches—this way! Lo! how they brave the wind! Ha! they live through the storm—doubtless, fugitives to the sea!—we will join them."

As if to aid and reanimate the lovers, the winds and showers came to a sudden pause; the atmosphere was profoundly still—the mountain seemed at rest, gathering, perhaps, fresh fury for its next burst: the torchbearers moved quickly on. "We are nearing the sea," said, in a calm voice, the person at their head. "Liberty and wealth to each slave who survives this day. Courage!—I tell you that the gods themselves have assured me of deliverance—On!"

Redly and steadily the torches flashed full on the eyes of Glaucus and Ione, who lay trembling and exhausted on his bosom. Several slaves were bearing, by the light, panniers and coffers, heavily laden; in front of them,—a drawn sword in his hand,—towered the lofty form of Arbaces.

"By my fathers!" cried the Egyptian, "Fate smiles upon me even through these horrors, and, amid the dreaded aspects of woe and death, bodes me happiness and love. Away, Greek! I claim my ward, Ione!"

"Traitor and murderer!" cried Glaucus, glaring upon his foe, "Nemesis hath guided thee to my revenge!—a just sacrifice to the shades of Hades, that now seem loosed on earth. Approach—touch but the hand of Ione, and thy weapon shall be as a reed—I will tear thee limb from limb!"

Suddenly, as he spoke, the place became lighted with an intense and lurid glow. Bright and gigantic through the darkness, which closed around it like the walls of hell, the mountain shone—a pile of fire! Its summit seemed riven in two; or rather, above its surface there seemed to rise two monster shapes, each confronting each, as Demons contending for a World. These were of one deep blood-red hue of fire, which lighted up the whole atmosphere far and wide; but below, the nether part of the mountain was still dark and shrouded, save in three places, adown which flowed, serpentine and irregular, rivers of the molten lava. Darkly red through the profound gloom of their banks, they flowed slowly on as toward the devoted city. Over the broadest there seemed to spring a cragged and stupendous arch, from which, as from the jaws of hell, gushed the sources of the sudden Phlegethon. And through the stilled air was heard the rattling of the fragments of rock, hurling one upon another as they were borne down the fiery cataracts—darkening, for one instant, the spot where they fell, and suffused the next, in the burnished hues of the flood along which they floated!

The slaves shrieked aloud, and, cowering, hid their faces. The Egyptian himself stood transfixed to the spot, the glow lighting up his commanding features and jeweled robes. High behind him rose a tall column that supported the bronze statue of Augustus; and the imperial image seemed changed to a shape of fire!

With his left hand circled round the form of Ione—with his right arm raised in menace, and grasping the stilus which was to have been his weapon in the arena, and which he still fortunately bore about him, with his brow knit, his lips apart, the wrath and menace of human passions arrested, as by a charm, upon his features, Glaucus fronted the Egyptian!

Arbaces turned his eyes from the mountain—they rested on the form of Glaucus! He paused a moment: “Why,” he muttered, “should I hesitate? Did not the stars foretell the only crisis of imminent peril to which I was subjected?—Is not that peril past?”

“The soul,” cried he aloud, “can brave the wreck of worlds and the wrath of imaginary gods! By that soul will I conquer to the last! Advance, slaves!—Athenian, resist me, and thy blood be on thine own head! Thus, then, I regain Ione!”

He advanced one step—it was his last on earth! The ground shook beneath him with a convulsion that cast all around upon its surface. A simultaneous crash resounded through the city, as down toppled many a roof and pillar! — the lightning, as if caught by the metal, lingered an instant on the Imperial Statue, then shivered bronze and column! Down fell the ruin, echoing along the street, and riving the solid pavement where it crashed! — The prophecy of the stars was fulfilled!

The sound, the shock, stunned the Athenian for several moments. When he recovered, the light still illumined the scene — the earth still slid and trembled beneath! — Ione lay senseless on the ground; but he saw her not yet — his eyes were fixed upon a ghastly face that seemed to emerge, without limbs or trunk, from the huge fragments of the shattered column — a face of unutterable pain, agony, and despair! The eyes shut and opened rapidly, as if sense were not yet fled; the lips quivered and grinned, — then sudden stillness and darkness fell over the features, yet retaining that aspect of horror never to be forgotten!

So perished the wise Magician — the great Arbaces — the Hermes of the Burning Belt — the last of the royalty of Egypt!

THE DESPAIR OF THE LOVERS. — THE CONDITION OF THE MULTITUDE.

Glaucus turned in gratitude but in awe, caught Ione once more in his arms, and fled along the street, that was yet intensely luminous. But suddenly a duller shade fell over the air. Instinctively he turned to the mountain, and behold! one of the two gigantic crests, into which the summit had been divided, rocked and wavered to and fro; and then, with a sound the mightiness of which no language can describe, it fell from its burning base, and rushed, an avalanche of fire, down the sides of the mountain! At the same instant gushed forth a volume of blackest smoke — rolling on, over air, sea, and earth.

Another — and another — and another shower of ashes, far more profuse than before, scattered fresh desolation along the streets. Darkness once more wrapped them as a veil; and Glaucus, his bold heart at last quelled and despairing, sank beneath the cover of an arch, and, clasping Ione to his heart — a bride on that couch of ruin — resigned himself to die.

Meanwhile, Nydia, when separated by the throng from Glaucus and Ione, had in vain endeavored to regain them. In vain she raised that plaintive cry so peculiar to the blind ; it was lost amid a thousand shrieks of more selfish terror. Again and again she returned to the spot where they had been divided—to find her companions gone, to seize every fugitive—to inquire of Glaucus—to be dashed aside in the impatience of distraction. Who in that hour spared one thought to his neighbor? Perhaps in scenes of universal horror, nothing is more horrid than the unnatural selfishness they engender. At length it occurred to Nydia that as it had been resolved to seek the seashore for escape, her most probable chance of rejoining her companions would be to persevere in that direction. Guiding her steps, then, by the staff which she always carried, she continued, with incredible dexterity, to avoid the masses of ruin that encumbered the path—to thread the streets and unerringly (so blessed now was that accustomed darkness, so afflicting in ordinary life !) to take the nearest direction to the seaside.

Poor girl ! her courage was beautiful to behold !—and Fate seemed to favor one so helpless ! The boiling torrents touched her not, save by the general rain which accompanied them ; the huge fragments of scoria shivered the pavement before and beside her, but spared that frail form : and when the lesser ashes fell over her, she shook them away with a slight tremor, and dauntlessly resumed her course.

Weak, exposed, yet fearless, supported but by one wish, she was a very emblem of Psyche in her wanderings ; of Hope walking through the Valley of the Shadow ; of the Soul itself—lone but undaunted, amid the dangers and the snares of life !

Her path was, however, constantly impeded by the crowds that now groped amid the gloom, now fled in the temporary glare of the lightnings across the scene ; and, at length, a group of torchbearers rushing full against her, she was thrown down with some violence.

“What?” said the voice of one of the party, “is this the brave blind girl ! By Bacchus, she must not be left here to die ! Up ! my Thessalian ! So—so. Are you hurt ? That’s well ! Come along with us ! we are for the shore !”

“O Sallust ! it is thy voice ! The gods be thanked ! Glaucus ! Glaucus ! have ye seen him ?”

“Not I. He is doubtless out of the city by this time. The gods who saved him from the lion will save him from the burning mountain.”

As the kindly epicure thus encouraged Nydia, he drew her along with him toward the sea, heeding not her passionate entreaties that he would linger yet awhile to search for Glaucus, and still, in the accent of despair, she continued to shriek out that beloved name, which, amid all the roar of the convulsed elements, kept alive a music at her heart.

The sudden illumination, the bursts of the floods of lava, and the earthquake, which we have already described, chanced when Sallust and his party had just gained the direct path leading from the city to the port; and here they were arrested by an immense crowd, more than half the population of the city. They spread along the field without the walls, thousands upon thousands, uncertain whither to fly. The sea had retired far from the shore; and they who had fled to it had been so terrified by the agitation and preternatural shrinking of the element, the gasping forms of the uncouth sea things which the waves had left upon the sand, and by the sound of the huge stones cast from the mountain into the deep, that they had returned again to the land, as presenting the less frightful aspect of the two. Thus the two streams of human beings, the one seaward, the other from the sea, had met together, feeling a sad comfort in numbers; arrested in despair and doubt.

"The world is to be destroyed by fire," said an old man in long loose robes, a philosopher of the Stoic school: "Stoic and Epicurean wisdom have alike agreed in this prediction; and the hour is come!"

"Yea; the hour is come!" cried a loud voice, solemn but not fearful.

Those around turned in dismay. The voice came from above them. It was the voice of Olinthus, who, surrounded by his Christian friends, stood upon an abrupt eminence on which the old Greek colonists had raised a temple to Apollo, now time-worn and half in ruin.

As he spoke, there came that sudden illumination which had heralded the death of Arbaces, and glowing over the mighty multitude, awed, crouching, breathless—never on earth had the faces of men seemed so haggard!—never had meeting of mortal beings been so stamped with the horror and sublimity of dread!—never till the last trumpet sounds, shall such meeting be seen again! And above those the form of Olinthus, with outstretched arm and prophet brow, girt with the living fires. And the crowd knew the face of him they had doomed to the fangs of the beast — then their victim — now their warner ; and through the stillness again came his ominous voice —

“ The hour is come ! ”

The Christians repeated the cry. It was caught up — it was echoed from side to side — woman and man, childhood and old age repeated, not aloud, but in a smothered and dreary murmur —

“ THE HOUR IS COME ! ”

At that moment, a wild yell burst through the air ; — and, thinking only of escape, whither it knew not, the terrible tiger of the desert leaped among the throng, and hurried through its parted streams. And so came the earthquake, — and so darkness once more fell over the earth !

And now new fugitives arrived. Grasping the treasures no longer destined for their lord, the slaves of Arbaces joined the throng. One only of their torches yet flickered on. It was borne by Sosia ; and its light falling on the face of Nydia, he recognized the Thessalian.

“ What avails thy liberty now, blind girl ? ” said the slave.

“ Who art thou ? canst thou tell me of Glaucus ? ”

“ Ay ; I saw him but a few minutes since. ”

“ Blessed be thy head ! where ? ”

“ Couched beneath the arch of the forum — dead or dying ! — gone to rejoin Arbaces, who is no more ! ”

Nydia uttered not a word, she slid from the side of Sallust ; silently she glided through those behind her, and retraced her steps to the city. She gained the forum — the arch ; she stooped down — she felt around — she called on the name of Glaucus.

A weak voice answered — “ Who calls on me ? Is it the voice of the Shades ? Lo ! I am prepared ! ”

“ Arise ! follow me ! Take my hand ! Glaucus, thou shalt be saved ! ”

In wonder and sudden hope, Glaucus arose — “ Nydia still ? Ah ! thou, then, art safe ! ”

The tender joy of his voice pierced the heart of the poor Thessalian, and she blessed him for his thought of her.

Half leading, half carrying lone, Glaucus followed his guide. With admirable discretion, she avoided the path which led to the crowd she had just quitted, and, by another route, sought the shore.

After many pauses and incredible perseverance, they gained the sea, and joined a group, who, bolder than the rest, resolved to hazard any peril rather than continue in such a scene. In darkness they put forth to sea; but, as they cleared the land and caught new aspects of the mountain, its channels of molten fire threw a partial redness over the waves.

Utterly exhausted and worn out, Ione slept on the breast of Glaucus, and Nydia lay at his feet. Meanwhile the showers of dust and ashes, still borne aloft, fell into the wave, and scattered their snows over the deck. Far and wide, borne by the winds, those showers descended upon the remotest climes, startling even the swarthy African, and whirled along the antique soil of Syria and of Egypt.

THE NEXT MORNING. — THE FATE OF NYDIA.

And meekly, softly, beautifully, dawned at last the light over the trembling deep! — the winds were sinking into rest — the foam died from the glowing azure of that delicious sea. Around the east, thin mists caught gradually the rosy hues that heralded the morning; Light was about to resume her reign. Yet, still, dark and massive in the distance, lay the broken fragments of the destroying cloud, from which red streaks, burning dimlier and more dim, betrayed the yet rolling fires of the mountain of the “Scorched Fields.” The white walls and gleaming columns that had adorned the lovely coasts were no more. Sullen and dull were the shores so lately crested by the cities of Herculaneum and Pompeii. The darlings of the Deep were snatched from her embrace! Century after century shall the mighty Mother stretch forth her azure arms, and know them not — moaning round the sepulchers of the Lost!

There was no shout from the marines at the dawning light — it had come too gradually, and they were too wearied for such sudden bursts of joy — but there was a low deep murmur of thankfulness amid those watchers of the long night. They looked at each other and smiled — they took heart — they felt once more that there was a world around, and a God above them! And in the feeling that the worst was passed, the over-wearied ones turned round, and fell placidly to sleep. In the growing light of the skies there came the silence which night had wanted: and the bark drifted calmly onward to its port. A few other vessels, bearing similar fugitives, might be seen in the expanse, apparently motionless, yet gliding also on. There was a sense of security, or companionship, and of hope, in the sight of their slender masts and white sails. What beloved friends, lost and missed in the gloom, might they not bear to safety and to shelter!

In the silence of the general sleep, Nydia rose gently. She bent over the face of Glaucus—she inhaled the deep breath of his heavy slumber,—timidly and sadly she kissed his brow—his lips; she felt for his hand—it was locked in that of Ione; she sighed deeply, and her face darkened. Again she kissed his brow, and with her hair wiped from it the damps of night. “May the gods bless you, Athenian!” she murmured: “may you be happy with your beloved one!—may you sometimes remember Nydia! Alas! she is of no further use on earth!”

With these words, she turned away. Slowly she crept along by the fori, or platforms, to the further side of the vessel, and, pausing, bent low over the deep; the cool spray dashed upward on her feverish brow. “It is the kiss of death,” she said—“it is welcome.” The balmy air played through her waving tresses—she put them from her face, and raised those eyes—so tender, though so lightless—to the sky, whose soft face she had never seen!

“No, no!” she said, half aloud, and in a musing and thoughtful tone, “I cannot endure it; this jealous, exacting love—it shatters my whole soul in madness! I might harm him again—wretch that I was! I have saved him—twice saved him—happy, happy thought:—why not die happy?—it is the last glad thought I can ever know. Oh! sacred Sea! I hear thy voice invitingly—it hath a freshening and joyous call. They say that in thy embrace is dishonor—that thy victims cross not the fatal Styx—be it so!—I would not meet him in the Shades, for I should meet him still with her! Rest—rest—rest!—there is no other Elysium for a heart like mine!”

A sailor, half dozing on the deck, heard a slight splash on the waters. Drowsily he looked up, and behind, as the vessel merrily bounded on, he fancied he saw something white above the waves; but it vanished in an instant. He turned round again, and dreamed of his home and children.

When the lovers awoke their first thought was of each other—their next of Nydia! She was not to be found—none had seen her since the night. Every crevice of the vessel was searched — there was no trace of her. Mysterious from first to last, the blind Thessalian had vanished forever from the living world ! They guessed her fate in silence : and Glaucus and Ione, while they drew nearer to each other (feeling each other the world itself) forgot their deliverance, and wept as for a departed sister.

THE EMPEROR AND THE POPE.

By E. H. PLUMPTRE.

I. TRAJAN.

THROUGH haughty Rome's imperial street
 The mighty Trajan rode,
 And myrrh, and balm, and spices sweet
 In silver censers glowed ;
 In car of state erect he stood ;
 And round him, rushing like a flood,
 The people poured with shout and song ;
 And every eye through all that throng
 Turned to him with delight ;
 For he had triumphed far and wide,
 Had sated Rome's high-soaring pride,
 And, laying captive nations low,
 Now dragged the pale and trembling foe
 Bent down in sore affright :
 And still before him spread afar
 New pathways for his conquering star,
 More crowns of world-wide fame to win,
 'Mid shouts of warriors, battle din :
 One triumph barely o'er, he spurned
 The laurel wreaths so hardly earned,
 And still his fevered spirit burned
 New realms, new worlds to gain.
 And now his legions on he led,
 Legions that ne'er from foe had fled,
 The glory of his reign,
 To reap new harvests in the field
 Where all would die, but none would yield.
 When lo ! from out the exulting crowd,
 Her voice half-drowned by plaudits loud,
 A woman rushed, bent low with years,

Gray-haired, and weeping blinding tears.
 With eager eye and outstretched hand,
 As one who might a king command,
 She caught the Emperor's eye, and stayed
 The progress of that proud parade.
 "Ah, Lord!" she cried, "on thee I call,
 With bended knees before thee fall,
 Implore, beseech thee, let not might,
 All scatheless, triumph over right.
 I had a son, mine only boy,
 My heart's delight, my pride, my joy,
 Fair-haired, bright-eyed, a sunbeam clear
 That made it summer all the year;
 In that pure boyhood, free from stain,
 His father grew to life again;
 And he, O king, in bloom of youth,
 Flushed with high courage, strong in truth,
 Now lies all stiff and cold in death,
 And never more shall living breath

Warm limbs and heart again:
 And lo! the murderer standeth ther
 His proud lip curling in the air,
 As if he scorned the wild despair

Of him his hand has slain.
 See, still he smiles that evil smile,
 Half lust, half hate, thrice vilely vile,
 As knowing well the dark disgrace
 That hangs o'er all of Abraham's race,
 As knowing well the Christian's name
 Makes him who bears it marked for shame,
 And counting still a Christian's prayer
 An idle rending of the air.

But thou, O prince, the true, the just,
 To whom the blood from out the dust
 For vengeance cries in murmurs loud
 As mutterings from the thundercloud —
 Thou wilt not scorn the widow's cry,
 Nor let her voice mount up on high

Accusing thee of wrong;
 Not yet her plaint ascends with theirs
 Who cry beneath God's altar stairs
 'How long, O Lord, how long?'
 There still is time to do the right,
 Time to put forth thy kingly might,
 That man of pride and blood to smite."

Then turned his head the Emperor just,
Found faithful to his kingly trust,
As one sore grieved, yet strong of will
Each task of duty to fulfill:
And to that widow sad and lorn,
By care and grief and anguish worn,
With knitted brow and steadfast face,
Thus spake the words of princely grace:
"Know, weeping mother, know, thy prayer
By day and night my thoughts shall share;
Mine eye shall search the secret guilt,
And track the blood thy foe hath spilt:
No depth of shade, no length of time
Shall hide the felon stained with crime.
Long since, men know, I spake full clear,
And stayed the blast which many a year
Had filled the Christians' souls with fear;
I would not welcome vain report;
In open day, in open court,
Let those who will, their charges prove
And so let justice onward move;
And shame it were that I should shrink,
Through fear what rich or proud may think,
From words of truth and deeds of power:
The sentence of the judgment hour.
All this shall be; but now the day
Leads on to battle far away:
The foes are fierce; on Ister's stream
The helms of thousand warriors gleam;
And we must war with spear and shield,
By leaguered fort, on tented field;
Must bear the scorching heat and frost,
In desert wild, or rock-bound coast,
Until at length, the battle won,
Each task fulfilled, each duty done,
We bend our steps once more for home
And dwell in peace in lordly Rome;
Yes, then shall every deed of shame
In Heaven's own time bear fullest blame,
No wrong escape the sentence true,
All evil pay the forfeit due:
Till then be patient; every hour
Will dull the edge of suffering's power:
The months pass onward; quick they flee;
Then bring thy prayer once more to me."

"Ah prince," the widow made her moan,
 "Too true, the hours are fled and gone;
 To-day flits by while yet we speak;
 To-morrow's dawn in vain we seek.
 Do right at once; who dare foretell
 The issue of thy warfare fell?
 Who knows but I may still abide
 While thou on Thracia's coasts hast died;
 Or thou returning, conqueror proud,
 Mayst find me moldering in my shroud?
 Delay not, shrink not, do the right;
 Or else e'en thou in Death's dark night
 Mayst stand, all shivering with affright,
 Before the throne of shadeless light."

She spake, and then great Trajan's heart
 Was moved to choose the better part:
 He stayed his march; a night and day
 Halted that army's proud array.
 He tracked the secret deed of blood,
 Though high in state the murderer stood,
 And rested not till right was done,
 As rose the morrow's glowing sun.
 And thus in face of earth and heaven
 His pledge in act and word was given,
 That great or small, or bond or free,
 Before his throne should equals be:
 Heathen and Christians all confess,
 His power to punish, or to bless,
 The might of truth and righteousness.

II. GREGORY.

The days were evil, skies were dim,
 When slowly walked, with prayer and hymn,
 Through stately street and market wide,
 Where emperors once had ridden in pride,
 Far other troops than legions strong,
 Raising far other battle song;
 In sackcloth clad, with dust besprent,
 Men, women, children, onward went;
 Their bands, by one chief father led,
 March on with rev'rent, measured tread,
 And still at every sacred shrine,
 In presence of the might divine,
 With head uncovered, downcast eye,

They sang their sevenfold litany :
"Hear us, O God of Heaven and Earth,
Thou Lord of sorrow and of mirth,
Thou Worker of the second birth,

Hear us, O Lord, and save !
From plague and famine, fire and sword,
From Pagans fierce and foes abhorred,
From death and Hell, O gracious Lord,
From darkness and the grave.

Have mercy, Lord, on man and beast,
Mercy, from greatest to the least ;
Be all from bonds of sin released ;

Set free the captive slave !"
"O Lord, have mercy," so they sang,
And through the air their accents rang,
Like sad sweet sound of midnight breeze,
Whispering soft music to the trees, —

"O Miserere, Domine!"
Fathers and children, youth and maid,
Their eager supplication made,
And e'en from bridegroom and from bride
The same sad music rose and died,

"O Miserere, Domine!"
And, last of all, no emperor now,
With eastern diadem on his brow,
No triumph car bedecked with gold,
No purple chlamys' drooping fold ;
But pale and worn, his hair all white,
His face with gleam unearthly bright,
As one to whom the heavens all night

Their glory had revealed ;
A smile through all his sorrow shone,
That told of peace and victory won,
A fight well fought, a race well run,
And God his strength and shield :

So marched Gregorios, ruler sage,
Great glory of Rome's later age ;
And next him came with golden hair,
That floated wildly to the air,
With clear blue eyes, and cheeks that showed
How fresh and full the young life glowed,
A troop of boys, whose unshod feet
Kept measured time to voices sweet ;
Angles were they, from far-off shore,
Where loud the northern surges roar,

Rescued from wrath, and sin and shame,
 Worthy to bear an angel's name;
 These, couching in their brute-despair,
 Like wolf's young whelps in mountain lair,
 Fettered and bound, and set for sale,
 Each with his own sad, untold tale,
 The good Gregorios saw;
 Some thought of homes in distant isles,
 A father's love, a mother's smiles,
 Some feared the scourge, the bondslave's name,
 And some their doom of foulest shame;
 And throbs of anguish thrilled their frame
 With power to touch and awe.
 He looked and pitied, gems and gold,
 From out the church's treasures old,
 In fullest tale of weight he told,
 And gave their price and set them free,
 Heirs of Christ's blessed liberty.
 And now they followed slow and calm,
 Each chanting penitential psalm,
 Each bearing branch of drooping palm,
 Each lifting high a taper's light,
 And clad in garments pure and white;
 And these with voices soft and slow,
 As streams 'mid whispering reeds that flow,
 Still sang, all pitiful to see,
 "O Miserere, Domine!"

So onward still they marched; at last
 By Trajan's forum on they passed,
 And there the memories of the place,
 The tale of that imperial grace,
 Flashed on Gregorios' soul, and led,
 Ere yet the sunset's glow had fled,
 To strange new thoughts about the deed.

"Ah me!" he sighed in grief and fears,
 "Is he whose name all Rome reveres,
 The just, the true, the warrior brave,
 Firm to his trust, and strong to save, —
 Is he where souls to darkness flit,
 Gehenna's flames, the unfathomed pit?
 He knew not thee, O Lord, I own;
 His knee ne'er bent before thy throne;
 He lived his life, by evil chance,

In darkness and in ignorance;
 And ne'er, O Lord, thy dread decree
 His wandering steps led on to Thee.
 And so he dwells throughout the years,
 Where neither sun nor star appears,
 And all around is still the same,
 One dreary night, one dusky flame:
 And must his doom, O Lord, be this,
 That changeless future in the abyss?
 Is there no hope for him whose will
 Was bent all duty to fulfill,
 Whose eye discerning saw aright,
 The false how foul, the true how bright?
 He, Lord, had pity, so they tell,
 On that poor child of Israel;
 He heard the widow's anguished prayer,
 He left her not to her despair:
 And wilt thou leave him, Lord, to bear
 That doom eternal, full of fear?
 Can prayers avail not to atone
 And bring the wand'rer to the Throne?
 Ah Lord, whose pitying love ne'er spurned
 The vilest, when to Thee they turned,
 Whose glance, with gentle pardoning eyes,
 Where love was blended with surprise,
 Looked on Rome's captain, Zidon's child,
 And there, in accents soft and mild,
 Owned that their faith was nobler found
 Than aught that sprang on Israel's ground,
 And said'st that from the East and West,
 A countless host should share Thy rest;—
 Wilt thou not write that just one's name
 Within Thy book of deathless fame?
 My prayer at least shall rise for him
 By night and day, in chant and hymn;
 For him I ask on bended knee,
“O Miserere, Domine!”

So spake the gray-haired saint, and lo!
 As died the flush of sunset's glow,
 There came, in visions of the night
 The form of One divinely bright,
 (The nail prints still in hands and feet)
 And spake in music low and sweet:
“Fear not, thou wise and true of heart,

Fear not from narrowing thoughts to part;
 And didst thou feel the pain of love?
 Could one soul's doom thy pity move?
 And shall not mine flow far and wide
 As ocean spreads his boundless tide?
 Is my heart cold while thine is warm?
 Not so: cast off the false alarm;
 The man thou pray'st for dwells with me,
 Where true light shines and shadows flee.
 The sins that sprang from life's ill chance,
 Deeds of those times of ignorance —
 These God has pardoned. Just and right,
 He owns all souls that loved the light,
 And leads them step by step to know
 The source from whence all good things flow.
 Though yet awhile in twilight rest
 They wait, as those but partly blest, —
 Though grief for all the evil past
 The opening joy of heaven o'ercast,
 Yet doubt not; trust my Father's will,
 As just and good and loving still:
 For those who, filled with holiest awe,
 Still strove to keep the Eternal Law, —
 For those who knew me not, yet tried
 To live for those for whom I died, —
 For them who give to child or saint
 One cup of water as they faint, —
 For these, be sure that all is well;
 I hold the keys of Death and Hell."

THE EMPEROR HADRIAN TO HIS SOUL.

[HADRIAN, Emperor of Rome A.D. 117-138, born A.D. 76, was nephew of his predecessor Trajan, and like him a Spaniard by birth; of equal energy and ambition, it did not as with him take a military form, but that of restless intellectual curiosity. He traveled all over the Empire, examining its condition and needs in person; and was equally interested in literature, art, and architecture. — This poetic skit, from its grace and conciseness, has stimulated various scholars and poets to attempt its translation: we give the original and some of the versions, collected by the Earl of Carnarvon.]

ANIMULA, vagula, blandula,
 Hospes, comesque corporis,
 Quæ nunc abibis in loco?

Pallidula, rigida, nudula,
Nec, ut soles, dabis jocos.

(Translation of Prior.)

Poor little pretty, fluttering thing,
Must we no longer live together ?
And dost thou preen thy trembling wing,
To take thy flight thou know'st not whither ?
Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot ;
And pensive, wavering, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what.

(Translation of Pope.)

Ah, fleeting spirit ! wandering fire !
That long hast warmed my tender breast.
Must thou no more this frame inspire,
No more a pleasing cheerful guest ?
Whither, ah whither art thou flying,
To what dark undiscovered shore ?
Thou seem'st all trembling, shivering, dying,
And wit and humor are no more.

(Translation of Lord Byron.)

Ah, gentle, fleeting, wavering sprite,
Friend and associate of this clay !
To what unknown region borne,
Wilt thou now wing thy distant flight ?
No more with wonted humor gay,
But pallid, cheerless, and forlorn.

(Translation of Charles Merivale.)

Soul of mine, pretty one, flitting one,
Guest and partner of my clay,
Whether wilt thou hie away, —
Pallid one, rigid one, naked one,
Never to play again, never to play ?

JOCULAR ORATORY.

BY QUINTILIAN.

[M. FABIVS QUINTILIANVS, teacher of oratory, was born in the town now named Calahorra, in Spain, A.D. 40. Coming to Rome A.D. 68, he attained distinction as an orator. He also received pupils in oratory, the two grandnephews of the Emperor Domitian and Pliny the Younger being amongst the number. For nearly twenty years Quintilian devoted himself to this profession, and he is noted as being the first teacher who received remuneration from the imperial exchequer for his services. He died about 118. He composed the system of rhetoric called "De Institutione Oratoria," in twelve books, after his retirement from public duties.]

I AM now to treat of a matter quite the reverse of that I discussed in the last chapter, — I mean, the manner of dissipating melancholy impressions, of unbending the mind from too intense application, of renewing its powers and recruiting its strength, after being surfeited and fatigued.

Now, we may be sensible, from the examples of the two great fathers of Greek and Roman eloquence, how difficult a matter this is, for it is generally thought that Demosthenes had no talents, and Cicero no bounds, in raising laughter. The truth is Demosthenes was not at all averse from attempting it, as appears by the instances of that kind which he left behind him; which, though very few, are far from being answerable to his other excellences. Few, however, as they are, they show that he liked jocularities, but that he had not the art of hitting it off. But as to our countryman Cicero, he was thought to affect it too much, for it not only entered into his common discourse, but into his most solemn pleadings. For my part, call it want of judgment or prepossession in favor of the most eloquent of mankind, I think Cicero had a wonderful share of delicate wit. No man ever said so many good things as he did in ordinary conversation, in debating, and in examining of witnesses; and he artfully throws into the mouths of others all his insipid jokes concerning Verres, and brings them as so many evidences of the notoriety of the charges against him; thereby intimating that the more vulgar they were, it was the more probable they were the language of the public, and not invented to serve the purposes of the orator. I wish, however, that his freedman Tyro, or whoever he was who collected the three books of his jokes, had been a little more sparing in publishing the good things he said ; and that in choosing them he had been as judicious as in compiling them he was industrious. The compiler then had been less liable to criticism ; and yet the book, even as it has come to our hands, discovers the characteristics of Cicero's genius ; for, however you may retrench from it, you can add nothing to it.

Several things concur to render this manner extremely difficult. In the first place, all ridicule has something in it that is buffoonish ; that is, somewhat that is low, and oftentimes purposely rendered mean. In the next place, it is never attended with dignity, and people are apt to construe it in different senses ; because it is not judged by any criterion of reason, ~~but~~ by a certain unaccountable impression which it makes upon the hearer. I call it unaccountable, because many have endeavored to account for it, but, I think, without success. Here it is that a laugh may arise, not only from an action or a saying, but even the very motion of the body may raise it ; add to this, that there are many different motives for laughter. For we laugh not only at actions and sayings that are witty and pleasant, but such as are stupid, passionate, and cowardly. It is, therefore, of a motley composition ; for very often we laugh with a man as well as laugh at him. For, as Cicero observes, "the province of ridiculousness consists in a certain meanness and deformity." The manner that points them out is termed wit or urbanity. If while we are pointing them out we make ourselves ridiculous, it is termed folly. Even the slightest matter, when it comes from a buffoon, an actor — nay, a dunce, may, notwithstanding, carry with it an effect that I may call irresistible, and such as it is impossible for us to guard against. The pleasure it gives us bursts from us even against our will, and appears not only in the expression of our looks and our voices, but is powerful enough even to shake the whole frame of our body. Very often, as I have already observed, one touch of the ridiculous may give a turn to the most serious affairs. We have an instance of this in some young Tarentines, who, having at an entertainment made very free with the character of King Pyrrhus, were next morning examined before him upon what they had said, which, though they durst not defend and could not deny, yet they escaped by a well-turned joke : "Sir," says one of them, "if our liquor had not failed us we would have murdered you." This turn of wit at once canceled all the guilt they were charged with.

Yet this knack, or whatever the reader pleases to call it, of joking, I will not venture to pronounce to be void of all art, for it admits of certain rules, which Greek and Roman writers have reduced into a system; I, however, affirm that its success is chiefly owing to nature and the occasion. Now, nature does not consist in the acuteness and skill which some possess above others in the inventive part (for that may be improved by art); but some people's manner and face are so well fitted for this purpose, that, were others to say the same thing, it would lose a great part of its gracefulness. With regard to the occasion and the subject, they are so very serviceable in matters of wit, that dunces and clowns have been known to make excellent repartees; and, indeed, everything has a better grace that comes by way of reply, than what is offered by way of attack. What adds to the difficulty is, that no rules can be laid down for the practice of this thing, and no masters can teach it. We know a great many who say smart things at entertainments, or in common conversation; and, indeed, they cannot avoid it, for they are hourly attempting it. But the wit that is required in an orator is seldom to be met with; it forms no part of his art, but arises from the habits of life. I know no objection, however, against prescribing exercises of this kind, to accustom young men to compositions of a brisk lively turn of wit: nay, the sayings which we call "good things," and which are so common on merrymaking and festival days, may be of very great service to the practice at the bar, could they be brought to answer any purpose of utility, or could they be brought in aid of any serious subject. At present, however, they serve no purpose but that of useless diversion to younger persons. . . .

We may either act or speak ridicule. Sometimes a grave way of doing an arch thing occasions great ridicule. Thus, when the consul Isauricus had broken the curule chair belonging to the pretor Marcus Cœlius, the latter erected another chair, slung upon leathern straps, because it was notorious that the consul, on a time, had been strapped by his father. Sometimes ridicule attacks objects that are past all sense of shame; for instance, the adventure of the casket, mentioned by Cicero in his pleading for Cœlius. But that was so scandalous a thing that no one in his senses could enlarge upon it. We may make the same observation when there is anything droll in the look or the manner; for they may be rendered extremely diverting, but never so much as when they appear to be very serious. For nothing is more stupid than to see a man always upon the titter, and, as it were, beating up for a laugh. But, though a grave serious look and manner add greatly to ridicule, and indeed are sometimes ridicule itself, by the person remaining quite serious, yet still it may be assisted by the looks and the powers of the face, and a certain pleasing adjustment of one's whole gesture: but always remember never to overdo.

As to the ridicule that consists in words, its character is either that of wantonness and jollity, as we generally saw in Galba; or cutting, such as the late Junius Bassus possessed; or blunt and rough, like the manner of Cassius Severus; or winning and delicate, like that of Domitius Afer. The place where we employ those different manners is of great importance, for at entertainments and in common discourse the vulgar are wanton, but all mankind may be cheerful. Meanwhile, let all malice be removed, and let us never adopt that maxim, "Rather to lose our friend than our jest." With regard to our practice at the bar, if I were to employ any of the manners I have mentioned, it should be that of the gentle, delicate kind. Though at the same time we are allowed to employ the most reproachful and cutting expressions against our adversaries; but that is in the case of capital impeachments, when justice is demanded upon an offender. But even in that case, we think it inhuman to insult the misery or the fallen state of another, for such are generally less to blame than they are represented, and insults may recoil upon the head of the person who employs them.

We are in the first place, therefore, to consider who the person is that speaks, what is the cause, who is the judge, who is the party, and what are the expressions. An orator ought by all means to avoid every distortion of look and gesture employed by comedians to raise a laugh. All farcical theatrical pertness is likewise utterly inconsistent with the character of an orator; and he ought to be so far from expressing, that he ought not to imitate anything that is offensive to modesty. Nay, though he should have an opportunity to expose it, it may be sometimes more proper to pass it over.

Further, though I think the manner of an orator ought at all times to be elegant and genteel, yet he should by no means affect being thought a wit. He should not, therefore, be always witty when he can; and he ought sometimes to sacrifice his jest to his character. What indignation does it give us in a trial upon atrocious crimes, to hear a pleader breaking his jokes, or an advocate merry, while he is speaking in defense of the miserable !

Besides, we are to reflect that some judges are of so serious a cast as not to endure anything that may raise a laugh. Sometimes it happens that the reproach we aim at our opponent hits the judge himself, or suits our own client. And some are so foolish that they cannot refrain from expressions that recoil upon themselves. This was the case with Longus Sulpicius, who, being himself a very ugly fellow, and pleading a cause that affected the liberty of another person, said, "Nature had not given that man the face of a free man." "Then," replies Domitius Afer to him, "you are in your soul and conscience of opinion that every man who has an ugly face ought to be a slave."

An orator likewise is to avoid everything that is ill-mannered, or haughty, offensive in the place, or unseasonable upon the occasion. He is likewise to say nothing that seems premeditated and studied before he came into court. Now, as I have already said, it is barbarous to joke upon the miseries of another ; while some are so venerable, so amiable in their universal character, that a pleader only hurts himself by attacking them. . . .

One maxim is of use, not only to the purposes of an orator, but to the purposes of life ; which is, never to attack a man whom it is dangerous to provoke, lest you be brought to maintain some disagreeable enmities, or to make some scandalous submissions. It is likewise highly improper to throw out any invectives that numbers of people may take to themselves ; or to arraign, by the lump, nations, degrees, and ranks of mankind, or those pursuits which are common to many. A man of sense and good breeding will say nothing that can hurt his own character or probity. A laugh is too dearly bought when purchased at the expense of virtue.

It is, however, extremely difficult to point out all the different manners of raising a laugh, and the occasions that furnish it. Nay, it is next to impossible to trace all the different sources of ridicule. In general, however, a laugh may be raised either from the personal appearance of an opponent, or from his understanding, as it appears by his words or actions, or from exterior circumstances. These, I say, are the three sources of all vilifying, which, if urged with acrimony, become serious ; if with pleasantry, ridiculous.

Sometimes, but seldom, it happens that an object of ridicule actually presents itself upon the spot. This happened to Caius Julius, who told Helmius Mancia, who was deafening the whole court with his bawling, that he would show him what he resembled. The other challenging him to make good his promise, Julius pointed with his finger to the distorted figure of a Gaul, painted upon the shield of Marius, which was set up as a sign to one of the booths that stood round the forum, and in fact was very like Mancia. The narrative of imaginary circumstances may be managed with the greatest delicacy and oratorical art ; witness Cicero's narrative concerning Cepasius and Fabricius, in his pleading for Cluentius ; and the manner in which Marcus Cœlius represents the race run between Caius Lælius and his colleague, which should get first to his province. But all such recitals require every elegant, every genteel touch the orator can give them ; and the whole must be brought up with the most delicate humor.

FROM JUVENAL'S TENTH SATIRE.

TRANSLATED BY JOHN DRYDEN.

[For biographical sketch, see page 235.]

Look round the habitable world, how few
Know their own good ; or, knowing it, pursue.
How void of reason are our hopes and fears !
What in the conduct of our life appears
So well designed, so luckily begun,
But, when we have our wish, we wish undone ?

Whole houses, of their whole desires possest,
Are often ruined, at their own request.
In wars, and peace, things hurtful we require,
When made obnoxious to our own desire.

With laurels some have fatally been crowned ;
Some, who the depths of eloquence have found,
In that unnavigable stream were drowned.

The brawny fool, who did his vigor boast,
In that presuming confidence was lost :
But more have been by avarice opprest,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest ;

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount
Than files of marshaled figures can account.
To which the stores of Cræsus, in the scale,
Would look like little dolphins, when they sail
In the vast shadow of the British whale.

For this, in Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cutthroat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces:
The mob, commissioned by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent.
The fearful passenger, who travels late,
Charged with the carriage of a paltry plate,
Shakes at the moonshine shadow of a rush,
And sees a redcoat rise from every bush:
The beggar sings, ev'n when he sees the place
Beset with thieves, and never mends his pace.

Of all the vows, the first and chief request
Of each is to be richer than the rest:
And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;
He dreads no poison in his homely bowl;
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup and sparkle in the wine.

Will you not now the pair of sages praise,
Who the same end pursued, by several ways?
One pitied, one contemned, the woeful times;
One laughed at follies, one lamented crimes:
Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supplied the weeper's eyes.
Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
His sides and shoulders till he felt them ache:
Though in his country town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune, did appear,
Nor all the foppish gravity of show,
Which cunning magistrates on crowds bestow.

What had he done, had he beheld, on high,
Our pretor seated in mock majesty;
His chariot rolling o'er the dusty place,
While, with dumb pride, and a set formal face,
He moves, in the dull ceremonial track,
With Jove's embroidered coat upon his back:
A suit of hangings had not more opprest
His shoulders than that long, laborious vest;
A heavy gewgaw (called a crown) that spread
About his temples drowned his narrow head,

And would have crushed it with the massy freight,
 But that a sweating slave sustained the weight :
 A slave in the same chariot seen to ride,
 To mortify the mighty madman's pride.
 And now th' imperial eagle, raised on high,
 With golden beak (the mark of majesty),
 Trumpets before, and on the left and right,
 A cavalcade of nobles, all in white ;
 In their own natures false and flattering tribes,
 But made his friends by places and by bribes.

In his own age, Democritus could find
 Sufficient cause to laugh at humankind :
 Learn from so great a wit ; a land of bogs
 With ditches fenced, a heaven made fat with fogs,
 May form a spirit fit to sway the state,
 And make the neighboring monarchs fear their fate.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
 At their vain triumphs and their vainer tears ;
 An equal temper in his mind he found,
 When Fortune flattered him and when she frowned.
 'Tis plain, from hence, that what our vows request
 Are hurtful things, or useless at the best.

Some ask for envied power ; which public hate
 Pursues, and hurries headlong to their fate :
 Down go the titles ; and the statue crowned
 Is by base hands in the next river drowned.
 The guiltless horses, and the chariot wheel,
 The same effects of vulgar fury feel :
 The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
 While the lunged bellows hissing fire provoke ;
 Sejanus, almost first of Roman names,
 The great Sejanus crackles in the flames :
 Formed in the forge, the pliant brass is laid
 On anvils ; and of head and limbs are made,
 Pans, cans, and jordans, a whole kitchen trade.

Adorn your doors with laurels ; and a bull,
 Milk-white, and large, lead to the Capitol ;
 Sejanus with a rope is dragged along,
 The sport and laughter of the giddy throng !
 Good Lord, they cry, what Ethiop lips he has,
 How foul a snout, and what a hanging face !
 By heaven, I never could endure his sight ;
 But say, how came his monstrous crimes to light ?
 What is the charge, and who the evidence
 (The savior of the nation and the prince) ?

Nothing of this; but our old Cæsar sent
A noisy letter to his parliament:
Nay, sirs, if Cæsar writ, I ask no more,
He's guilty; and the question's out of door.
How goes the mob? (for that's a mighty thing,)
When the king's trump, the mob are for the king:
They follow fortune, and the common cry
Is still against the rogue condemned to die.

But the same very mob, that rascal crowd,
Had cried Sejanus, with a shout as loud;
Had his designs (by fortune's favor blest)
Succeeded, and the prince's age opprest.
But long, long since, the times have changed their face,
The people grown degenerate and base:
Not suffered now the freedom of their choice,
To make their magistrates, and sell their voice.

Our wise forefathers, great by sea and land,
Had once the power and absolute command;
All offices of trust, themselves disposed;
Raised whom they pleased, and whom they pleased deposed.

But we, who give our native rights away,
And our enslaved posterity betray,
Are now reduced to beg an alms, and go
On holidays to see a puppet show.

There was a damned design, cries one, no doubt;
For warrants are already issued out:
I met Brutidius in a mortal fright;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight.
I fear the rage of our offended prince,
Who thinks the senate slack in his defense!
Come, let us haste, our loyal zeal to show,
And spurn the wretched corpse of Cæsar's foe;
But let our slaves be present there, lest they Accuse their masters, and for gain betray.
Such were the whispers of those jealous times,
About Sejanus' punishment and crimes.

Now tell me truly, wouldst thou change thy fate
To be, like him, first minister of state?
To have thy levees crowded with resort,
Of a depending, gaping, servile court:
Dispose all honors of the sword and gown,
Grace with a nod, and ruin with a frown:
To hold thy prince in pupilage, and sway
That monarch, whom the mastered world obey?

While he, intent on secret lust alone,
Lives to himself, abandoning the throne;
Cooped in a narrow isle, observing dreams
With flattering wizards and erecting schemes!

I well believe, thou wouldst be great as he;
For every man's a fool to that degree:
All wish the dire prerogative to kill;
Ev'n they would have the power, who want the will:
But wouldst thou have thy wishes understood,
To take the bad together with the good?
Wouldst thou not rather choose a small renown,
To be the mayor of some poor paltry town,
Bigly to look, and barbarously to speak;
To pound false weights, and scanty measures break?
Then, grant we that Sejanus went astray
In every wish, and knew not how to pray:
For he who grasped the world's exhausted store
Yet never had enough, but wished for more,
Raised a top-heavy tower, of monstrous height,
Which, moldering, crushed him underneath the weight.

What did the mighty Pompey's fall beget?
It ruined him, who, greater than the great,
The stubborn pride of Roman nobles broke,
And bent their haughty necks beneath his yoke:
What else but his immoderate lust of power,
Prayers made and granted in a luckless hour?
For few usurpers to the shades descend
By a dry death, or with a quiet end.

The boy, who scarce has paid his entrance down
To his proud pedant, or declined a noun,
(So small an elf, that when the days are foul,
He and his satchel must be borne to school,)
Yet prays, and hopes, and aims at nothing less,
To prove a Tully, or Demosthenes:
But both those orators, so much renowned,
In their own depths of eloquence were drowned;
The hand and head were never lost, of those Who dealt in doggerel or who punned in prose.

"Fortune foretuned the dying notes of Rome,
Till I, thy consul sole, consoled thy doom:"
His fate had crept below the lifted swords,
Had all his malice been to murder words.
I rather would be Mævius, thrash for rhymes
Like his the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philippic fatally divine,

Which is inscribed the second, should be mine.
Nor he, the wonder of the Grecian throng,
Who drove them with the torrent of his tongue,
Who shook the theaters, and swayed the state
Of Athens, found a more propitious fate.
Whom, born beneath a boding horoscope,
His sire, the blear-eyed Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars's forge, sent to Minerva's schools,
To learn th' unlucky art of wheedling fools.

With itch of honor, and opinion, vain,
All things beyond their native worth we strain:
The spoils of war, brought to Feretrian Jove,
An empty coat of armor hung above
The conqueror's chariot, and in triumph born,
A streamer from a boarded galley torn,
A chapfall'n beaver loosely hanging by
The cloven helm, an arch of victory,
On whose high convex sits a captive foe,
And sighing casts a mournful look below;
Of every nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have cheated into fame:
Exchanging solid quiet, to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain.

So much the thirst of honor fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good.
For who would Virtue for herself regard,
Or wed, without the portion of reward?
Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursued,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude:
This avarice of praise in times to come,
Those long inscriptions, crowded on the tomb,
Should some wild fig tree take her native bent,
And heave below the gaudy monument,
Would crack the marble titles, and disperse
The characters of all the lying verse.
For sepulchers themselves must crumbling fall
In time's abyss, the common grave of all.

Great Hannibal within the balance lay,
And tell how many pounds his ashes weigh;
Whom Afric was not able to contain,
Whose length runs level with th' Atlantic main,
And wearies fruitful Nilus, to convey
His sun-beat waters by so long a way;
Which Ethiopia's double clime divides,
And elephants in other mountains hides.

Spain first he won, the Pyrenæans past,
 And steepy Alps, the mounds that Nature cast;
 And with corroding juices, as he went,
 A passage through the living rocks he rent.
 Then, like a torrent, rolling from on high,
 He pours his headlong rage on Italy;
 In three victorious battles overrun,
 Yet still uneasy, cries, There's nothing done,
 Till level with the ground their gates are lai
 And Punic flags on Roman towers displayed.
 Ask what a face belonged to his high fane:
 His picture scarcely would deserve a frame;
 A signpost dauber would disdain to paint
 The one-eyed hero on his elephant.
 Now what's his end, O charming Glory! say
 What rare fifth act to crown his huffing play?
 In one deciding battle overcome,
 He flies, is banished from his native home;
 Begs refuge in a foreign court, and there
 Attends, his mean petition to prefer;
 Repulsed by surly grooms, who wait before
 The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door.

What wondrous sort of death has heaven designed,
 Distinguished from the herd of humankind,
 For so untamed, so turbulent a mind!
 Nor swords at hand, nor hissing darts afar,
 Are doomed t' avenge the tedious bloody war;
 But poison, drawn through a ring's hollow plate,
 Must finish him; a sucking infant's fate.
 Go, climb the rugged Alps, ambitious fool,
 To please the boys, and be a theme at school.

One world sufficed not Alexander's mind;
 Cooped up, he seemed in earth and seas confined;
 And, struggling, stretched his restless limbs about
 The narrow globe, to find a passage out.
 Yet, entered in the brick-built town, he tried
 The tomb, and found the strait dimensions wide:
 "Death only this mysterious truth unfolds,
 The mighty soul how small a body holds."

Old Greece a tale of Athos would make out,
 Cut from the continent, and sailed about;
 Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
 The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore;
 Rivers, whose depth no sharp beholder sees,
 Drunk at an army's dinner, to the lees;

With a long legend of romantic things,
 Which in his cups the browsy poet sings.
 But how did he return, this haughty brave,
 Who whipt the winds, and made the sea his slave?
 (Though Neptune took unkindly to be bound;
 And Eurus never such hard usage found
 In his Æolian prison underground;)
 What God so mean, ev'n he who points the way,
 So merciless a tyrant to obey!
 But how returned he, let us ask again?
 In a poor skiff he passed the bloody main,
 Choked with the slaughtered bodies of his train.
 For fame he prayed, but let th' event declare
 He had no mighty penn'worth of his prayer.

* * * * *

What then remains? Are we deprived of will?
 Must we not wish, for fear of wishing ill?
 Receive my counsel, and securely move:
 Intrust thy fortune to the powers above.
 Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
 What their unerring wisdom sees thee want;
 In goodness, as in greatness, they excel:
 Ah, that we loved ourselves but half so well! . . .

Yet not to rob the priests of pious gain,
 That altars be not wholly built in vain, —
 Forgive the gods the rest, and stand confined
 To health of body, and content of mind:
 A soul, that can securely death defy,
 And count it Nature's privilege to die;
 Serene and manly, hardened to sustain
 The load of life, and exercised in pain:
 Guiltless of hate, and proof against desire;
 That all things weighs, and nothing can admire;
 That dares prefer the toils of Hercules
 To dalliance, banquet, and ignoble ease.

The path to peace is Virtue: what I show
 Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
 Fortune was never worshiped by the wise;
 But, set aloft by fools, usurps the skies.

CUPID AND PSYCHE.

BY APULEIUS.

[LUCIUS APULEIUS, Roman story-writer, was born in Madaura, Africa, early in the second century A.D.; the time of his death is unknown. His fame rests on the immortal "Metamorphoses; or, the Golden Ass," a sort of early Decameron, with contents ranging from the grossest indecencies to the exquisite story of Cupid and Psyche; and on the amusing "Vindication," a defense to the charge of having used magic arts to make a rich middle-aged widow marry him.]

IN a certain city there lived a king and queen who had three daughters of remarkable beauty. The charms of the two elder—and they were very great—were still thought not to exceed all possible measure of praise; but as for the youngest sister, human speech was too poor to express, much less adequately to extol, her exquisite and surpassing loveliness. In fact, multitudes of the citizens, and of strangers, whom the fame of this extraordinary spectacle gathered to the spot, were struck dumb with astonishment at her unapproachable beauty, and moving their right hand to their lips, with the forefinger joining the elevated thumb, paid her religious adoration, just as though she were the goddess Venus herself.

And now the tidings spread through the neighboring cities and adjacent countries that the goddess whom the azure depths of the ocean had brought forth, and the spray of the foamy billows had nurtured, dwelt in the midst of mortals, and suffered them indiscriminately to behold her divine form; or at least, that once again, impregnated by a new emanation from the starry heavens, not the sea, but the earth, had brought forth another Venus, gifted with the flower of virginity. Thus did her fame travel rapidly every day; thus did the news soon traverse the neighboring islands, a great part of the continent, and multitudes of provinces. Many were the mortals who, by long journeys over land, and over the deep sea, flocked from all quarters to behold this glorious specimen of the age. No one set sail for Paphos, no one for Cnidus, nor even for Cythera, to have sight of the goddess Venus. Her sacred rites were abandoned, her temples suffered to decay, her cushions trampled under foot, her ceremonies neglected, her statues left without chaplets, and her desolate altars defiled with cold ashes. A young girl was supplicated in her stead, and the divinity of the mighty goddess was worshiped under human features; and the maiden was propitiated in her morning walks with victims and banquets offered her in the name of the absent Venus. And ever, as she passed along the streets, the people crowded round, and adoringly presented her with garlands, and scattered flowers on her path.

This extraordinary transfer of celestial honors to a mortal maiden, greatly incensed the real Venus, who called her son Cupid and said to him : —

“I conjure you by the ties of maternal love, by the sweet wounds inflicted by your arrow, by the warmth, delightful as honey, of that torch, to afford your parent her revenge, aye, and a full one too, and as you respect myself, severely punish this rebellious beauty : and this one thing, above all, use all your endeavors to effect ; let this maiden be seized with the most burning love for the lowest of mankind, one whom fortune has stripped of rank, patrimony, and even of personal safety ; one so degraded, that he cannot find his equal in wretchedness throughout the whole world.”

In the meantime, Psyche, with all her exquisite beauty, derived no advantage whatever from her good looks ; she was gazed on by all, praised by all, and yet no one, king, noble, or plebeian even, came to woo her for his bride. They admired, no doubt, her divine beauty, but then they all admired it as they would a statue exquisitely wrought. Long before this, her two elder sisters, whose more moderate charms had not been bruited abroad among the nations, had been wooed by kings, and happily wedded to them ; but Psyche, forlorn virgin, sat at home, bewailing her lonely condition, faint in body and sick at heart ; and hated her own beauty, though it delighted all the rest of the world.

The wretched father of this most unfortunate daughter, suspecting the enmity of the gods, and dreading their wrath, consulted the very ancient oracle of the Milesian God, and sought of that mighty divinity, with prayers and victims, a husband for the maiden whom no one cared to have. But Apollo, though a Grecian and an Ionian, by right of the founder of Miletus, delivered an oracle in Latin verse to the following effect : —

“On some high mountain’s craggy summit place
The virgin, deck’d for deadly nuptial rites ;
Nor hope a son-in-law of mortal race,

But a dire mischief, viperous and fierce;
Who flies through ether, and with fire and sword
Tires and debilitates whate'er exists,
Terrific to the powers that reign on high.
E'en mighty Jove the wing'd destroyer dreads,
And streams and Stygian shades abhor the pest."

[They follow the oracle's directions.]

The multitudinous procession advanced to the destined rock on a lofty mountain, and left the maiden alone on the summit; the nuptial torches, with which they had lighted their way, were now extinguished in their tears, and thrown aside, the ceremony was at an end, and with drooping heads they took their homeward way. As for her wretched parents, sinking under the weight of a calamity so great, they shut themselves up in their darkened palace, and abandoned themselves to perpetual night. Meanwhile, as Psyche lay trembling and weeping in dismay on the summit of the rock, the mild breeze of the gently blowing Zephyr played round her garments, fluttering and gradually expanding them till they lifted her up, and the god, wafting her with his tranquil breath adown the lofty mountain side, laid her softly on the flowery turf in the lap of the valley.

Psyche, therefore, delightfully reclining in this pleasant and grassy spot, upon a bed of dewy herbage, felt her extreme agitation of mind allayed, and sank into a sweet sleep, from which she awoke refreshed in body, and with a mind more composed. She then espied a grove, thick planted with vast and lofty trees; she likewise saw a fountain in the middle of the grove, with water limpid as crystal. Near the fall of the fountain there was a kingly palace, not raised by human hands, but by divine skill. You might know, from the very entrance of the palace, that you were looking upon the splendid and delightful abode of some god. For the lofty ceilings, curiously arched with cedar and ivory, were supported by golden columns. The walls were incrustated all over with silver carving, with wild beasts and domestic animals of all kinds, presenting themselves to the view of those who entered the palace. A wonderful man was he, a demigod, nay, surely, a god, who with such exquisite subtlety of art, molded such vast quantities of silver into various ferine forms.

The very pavement itself consisted of precious stones cut out and arranged so as to form pictures of divers kinds. Blessed, thrice blessed, those who can tread gems and bracelets under foot ! The other parts, as well, of this palace of vast extent, were precious beyond all computation ; and the walls being everywhere strengthened with bars of gold, shone with their own luster, so that even were the sun to withhold his light, the palace could make for itself a day of its own ; so effulgent were the chambers, the porticos, and the doors. The furniture, too, was on a scale commensurate with the majesty of this abode ; so that it might well be looked upon as a palace built by mighty Jove, where he might dwell among mankind.

Invited by the delightful appearance of the place, Psyche approached it, and, gradually taking courage, stepped over the threshold. The beauty of what she beheld lured her on, and everything filled her with admiration. In another part of the palace, she beheld magnificent repositories, stored with immense riches ; nothing, in fact, is there which was not there to be found. But besides the admiration which such enormous wealth excited, this was particularly surprising — that this treasury of the world was protected by no chain, no bar, no guard.

Here, while Psyche's gaze was ravished with delight, a bodiless voice thus addressed her : “ Why, lady,” it said, “ are you astonished at such vast riches ? All are yours. Betake yourself, therefore, to your chamber, and refresh your wearied limbs on your couch, and, when you think proper, repair to the bath ; for we, whose voices you now hear, are your handmaidens, and will carefully attend to all your commands, and, when we have dressed you, a royal banquet will be placed before you without delay.”

Psyche was sensible of the goodness of divine providence, and, obedient to the admonitions of the unembodied voices, relieved her fatigue, first with sleep, and afterwards with the bath. After this, perceiving, close at hand, a semicircular dais with a raised seat, and what seemed to be the apparatus for a banquet, intended for her refreshment, she readily took her place ; whereupon nectareous wines, and numerous dishes containing various kinds of dainties, were immediately served up, impelled, as it seemed, by some spiritual impulse, for there were no visible attendants. Not one human being could she see, she only heard words that were uttered, and had voices alone for her servants. After an exquisite banquet was served up, some one entered, and sang unseen, while another struck the lyre, as invisible as himself. Then, a swell of voices, as of a multitude singing in full chorus, was wafted to her ears, though not one of the vocalists could she descry.

After these delights had ceased, the evening now persuading to repose, Psyche retired to bed; and when the night was far advanced, a certain gentle, murmuring sound fell upon her ears. Then, alarmed for her honor in consequence of the profound solitude of the place, she trembled and was filled with terror, and dreaded that of which she was ignorant, more than any misfortune. And now her unknown bridegroom ascended the couch, made Psyche his wife, and hastily left her before break of day. Immediately the attendant voices of the bed-chamber came to aid the wounded modesty of the new-made bride. This course was continued for a length of time; and, as by nature it has been so ordained, the novelty, by its constant repetition, afforded her delight, and the sound of the voices was the solace of her solitude.

In the meantime, her parents were wasting their old age in sorrow and lamentation; and the report of her fate, becoming more widely extended, her elder sisters had learned all the particulars; whereupon leaving their homes in deep grief, they hastened to visit and comfort their parents. On that night did Psyche's husband thus address her — for she could discern his presence with her ears and hands, though not with her eyes: —

“Most charming Psyche, dear wife, cruel fortune now threatens you with a deadly peril, which needs, I think, to be guarded against with the most vigilant attention. For ere long, your sisters, who are alarmed at the report of your death, in their endeavors to discover traces of you, will arrive at yonder rock. If, then, you should chance to hear their lamentations, make them no reply, no, nor even so much as turn your eyes towards them. By doing otherwise, you will cause most grievous sorrow to me, and utter destruction to yourself.”

Psyche assented, and promised that she would act agreeably to her husband's desire. But when he and the night had departed together, the poor thing consumed the whole day in tears and lamentations, exclaiming over and over again that she was now utterly lost, since, besides being thus confined in a splendid prison, deprived of human conversation, she was not even allowed to relieve the minds of her sisters, who were sorrowing for her, nor, indeed, so much as to see them. Without having refreshed herself, therefore, with the bath or with food, or, in fact, with any solace whatever, but weeping plenteously, she retired to rest. Shortly afterwards, her husband, coming to her bed earlier than usual, embraced her as she wept, and thus expostulated with her :—

“Is this, my Psyche, what you promised me? What am I, your husband, henceforth to expect of you? What can I now hope for, when neither by day nor by night, not even in the midst of our conjugal endearments, you cease to be distracted with grief? Very well, then, act now just as you please, and comply with the baneful dictates of your inclination. However, when you begin too late to repent, you will recall to mind my serious admonitions.”

Upon this, she had recourse to prayers; and threatening that she would put an end to herself if her request were denied, she extorted from her husband a consent that she might see her sisters, to soothe their grief, and enjoy their conversation. This he yielded to the entreaties of his new-made wife, and he gave her permission, besides, to present her sisters with as much gold and as many jewels as she pleased; but he warned her repeatedly, and so often as to terrify her, never on any occasion to be persuaded, by the pernicious advice of her sisters, to make any inquiries concerning the form of her husband; lest, by a sacrilegious curiosity, she might cast herself down from such an exalted position of good fortune, and never again feel his embraces.

She thanked her husband for his indulgence; and now, having quite recovered her spirits: “Nay,” said she, “I would suffer death a hundred times rather than be deprived of your most delightful company, for I love you, yes, I doat upon you to desperation, whoever you are, aye, even as I love my own soul, nor would I give you in exchange for Cupid himself. But this also I beseech you to grant to my prayers: bid Zephyr, this servant of yours, convey my sisters to me, in the same manner in which he brought me hither.” Then, pressing his lips with persuasive kisses, murmuring endearing words, and in-folding him with her clinging limbs, she called him coaxingly, “My sweet my husband, dear soul of thy Psyche.” Her husband, overcome by the power of love, yielded reluctantly, and promised all she desired. After this, upon the approach of morning, he again vanished from the arms of his wife.

Meanwhile, the sisters, having inquired the way to the rock on which Psyche was abandoned, hastened thither; and there they wept and beat their breasts till the rocks and crags resounded with their lamentations. They called to their unfortunate sister, by her own name, until the shrill sound of their shrieks descending the declivities of the mountain, reached the ears of Psyche, who ran out of her palace in delirious trepidation, and exclaimed : —

“Why do you needlessly afflict yourselves with doleful lamentations? Here am I, whom you mourn; cease those dismal accents, and now at last dry up those tears that have so long bedewed your cheeks, since you may now embrace her whom you have been lamenting.”

Then, summoning Zephyr, she acquaints him with her husband's commands, in obedience to which, instantly wafting them on his gentlest breeze, he safely conveyed them to Psyche. Now do they enjoy mutual embraces, and hurried kisses; and their tears, that had ceased to flow, return, after a time, summoned forth by joy. “Now come,” said Psyche, “enter my dwelling in gladness, and cheer up your afflicted spirits with your Psyche.” Having thus said, she showed them the vast treasures of her golden palace, made their ears acquainted with the numerous retinue of voices that were obedient to her commands, and sumptuously refreshed them in a most beautiful bath, and with the delicacies of a divine banquet; until, satiated with this copious abundance of celestial riches, they began to nourish envy in the lowest depths of their breasts. One of them, especially, very minute and curious, persisted in making inquiries about the master of this celestial wealth, what kind of person, and what sort of husband he made.

Psyche, however, would by no means violate her husband's injunctions, or disclose the secrets of her breast; but, devising a tale for the occasion, told them that he was a young man, and very good-looking, with cheeks as yet only shaded with soft down, and that he was, for the most part, engaged in rural occupations, and hunting on the mountains. And lest, by any slip in the course of the protracted conversation, her secret counsels might be betrayed, having loaded them with ornaments of gold and jeweled necklaces, she called Zephyr, and ordered him at once to convey them back again.

This being immediately executed, these excellent sisters, as they were returning home, now burning more and more with the rancor of envy, conversed much with each other; at last one of them thus began: “Do but see how blind, cruel, and unjust Fortune has proved! Were you, my sister, delighted to find that we, born of the same parents, had met with such a different lot? We, indeed, who are the elder, are delivered over as bondmaids to foreign husbands, and live in banishment from our home, our native land, and our parents; and this, the youngest of us all, is raised to the enjoyment of such boundless wealth, and has a god for her husband—she who does not even know how to enjoy, in a proper manner, such an abundance of blessings? You saw, sister, what a vast number of necklaces there were in the house, and of what enormous value, what splendid dresses, what brilliant gems, and what heaps of gold she treads upon in every direction. If, besides all this, she possesses a husband so handsome as she asserts him to be, there lives not in the whole world a happier woman than she. Perhaps, however, upon continued acquaintance, and when his affection is strengthened, her husband, who is a god, will make her a goddess as well. By Hercules! it is so already; she comported and demeaned herself just like one: the woman must needs assume a lofty bearing, and give herself the airs of a goddess, who has voices for her attendants, and commands the very winds themselves. But I, wretched creature, am tied to a husband who, in the first place, is older than my father; and who, in the next place, is balder than a pumpkin, and more dwarfish than any boy, and who fastens up every part of his house with bolts and chains.”

“But I,” replied the other sister, “have got to put up with a husband who is tormented and crippled with gout; and who, on this account, seldom honors me with his embraces, while I have to be everlastingly rubbing his distorted and chalky fingers with filthy fomentations, nasty rags, and stinking poultices; scalding these delicate hands, and acting the part not of a wife, but of a female doctor. You, sister, seem to bear all this with a patient, or rather a servile, spirit, for I shall speak out fully what I think; but, for my part, I can no longer endure that such a fortunate destiny should have so undeservedly fallen to her lot. And then, recollect in what a haughty and arrogant manner she behaved towards us, and how, by her boasting and immoderate ostentation, she betrayed a heart swelling with pride, and how reluctantly she threw us a trifling portion of her immense riches; and immediately after, being weary of our company, ordered us to be turned out, and to be puffed and whisked away. But may I be no woman, nor indeed may I breathe, if I do not hurl her down headlong from such mighty wealth. And if this contumely offered to us stings you too, as it ought, let us both join in forming some effective plan. In the first place, then, let us not show these things that we have got, either to our parents or to any one else; in fact, we are to know nothing at all about her safety. It is quite enough that we ourselves have seen what it vexes us to have seen, without having to spread the report of her good fortune among our parents and all the people; for, in fact, those persons are not wealthy whose riches no one is acquainted with. She shall know that in us she has got no handmaids, but elder sisters. For the present, then, let us away to our husbands, and revisit our poor and plain dwellings, that after long and earnest consideration we may return the better prepared to humble her pride."

This wicked project was voted good by the two wicked sisters. Concealing those choice and sumptuous presents which they had received from Psyche, tearing their hair, and beating their faces, which well deserved such treatment, they redoubled their pretended grief. In this manner, too, hastily leaving their parents, after having set their sorrows bleeding afresh, they returned to their homes, swelling with malicious rage, and plotting wicked schemes, nay, actual parricide against their innocent sister.

In the meantime, Psyche's unknown husband once more admonished her thus in their nocturnal conversation: "Are you aware what a mighty peril Fortune is preparing to launch against you from a distance, one too, which, unless you take strenuous precautions against it, will ere long confront you, hand to hand? Those perfidious she-wolves are planning base stratagems against you with all their might, to the end that they may prevail upon you to view my features, which, as I have often told you, if you once see, you will see no more. If, then, these most abominable vampires come again, armed with their baneful intentions,—and that they will come I know full well,—do not hold any converse whatever with them; but if, through your natural frankness and tenderness of disposition, you are not able to do this, at all events, be careful not to listen to or answer any inquiries about your husband. For before long we shall have an increase to our family, and infantine as you are, you hold another infant which, if you preserve my secret in silence, will be born divine, but if you profane it, will be mortal."

Radiant with joy at this news, Psyche exulted in the glory of this future pledge of love, and in the dignity of a mother's name. Anxiously did she reckon the increasing tale of the days and the elapsing months, and wondered in simple ignorance at the structure of this unknown burden.

But now those pests and most dire Furies, breathing virulent virulence, were hastening towards her with the speed of ruthless hate. Then again her husband warned his Psyche to this effect during his brief visit : "The day of trial, and this most utter calamity, are now at hand. Your own malicious sex, and your own blood, in arms against you, have struck their camp, drawn up their forces in battle array, and sounded the charge. Now are your wicked sisters aiming with the drawn sword at your throat. Alas ! darling Psyche, by what mighty dangers are we now surrounded ! Take pity on yourself and on me ; and by an inviolable silence, rescue your home, your husband, yourself, and that little one of ours, from this impending destruction. Shun those wicked women, whom, after the deadly hatred which they have conceived against you, and having trampled under foot the ties of blood, it were not right to call sisters ; neither see, nor listen to them, when, like Sirens, hanging over the crag, they shall make the rocks resound with their ill-omened voices."

Psyche, in accents interrupted by sobs and tears, thus replied :—

"Already, methinks, you have experienced convincing proofs of my fidelity and power of keeping a secret ; and the constancy of my mind shall be no less approved of by you in the present instance. Only order Zephyr once again to discharge his duties, and at least grant me a sight of my sisters, by way of compensation for your own hallowed form. By those aromatic locks, curling on every side ! by those cheeks, tender, smooth, and so like my own ! by your breast that glows with I know not what a warmth ! and by my hopes that in this babe at least I may recognize your features, I beseech you to comply with the affectionate prayers of your anxious suppliant ; indulge me with the gratification of embracing my sisters, and refresh with joyousness the soul of Psyche, who is so devoted and so dear to you. Then no longer I shall be anxious to view your features. Henceforth, not even the shades of night will have any effect on me. I clasp you in my arms, and you are my light."

Enchanted by these words, and by her honeyed embraces, her husband brushed away her tears with his locks, and assuring her that he would do as she wished, instantly anticipated the light of the dawning day by flight. But the pair of sisters who had engaged in this conspiracy, not having so much as visited their parents, direct their course with precipitous haste straight from the ships towards the rock, and not waiting for the presence of the buoyant breeze, leap into the abyss with ungovernable rashness. Zephyr, however, not forgetful of the royal commands, received them, though reluctantly, in the bosom of the breathing breeze, and laid them on the ground.

With rapid steps and without a moment's delay, they entered the palace, and deceitfully screening themselves under the name of sister, embraced their prey; then, covering a whole storehouse of deeply hidden treachery beneath a joyous countenance, they thus addressed her in flattering terms: "Psyche, you are not quite so slender as you used to be. Why, you will be a mother before long. With what exceeding joy you will gladden our whole house! O how delighted we shall be to nurse this golden baby, for if it only equals the beauty of its parents, it will be born a perfect Cupid."

Thus, by a false appearance of affection, they gradually stole upon the heart of their sister, while she, after making them sit awhile to recover from the fatigue of their journey and refresh themselves with warm baths, regaled them in a marvelously splendid manner with innumerable exquisite dainties. She bade the harp discourse, and its chords were struck; flutes to play, and they were heard; vocalists to sing in concert, and they sang; and though invisible, they ravished the souls of the hearers with the most delicious music.

But the malice of those wicked women was not softened or lulled to rest even by the dulcet sweetness of the music; but, shaping their conversation so as to lead Psyche into the intended snare, they began insidiously to inquire what sort of a person her husband was, and from what family he was descended. She, in her extreme simplicity, having forgotten her former account, invented a new story about her husband, and said he was a native of the adjoining province; that he was a merchant, with abundance of money, a man of middle age, with a few gray hairs sprinkled here and there on his head. Then, abruptly terminating the conversation, she again committed them to their windy vehicle, after having loaded them with costly presents.

While they were returning homewards, soaring aloft on the tranquil breath of Zephyrus, they thus interchanged their thoughts with each other : "What are we to say, sister, of the monstrous lies of that silly creature? At one time her husband is a young man, with the down just beginning to show itself on his chin ; at another he is of middle age, and his hair begins to be silvered with gray. Who can this be, whom a short space of time thus suddenly changes into an old man? You may depend upon it, sister, that this most abominable woman has either invented this lie to deceive us, or else that she does not herself know what is the appearance of her husband. But whichever of these is the case, she must as soon as possible be deprived of these riches. And yet, if she really is ignorant of the appearance of her husband, she must no doubt have married a god, and then she will be presenting us with a god. At all events, if she does happen, which heaven forbid ! to become the mother of a divine infant, I shall instantly hang myself. Let us, therefore, in the mean time return to our parents, and let us devise some scheme, as nearly as possible in accordance with the import of our present conversation."

The sisters, thus inflamed with passion, called on their parents in a careless and disdainful manner, and after being kept awake all night by the turbulence of their spirits, made all haste at morning to the rock, whence, by the usual assistance of the breeze, they descended swiftly to Psyche, and with tears squeezed out, by rubbing their eyelids, thus craftily addressed her : "Happy indeed are you, and fortunate in your very ignorance of a misfortune of such magnitude. There you sit, without a thought upon your danger ; while we, who watch over your interests with the most vigilant care, are in anguish at your lost condition. For we have learned for a truth, nor can we, as being sharers in your sorrows and misfortunes, conceal it from you, that it is an enormous serpent, gliding along in many folds and coils, with a neck swollen with deadly venom, and prodigious gaping jaws, that secretly sleeps with you by night. Do for a moment recall to mind the Pythian oracle, which declared that you were destined to become the wife of a fierce and truculent animal. Besides, many of the husbandmen, who are in the habit of hunting all round the country, and ever so many of the neighbors, have observed him returning home from his feeding place in the evening, and swimming across the shoals of the neighboring stream. All declare, too, that he will not long continue to pamper you with delicacies, but that as soon as ever you are about to become a mother, he will devour you, as being in that state a most exquisite morsel. Wherefore, it is now for you to consider whether you shall think fit to listen to us, who are so anxious for your precious safety, and avoiding death, live with us secure from danger, or be buried in the entrails of a most savage monster. But if you are fascinated by the vocal solitude of this country retreat, or the charms of clandestine embraces so filthy and perilous, and the endearments of a poisonous serpent, we have, at all events, done our duty towards you like affectionate sisters."

Poor, simple, tender-hearted Psyche was aghast with horror at this dreadful story; and, quite bereft of her senses, lost all remembrance of her husband's admonitions and of her own promises, and hurled herself headlong into the very abyss of calamity. Trembling, therefore, with pale and livid cheeks, and with an almost lifeless voice, she faltered out these broken words: —

"Dearest sisters, you have acted towards me as you ought, and with your usual affectionate care; and, indeed, it appears to me that those who gave you this information have not invented a falsehood. For, in fact, I have never yet beheld my husband's face, nor do I know at all whence he comes. I only hear him speak in an undertone by night, and have to bear with a husband of an unknown appearance, and one that has an utter aversion to the light of day; I consequently have full reason to be of your opinion, that he may be some monster or other. Besides, he is always terrifying me from attempting to behold him, and threatens some shocking misfortune as the consequence of indulging any curiosity to view his features. Now, therefore, if you are able to give any saving aid to your sister in this perilous emergency, defer it not for a moment."

Finding the approaches thus laid open, and their sister's heart exposed all naked to their attacks, these wicked women thought the time was come to sally out from their covered approach, and attack the timorous thoughts of the simple girl with the drawn sword of deceit. Accordingly, one of them thus began: "Since the ties of blood oblige us to have no fear of peril before our eyes when your safety is to be insured, we will discover to you the only method which will lead to your preservation, and one which has been considered by us over and over again. On that side of the bed where you are accustomed to lie, secretly conceal a very sharp razor, one that you have whetted to a keen edge by passing it over the palm of your hand; and hide likewise under some covering of the surrounding tapestry a lamp, well trimmed and full of oil, and shining with a bright light. Make these preparations with the utmost secrecy, and after the monster has glided into the bed as usual, when he is now stretched out at length, fast asleep, and breathing heavily, then slide out of bed, go softly along with bare feet and on tiptoe, free the lamp from its place of concealment in the dark, and borrow the aid of its light to execute your noble purpose; then at once, boldly raising your right hand, bring down the keen weapon with all your might, and cut off the head of the noxious serpent at the nape of the neck. Nor shall our assistance be wanting to you; for we will keep anxious watch, and be with you the very instant you shall have effected your own safety by his death; and then, immediately bringing you away with all these things, we will wed you, to your wish, with a human creature like yourself."

Having with such pernicious language inflamed the mind of their sister, and wrought her to a perfect pitch of determination, they deserted her, fearing exceedingly even to be in the neighborhood of such a catastrophe; and, being laid upon the rock by the wonted impulse of their winged bearer, they immediately hurried thence with impetuous haste, at once got on board their ships, and sailed away.

But Psyche, now left alone, except so far as a person who is agitated by maddening Furies is not alone, fluctuated in sorrow like a stormy sea; and though her purpose was fixed, and her heart was resolute when she first began to make preparations for the impious work, her mind now wavers, and is distracted with numerous apprehensions at her unhappy fate. She hurries, she procrastinates; now she is bold, now tremulous; now dubious, now agitated by rage; and what is the most singular thing of all, in the same being she hates the beast—loves the husband. Nevertheless, as the evening drew to a close, she hurriedly prepared the instruments of her ruthless enterprise.

The night came, and with it came her husband, and after their first dalliance was over, he fell into a deep sleep. Then Psyche to whose weak body and spirit the cruel influence of fate imparted unusual strength, uncovered the lamp, and seized the knife with masculine courage. But the instant she advanced the lamp, and the mysteries of the couch stood revealed, she beheld the very gentlest and sweetest of all wild creatures, even Cupid himself, the beautiful God of Love, there fast asleep ; at sight of whom the joyous flame of the lamp shone with redoubled vigor, and the sacrilegious razor repented the keenness of its edge.

But as for Psyche, astounded at such a sight, losing the control of her senses, faint, deadly pale, and trembling all over, she fell on her knees, and made an attempt to hide the blade in her own bosom ; and this no doubt she would have done had not the blade, dreading the commission of such a crime, glided out of her rash hand. And now, faint and unnerved as she was, she feels herself refreshed at heart by gazing upon the beauty of those divine features. She looks upon the genial locks of his golden head, teeming with ambrosial perfume, the orb'd curls that strayed over his milk-white neck and roseate cheeks, and fell gracefully entangled, some before, some behind, causing the very light of the lamp itself to flicker by their radiant splendor. On the shoulders of the volatile god were dewy wings of brilliant whiteness ; and though the pinions were at rest, yet the tender down that fringed the feathers wanted to and fro in tremulous unceasing play. The rest of his body was smooth and beautiful, and such as Venus could not have repented of giving birth to. At the foot of the bed lay his bow, his quiver, and his arrows, the auspicious weapons of the mighty God.

While with insatiable wonder and curiosity Psyche is examining and admiring her husband's weapons, she draws one of the arrows out of the quiver, and touches the point with the tip of her thumb to try its sharpness ; but happening to press too hard, for her hand still trembled, she punctured the skin, so that some tiny drops of rosy blood oozed forth ; and thus did Psyche, without knowing it, fall in love with LOVE. Then, burning more and more with desire for Cupid, gazing passionately on his face, and fondly kissing him again and again, her only fear was lest he should wake too soon.

But while she hung over him, bewildered with delight so extreme at heart, the lamp, whether from treachery or baneful envy, or because it longed to touch, and to kiss, as it were, such a beautiful object, spirted a drop of scalding oil from the summit of its flame upon the right shoulder of the god. O rash, audacious lamp ! vile minister to love ! thus to burn the god of all fire ; you whom some lover, doubtless, first invented, that he might prolong even through the night the bliss of beholding the object of his desire ! The God, thus scorched, sprang from the bed, and seeing the disgraceful tokens of forfeited fidelity, without a word, was flying away from the eyes and arms of his most unhappy wife. But Psyche, the instant he arose, seized hold of his right leg with both hands, and hung on to him, a wretched appendage to his flight through the regions of the air, till at last her strength failed her, and she fell to the earth.

Her divine lover, however, not deserting her as she lay on the ground, alighted upon a neighboring cypress tree, and thus angrily addressed her from its lofty top : “O simple, simple Psyche, for you I have been unmindful of the commands of my mother Venus ; for when she bade me cause you to be infatuated with passion for some base and abject man, I chose rather to fly to you myself as a lover. That in this I acted inconsiderately I know but too well. I, that redoubtable archer, have wounded myself with my own arrow, and have made you my wife, that I, forsooth, might be thought by you to be a serpent, and that you might cut off my head, which bears those very eyes which have so doated upon you. This was the danger that I told you again and again to be on your guard against, this was what I so benevolently forewarned you of. But as for those choice counselors of yours, they shall speedily feel my vengeance for giving you such pernicious advice ; but you I will punish only by my flight.” And so saying, he soared aloft, and flew away.

THE PSYCHE LEGEND.

By JOHN THACKRAY BUNCE.

[Continuing Apuleius' story.]

THEN poor Psyche began a long and weary journey, to try to find the husband she had lost, but she could not, for he had gone to his mother Aphrodite, to be cured of his wound ; and Aphrodite, finding out that Eros had fallen in love with Psyche, determined to punish her, and to prevent her from finding Eros. First Psyche went to the god Pan, but he could not help her ; then she went to the goddess Demeter, the Earth Mother, but she warned her against the vengeance of Aphrodite, and sent her away. And the great goddess Hera did the same ; and at last, abandoned by every one, Psyche went to Aphrodite herself, and the goddess, who had caused great search to be made for her, now ordered her to be beaten and tormented, and then ridiculed her sorrows, and taunted her with the loss of Eros, and set her to work at many tasks that seemed impossible to be done.

First the goddess took a great heap of seeds of wheat, barley, millet, poppy, lentils, and beans, and mixed them all together, and then bade Psyche separate them into their different kinds by nightfall. Now there were so many of them that this was impossible ; but Eros, who pitied Psyche, though she had lost him, sent a great many ants, who parted the seeds from each other and arranged them in their proper heaps, so that by evening all that Aphrodite had commanded was done. Then the goddess was very angry, and fed Psyche on bread and water, and next day she set Psyche another task. This was to collect a large quantity of golden wool from the sheep of the goddess, creatures so fierce and wild that no mortal could venture near them and escape with life.

Then Psyche thought herself lost ; but Pan came to her help and bade her wait until evening, when the golden sheep would be at rest, and then she might from the trees and shrubs collect all the wool she needed. So Psyche fulfilled this task also. But Aphrodite was still unsatisfied. She now demanded a crystal urn, filled with icy waters from the fountain of Oblivion. The fountain was placed on the summit of a great mountain ; it issued from a fissure in a lofty rock, too steep for any one to ascend, and from thence it fell into a narrow channel, deep, winding, and rugged, and guarded on each side by terrible dragons, which never slept. And the rush of the waters, as they rolled along, resembled a human voice, always crying out to the adventurous explorer — “Beware ! fly ! or you perish !”

Here Psyche thought her sufferings at an end ; sooner than face the dragons and climb the rugged rocks, she must die. But again Eros helped her, for he sent the eagle of Zeus, the All-Father, and the eagle took the crystal urn in his claws, flew past the dragons, settled on the rock, and drew the water of the black fountain, and gave it safely to Psyche, who carried it back and presented it to the angry Aphrodite. But the goddess, still determined that Psyche should perish, set her another task, the hardest and most dangerous of all.

"Take this box," she said, "go with it into the infernal regions to Persephone, and ask her for a portion of her beauty, that I may adorn myself with it for the supper of the gods."

Now on hearing this, poor Psyche knew that the goddess meant to destroy her; so she went up to a lofty tower, meaning to throw herself down headlong so that she might be killed, and thus pass into the realm of Hades, never to return. But the tower was an enchanted place, and a voice from it spoke to her and bade her be of good cheer, and told her what to do. She was to go to a city of Achaia and find near it a mountain, and in the mountain she would see a gap, from which a narrow road led straight into the infernal regions.

But the voice warned her of many things which must be done on the journey, and of others which must be avoided. She was to take in each hand a piece of barley bread, soaked in honey, and in her mouth she was to put two pieces of money. On entering the dreary path she would meet an old man driving a lame ass, laden with wood, and the old man would ask her for help, but she was to pass him by in silence.

Then she would come to the bank of the black river, over which the boatman Charon ferries the souls of the dead; and from her mouth Charon must take one piece of money, she saying not a word. In crossing the river a dead hand would stretch itself up to her, and a dead face, like that of her father, would appear, and a voice would issue from the dead man's mouth, begging for the other piece of money, that he might pay for his passage, and get released from the doom of floating forever in the grim flood of Styx. But still she was to keep silence, and to let the dead man cry out in vain; for all these, the voice told her, were snares prepared by Aphrodite, to make her let go the money, and to let fall the pieces of bread. Then, at the gate of the palace of Persephone she would meet the great three-headed dog, Cerberus, who keeps watch there forever, and to him, to quiet his terrible barking, she must give one piece of the bread, and pass on, still never speaking. So Cerberus would allow her to pass; but still another danger would await her. Persephone would greet her kindly, and ask her to sit upon soft cushions, and to eat of a fine banquet. But she must refuse both offers—sitting only on the ground, and eating only of the bread of mortals, or else she must remain forever in the gloomy regions below the earth. Psyche listened to this counsel, and obeyed it. Everything happened as the voice had foretold. She saw the old man with the overlaid ass, she permitted Charon to take the piece of money from her lips, she stopped her ears against the cry of the dead man floating in the black river, she gave the honey bread to Cerberus, and she refused the soft cushions and the banquet offered to her by the queen of the infernal regions.

Then Persephone gave her the precious beauty demanded by Aphrodite, and shut it up in the box, and Psyche came safely back into the light of day, giving to Cerberus, the three-headed dog, the remaining piece of honey bread, and to Charon the remaining piece of money. But now she fell into a great danger.

The voice in the tower had warned her not to look into the box; but she was tempted by a strong desire, and so she opened it, that she might see and use for herself the beauty of the gods. But when she opened the box it was empty, save of a vapor of sleep, which seized upon Psyche, and made her as if she were dead.

In this unhappy state, brought upon her by the vengeance of Aphrodite, she would have been lost forever, but Eros, healed of the wound caused by the burning oil, came himself to her help, roused her from the deathlike sleep, and put her in a place of safety. Then Eros flew up into the abode of the gods, and besought Zeus to protect Psyche against his mother Aphrodite; and Zeus, calling an assembly of the gods, sent Hermes to bring Psyche thither, and then he declared her immortal, and she and Eros were wedded to each other; and there was a great feast in Olympus.

And the sisters of Psyche, who had striven to ruin her, were punished for their crimes, for Eros appeared to them one after the other in a dream, and promised to make each of them his wife, in place of Psyche, and bade each throw herself from the great rock whence Psyche was carried into the beautiful valley by Zephyrus; and both the sisters did as the dream told them, and they were dashed to pieces, and perished miserably.

Now this is the story of Eros and Psyche, as it is told by Apuleius, in his book of Metamorphoses written nearly two thousand years ago. But the story was told ages before Apuleius by people other than the Greeks, and in a language which existed long before theirs. It is the tale of Urvasî and Purûravas, which is to be found in one of the oldest of the Vedas, or Sanskrit sacred books, which contain the legends of the Aryan race before it broke up and went in great fragments southward into India, and westward into Persia and Europe. A translation of the story of Urvasî and Purûravas is given by Mr. Max Müller, who also tells what the story means, and this helps us to see the meaning of the tale of Eros and Psyche, and of many other myths which occur among all the branches of the Aryan family, — among the Teutons, the Scandinavians, and the Slavs, as well as among the Greeks. Urvasî, then, was an immortal being, a kind of fairy, who fell in love with Purûravas, a hero and a king; and she married him, and lived with him, on this condition — that she should never see him unless he was dressed in his royal robes.

Now there was a ewe, with two lambs, tied to the couch of Urvasî and Purûravas; and the fairies — or Gandharvas, as the kinsfolk of Urvasî were called, wished to get her back amongst them; and so they stole one of the lambs. Then Urvasî reproached her husband, and said, “They take away my darling, as if I lived in a land where there is no hero and no man.” The fairies stole the other lamb, and Urvasî reproached her husband again, saying, “How can that be a land without heroes or men where I am?” Then Purûravas hastened to bring back the pet lamb; so eager was he that he stayed not to clothe himself, and so sprang up naked. Then the Gandharvas sent a flash of lightning, and Urvasî saw her husband naked as if by daylight; and then she cried out to her kinsfolk, “I come back,” and she vanished. And Purûravas, made wretched by the loss of his love, sought her everywhere, and once he was permitted to see her, and when he saw her, he said he should die if she did not come back to him. But Urvasî could not return; but she gave him leave to come to her, on the last night of the year, to the golden seats; and he stayed with her for that night. And Urvasî said to him, “The Gandharvas will to-morrow grant thee a wish; choose.” He said, “Choose thou for me.” She replied, “Say to them, Let me be one of you.” And he said this, and they taught him how to make the sacred fire, and he became one of them, and dwelt with Urvasî forever.

Now this, we see, is like the story of Eros and Psyche; and

Mr. Max Müller teaches us what it means. It is the story of the Sun and the Dawn. Urvasî is the Dawn, which must vanish or die when it beholds the risen Sun; and Purûravas is the Sun; and they are united again at sunset, when the Sun dies away into night. So, in the Greek myth, Eros is the dawning Sun, and when Psyche, the Dawn, sees him, he flies from her, and it is only at nightfall that they can be again united. In the same paper Mr. Max Müller shows how this root idea of the Aryan race is found again in another of the most beautiful of Greek myths or stories—that of Orpheus and Eurydice. In the Greek legends the Dawn has many names; one of them is Eurydice. The name of her husband, Orpheus, comes straight from the Sanskrit: it is the same as Ribhu or Arbhu, which is a name of Indra, or the Sun, or which may be used for the rays of the Sun. The old story, then, says our teacher, was this: “Eurydice (the Dawn) is bitten by a serpent (the Night); she dies, and descends into the lower regions. Orpheus follows her, and obtains from the gods that his wife shall follow him, if he promises not to look back. Orpheus promises—ascends from the dark world below; Eurydice is behind him as he rises, but, drawn by doubt or by love, he looks round; the first ray of the Sun glances at the Dawn; and the Dawn fades away.”

We have now seen that the Greek myth is like a much older myth existing amongst the Aryan race before it passed westward. We have but to look to other collections of Aryan folklore to find that in some of its features the legend is common to all branches of the Aryan family. In our own familiar story of “Beauty and the Beast,” for instance, we have the same idea. There are the three sisters, one of whom is chosen as the bride of an enchanted monster, who dwells in a beautiful palace. By the arts of her sisters she is kept away from him, and he is at the point of death through his grief. Then she returns, and he revives, and becomes changed into a handsome Prince, and they live happy ever after. One feature of these legends is that beings closely united to each other—as closely, that is, as the Sun and the Dawn—may not look upon each other without misfortune. This is illustrated in the charming Scandinavian story of “The Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon,” which is told in various forms, the best of them being in Mr. Morris’ beautiful poem in “The Earthly Paradise,” and in Dr. Dasent’s Norse Tales. We shall abridge Dr. Dasent’s version, telling the story in our own way:—

There was a poor peasant who had a large family whom he could scarcely keep ; and there were several daughters amongst them. The loveliest was the youngest daughter, who was very beautiful indeed. One evening in autumn, in bad weather, the family sat round the fire ; and there came three taps at the window. The father went out to see who it was, and he found only a great White Bear. And the White Bear said, "If you will give me your youngest daughter, I will make you rich." So the peasant went in and asked his daughter if she would be the wife of the White Bear ; and the daughter said "No." So the White Bear went away, but said he would come back in a few days to see if the maiden had changed her mind. Now her father and mother talked to her so much about it, and seemed so anxious to be well off, that the maiden agreed to be the wife of the White Bear ; and when he came again, she said "Yes," and the White Bear told her to sit upon his back, and hold by his shaggy coat, and away they went together.

After the maiden had ridden for a long way, they came to a great hill, and the White Bear gave a knock on the hill with his paw, and the hill opened, and they went in. Now inside the hill there was a palace with fine rooms, ornamented with gold and silver, and all lighted up ; and there was a table ready laid ; and the White Bear gave the maiden a silver bell, and told her to ring it when she wanted anything. And when the maiden had eaten and drunk, she went to bed, in a beautiful bed with silk pillows and curtains, and gold fringe to them. Then, in the dark, a man came and lay down beside her. This was the White Bear, who was an Enchanted Prince, and who was able to put off the shape of a beast at night, and to become a man again ; but before daylight, he went away and turned once more into a White Bear, so that his wife could never see him in the human form.

Well, this went on for some time, and the wife of the White Bear was very happy with her kind husband, in the beautiful palace he had made for her. Then she grew dull and miserable for want of company, and she asked leave to go home for a little while to see her father and mother, and her brothers and sisters. So the White Bear took her home again, but he told her that there was one thing she must not do : she must not go into a room with her mother alone, to talk to her, or a great misfortune would happen.

When the wife of the White Bear got home, she found that her family lived in a grand house, and they were all very glad to see her ; and then her mother took her into a room by themselves, and asked about her husband. And the wife of the White Bear forgot the warning, and told her mother that every night a man came and lay down with her, and went away before daylight, and that she had never seen him, and wanted to see him very much. Then the mother said it might be a Troll she slept with, and that she ought to see what it was ; and she gave her daughter a piece of candle, and said, "Light this while he is asleep, and look at him, but take care you don't drop the tallow upon him." So then the White Bear came to fetch his wife, and they went back to the palace in the hill, and that night she lit the candle, while her husband was asleep, and then she saw that he was a handsome Prince, and she felt quite in love with him, and gave him a soft kiss. But just as she kissed him she let three drops of tallow fall upon his shirt, and he woke up.

Then the White Bear was very sorrowful, and said that he was enchanted by a wicked fairy, and that if his wife had only waited for a year before looking at him, the enchantment would be broken, and he would be a man again always. But now that she had given way to curiosity, he must go to a dreary castle East of the Sun and West of the Moon, and marry a witch Princess, with a nose three ells long. And then he vanished, and so did his palace, and his poor wife found herself lying in the middle of a gloomy wood, and she was dressed in rags, and was very wretched. But she did not stop to cry about her hard fate, for she was a brave girl, and made up her mind to go at once in search of her husband.

So she walked for days, and then she met an old woman sitting on a hillside, and playing with a golden apple ; and she asked the old woman the way to the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon. And the old woman listened to her story, and then she said : "I don't know where it is ; but you can go on and ask my next neighbor. Ride there on my horse, and when you have done with him, give him a pat under the left ear and say, 'Go home again ;' and take this golden apple with you, — it may be useful."

So she rode on for a long way, and then came to another old woman, who was playing with a golden carding comb ; and she asked her the way to the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon. But this old woman couldn't tell her, and bade her go on to another old woman, a long way off. And she gave her the golden carding comb, and lent her a horse just like the first one.

And the third old woman was playing with a golden spinning wheel; and she gave this to the wife of the White Bear, and lent her another horse, and told her to ride on to the East Wind, and ask him the way to the enchanted land. Now after a weary journey she got to the home of the East Wind, and he said he had heard of the Enchanted Prince, and of the country East of the Sun and West of the Moon, but he did not know where it was, for he had never been so far.

But he said, "Get on my back, and we will go to my brother the West Wind; perhaps he knows." So they sailed off to the West Wind, and told him the story, and he took it quite kindly, but said he didn't know the way. But perhaps his brother the South Wind might know; and they would go to him. So the White Bear's wife got on the back of the West Wind, and he blew straight away to the dwelling place of the South Wind, and asked him where to find the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon.

But the South Wind said that although he had blown pretty nearly everywhere, he had never blown there; but he would take her to his brother the North Wind, the oldest, and strongest, and wisest Wind of all; and he would be sure to know. Now the North Wind was very cross at being disturbed, and he used bad language, and was quite rude and unpleasant. But he was a kind Wind after all, and when his brother the West Wind told him the story, he became quite fatherly, and said he would do what he could, for he knew the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon very well.

But he said, "It is a long way off; so far off that once in my life I blew an aspen leaf there, and was so tired with it that I couldn't blow or puff for ever so many days after." So they rested that night, and next morning the North Wind puffed himself out, and got stout, and big, and strong, ready for the journey; and the maiden got upon his back, and away they went to the country East of the Sun and West of the Moon. It was a terrible journey, high up in the air, in a great storm, and over the mountains and the sea, and before they got to the end of it the North Wind grew very tired, and drooped, and nearly fell into the sea, and got so low down that the crests of the waves washed over him. But he blew as hard as he could, and at last he put the maiden down on the shore, just in front of the Enchanted Castle that stood in the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon; and there he had to stop and rest many days before he became strong enough to blow home again.

Now the wife of the White Bear sat down before the castle, and began to play with the golden apple. And then the wicked Princess with the nose three ells long opened a window, and asked if she would sell the apple. But she said "No"; she would give the golden apple for leave to spend the night in the bedchamber of the Prince who lived there. So the Princess with the long nose said "Yes," and the wife of the White Bear was allowed to pass the night in her husband's chamber. But a sleeping draught had been given to the Prince, and she could not wake him, though she wept greatly, and spent the whole night in crying out to him; and in the morning before he woke she was driven away by the wicked Princess.

Well, next day she sat and played with the golden carding comb, and the Princess wanted that too; and the same bargain was made; but again a sleeping draught was given to the Prince, and he slept all night, and nothing could waken him; and at the first peep of daylight the wicked Princess drove the poor wife out again. Now it was the third day, and the wife of the White Bear had only the golden spinning wheel left. So she sat and played with it, and the Princess bought it on the same terms as before. But some kind folk who slept in the next room to the Prince told him that for two nights a woman had been in his chamber, weeping bitterly, and crying out to him to wake and see her. So, being warned, the Prince only pretended to drink the sleeping draught, and so when his wife came into the room that night he was wide awake, and was rejoiced to see her; and they spent the whole night in loving talk.

Now the next day was to be the Prince's wedding day; but now that his lost wife had found him, he hit upon a plan to escape marrying the Princess with the long nose. So when morning came, he said he should like to see what his bride was fit for. "Certainly," said the Witch Mother and the Princess, both together. Then the Prince said he had a fine shirt, with three drops of tallow upon it; and he would marry only the woman who could wash them out, for no other would be worth having. So they laughed at this, for they thought it would be easily done. And the Princess began, but the more she rubbed, the worse the tallow stuck to the shirt. And the old Witch Mother tried; but it got deeper and blacker than ever. And all the Trolls in the enchanted castle tried; but none of them could wash the shirt clean. Then said the Prince, "Call in the lassie who sits outside, and let her try." And she came in, and took the shirt, and washed it quite clean and white, all in a minute. Then the old Witch Mother put herself into such a rage that she burst into pieces, and so did the Princess with the long nose, and so did all the Trolls in the castle; and the Prince took his wife away with him, and all the silver and gold, and a number of Christian people who had been enchanted by the witch; and away they went forever from the dreary Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon.

In the story of "The Soaring Lark," in the collection of German popular tales made by the brothers Grimm, we have another version of the same idea; and here, as in Eros and Psyche, and in the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon, it is the woman to whose fault the misfortunes are laid, and upon whom falls the long and weary task of search. The story, told in brief, is this. A merchant went on a journey, and promised to bring back for his three daughters whatever they wished. The eldest asked for diamonds, the second for pearls, and the youngest, who was her father's favorite, for a singing, soaring lark. As the merchant came home, he passed through a great forest, and on the top bough of a tall tree he found a lark, and tried to take it. Then a Lion sprang from behind the tree, and said the lark was his, and that he would eat up the merchant for trying to steal it. The merchant told the Lion why he wanted the bird, and then the Lion said that he would give him the lark, and let him go, on one condition, namely, that he should give to the Lion the first thing or person that met him on his return. Now the first person who met the merchant when he got home was his youngest daughter, and the poor merchant told her the story, and wept very much, and said that she should not go into the forest.

But the daughter said, "What you have promised you must do;" and so she went into the forest, to find the Lion. The Lion was an Enchanted Prince, and all his servants were also turned into lions; and so they remained all day, but at night they all changed back again into men. Now when the Lion Prince saw the merchant's daughter, he fell in love with her, and took her to a fine castle, and at night, when he became a man, they were married, and lived very happily, and in great splendor. One day the Prince said to his wife,—

“To-morrow your eldest sister is to be married; if you would like to be there, my lions shall go with you.” So she went, and the lions with her, and there were great rejoicings in her father’s house, because they were afraid that she had been torn to pieces in the forest; and after staying some time, she went back to her husband.

After a while, the Prince said to his wife, “To-morrow your second sister is going to be married,” and she replied, “This time I will not go alone, for you shall go with me.” Then he told her how dangerous that would be, for if a single ray from a burning light fell upon him, he would be changed into a Dove, and in that form would have to fly about for seven years.

But the Princess very much wanted him to go, and in order to protect him from the light, she had a room built with thick walls, so that no light could get through, and there he was to sit while the bridal candles were burning. But by some accident, the door of the room was made of new wood, which split, and made a little chink, and through this chink one ray of light from the torches of the bridal procession fell like a hair upon the Prince, and he was instantly changed in form; and when his wife came to tell him that all danger was over, she found only a White Dove, who said very sadly to her,—

“For seven years I must fly about in the world, but at every seventh mile I will let fall a white feather and a drop of red blood, which will show you the way, and if you follow it, you may save me.”

Then the White Dove flew out of the door, and the Princess followed it, and at every seventh mile the Dove let fall a white feather and a drop of red blood; and so, guided by the feathers and the drops of blood, she followed the Dove, until the seven years had almost passed, and she began to hope that the Prince’s enchantment would be at an end. But one day there was no white feather to be seen, nor any drop of red blood, and the Dove had flown quite away. Then the poor Princess thought, “No man can help me now;” and so she mounted up to the Sun, and said, “Thou shinest into every chasm and over every peak; hast thou seen a White Dove on the wing?”

“No,” answered the Sun, “I have not seen one; but take this casket, and open it when you are in need of help.”

She took the casket, and thanked the Sun. When evening came, she asked the Moon, —

“Hast thou seen a White Dove? for thou shinest all night long over every field and through every wood.”

“No,” said the Moon, “I have not seen a White Dove; but here is an egg — break it when you are in great trouble.”

She thanked the Moon, and took the egg; and then the North Wind came by; and she said to the North Wind, —

“Hast thou not seen a White Dove? for thou passest through all the boughs, and shakest every leaf under heaven.”

“No,” said the North Wind, “I have not seen one; but I will ask my brothers, the East Wind, and the West Wind, and the South Wind.”

So he asked them all three; and the East Wind and the West Wind said, “No, they had not seen the White Dove;” but the South Wind said, —

“I have seen the White Dove; he has flown to the Red Sea, and has again been changed into a Lion, for the seven years are up; and the Lion stands there in combat with an Enchanted Princess, who is in the form of a great Caterpillar.”

Then the North Wind knew what to do; and he said to the Princess, —

“Go to the Red Sea; on the right-hand shore there are great reeds, count them, and cut off the eleventh reed, and beat the Caterpillar with it. Then the Caterpillar and the Lion will take their human forms. Then look for the Griffin which sits on the Red Sea, and leap upon its back with the Prince, and the Griffin will carry you safely home. Here is a nut; let it fall when you are in the midst of the sea, and a large nut tree will grow out of the water, and the Griffin will rest upon it.”

So the Princess went to the Red Sea, and counted the reeds, and cut off the eleventh reed, and beat the Caterpillar with it, and then the Lion conquered in the fight, and both of them took their human forms again. But the Enchanted Princess was too quick for the poor wife, for she instantly seized the Prince and sprang upon the back of the Griffin, and away they flew, quite out of sight. Now the poor deserted wife sat down on the desolate shore, and cried bitterly; and then she said, “So far as the wind blows, and so long as the cock crows, will I search for my husband, till I find him;” and so she traveled on and on, until one day she came to the palace whither the Enchanted Princess had carried the Prince ; and there was great feasting going on, and they told her that the Prince and Princess were about to be married. Then she remembered what the Sun had said, and took out the casket and opened it, and there was the most beautiful dress in all the world ; as brilliant as the Sun himself. So she put it on, and went into the palace, and everybody admired the dress, and the Enchanted Princess asked if she would sell it.

"Not for gold or silver," she said, "but for flesh and blood."

"What do you mean ?" the Princess asked.

"Let me sleep for one night in the bridegroom's chamber," the wife said.

So the Enchanted Princess agreed, but she gave the Prince a sleeping draught, so that he could not hear his wife's cries ; and in the morning she was driven out, without a word from him, for he slept so soundly that all she said seemed to him only like the rushing of the wind through the fir trees.

Then the poor wife sat down and wept again, until she thought of the egg the Moon had given her ; and when she took the egg and broke it, there came out of it a hen with twelve chickens, all of gold, and the chickens pecked quite prettily, and then ran under the wings of the hen for shelter. Presently the Enchanted Princess looked out of the window and saw the hen and the chickens, and asked if they were for sale. "Not for gold or silver, but for flesh and blood," was the answer she got ; and then the wife made the same bargain as before — that she should spend the night in the bridegroom's chamber. Now this night the Prince was warned by his servant, and so he poured away the sleeping draught instead of drinking it ; and when his wife came, and told her sorrowful story, he knew her, and said, "Now I am saved ;" and then they both went as quickly as possible, and set themselves upon the Griffin, who carried them over the Red Sea ; and when they got to the middle of the sea, the Princess let fall the nut which the North Wind had given to her, and a great nut tree grew up at once, on which the Griffin rested ; and then it went straight to their home, where they lived happy ever after.

One more story of the same kind must be told, for three reasons : because it is very good reading, because it brings together various legends, and because it shows that these were common to Celtic as well as to Hindu, Greek, Teutonic, and Scandinavian peoples. It is called "The Battle of the Birds," and is given at full length, and in several different versions, in Campbell's "Popular Tales of the West Highlands." To bring it within our space we must tell it in our own way.

Once upon a time every bird and other creature gathered to battle. The son of the King of Tethertoun went to see the battle, but it was over before he got there, all but one fight, between a great Raven and a Snake; and the Snake was getting the victory. The King's son helped the Raven, and cut off the Snake's head. The Raven thanked him for his kindness and said, "Now I will give thee a sight; come up on my wings;" and then the Raven flew with him over seven mountains, and seven glens, and seven moors, and that night the King's son lodged in the house of the Raven's sisters, and promised to meet the Raven next morning in the same place. This went on for three nights and days, and on the third morning, instead of a raven, there met him a handsome lad, who gave him a bundle, and told him not to look into it, until he was in the place where he would most wish to dwell. But the King's son did look into the bundle, and then he found himself in a great castle with fine grounds about it, and he was very sorry, because he wished the castle had been near his father's house, but he could not put it back into the bundle again. Then a great Giant met him, and offered to put the castle back into a bundle for a reward, and this was to be the Prince's son, when the son was seven years old. So the Prince promised, and the Giant put everything back into the bundle, and the Prince went home with it to his father's house. When he got there he opened the bundle, and out came the castle and all the rest, just as before, and at the castle door stood a beautiful maiden who asked him to marry her, and they were married, and had a son. When the seven years were up, the Giant came to ask for the boy, and then the King's son (who had now become a king himself) told his wife about his promise. "Leave that to me and the Giant," said the Queen. So she dressed the cook's son (who was the right age) in fine clothes, and gave him to the Giant; but the Giant gave the boy a rod, and asked him, "If thy father had that rod, what would he do with it?" "He would beat the dogs if they went near the King's meat," said the boy. Then said the Giant, "Thou art the cook's son," and he killed him. Then the Giant went back, very angry, and the Queen gave him the butler's son; and the Giant gave him the rod, and asked him the same question. "My father would beat the dogs if they came near the King's glasses," said the boy. "Thou art the butler's son," said the Giant; and he killed him. Now the Giant went back the third time, and made a dreadful noise. "Out here thy son," he said, "or the stone that is highest in thy dwelling shall be the lowest." So they gave him the King's son, and the Giant took him to his own house, and he stayed there a long while. One day the youth heard sweet music at the top of the Giant's house, and he saw a sweet face. It was the Giant's youngest daughter; and she said to him: "My father wants you to marry one of my sisters, and he wants me to marry the King of the Green City, but I will not. So when he asks, say thou wilt take me." Next day the Giant gave the King's son choice of his two eldest daughters; but the Prince said, "Give me this pretty little one," and then the Giant was angry, and said that before he had her he must do three things. The first of these was to clean out a byre or cattle place, where there was the dung of a hundred cattle, and it had not been cleaned for seven years. He tried to do it, and worked till noon, but the filth was as bad as ever.

Then the Giant's youngest daughter came, and bade him sleep, and she cleaned out the stable, so that a golden apple would run from end to end of it. Next day the Giant set him to thatch the byre with birds' down, and he had to go out on the moors to catch the birds; but at midday, he had caught only two blackbirds, and then the Giant's youngest daughter came again, and bade him sleep, and then she caught the birds, and thatched the byre with the feathers before sundown. The third day the Giant set him another task. In the forest there was a fir tree, and at the top was a magpie's nest, and in the nest were five eggs, and he was to bring these five eggs to the Giant without breaking one of them. Now the tree was very tall; from the ground to the first branch it was five hundred feet, so that the King's son could not climb up it. Then the Giant's youngest daughter came again, and she put her fingers one after the other into the tree, and made a ladder for the King's son, to climb up by. When he was at the nest at the very top, she said, "Make haste now with the eggs, for my father's breath is burning my back;" and she was in such a hurry that she left her little finger sticking in the top of the tree. Then she told the King's son that the Giant would make all his daughters look alike, and dress them alike, and that when the choosing time came he was to look at their hands, and take the one that had not a little finger on one hand. So it happened, and the King's son chose the youngest daughter, because she put out her hand to guide him.

Then they were married, and there was a great feast, and they went to their chamber. The Giant's daughter said to her husband, "Sleep not, or thou diest; we must fly quick, or my father will kill thee." So first she cut an apple into nine pieces, and put two pieces at the head of the bed, and two at the foot, and two at the door of the kitchen, and two at the great door, and one outside the house. And then she and her husband went to the stable, and mounted the fine gray filly, and rode off as fast as they could. Presently the Giant called out, "Are you asleep yet?" and the apple at the head of the bed said, "We are not asleep." Then he called again, and the apple at the foot of the bed said the same thing; and then he asked again and again, until the apple outside the house door answered; and then he knew that a trick had been played on him, and ran to the bedroom and found it empty. And then he pursued the runaways as fast as possible. Now at daybreak—"at the mouth of day," the story-teller says—the Giant's daughter said to her husband, "My father's breath is burning my back; put thy hand into the ear of the gray filly, and whatever thou findest, throw it behind thee." "There is a twig of sloe tree," he said. "Throw it behind thee," said she; and he did so, and twenty miles of black-thorn wood grew out of it, so thick that a weasel could not get through. But the Giant cut through it with his big ax and his wood knife, and went after them again.

At the heat of day the Giant's daughter said again, "My father's breath is burning my back;" and then her husband put his finger in the filly's ear, and took out a piece of gray stone, and threw it behind him, and there grew up directly a great rock twenty miles broad and twenty miles high. Then the Giant got his mattock and his lever, and made a way through the rocks, and came after them again. Now it was near sunset, and once more the Giant's daughter felt her father's breath burning her back. So, for the third time, her husband put his hand into the filly's ear, and took out a bladder of water, and he threw it behind him, and there was a fresh-water loch, twenty miles long and twenty miles broad ; and the Giant came on so fast that he ran into the middle of the loch and was drowned.

Here is clearly a Sun myth, which is like those of ancient Hindu and Greek legend : the blue-gray Filly is the Dawn, on which the new day, the maiden and her lover, speed away. The great Giant, whose breath burns the maiden's back, is the morning Sun, whose progress is stopped by the thick shade of the trees. Then he rises higher, and at midday he breaks through the forest, and soars above the rocky mountains. At evening, still powerful in speed and heat, he comes to the great lake, plunges into it, and sets, and those whom he pursues escape. This ending is repeated in one of the oldest Hindu mythical stories, that of Bheki, the Frog Princess, who lives with her husband on condition that he never shows her a drop of water. One day he forgets, and she disappears : that is, the sun sets or dies on the water—a fanciful idea which takes us straight as an arrow to Aryan myths.

Now, however, we must complete the Gaelic story, which here becomes like the Soaring Lark, and the Land East of the Sun and West of the Moon, and other Teutonic and Scandinavian tales.

After the Giant's daughter and her husband had got free from the Giant, she bade him go to his father's house, and tell them about her ; but he was not to suffer anything to kiss him, or he would forget her altogether. So he told everybody they were not to kiss him, but an old greyhound leaped up at him, and touched his mouth, and then he forgot all about the Giant's daughter, just as if she had never lived. Now when the King's son left her, the poor forgotten wife sat beside a well, and when night came she climbed into an oak tree, and slept amongst the branches. There was a shoemaker who lived near the well, and next day he sent his wife to fetch water, and as she drew it she saw what she fancied to be her own reflection in the water, but it was really the likeness of the maiden in the tree above it. The shoemaker's wife, however, thinking it was her own, imagined herself to be very handsome, and so she went back and told the shoemaker that she was too beautiful to be his thrall, or slave, any longer, and so she went off. The same thing happened to the shoemaker's daughter ; and she went off too. Then the man himself went to the well, and saw the maiden in the tree, and understood it all, and asked her to come down and stay at his house, and to be his daughter. So she went with him. After a while there came three gentlemen from the King's Court, and each of them wanted to marry her; and she agreed with each of them privately, on condition that each should give a sum of money for a wedding gift. Well, they agreed to this, each unknown to the other; and she married one of them, but when he came and had paid the money, she gave him a cup of water to hold, and there he had to stand, all night long, unable to move or to let go the cup of water; and in the morning he went away ashamed, but said nothing to his friends. Next night it was the turn of the second; and she told him to see that the door latch was fastened; and when he touched the latch he could not let it go, and had to stand there all night holding it; and so he went away, and said nothing. The next night the third came, and when he stepped upon the floor, one foot stuck so fast that he could not draw it out until morning; and then he did the same as the others — went off quite cast down. And then the maiden gave all the money to the shoemaker for his kindness to her. This is like the story of "The Master Maid," in Dr. Dasent's collection of "Tales from the Norse." But there is the end of it to come. The shoemaker had to finish some shoes because the young King was going to be married; and the maiden said she should like to see the King before he married. So the shoemaker took her to the King's castle; and then she went into the wedding room, and because of her beauty they filled a vessel of wine for her. When she was going to drink it, there came a flame out of the glass, and out of the flame there came a silver pigeon and a golden pigeon; and just then three grains of barley fell upon the floor, and the silver pigeon ate them up. Then the golden one said, "If thou hadst mind when I cleaned the byre, thou wouldst not eat that without giving me a share." Then three more grains fell, and the silver pigeon ate them also. Then said the golden pigeon, "If thou hadst mind when I thatched the byre, thou wouldst not eat that without giving me a share." Then three other grains fell, and the silver pigeon ate them up. And the golden pigeon said: "If thou hadst mind when I harried the magpie's nest, thou wouldst not eat that without giving me my share. I lost my little finger bringing it down, and I want it still." Then, suddenly, the King's son remembered, and knew who it was, and sprang to her and kissed her from hand to mouth; and the priest came, and they were married.

WONDERS OF THE ANIMAL WORLD.

By ÆLIAN.

[CLAUDIUS ÆLIANUS was born at Præneste in Italy, probably in the latter part of the first century A.D., and taught rhetoric in Rome, seemingly under Hadrian. He preferred Greek to Latin, was a great reader of and fluent writer in the former language, and wrote two books of scrappy but entertaining gossip, "Varia Historia" and "De Natura Animalium," from both of which these selections are taken. A third work, attributed to him in early editions, "Epistolæ Rusticæ," is dubious.]

(Translated for this work.)

CURE FOR A SICK LION.

ONLY one thing will help a sick lion; but eating a monkey is a cure for his disease.

MICE ABANDON A DECAYING HOUSE.

Of all animals, mice have certainly the greatest gifts of prophecy. For when a house has grown old and is about to fall, they perceive it first; and abandoning their holes and former ways of life, scamper off as fast as possible and change their domicile.

PATRIOTIC ORIGIN OF COCK-FIGHTS.

After the victory over the Persians, the Athenians passed a law that cocks should have a contest in the public theater one day of each year. Whence the law took its rise, I will explain. When Themistocles led the city forces against the barbarians, he saw two cocks fighting; but he did not look idly on, but halted his troops and said to them: "Now these cocks are not enduring hardships for their country, nor for their country's gods, nor for the tombs of their ancestors, nor for honor, nor for freedom, nor for their children; but in order not to be worsted by another, and neither will yield to the other." With which words he heartened up the Athenians. And so, because this event was to them at that time a token of bravery, it was decreed to preserve its memory by like performances.

SERPENTS GENERATED FROM MARROW.

They say the putrefying marrow from the spine of a human corpse turns into a serpent, and the reptile issues forth and crawls off alive, the most savage of beings from the tamest. But the rest of a good and noble man remains unchanged, and has peace for its reward; also the spirits of such men are praised and sung by the wise. The spines of bad men, however, breed like things after death. Now all this is a fable; or if it can fairly be credited, the recompense to a bad man, it seems to me, would be having his corpse become the father of a serpent.

FIRE-BORN BIRDS.

That human beings should be generated on mountains or in the air or the sea is no great wonder; for their substance and nurture and nature is the cause. But that there should be feathered creatures, called therefore the Fire-Born, generated from fire and living in it, and that they should thrive and fly about here and there—that is astonishing. This too is marvellous, that when they pass out of the fire which is their home, and exchange it for the cold air, then they perish. But what is the cause of their being generated by fire, and that the air gently dissolves them, others may tell.

CONCERNING DRAGONS.

The land of Ethiopia has a good neighbor which it is to be envied, in that bathing-place of the gods which Homer sings of as Ocean. Now that land is the mother of the size of the largest dragons; for they have grown there to over three hundred feet. And they have no name by which they are called from birth, but style themselves elephant-slayers; and these dragons fight up to extreme old age. These accounts the Ethiopians have brought to me from thence. And the Phrygian accounts say that dragons are also produced in Phrygia, and grow to over a hundred feet; and that every day in midsummer, at time of full market, they creep out of their holes; and along the river called Rhyndacus they fix their coils on the ground, the rest of the body all erected, motionless, and their throats stretched out a little, but with their mouths agape; then these winged creatures draw breath as if luring victims by a magic bird-wheel. By this breathing, an inspiration rushes into their stomachs, prolonged by their wings ; and this performance is carried on by each separately till sunset. Then the dragons, hiding themselves, lie in ambush for the herds, and seize them going from the pasture to the stables, not only inflicting vast damage, but often destroying the herdsmen as well ; and so they have a meal of ungrudging plenty.

THE SONG OF THE DYING SWAN.

The poets, and many independent accounts in verse, say that the swan is the minister of Apollo. What other gifts it has in music or song poetry, I do not know enough to say ; but it is believed by the elders that, having sung its swan-song (as it is called), it then dies. If so, nature honors it above good and noble men : and naturally, since others bestow praise and lamentation upon men ; but the swans, if they wish either the one or the other, must pay it to themselves.

VULTURES.

The vulture is hostile to a corpse, and assailing it, eats it as if it were an enemy ; and it watches the dying ; and not only do the vultures follow the national armies, but it is a sure prophecy when they advance, because battle always makes corpses, and they know it. And they say vultures are never born male, but all female ; which the birds understanding, and fearing lack of children, act thus to secure the birth of offspring. They fly in the teeth of the south wind ; and if the south wind is not blowing, they gape to the southeast wind, and the breath, rushing in, fills them, and they are in gestation three years. They say vultures do not build nests, however ; but the lammergeiers, which are intermediate between vultures and eagles, are not only males, but born black, and of them I hear that they construct nests. And vultures do not lay eggs, I believe, but travail with young ; and I have heard that they are able to fly from birth.

THE WEASEL'S PROTECTION AGAINST SERPENTS.

The weasel is a dangerous animal, and the serpent is also dangerous. Now whenever a weasel is to fight with a serpent, having first eaten some rue, and then animated itself for the fray, it stands up to it as if fortified and in armor. The reason is, that rue is most hateful to serpents.

OF THE LOVES AND HATES OF ANIMALS.

It seems to me most shameful, fellow-beings, that animals have friendships for each other [and men have not],—not merely those who herd together, nor those of the same species, but those who belong to no common race. At any rate, sheep are friendly to goats, and pigeons to turtledoves; ringdoves and partridges have friendly dispositions to each other; we know of old that the kingfisher and the kerulos long for each other; the carrion crow and the heron bear friendship, and the cormorant and the jackdaw, and the falcon to the kite. On the other hand, there is implacable bird-war, so to speak, waged between carrion crows and owls; kite and crow are also hostile; and turtledove to pigeon; and brant to sea-mew; again, the yellowbird to the turtledove; vultures and eagles, swans and dragons, and lions to bulls and antelopes. But the elephant and the dragon are most hateful to each other; and the ichneumon to the serpent; and the titmouse to the ass, for when the ass brays it breaks the eggs of the titmouse, and the young come forth prematurely, and to succor the offspring, it attacks the asses on their sore spots and gnaws them. The fox hates the falcon, the bull the crow, and the yellow wagtail the horse. An educated man who listens to nothing idly must know that the dolphin is the enemy of the whale, the sea bass of the mullet, lampreys to congers, and still others to others.

THE HYÆNA.

The hyæna, so Aristotle says, has a soporific power in its right paw, and creates a stupor by its touch alone. Anyway, it often enters stables when the attendant happens to be asleep, approaches stealthily, and puts its soporific paw, so to speak, to his nose; so that he can be dragged about and suffocated more and more, and seems to be insensible. And it roots up the ground with its head so as to make a hole large enough for him, and his throat appears supine and naked; then the hyæna grasps him, and strangles him, and drags him to its hole. And it puts an end to dogs in the same way. And whenever the moon is full, after it catches the radiance, it throws its shadow on the dogs, and silences them at once; and having thrown a spell on them as if by poison [magic], it drags them away silenced, and does whatever it pleases with them.

PERSON COLLEGE
LIBRARY
PERSON, INDIANA

WARNER MEMORIAL
UNIVERSITY
Library

Literature - Ancient, Medieval & Modern Collections

WARNER MEMORIAL
UNIVERSITY
Library

808.8
G164

~~Copy 1~~
Vols. 5 + 6

X

ANDERSON COL
LIBRARY
ANDERSON, INE

